

Abraham Lincoln University College of Law
1000 ABBOTT COURT, SAN DIEGO, CA 92161

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in
PACIFIC REPORTER

102 P.—105 P.

---

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
102 P. 12

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 102, Nos. 1-7; Vol. 103, Nos.
1-3, 5-9; Vol. 104, Nos. 1, 3-8; Vol. 105, Nos. 1, 2.

---

COPYRIGHT, 1910, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 105, Nos. 3-6.

---

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 102-105 P.

P.

|                                                                     | Vol. | Page |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| A. C. Dauphiny & Co.; Aggler, Morrison, Hansen Co. v., App. ....    | 104  | 702  |
| Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Altadena Min. & Inv. Syndicate, App. ....     | 104  | 470  |
| Ætna Indemnity Co. of Hartford, Conn.; Donovan v., App. ....        | 103  | 365  |
| Aggler, Morrison, Hansen Co. v. A. C. Dauphiny & Co., App. ....     | 104  | 702  |
| Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y.; Clayburgh v., Sup. ....  | 102  | 812  |
| Ahlers v. Smiley, App. ....                                         | 104  | 997  |
| Allen; Bucher v., App. ....                                         | 105  | 942  |
| Allen v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., Sup. ....                       | 104  | 305  |
| Altadena Min. & Inv. Syndicate; Ætna Indemnity Co. v., App. ....    | 104  | 470  |
| Alvares; Victor Power & Mining Co. v., App. ....                    | 105  | 761  |
| American Surety Co.; Long v., App. ....                             | 103  | 1094 |
| Andrews; Boye v., App. ....                                         | 102  | 551  |
| Andrews v. Wheeler, App. ....                                       | 103  | 144  |
| Arrowhead Reservoir & Power Co.; Van Slyke v., Sup. ....            | 102  | 816  |
| Ash; Miller v., Sup. ....                                           | 105  | 600  |
| Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Williams v., Sup. ....                | 103  | 885  |
| Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Co. v. Wright, App. ....                   | 104  | 460  |
| Avdalas, Ex parte, App. ....                                        | 102  | 674  |
| Bahrs; Reagan v., App. ....                                         | 104  | 589  |
| Baird v. Justice's Court of Riverside Tp., App. ....                | 105  | 259  |
| Bangham; Smith v., Sup. ....                                        | 104  | 689  |
| Bank of Lassen County; Cahlan v., App. ....                         | 105  | 765  |
| Bank of Madera; San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings v., Sup. .... | 103  | 225  |
| Banks; Russell v., App. ....                                        | 105  | 261  |
| Barclay; Tu Junga Co. v., App. ....                                 | 103  | 1092 |
| Barrows; Crouse v., Sup. ....                                       | 103  | 894  |
| Bartlett Estate Co. v. Fraser, App. ....                            | 105  | 130  |
| Bass v. Leavitt, App. ....                                          | 105  | 771  |
| Beall v. Weir, App. ....                                            | 105  | 133  |
| Bell v. Camm, App. ....                                             | 102  | 225  |
| Bellafont; People v., App. ....                                     | 105  | 426  |
| Benedict; J. S. Potts Drug Co. v., Sup. ....                        | 104  | 432  |
| Benedict; Stull v., App. ....                                       | 102  | 961  |
| Benedict v. Wilson, App. ....                                       | 103  | 350  |
| Bergevin v. Wood, App. ....                                         | 105  | 935  |
| Bergin; Sanford v., Sup. ....                                       | 103  | 333  |
| Berkeley Development Co. v. Marx, App. ....                         | 102  | 278  |
| Berkey; General Conference of Free Baptists v., Sup. ....           | 105  | 411  |
| Berlin Dye Works & Laundry Co.; Treis v., App. ....                 | 105  | 275  |
| Blake, Ex parte, Sup. ....                                          | 102  | 269  |
| Blodgett; Cary v., App. ....                                        | 102  | 668  |
| Blodgett v. Scott, App. ....                                        | 104  | 842  |
| Bloom v. Michigan Salmon Min. Co., App. ....                        | 104  | 324  |
| Board of Trustees of City of Belmont Heights; Teague v., Sup. ....  | 104  | 581  |
| Boin v. Spreckels Sugar Co., Sup. ....                              | 102  | 937  |
| Bottoms' Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                   | 103  | 849  |
| Boye v. Andrews, App. ....                                          | 102  | 551  |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                                          | Vol. | Page |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Braash; Ritter v., App. ....                                                             | 104  | 592  |
| Bradbury; People v., Sup. ....                                                           | 103  | 215  |
| Bradley v. Bush, App. ....                                                               | 104  | 845  |
| Bradley v. Davis, Sup. ....                                                              | 104  | 302  |
| Braslan Seed Growers' Co.; Ford & Sanborn Co. v., App. ....                              | 103  | 946  |
| Brewer's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                                        | 103  | 486  |
| Brickell Co. v. Sutro, App. ....                                                         | 105  | 948  |
| Brickell Co. v. Sutro, Sup. ....                                                         | 105  | 949  |
| Bridges v. Los Angeles Pac. Ry., Sup. ....                                               | 105  | 586  |
| Brookins; Gervaise v., Sup. ....                                                         | 103  | 329  |
| Brookins; Gervaise v., Sup. ....                                                         | 103  | 332  |
| Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia Ranch Oil & Development Co., Sup. ....                    | 103  | 927  |
| Brown, Ex parte, Sup. ....                                                               | 105  | 739  |
| Brown; Canty v., App. ....                                                               | 105  | 428  |
| Bucher v. Allen, App. ....                                                               | 105  | 942  |
| Buckley; McCoy v., App. ....                                                             | 104  | 705  |
| Buckner; Dingley v., App. ....                                                           | 104  | 478  |
| Budan's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                                         | 104  | 442  |
| Buffington; City of Los Angeles v., Sup. ....                                            | 105  | 755  |
| Buhrmeister v. Buhrmeister, App. ....                                                    | 102  | 221  |
| Bunce; Elliott v., App. ....                                                             | 103  | 897  |
| Burbridge; Stewart v., App. ....                                                         | 102  | 962  |
| Burge v. Justice's Court of City & County of San Francisco, App. ....                    | 104  | 581  |
| Burne v. Lee, Sup. ....                                                                  | 104  | 438  |
| Burnett; Oliver v., App. ....                                                            | 102  | 223  |
| Bush; Bradley v., App. ....                                                              | 104  | 845  |
| Byrnes; Rudd v., Sup. ....                                                               | 105  | 957  |
| Cabrera v. Payne, App. ....                                                              | 103  | 176  |
| Cahlan v. Bank of Lassen County, App. ....                                               | 105  | 765  |
| Caledonian Ins. Co.; Levy v., Sup. ....                                                  | 105  | 598  |
| California College v. Stephens, App. ....                                                | 105  | 614  |
| California & O. C. S. S. Co.; Mitchell v., Sup. ....                                     | 105  | 590  |
| Camm; Bell v., App. ....                                                                 | 102  | 225  |
| Canty v. Brown, App. ....                                                                | 105  | 428  |
| Carantan; People v., App. ....                                                           | 105  | 768  |
| Carithers' Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                                      | 105  | 127  |
| Carly; Wright & Kimbrough v., App. ....                                                  | 104  | 1009 |
| Carr; Seale v., Sup. ....                                                                | 102  | 262  |
| Carstenbrook; Pittman v., App. ....                                                      | 104  | 699  |
| Carter v. Fox, App. ....                                                                 | 103  | 910  |
| Cary v. Blodgett, App. ....                                                              | 102  | 668  |
| Casmalia Ranch Oil & Development Co.; Brookshire Oil Co. v., Sup. ....                   | 103  | 927  |
| Castino v. Ritzman, Sup. ....                                                            | 105  | 739  |
| Castro; Kleinpeter v., App. ....                                                         | 103  | 1090 |
| Central California Water & Irrigation Co.; Consolidated People's Ditch Co. v., App. .... | 103  | 1133 |
| Central California Water & Irrigation Co.; Preston v., App. ....                         | 104  | 462  |
| Chaffee; Grogan v., Sup. ....                                                            | 105  | 745  |
| Cheney; Shannon v., Sup. ....                                                            | 105  | 588  |
| Chinn v. Superior Court of San Joaquin County, Sup. ....                                 | 105  | 580  |
| Christensen v. Cram, Sup. ....                                                           | 105  | 950  |
| Chutes Co.; Gooding v., Sup. ....                                                        | 102  | 819  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Buffington, Sup. ....                                             | 105  | 755  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Gager, App. ....                                                  | 102  | 17   |
| City of Los Angeles v. Hunter, Sup. ....                                                 | 105  | 755  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Lelande, App. ....                                                | 104  | 717  |
| City of Los Angeles v. McCollum, Sup. ....                                               | 103  | 914  |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                                            | Vol. | Page |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| City of Napa; Migliavacca v., App. ....                                                    | 102  | 227  |
| Clairmonte v. Napier Motor Co. of America, App. ....                                       | 104  | 712  |
| Clark; Fenn v., App. ....                                                                  | 103  | 944  |
| Clarkin; Morris v., Sup. ....                                                              | 103  | 180  |
| Clavo v. Clavo, App. ....                                                                  | 102  | 556  |
| Clayburgh v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., Sup. ....                          | 102  | 812  |
| Coburn, In re, App. ....                                                                   | 105  | 924  |
| Cohen; Henderson v., App. ....                                                             | 102  | 826  |
| Cole v. Roebling Const. Co., Sup. ....                                                     | 105  | 255  |
| Cole; Victor Power & Mining Co. v., App. ....                                              | 105  | 758  |
| Collins; Spencer v., Sup. ....                                                             | 104  | 320  |
| Consolidated People's Ditch Co. v. Central California Water & IrrigationCo., App. .... | 103  | 1133 |
| Continental Building & Loan Ass'n; Henry v., Sup. ....                                     | 105  | 960  |
| Cooley v. Miller & Lux, Sup. ....                                                          | 105  | 981  |
| Corrigan, Appeal of, Sup. ....                                                             | 104  | 455  |
| Cortelyou v. Imperial Land Co., Sup. ....                                                  | 104  | 695  |
| Courtright; People v., App. ....                                                           | 102  | 542  |
| Cox v. Hughes, App. ....                                                                   | 102  | 956  |
| Cram; Christensen v., Sup. ....                                                            | 105  | 950  |
| Crim v. Umbsen, Sup. ....                                                                  | 103  | 178  |
| Crouse v. Barrows, Sup. ....                                                               | 103  | 894  |
| Curry; Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v., Sup. ....                                               | 103  | 341  |
| Curry; Lewis v., Sup. ....                                                                 | 103  | 493  |
| Curtin v. Dunne, App. ....                                                                 | 102  | 825  |
| Curtin v. Ingle, App. ....                                                                 | 104  | 1003 |
| Cusick; People v., App. ....                                                               | 104  | 461  |
| Daggett v. Southwest Packing Co., Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 204  |
| Dailey; Hudson v., Sup. ....                                                               | 105  | 748  |
| Damon v. McDougald, App. ....                                                              | 102  | 684  |
| Damon's Estate, In re, App. ....                                                           | 102  | 684  |
| Dauphiny & Co.; Aggler, Morrison, Hansen Co. v., App. ....                                 | 104  | 702  |
| Davis; Bradley v., Sup. ....                                                               | 104  | 302  |
| Derwae; People v., Sup. ....                                                               | 102  | 266  |
| Dingley v. Buckner, App. ....                                                              | 104  | 478  |
| Disperati; People v., App. ....                                                            | 105  | 617  |
| Dixon; Parmelee v., App. ....                                                              | 105  | 1116 |
| Donovan v. Aetna Indemnity Co. of Hartford, Conn., App. ....                               | 103  | 365  |
| Drake v. Russian River Land Co., App. ....                                                 | 103  | 167  |
| Dreyfus; McCaleb v., Sup. ....                                                             | 103  | 924  |
| Driggs; Ex parte, App. ....                                                                | 102  | 542  |
| Dundas v. Lankershim School Dist., Sup. ....                                               | 102  | 925  |
| Dunham; Hodgkins v., App. ....                                                             | 103  | 351  |
| Dunne; Curtin v., App. ....                                                                | 102  | 825  |
| Durand v. Rardon, Sup. ....                                                                | 103  | 849  |
| Dye; Potomac Oil Co. v., App. ....                                                         | 102  | 677  |
| Elizalde v. Murphy, App. ....                                                              | 103  | 904  |
| Elliott v. Bunce, App. ....                                                                | 103  | 897  |
| Elsom v. Moore, App. ....                                                                  | 105  | 271  |
| English; Kern County Brick & Contract Co. v., App. ....                                    | 102  | 960  |
| Ernest v. McCauley, Sup. ....                                                              | 102  | 924  |
| Fagan v. Lentz, Sup. ....                                                                  | 105  | 951  |
| Fancher v. Fancher, Sup. ....                                                              | 103  | 206  |
| Fanning v. Green, Sup. ....                                                                | 104  | 308  |
| Fenn v. Clark, App. ....                                                                   | 103  | 944  |
| Figone v. Repetti, App. ....                                                               | 104  | 583  |
| Finnell v. Finnell, Sup. ....                                                              | 105  | 740  |

|                                                                      | Vol. | Page |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Finrell v. Jas. H. Goodman & Co. Bank, Sup. ....                     | 103  | 483  |
| Fleet v. Tichenor, Sup. ....                                         | 104  | 458  |
| Ford & Sanborn Co. v. Braslan Seed Growers' Co., App. ....           | 103  | 946  |
| Fox; Carter v., App. ....                                            | 103  | 910  |
| Fox; True v., Sup. ....                                              | 102  | 263  |
| Fraser; Bartlett Estate Co. v., App. ....                            | 105  | 130  |
| Frese v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, App. ....                 | 105  | 265  |
| Frisbie v. Rosenberg Bros. & Co., App. ....                          | 105  | 943  |
| Fulkerson v. Stiles, Sup. ....                                       | 105  | 966  |
| Fuller v. Smith, Sup. ....                                           | 103  | 919  |
| Fuller & Co.; Pigeon v., Sup. ....                                   | 105  | 976  |
| Gager; City of Los Angeles v., App. ....                             | 102  | 17   |
| Garden; Learned v., Sup. ....                                        | 104  | 315  |
| Garratt & Co.; Scally v., App. ....                                  | 104  | 325  |
| Gavin; Green v., App. ....                                           | 105  | 761  |
| General Conference of Free Baptists v. Berkey, Sup. ....             | 105  | 411  |
| German-American Sav. Bank v. Gollmer, Sup. ....                      | 102  | 932  |
| Gervaise v. Brookins, Sup. ....                                      | 103  | 329  |
| Gervaise v. Brookins, Sup. ....                                      | 103  | 332  |
| Gillett; Graham v., Sup. ....                                        | 103  | 195  |
| Gillett; Halsey v., Sup. ....                                        | 103  | 339  |
| Gillingham v. Lawrence, App. ....                                    | 104  | 584  |
| Globe Grain & Milling Co.; Allen v., Sup. ....                       | 104  | 305  |
| Gobbi; Lucas v., App. ....                                           | 103  | 157  |
| Goldschmidt; Harper v., Sup. ....                                    | 104  | 451  |
| Goldschmidt; Willow Land Co. v., App. ....                           | 104  | 841  |
| Gollmer; German-American Sav. Bank v., Sup. ....                     | 102  | 932  |
| Gomez v. Scanlan, Sup. ....                                          | 102  | 12   |
| Gooding v. Chutes Co., Sup. ....                                     | 102  | 819  |
| Goodman & Co. Bank; Finnell v., Sup. ....                            | 103  | 483  |
| Goytino v. McAleer, App. ....                                        | 103  | 174  |
| Graham v. Gillett, Sup. ....                                         | 103  | 195  |
| Grand Pacific Gold Min. Co.; San Domingo Gold Min. Co. v., App. .... | 102  | 548  |
| Gray; San Francisco Teaming Co. v., App. ....                        | 104  | 999  |
| Gray; Sherman v., App. ....                                          | 104  | 1004 |
| Gray; Stone v., App. ....                                            | 103  | 155  |
| Gray v. Times-Mirror Co., App. ....                                  | 104  | 481  |
| Green; Fanning v., Sup. ....                                         | 104  | 308  |
| Green v. Gavin, App. ....                                            | 105  | 761  |
| Grey, Ex parte, App. ....                                            | 104  | 476  |
| Grierson v. Grierson, Sup. ....                                      | 105  | 120  |
| Grotholdt; Moore v., App. ....                                       | 103  | 149  |
| Grogan v. Chaffee, Sup. ....                                         | 105  | 745  |
| Grover; Woodard v., Sup. ....                                        | 105  | 736  |
| Halsey v. Gillett, Sup. ....                                         | 103  | 339  |
| Ham Tong; People v., Sup. ....                                       | 102  | 263  |
| Hanford Mercantile Store v. Sowveere, App. ....                      | 104  | 708  |
| Harper v. Goldschmidt, Sup. ....                                     | 104  | 451  |
| Harris v. Munro Co., App. ....                                       | 102  | 821  |
| Harrison v. Woodward, App. ....                                      | 103  | 933  |
| Hawkins v. Ware, App. ....                                           | 103  | 204  |
| Hawn; Silva v., App. ....                                            | 102  | 952  |
| Hazard; Holdt v., App. ....                                          | 102  | 540  |
| Heacock; People v., App. ....                                        | 102  | 543  |
| Heberle's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                   | 102  | 935  |
| Heilbron; Sacramento Southern R. Co. v., Sup. ....                   | 104  | 979  |
| Heitman v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App. ....                       | 102  | 15   |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                                                             | Vol. | Page |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Henderson v. Cohen, App. ....                                                                               | 102  | 826  |
| Henry v. Continental Building & Loan Ass'n, Sup. ....                                                       | 105  | 960  |
| Higgins' Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                                                           | 104  | 6    |
| Hodgkins v. Dunham, App. ....                                                                               | 103  | 351  |
| Hoffman; McDonald v., App. ....                                                                             | 102  | 673  |
| Hogan; People v., App. ....                                                                                 | 105  | 938  |
| Holdt v. Hazard, App. ....                                                                                  | 102  | 540  |
| Holloway; Luce v., Sup. ....                                                                                | 103  | 886  |
| Hollywood City School Dist. of Los Angeles County; Pass School Dist. ofLos Angeles County v., Sup. .... | 105  | 122  |
| Home Ins. Co. of New York; McCollough v., Sup. ....                                                         | 102  | 814  |
| Hooe v. O'Callaghan, App. ....                                                                              | 103  | 175  |
| Hooper v. Young, App. ....                                                                                  | 102  | 950  |
| Hoover v. Wasson, App. ....                                                                                 | 105  | 945  |
| Hoppin; Inglin v., Sup. ....                                                                                | 105  | 582  |
| Houghton Co. v. Kennedy, App. ....                                                                          | 102  | 533  |
| Howse v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. of Norwich & London, Eng., App. ....                                  | 103  | 156  |
| H. P. Smith Co. v. Suttich, App. ....                                                                       | 102  | 683  |
| Hubbard v. Lee, App. ....                                                                                   | 102  | 528  |
| Hubbard; Lemon v., App. ....                                                                                | 102  | 554  |
| Hudson v. Dailey, Sup. ....                                                                                 | 105  | 748  |
| Hughes; Cox v., App. ....                                                                                   | 102  | 956  |
| Hunter; City of Los Angeles v., Sup. ....                                                                   | 105  | 755  |
| Hyer; Smith v., App. ....                                                                                   | 105  | 787  |
| Imperial Land Co.; Cortelyou v., Sup. ....                                                                  | 104  | 695  |
| Imperial Water Co., No. 1; McNair v., Sup. ....                                                             | 103  | 229  |
| Imperial Water Co., No. 8; Miller v., Sup. ....                                                             | 103  | 227  |
| Ingle; Curtin v., App. ....                                                                                 | 104  | 1003 |
| Inglin v. Hoppin, Sup. ....                                                                                 | 105  | 582  |
| Italian-Swiss Colony; Rockwell v., App. ....                                                                | 103  | 162  |
| Jackson v. Southern Pac. Co., App. ....                                                                     | 103  | 1098 |
| James v. Oakland Traction Co., App. ....                                                                    | 103  | 1082 |
| Jas. H. Goodman & Co. Bank; Finnell v., Sup. ....                                                           | 103  | 483  |
| John Brickell Co. v. Sutro, App. ....                                                                       | 105  | 948  |
| John Brickell Co. v. Sutro, Sup. ....                                                                       | 105  | 949  |
| Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., App. ....                                                                     | 104  | 713  |
| Johnston; Land v., Sup. ....                                                                                | 104  | 449  |
| Joyce; Yolo County v., Sup. ....                                                                            | 105  | 125  |
| J. S. Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, Sup. ....                                                                 | 104  | 432  |
| Junqua, Ex parte, App. ....                                                                                 | 103  | 159  |
| Justices' Court of City & County of San Francisco; Burge v., App. ....                                      | 104  | 581  |
| Justice's Court of First Judicial Tp., Contra Costa County; Olcese v.,Sup. ....                         | 103  | 317  |
| Justice's Court of Riverside Tp.; Baird v., App. ....                                                       | 105  | 259  |
| Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, Sup. ....                                                                 | 103  | 341  |
| Katz; Miller & Lux v., App. ....                                                                            | 102  | 946  |
| Kauffman, Davidson & Co. v. W. F. Shaw & Co., App. ....                                                     | 102  | 671  |
| Kennedy; Houghton Co. v., App. ....                                                                         | 102  | 533  |
| Kern County Brick & Contract Co. v. English, App. ....                                                      | 102  | 960  |
| Kern Valley Bank v. Koehn, App. ....                                                                        | 103  | 173  |
| Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co., Sup. ....                                                   | 104  | 312  |
| Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co., Sup. ....                                                   | 104  | 986  |
| Kleinpeter v. Castro, App. ....                                                                             | 103  | 1090 |
| Knerr; Potts v., App. ....                                                                                  | 103  | 1093 |
| Knickrehm; Skinner v., App. ....                                                                            | 102  | 947  |
| Knight; Roughton v., Sup. ....                                                                              | 103  | 844  |
| Knoblock; People v., App. ....                                                                              | 104  | 1012 |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                         | Vol. | Page |
|---------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Knott v. Patnott, App. ....                             | 105  | 260  |
| Koehn; Kern Valley Bank v., App. ....                   | 103  | 173  |
| Krogh v. Pacific Gateway & Development Co., App. ....   | 104  | 698  |
| Krone; Ruth v., App. ....                               | 103  | 960  |
| Kwpr Singh; People v., App. ....                        | 105  | 423  |
| La Dow v. National Bldg. & Pav. Brick Co., App. ....    | 104  | 838  |
| Land v. Johnston, Sup. ....                             | 104  | 449  |
| Lane v. Tanner, Sup. ....                               | 103  | 846  |
| Lane v. Williams, Sup. ....                             | 104  | 301  |
| Lange v. Superior Court, App. ....                      | 103  | 908  |
| Lange v. Waters, Sup. ....                              | 103  | 889  |
| Lankershim School Dist.; Dundas v., Sup. ....           | 102  | 925  |
| Lapique; People v., App. ....                           | 103  | 164  |
| Larrimore; Samuels v., App. ....                        | 104  | 1001 |
| Lawrence; Gillingham v., App. ....                      | 104  | 584  |
| Lawrence; Martin v., Sup. ....                          | 103  | 913  |
| Lay v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, App. ....  | 105  | 775  |
| Learned v. Garden, Sup. ....                            | 104  | 315  |
| Learned's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                      | 104  | 315  |
| Leavitt; Bass v., App. ....                             | 105  | 771  |
| Le Doux; People v., Sup. ....                           | 102  | 517  |
| Lee; Burne v., Sup. ....                                | 104  | 438  |
| Lee; Hubbard v., App. ....                              | 102  | 528  |
| Leffingwell; Rauer Law & Collection Co. v., App. ....   | 105  | 427  |
| Leland; City of Los Angeles v., App. ....               | 104  | 717  |
| Lemon v. Hubbard, App. ....                             | 102  | 554  |
| Lentz; Fagan v., Sup. ....                              | 105  | 951  |
| Lester; Newman v., App. ....                            | 105  | 785  |
| Levy v. Caledonian Ins. Co., Sup. ....                  | 105  | 598  |
| Lewis, Ex parte, App. ....                              | 105  | 774  |
| Lewis v. Curry, Sup. ....                               | 103  | 493  |
| Lewis v. Miller & Lux, Sup. ....                        | 103  | 496  |
| Lewis v. Superior Court of Butte County, App. ....      | 105  | 763  |
| Light v. Stevens, App. ....                             | 103  | 361  |
| Lightston; Ritz v., App. ....                           | 103  | 363  |
| Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Electric Co., Sup. .... | 103  | 320  |
| Lompoc Valley Bank v. Stephenson, Sup. ....             | 104  | 449  |
| Long v. American Surety Co., App. ....                  | 103  | 1094 |
| Long v. Newman, App. ....                               | 102  | 534  |
| Long Beach; People v., Sup. ....                        | 102  | 664  |
| Los Angeles County; Sarver v., Sup. ....                | 103  | 917  |
| Los Angeles Pac. Ry.; Bridges v., Sup. ....             | 105  | 586  |
| Lott; Marsh v., Sup. ....                               | 105  | 968  |
| Lucas v. Gobbi, App. ....                               | 103  | 157  |
| Lucas v. Rea, App. ....                                 | 102  | 822  |
| Lucas; Sousa v., Sup. ....                              | 105  | 413  |
| Luce v. Holloway, Sup. ....                             | 103  | 886  |
| Lukens v. Nye, Sup. ....                                | 105  | 593  |
| Lynch v. McDonald, Sup. ....                            | 102  | 918  |
| McAleer; Goytino v., App. ....                          | 103  | 174  |
| McCaleb v. Dreyfus, Sup. ....                           | 103  | 924  |
| McCauley; Ernest v., Sup. ....                          | 102  | 924  |
| McCollough v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, Sup. ....      | 102  | 814  |
| McCollum; City of Los Angeles v., Sup. ....             | 103  | 914  |
| McCoy v. Buckley, App. ....                             | 104  | 705  |
| McDonald v. Hoffman, App. ....                          | 102  | 673  |
| McDonald; Lynch v., Sup. ....                           | 102  | 918  |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                             | Vol. | Page |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| MacDonald v. MacDonald, Sup. ....                                           | 102  | 927  |
| McDougald; Damon v., App. ....                                              | 102  | 684  |
| McKeehan; People v., App. ....                                              | 105  | 273  |
| MacLeod v. Moran, App. ....                                                 | 105  | 932  |
| McNair v. Imperial Water Co., No. 1, Sup. ....                              | 103  | 229  |
| McPhee's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                           | 104  | 455  |
| Mar Gin Suie; People v., App. ....                                          | 103  | 951  |
| Markham; Turner v., Sup. ....                                               | 102  | 272  |
| Markham; Turner v., Sup. ....                                               | 103  | 319  |
| Marsh v. Lott, Sup. ....                                                    | 105  | 968  |
| Martin v. Lawrence, Sup. ....                                               | 103  | 913  |
| Marx; Berkeley Development Co. v., App. ....                                | 102  | 278  |
| Matezusi; People v., App. ....                                              | 105  | 425  |
| Mathews; Smith v., Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 199  |
| Matson; Owsley v., Sup. ....                                                | 104  | 983  |
| Matthews v. Town of Livermore, Sup. ....                                    | 104  | 303  |
| Meigs; Tibbals Oakum Co. v., App. ....                                      | 104  | 844  |
| Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco; Newlove v., Sup. ....                | 105  | 971  |
| Metteer v. Smith, Sup. ....                                                 | 105  | 735  |
| Michigan Salmon Min. Co.; Bloom v., App. ....                               | 104  | 324  |
| Middleton; Wardlow v., Sup. ....                                            | 105  | 738  |
| Migliavacca v. City of Napa, App. ....                                      | 102  | 227  |
| Miller v. Ash, Sup. ....                                                    | 105  | 600  |
| Miller v. Imperial Water Co., No. 8, Sup. ....                              | 103  | 227  |
| Miller's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                           | 103  | 842  |
| Miller & Lux; Cooley v., Sup. ....                                          | 105  | 981  |
| Miller & Lux v. Katz, App. ....                                             | 102  | 946  |
| Miller & Lux; Lewis v., Sup. ....                                           | 103  | 496  |
| Mills v. Rossiter, Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 896  |
| Mitchell v. California & O. C. S. S. Co., Sup. ....                         | 105  | 590  |
| Mitchell; White v., App. ....                                               | 104  | 333  |
| Modoc Co-Operative Ass'n v. Porter, App. ....                               | 104  | 710  |
| Monterey Coal Co. v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County, App. ....        | 104  | 585  |
| Moore; Elsom v., App. ....                                                  | 105  | 271  |
| Moore v. Groftholdt, App. ....                                              | 103  | 149  |
| Moore v. Trott, Sup. ....                                                   | 104  | 578  |
| Moore; Younger v., Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 221  |
| Moran; MacLeod v., App. ....                                                | 105  | 932  |
| Morganstern, In re, Sup. ....                                               | 104  | 448  |
| Morris v. Clarkin, Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 180  |
| Muhly; People v., App. ....                                                 | 104  | 466  |
| Munro Co.; Harris v., App. ....                                             | 102  | 821  |
| Murphy; Elizalde v., App. ....                                              | 103  | 904  |
| Mutual Biscuit Co.; Standard Box Co. v., App. ....                          | 103  | 938  |
| Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York; Frese v., App. ....                       | 105  | 265  |
| Nail v. Superior Court, App. ....                                           | 103  | 902  |
| Napier Motor Co. of America; Clairmonte v., App. ....                       | 104  | 712  |
| National Bldg. & Pav. Brick Co.; La Dow v., App. ....                       | 104  | 838  |
| Nesbitt; Peterson v., App. ....                                             | 105  | 135  |
| Newlove v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, Sup. ....                 | 105  | 971  |
| Newman v. Lester, App. ....                                                 | 105  | 785  |
| Newman; Long v., App. ....                                                  | 102  | 534  |
| Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. of Norwich & London, Eng.; Howse v., App. .... | 103  | 156  |
| Nye; Lukens v., Sup. ....                                                   | 105  | 593  |
| Nye; Wessling v., Sup. ....                                                 | 105  | 408  |
| Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Co.; Ryan v., App. ....                           | 102  | 558  |
| Oakland Traction Co.; James v., App. ....                                   | 103  | 1082 |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                                                            | Vol. | Page |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| O'Callaghan; Hooe v., App. ....                                                                            | 103  | 175  |
| Olcese v. Justice's Court of First Judicial Tp., Contra Costa County, Sup. ....                            | 103  | 317  |
| Older v. Superior Court, App. ....                                                                         | 102  | 829  |
| Oliver v. Burnett, App. ....                                                                               | 102  | 223  |
| O'Shea, Ex parte, App. ....                                                                                | 105  | 776  |
| Owsley v. Matson, Sup. ....                                                                                | 104  | 983  |
| Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Heitman v., App. ....                                                            | 102  | 15   |
| Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; Wyatt v., Sup. ....                                                              | 103  | 892  |
| Pacific Gateway & Development Co.; Krogh v., App. ....                                                     | 104  | 698  |
| Pacific Grove High School Dist.; People v., App. ....                                                      | 104  | 586  |
| Pacific Pav. Co. v. Verso, App. ....                                                                       | 105  | 136  |
| Paine v. Ward, App. ....                                                                                   | 105  | 132  |
| Pajaro Valley Consol. R. Co.; Wyckoff v., App. ....                                                        | 103  | 1100 |
| Palmtag; Raggio v., Sup. ....                                                                              | 103  | 312  |
| Panama R. Co.; Schwartz v., Sup. ....                                                                      | 103  | 196  |
| Parmelee v. Dixon, App. ....                                                                               | 105  | 1116 |
| Pass School Dist. of Los Angeles County v. Hollywood City School Dist. ofLos Angeles County, Sup. .... | 105  | 122  |
| Patnott; Knott v., App. ....                                                                               | 105  | 260  |
| Patterson's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                                                       | 102  | 941  |
| Payne; Cabrera v., App. ....                                                                               | 103  | 176  |
| Payne; Winchester v., App. ....                                                                            | 102  | 531  |
| Peck v. Stassforth, Sup. ....                                                                              | 103  | 918  |
| Peck v. Stassforth, Sup. ....                                                                              | 103  | 919  |
| People v. Bellafont, App. ....                                                                             | 105  | 426  |
| People v. Bradbury, Sup. ....                                                                              | 103  | 215  |
| People v. Carantan, App. ....                                                                              | 105  | 768  |
| People v. Courtright, App. ....                                                                            | 102  | 542  |
| People v. Cusick, App. ....                                                                                | 104  | 461  |
| People v. Derwae, Sup. ....                                                                                | 102  | 266  |
| People v. Disperati, App. ....                                                                             | 105  | 617  |
| People v. Ham Tong, Sup. ....                                                                              | 102  | 263  |
| People v. Heacock, App. ....                                                                               | 102  | 543  |
| People v. Hogan, App. ....                                                                                 | 105  | 938  |
| People v. Knoblock, App. ....                                                                              | 104  | 1012 |
| People v. Kwpr Singh, App. ....                                                                            | 105  | 423  |
| People v. Lapique, App. ....                                                                               | 103  | 164  |
| People v. Le Doux, Sup. ....                                                                               | 102  | 517  |
| People v. Long Beach, Sup. ....                                                                            | 102  | 664  |
| People v. McKeehan, App. ....                                                                              | 105  | 273  |
| People v. Mar Gin Suie, App. ....                                                                          | 103  | 951  |
| People v. Matezusi, App. ....                                                                              | 105  | 425  |
| People v. Muhly, App. ....                                                                                 | 104  | 466  |
| People v. Pacific Grove High School Dist., App. ....                                                       | 104  | 586  |
| People v. Piner, App. ....                                                                                 | 105  | 780  |
| People v. Rigby, App. ....                                                                                 | 104  | 840  |
| People v. Ross, App. ....                                                                                  | 104  | 709  |
| People v. Russell, Sup. ....                                                                               | 105  | 416  |
| People v. Sacramento Drainage Dist., Sup. ....                                                             | 103  | 207  |
| People v. Soto, App. ....                                                                                  | 105  | 420  |
| People v. Spadoni, App. ....                                                                               | 104  | 588  |
| People v. Tansey, App. ....                                                                                | 104  | 582  |
| People v. Turpin, App. ....                                                                                | 102  | 680  |
| People v. Ward, App. ....                                                                                  | 102  | 679  |
| People v. Weir, App. ....                                                                                  | 102  | 539  |
| People v. Wieland, App. ....                                                                               | 102  | 828  |
| People v. Wyatt, App. ....                                                                                 | 104  | 12   |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                                               | Vol. | Page |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| People v. Zimmerman, App. ....                                                                | 104  | 590  |
| Pereira v. Pereira, Sup. ....                                                                 | 103  | 488  |
| Perkins v. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co., Sup. ....                                        | 103  | 190  |
| Peters v. Peters, Sup. ....                                                                   | 103  | 219  |
| Peterson v. Nesbitt, App. ....                                                                | 105  | 135  |
| Pierce; Rabin v., App. ....                                                                   | 103  | 771  |
| Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8,760, Sup. ....                                       | 103  | 324  |
| Pigeon v. W. P. Fuller & Co., Sup. ....                                                       | 105  | 976  |
| Piner; People v., App. ....                                                                   | 105  | 780  |
| Pittman v. Carstenbrook, App. ....                                                            | 104  | 699  |
| Porter; Modoc Co-Operative Ass'n v., App. ....                                                | 104  | 710  |
| Potomac Oil Co. v. Dye, App. ....                                                             | 102  | 677  |
| Potts v. Knerr, App. ....                                                                     | 103  | 1093 |
| Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, Sup. ....                                                         | 104  | 432  |
| Pratt; Williams v., App. ....                                                                 | 103  | 151  |
| President and Board of Trustees of California College v. Stephens, App. ....                  | 105  | 614  |
| Preston v. Central California Water & Irrigation Co., App. ....                               | 104  | 462  |
| Pringle v. Wilson, Sup. ....                                                                  | 104  | 316  |
| Proud v. Strain, App. ....                                                                    | 103  | 949  |
| Quigley; Smith v., Sup. ....                                                                  | 102  | 941  |
| Rabin v. Pierce, App. ....                                                                    | 103  | 771  |
| Raggio v. Palmtag, Sup. ....                                                                  | 103  | 312  |
| Ralph Rogers Co. v. Workman, App. ....                                                        | 103  | 154  |
| Rardon; Durand v., Sup. ....                                                                  | 103  | 849  |
| Rauer Law & Collection Co. v. Leffingwell, App. ....                                          | 105  | 427  |
| Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App. .... | 102  | 547  |
| Rea; Lucas v., App. ....                                                                      | 102  | 822  |
| Reagan v. Bahrs, App. ....                                                                    | 104  | 589  |
| Reclamation Dist. No. 70 v. Sherman, App. ....                                                | 105  | 277  |
| Redondo Imp. Co.; Shultz v., Sup. ....                                                        | 105  | 118  |
| Reed v. Sefton, App. ....                                                                     | 103  | 1095 |
| Repetti; Figone v., App. ....                                                                 | 104  | 583  |
| Rigby; People v., App. ....                                                                   | 104  | 840  |
| Ritter v. Braash, App. ....                                                                   | 104  | 592  |
| Ritz v. Lightston, App. ....                                                                  | 103  | 363  |
| Ritzman; Castino v., Sup. ....                                                                | 105  | 739  |
| Rockwell v. Italian-Swiss Colony, App. ....                                                   | 103  | 162  |
| Roebbing Const. Co.; Cole v., Sup. ....                                                       | 105  | 255  |
| Rogers Co. v. Workman, App. ....                                                              | 103  | 154  |
| Rose; Union Ice Co. v., App. ....                                                             | 104  | 1006 |
| Rosenberg Bros. & Co.; Frisbie v., App. ....                                                  | 105  | 943  |
| Rosenow v. Wiener, App. ....                                                                  | 104  | 839  |
| Ross; People v., App. ....                                                                    | 104  | 709  |
| Rossiter; Mills v., Sup. ....                                                                 | 103  | 896  |
| Roughton v. Knight, Sup. ....                                                                 | 103  | 844  |
| Rudd v. Byrnes, Sup. ....                                                                     | 105  | 957  |
| Russell v. Banks, App. ....                                                                   | 105  | 261  |
| Russell; People v., Sup. ....                                                                 | 105  | 416  |
| Russian River Land Co.; Drake v., App. ....                                                   | 103  | 167  |
| Ruth v. Krone, App. ....                                                                      | 103  | 960  |
| Ryan v. Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Co., App. ....                                              | 102  | 558  |
| Sacramento Drainage Dist.; People v., Sup. ....                                               | 103  | 207  |
| Sacramento Southern R. Co. v. Heilbron, Sup. ....                                             | 104  | 979  |
| Samuels v. Larrimore, App. ....                                                               | 104  | 1001 |
| San Chung, Ex parte, App. ....                                                                | 105  | 609  |
| San Domingo Gold Min. Co. v. Grand Pacific Gold Min. Co., App. ....                           | 102  | 548  |

|                                                                               | Vol. | Page |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Sanford v. Bergin, Sup. ....                                                  | 103  | 333  |
| San Francisco Gas & Electric Co.; Linforth v., Sup. ....                      | 103  | 320  |
| San Francisco Teaming Co. v. Gray, App. ....                                  | 104  | 999  |
| San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co.; Kimic v., Sup. ....                    | 104  | 312  |
| San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban Ry. Co.; Kimic v., Sup. ....                    | 104  | 986  |
| San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings v. Bank of Madera, Sup. ....            | 103  | 225  |
| San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Schroeter, Sup. ....                                  | 103  | 888  |
| Sarver v. Los Angeles County, Sup. ....                                       | 103  | 917  |
| Sally v. W. T. Garratt & Co., App. ....                                       | 104  | 325  |
| Scanlan; Gomez v., Sup. ....                                                  | 102  | 12   |
| Schroeter; San Pedro Lumber Co. v., Sup. ....                                 | 103  | 888  |
| Schwartz v. Panama R. Co., Sup. ....                                          | 103  | 196  |
| Scott; Blodgett v., App. ....                                                 | 104  | 842  |
| Seale v. Carr, Sup. ....                                                      | 102  | 262  |
| Sefton; Reed v., App. ....                                                    | 103  | 1095 |
| Shannon v. Cheney, Sup. ....                                                  | 105  | 588  |
| Shaw & Co.; Kauffman, Davidson & Co. v., App. ....                            | 102  | 671  |
| Sherman v. Gray, App. ....                                                    | 104  | 1004 |
| Sherman; Reclamation Dist. No. 70 v., App. ....                               | 105  | 277  |
| Shiveley's Estate, In re, App. ....                                           | 103  | 959  |
| Shultz v. Redondo Imp. Co., Sup. ....                                         | 105  | 118  |
| Silva v. Hawn, App. ....                                                      | 102  | 952  |
| Sinbad Development Co.; Smith v., App. ....                                   | 104  | 706  |
| Skinner v. Knickrehm, App. ....                                               | 102  | 947  |
| Smiley; Ahlers v., App. ....                                                  | 104  | 997  |
| Smith v. Bangham, Sup. ....                                                   | 104  | 689  |
| Smith; Fuller v., Sup. ....                                                   | 103  | 919  |
| Smith v. Hyer, App. ....                                                      | 105  | 787  |
| Smith v. Mathews, Sup. ....                                                   | 103  | 199  |
| Smith; Metteer v., Sup. ....                                                  | 105  | 735  |
| Smith v. Quigley, Sup. ....                                                   | 102  | 941  |
| Smith v. Sinbad Development Co., App. ....                                    | 104  | 706  |
| Smith Co. v. Suttich, App. ....                                               | 102  | 683  |
| Snowball's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                           | 104  | 444  |
| Snowball's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                           | 104  | 446  |
| Socialist Party v. Uhl, Sup. ....                                             | 103  | 181  |
| Sonoma County; Wright v., Sup. ....                                           | 105  | 409  |
| Soto; People v., App. ....                                                    | 105  | 420  |
| Sousa v. Lucas, Sup. ....                                                     | 105  | 413  |
| Southern Pac. Co.; Jackson v., App. ....                                      | 103  | 1098 |
| Southern Pac. Co.; Johnson v., App. ....                                      | 104  | 713  |
| Southwest Packing Co.; Daggett v., Sup. ....                                  | 103  | 204  |
| Sowlveere; Hanford Mercantile Store v., App. ....                             | 104  | 708  |
| Spadoni; People v., App. ....                                                 | 104  | 588  |
| Spangler v. Spangler, App. ....                                               | 104  | 995  |
| Spencer v. Collins, Sup. ....                                                 | 104  | 320  |
| Spreckels Sugar Co.; Boin v., Sup. ....                                       | 102  | 937  |
| Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8,760; Pierce v., Sup. ....                      | 103  | 324  |
| Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., App. ....                             | 103  | 938  |
| Stassforth; Peck v., Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 918  |
| Stassforth; Peck v., Sup. ....                                                | 103  | 919  |
| Stephens; President and Board of Trustees of California College v., App. .... | 105  | 614  |
| Stephenson; Lompoc Valley Bank v., Sup. ....                                  | 104  | 449  |
| Stevens; Light v., App. ....                                                  | 103  | 361  |
| Stewart v. Burbridge, App. ....                                               | 102  | 962  |
| Stewart v. Stewart, Sup. ....                                                 | 105  | 955  |
| Stiavetti v. Unsworth, App. ....                                              | 103  | 149  |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                                                                     | Vol. | Page |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Stiles; Fulkerson v., Sup. ....                                                                     | 105  | 966  |
| Stone v. Gray, App. ....                                                                            | 103  | 155  |
| Strain; Proud v., App. ....                                                                         | 103  | 949  |
| Stull v. Benedict, App. ....                                                                        | 102  | 961  |
| Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co.; Perkins v., Sup. ....                                             | 103  | 190  |
| Superior Court; Lange v., App. ....                                                                 | 103  | 908  |
| Superior Court; Nail v., App. ....                                                                  | 103  | 902  |
| Superior Court; Older v., App. ....                                                                 | 102  | 829  |
| Superior Court of Butte County; Lewis v., App. ....                                                 | 105  | 763  |
| Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Rauer's Law & Col-lection Co. v., App. .... | 102  | 547  |
| Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Lay v., App. ....                                             | 105  | 775  |
| Superior Court of San Joaquin County; Chinn v., Sup. ....                                           | 105  | 580  |
| Superior Court of Santa Clara County; Monterey Coal Co. v., App. ....                               | 104  | 585  |
| Sutro; John Brickell Co. v., App. ....                                                              | 105  | 948  |
| Sutro; John Brickell Co. v., Sup. ....                                                              | 105  | 949  |
| Sutro's Estate, In re, Sup. ....                                                                    | 102  | 920  |
| Suttich; H. P. Smith Co. v., App. ....                                                              | 102  | 683  |
| Swan v. Walden, Sup. ....                                                                           | 103  | 931  |
| Taminelli; Togni v., App. ....                                                                      | 103  | 899  |
| Tanner; Lane v., Sup. ....                                                                          | 103  | 846  |
| Tansey; People v., App. ....                                                                        | 104  | 582  |
| Teague v. Board of Trustees of City of Belmont Heights, Sup. ....                                   | 104  | 581  |
| Temescal Water Co.; Waterbury v., App. ....                                                         | 105  | 940  |
| Thomas, Ex parte, App. ....                                                                         | 102  | 19   |
| Tibbals Oakum Co. v. Meigs, App. ....                                                               | 104  | 844  |
| Tichenor; Fleet v., Sup. ....                                                                       | 104  | 458  |
| Tiffin; Zenda Min. & Mill Co. v., App. ....                                                         | 104  | 10   |
| Times-Mirror Co.; Gray v., App. ....                                                                | 104  | 481  |
| Togni v. Taminelli, App. ....                                                                       | 103  | 899  |
| Town of Livermore; Matthews v., Sup. ....                                                           | 104  | 303  |
| Treis v. Berlin Dye Works & Laundry Co., App. ....                                                  | 105  | 275  |
| Trott; Moore v., Sup. ....                                                                          | 104  | 578  |
| True v. Fox, Sup. ....                                                                              | 102  | 263  |
| Tu Junga Co. v. Barclay, App. ....                                                                  | 103  | 1092 |
| Turner v. Markham, Sup. ....                                                                        | 102  | 272  |
| Turner v. Markham, Sup. ....                                                                        | 103  | 319  |
| Turpin; People v., App. ....                                                                        | 102  | 680  |
| Uhl; Socialist Party v., Sup. ....                                                                  | 103  | 181  |
| Umbsen; Crim v., Sup. ....                                                                          | 103  | 178  |
| Union Ice Co. v. Rose, App. ....                                                                    | 104  | 1006 |
| Unsworth; Stiavetti v., App. ....                                                                   | 103  | 149  |
| Van Slyke v. Arrowhead Reservoir & Power Co., Sup. ....                                             | 102  | 816  |
| Verso; Pacific Pav. Co. v., App. ....                                                               | 105  | 136  |
| Victor Power & Mining Co. v. Alvares, App. ....                                                     | 105  | 761  |
| Victor Power & Mining Co. v. Cole, App. ....                                                        | 105  | 758  |
| Victor Power & Mining Co. v. Zerr, App. ....                                                        | 105  | 761  |
| Walden; Swan v., Sup. ....                                                                          | 103  | 931  |
| Ward; Paine v., App. ....                                                                           | 105  | 132  |
| Ward; People v., App. ....                                                                          | 102  | 679  |
| Wardlow v. Middleton, Sup. ....                                                                     | 105  | 738  |
| Ware; Hawkins v., App. ....                                                                         | 103  | 204  |
| Wasson; Hoover v., App. ....                                                                        | 105  | 945  |
| Waterbury v. Temescal Water Co., App. ....                                                          | 105  | 940  |
| Waters; Lange v., Sup. ....                                                                         | 103  | 889  |
| Weir; Beall v., App. ....                                                                           | 105  | 133  |
| Weir; People v., App. ....                                                                          | 102  | 539  |

CASES REPORTED

P.

|                                                          | Vol. | Page |
|----------------------------------------------------------|------|------|
| Wessling v. Nye, Sup. ....                               | 105  | 408  |
| W. F. Shaw & Co.; Kauffman, Davidson & Co. v., App. .... | 102  | 671  |
| Wheeler; Andrews v., App. ....                           | 103  | 144  |
| White v. Mitchell, App. ....                             | 104  | 333  |
| Wieland; People v., App. ....                            | 102  | 828  |
| Wiener; Rosenow v., App. ....                            | 104  | 839  |
| Williams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., Sup. ....      | 103  | 885  |
| Williams; Lane v., Sup. ....                             | 104  | 301  |
| Williams v. Pratt, App. ....                             | 103  | 151  |
| Willow Land Co. v. Goldschmidt, App. ....                | 104  | 841  |
| Wilson; Benedict v., App. ....                           | 103  | 350  |
| Wilson; Pringle v., Sup. ....                            | 104  | 316  |
| Winchester v. Payne, App. ....                           | 102  | 531  |
| Wood; Bergevin v., App. ....                             | 105  | 935  |
| Woodard v. Grover, Sup. ....                             | 105  | 736  |
| Woodward; Harrison v., App. ....                         | 103  | 933  |
| Workman; Ralph Rogers Co. v., App. ....                  | 103  | 154  |
| Worth v. Worth, Sup. ....                                | 102  | 663  |
| W. P. Fuller & Co.; Pigeon v., Sup. ....                 | 105  | 976  |
| Wright; Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Co. v., App. ....       | 104  | 460  |
| Wright v. Sonoma County, Sup. ....                       | 105  | 409  |
| Wright & Kimbrough v. Carly, App. ....                   | 104  | 1009 |
| W. T. Garratt & Co.; Scally v., App. ....                | 104  | 325  |
| Wyatt v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., Sup. ....             | 103  | 892  |
| Wyatt; People v., App. ....                              | 104  | 12   |
| Wyckoff v. Pajaro Valley Consol. R. Co., App. ....       | 103  | 1100 |
| Yolo County v. Joyce, Sup. ....                          | 105  | 125  |
| Young; Hooper v., App. ....                              | 102  | 950  |
| Younger v. Moore, Sup. ....                              | 103  | 221  |
| Zenda Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tiffin, App. ....              | 104  | 10   |
| Zerr; Victor Power & Mining Co. v., App. ....            | 105  | 761  |
| Zimmerman; People v., App. ....                          | 104  | 590  |

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

102 PACIFIC REPORTER

155 Cal. 578

GOMEZ et al. v. SCANLAN et al. (S. F.
4,887.)(Supreme Court of California. May 13, 1909.
Rehearing Denied June 12, 1909.)1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 270*)—ACTIONS—RIGHT OF ACTION BY WIFE—FALSE IMPRIS-ONMENT.

Though a right of action for the false imprisonment of a wife is community property, the wife is a necessary party plaintiff to such action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 976½; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

2. PARTIES (§ 59*)—SUBSTITUTION—PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.

Since husband and wife were properly joined as plaintiffs in an action for false imprisonment of the wife, upon the husband's death pending the action, his personal representative was properly substituted as a plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

3. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 157*)—LIA-BILITY ON BOND—TRESPASS OF CONSTABLE.

Sureties on a constable's bond are not liable for trespasses committed by him not under color of office or in the line of his official duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 356; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

4. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 97*)—LIABIL-ITY—TORTS.

A constable is liable for torts committed by him, whether in the line of his official duties or otherwise, though his sureties would only be liable in the former case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. § 137; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—AMBIGU-OUS INSTRUCTION—CURE BY OTHER INSTRU-TION.

In an action for false imprisonment against a constable and his sureties, any ambiguity in instructing that, if the constable unlawfully violated plaintiff's personal liberty, the jury must find for plaintiff, because they did not restrict the sureties' liability for wrongs committed by the constable in his official capacity, was removed by a subsequent instruction that the sureties would only be liable if the constable wrongfully restrained plaintiff while acting in his official capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 718; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

6. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—NECESSITY—ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for false imprisonment against a constable and the sureties on his official bond, the court limited the sureties' liability to acts committed in the constable's official capacity, if defendants desired an instruction as to the circumstances under which the constable might be considered as acting in his official capacity, they should have requested it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 636; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

7. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 170*)—LIABILITIES ON OFFICIAL BOND—EXTENT OF LIABILITY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The liability of sureties on a constable's bond is coextensive with that of their principal, so that, in an action against the sureties of the constable for compensatory damages for false imprisonment, the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate plaintiff for all detriment proximately caused by the injury, as provided by Civ. Code, § 3333, in tort actions, and not the measure of damages provided in contract actions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Cent. Dig. §§ 409, 413; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

8. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 36*)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

Plaintiff was arrested after 5 o'clock p. m. and compelled to accompany the arresting constable, who refused to permit her to send word to her husband, and roughly pushed her along the street, and, when she reached the jail, refused to take her before a justice, and attempted to force her into the jail, and refused bail offered, and compelled her to stand in the crowded street for three or four hours, when he released her. Plaintiff was shivering with cold and agitated by humiliation, so that she could hardly walk home, and was sick in bed two days thereafter. Held, that a verdict for $2,000, in an action against the constable for false imprisonment, was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 140*)—JURY QUESTION—CREDIBILITY.

The credibility of witnesses is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 334, 335; Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

10. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 36*)—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—DISCRETION AS TO AMOUNT.

The amount of damages awarded for false imprisonment, especially under circumstances causing humiliation to the party injured, is largely in the sound discretion of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. §§ 113, 114; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

11. NEW TRIAL (§ 76*)—GROUNDS—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

A court is justified in setting aside a verdict as excessive only when it is so obviously disproportionate to the injury proved as to show that it did not result from the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 153; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by Magdalena Gomez and another against Michael J. Scanlan and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 2 Cal. App. 579, 84 Pac. 50.

A. L. Frick and R. H. Latimer, for appellants. Wm. M. Cannon and H. V. Alvarado, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to recover damages for false imprisonment of the plaintiff Magdalena Gomez by the defendant Scanlan. Scanlan was constable of the Eleventh township of the county of Contra Costa, and his codefendants were sureties on his official bond. After the commencement of the action, John H. Gomez, who, as husband of Magdalena, had joined as plaintiff, died. His wife obtained letters of administration of his estate, and, as administratrix, was substituted for the decedent. Individually, and as such administratrix, she recovered judgment for $2,000. The defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

1. The death of John H. Gomez and the appointment of Magdalena Gomez as administratrix of his estate were made to appear by means of a supplemental complaint. The defendants demurred to this pleading on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff, and, the demurrer having been overruled, set up the alleged misjoinder in their answer. It is contended that the action was, originally, one to recover community property, and, as such, should have been brought by the husband alone. In such action the wife, it is claimed, cannot properly be joined as plaintiff either with the husband or with his personal representative. This position is fully refuted by a reference to the authorities on the point. In McKune v. Santa Clara V. M. & L. Co., 110 Cal. 481, 42 Pac. 980, the court said that: "Though the right of action and the damages recovered are community property, this form of action is an exception to the rule that the husband has control of the community property, and may sue or be sued alone where it is concerned. The wife is a necessary party." The doctrine so declared has been established as the law of this state by a long line of prior decisions. Sheldon v. Steamer Uncle Sam, 18 Cal. 526, 79 Am. Dec. 193; Matthew v. C. P. R. R. Co., 63 Cal. 450; Tell v. Gibson, 66 Cal. 247, 5 Pac. 223; Baldwin v. Second St. C. R. Co., 77 Cal. 390, 19 Pac. 644; McFadden v. Santa Ana R. Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 Pac. 681, 11 L. R. A. 252; Neale v. Depot R. Co., 94 Cal. 425, 29 Pac. 954. If the husband and wife were properly joined as plaintiffs in the first instance, there can be no objection to substituting for the deceased husband his personal representative. Gomez v. Scanlan, 2 Cal. App. 579, 84 Pac. 50.

2. It is contended that the complaint is insufficient as against the sureties for want of allegations tending to show that Scanlan,

In arresting and detaining the plaintiff Magdalena, was acting under color of his office. It is undoubtedly true, as urged by appellants, that the sureties on a constable's bond are not liable for his trespasses committed not under color of office nor in the line of official duty. Felonicher v. Stingley, 142 Cal. 630, 76 Pac. 504. The complaint in this case, however, sufficiently shows the official character of Scanlan's acts. It alleges that Scanlan, acting in his capacity as constable, did arrest and imprison the plaintiff Magdalena Gomez on a pretended charge of grand larceny. On such charge, one of felony, he had authority, as a peace officer, to make an arrest without a warrant. Pen. Code, § 836. Even if the averment that Scanlan was "acting in his capacity as constable" be rejected as a statement of a conclusion of law, the other allegations are enough to make out a case of a trespass committed by Scanlan, "while attempting to perform some official act in the general line of his official duties." Felonicher v. Stingley, supra. As against a general demurrer—the only form in which defendants attempted to make this objection—the complaint certainly cannot be treated as totally lacking in averment of essential facts.

3. The cause was tried before a jury. Certain instructions given by the court are assailed. One of them directs the jury that, if they find that Scanlan unlawfully violated the personal liberty of the plaintiff Magdalena Gomez, they "must find a verdict for the plaintiffs." Another that if Scanlan, after making the arrest, restrained Mrs. Gomez of her liberty for an unreasonable time without taking her before a magistrate, such detention constituted a false imprisonment, and in such case the jury "must find a verdict for the plaintiffs." The criticism directed against these instructions is that they do not inform the jury that the liability of defendants would arise only if the wrong committed by Scanlan was one done by him in his official capacity. This qualification, however, was applicable only to the defendants who were sued as sureties. Scanlan himself was, of course, liable for any wrongful act committed by him, whether officially or otherwise. The instructions merely state that the plaintiffs are, under the circumstances stated, entitled to a verdict, not that such verdict must go against all of the defendants. In a later instruction, dealing specifically with the responsibility of the defendant sureties, the jury were instructed that a verdict against such sureties should be rendered only if Scanlan was guilty of a false imprisonment of Mrs. Gomez, "while acting in his capacity of constable of the Eleventh township." This removed any ambiguity that might be thought to reside in the earlier instructions, taken by themselves. To the suggestion that the court should have stated the circumstances under which the constable might be held to have acted in his official capacity, the answer is that it was incumbent on the defendants to request an instruction on this precise matter, if they desired it.

The court instructed the jury that "the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate the plaintiffs for all the detriment proximately caused by the injury, whether it could have been anticipated or not." This was a statement of the rule for fixing the damages in cases of tort, or "obligations not arising from contract." Civ. Code, § 3333. The measure of damages for the breach of an obligation arising from contract is, ordinarily, "the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom." Civ. Code, § 3300. It is argued that, inasmuch as the action against the sureties is one upon a contract, i. e., their undertaking, the proper measure of damages as to them is that declared by section 3300. The plaintiffs, it is said, should have been limited to compensation for the detriment likely to result from the breach, instead of being permitted to measure their damage by the detriment proximately caused, "whether it would have been anticipated or not." But this argument overlooks the true nature of the obligation of the sureties. By their bond they agree to make themselves liable, to the amount specified, for the faithful performance by the principal of his official duties. In reality they undertake to be responsible for all torts committed by the principal in his official capacity. Their contract can be given full effect only by making their liability coextensive with that of the principal, up to the amount of their undertaking. This is the liability which was within the contemplation of the parties as likely to result from a breach of official duty by the principal. We are here speaking of compensatory damages alone. No question of the liability of sureties for punitive damages is presented by this record.

4. It is claimed that the damages awarded are excessive. Mrs. Gomez testified that she was arrested by the defendant Scanlan after 5 o'clock in the afternoon, at the town of Pinole. The constable, refusing to give her an opportunity to send word to her husband, ordered her to accompany him. He "pushed her along the street as if she were a man." When they reached the jail, he insisted upon her entering. At that time her husband arrived, and demanded that she be brought before a justice of the peace. Scanlan refused to comply with this demand, and attempted by force to compel Mrs. Gomez to go into the jail. He refused the offer of various persons to furnish bail, and detained his prisoner on the street, which was crowded with people, for three or four hours, until night came. Finally he released her. She "was shivering with cold and the shame," and could hardly walk. When she got home, she had hysterics and spasms and was sick in bed for two days. There was testimony which conflicted with the foregoing statement in various particulars; but, if the jury accepted Mrs. Gomez' version of the occurrence, as they had a right to do, we cannot, as matter of law, say that a verdict of $2,000 was so great as to show that it was rendered "under the influence of passion or prejudice." Code Civ. Proc. § 657. The amount of money which will compensate one for an unwarranted restraint of his person is not the subject of exact computation. Especially is this true where the invasion of the right of personal liberty is accompanied by circumstances causing humiliation, shame, and public disgrace to the party injured. In cases of this kind the extent to which the allowance may go must, in large measure, be left to the sound discretion of the jury. A court is justified in overturning a verdict as excessive only where its amount is "obviously so disproportionate to the injury proved as to justify the conclusion that the verdict is not the result of the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury." Morgan v. S. P. Co., 95 Cal. 501, 508, 30 Pac. 601, 603. We cannot say that such disproportion is shown here.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 397

HEITMAN v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.
(Civ. 616.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 14, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 12, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 930*)—VERDICT—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

In determining whether there is evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict, the appellate court must view the evidence with the most favorable inferences that can reasonably be drawn from the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3755; Dec. Dig. § 930.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 328*)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Decedent and his driver riding behind a team of mules approached an electric railroad crossing in the country at a slow trot. The road crossed the railroad at right angles, through a cut with banks about eight feet high. The driver listened for a car, but did not hear it. He did not stop to listen, though he admitted that, if he had stopped, he might have heard the noise of the car when there was no noise of the wagon to prevent it. Another witness, who was walking and listening proximately from the same position that decedent occupied, testified that, while no gong was sounded, he could hear the rumble of the car. Held that, decedent and the driver having failed to listen for a car which they knew might cross the road from behind the obstruction, decedent was negligent as a matter of law precluding a recovery for his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1057-1070; Dec. Dig. § 328.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Avis Heitman against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher (Norman S. Sterry, of counsel), for appellant. George A. Skinner, Kemp & Collier, and John W. Kemp, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. An action to recover damages for death by negligence. General verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $4,000, and defendant appeals from the judgment and an order of the superior court denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff sues as the widow of Theodore J. Heitman, who was fatally injured on April 1, 1906, while riding on a wagon drawn by mules on and along a road or street in the city of Long Beach, known as Anaheim road; the driver of the team being one W. E. Caseboom, who was associated with Heitman in the transfer business. Anaheim road ran east and west and was intersected and crossed by the car tracks of the electric railway line of the defendant, which ran over and along a private right of way extending north and south from said Anaheim road and crossed it at right angles. When the team, which was traveling westerly, reached the crossing of the railway track, one of the defendant's cars propelled by electricity approaching from the south struck the mules, carrying them with the wagon and occupants some 60 or 70 feet into a cut through which the railway ran at this point, throwing Heitman from the wagon and so injuring him that he died shortly thereafter. The negligence alleged by the complaint consisted of the car approaching the crossing at an unreasonable and reckless speed and the failure to give any alarm of such approach. A second count charges the negligence to have been wanton. The answer denies negligence and alleges contributory negligence on the part of the deceased.

In respect to the finding of the jury on the negligence of defendant, appellant concedes that the evidence in the case is such that, if this court considers the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the jury's conclusion, in the light of the rule that the most favorable inferences that the jury could reasonably draw from the evidence must be indulged in, its appeal in this respect is ineffective (King v. Green, 7 Cal. App. 473, 94 Pac. 777), but urges that the verdict is not supported by the evidence on the issue of contributory negligence. The rule of the Roman law from which the doctrine of contributory negligence was derived is short and explicit: "The harm I bring upon myself, I must bear myself." In determining whether or not the deceased in the case at bar brought upon himself the harm which resulted in his death, it is conceded that the negligence of the driver of the mules is to be imputed to and regarded as the act of the deceased. The same rule conceded by appellant to be applicable to a consideration of its negligence when the sufficiency of the evidence is being reviewed must be applied to the negligence of the deceased. It is primarily for the jury to determine whether the conduct of the deceased and the driver in approaching the crossing was that of ordinarily prudent persons under such circumstances, and we are concluded by this finding, unless the contrary necessarily appears from the undisputed facts. Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 488, 66 Pac. 734.

The facts as to the approach of the railway track by the deceased, as testified to by the driver, Caseboom, who was a witness for plaintiff, are as follows: "As we were about to approach the tracks, the mules were going in a little jog trot, and as they went over the tracks they started into a walk, and we saw the car and pulled back on the mules, and we couldn't do anything but let the car strike us. I saw the motorman. He was looking right in my face. He was handling them jiggers there about as fast as he could when I seen him. As we were about to approach the track, Heitman says, 'Do you hear any car?' and I listened and says, 'No.' I listened for the car before I came out into the place of danger. If any bell or gong was rung I didn't hear it. I was listening for it. The wind was blowing." On cross-examination this witness said he did not stop the team to listen, but that they kept right along in a slow trot until they voluntarily slowed into a walk when they stepped on the rails. In this slow trot there was considerable noise with the wagon. "If I had stopped still there wouldn't have been any noise from the wagon to prevent my hearing the noise of the car. I couldn't see over the bank sitting on the seat. I didn't look until I got around the corner, and then it was too late. The motorman was apparently doing everything he could." Evidence was introduced by plaintiff to show that some of this testimony was a surprise to her, and, as showing that the witness had made other statements in conflict with his testimony, her attorney testified that the witness Caseboom had told him that the motorman was looking away from the crossing when the witness first saw him, and that he had stated that he was walking his team. As he approached the crossing he slowed down the team the better to hear the car if it was coming. Two other witnesses, who testified to hearing no bell, stated there was no wind. One of these testified to having met the team about 20 to 25 feet from the railway track, and that when he had proceeded about 10 feet further he heard the noise of the collision and looked around, and that when he passed the team the mules were walking. This witness, who was a pedestrian, testified to hearing the noise of the rumble of the car, although he did not hear any gong or bell ring, and said he could have heard it if one had been rung. It appears from the testimony of other witnesses for plaintiff that the horses would have to be on the track before the driver could see a car approaching from the direction in which the car came, on account of both roads going through a cut at the place of intersection, making a bank about eight feet high. We do not think it can be said that the deceased must necessarily have stood upon the seat and looked for the car or have had negligence imputed to him.

Where the question of liability turns upon a finding of fact as to who was guilty of the last act of negligence previous to the injury, without which the accident would not have happened, the necessity of discriminating between different sets of facts presents a matter primarily within the province of the jury; but no question of this kind is here presented. When the driver and the motorman discovered each other, it was too late for the former to withdraw from the track or drive across, and impossible for the motorman to stop the car in time to avoid a collision. The negligence of the motorman being assumed, that of the driver remains to be determined. The latter was familiar with the crossing, and knew that he was approaching a place of danger, and that he could not see the car coming on the private right of way until his mules would reach the first rail of the track, when it would be too late to prevent them being struck by the car if it were coming at the rate which he knew it generally approached the crossing, or even if it had been running at a more moderate rate of speed. The team was either walking or going in a slow trot, and the wagon was making considerable noise. He listened for the car, but did not hear it, but did not stop to listen, although he admitted that if he had stopped he might have heard the noise of the car when there was no noise of the wagon to prevent it. This is further corroborated by the witness King, who was walking and listened from approximately the same position as the deceased occupied. He testified that, while no gong was sounded, yet he could hear the rumble of the car. The witness Caseboom gave as a reason for not stopping to listen: "If I had stopped to think I would have known that the wind and the rumble of the wagon (other witnesses said there was no wind) together would have deadened the sound of the approaching car, but I didn't think of that."

This was not a case where the party acting was called upon to exercise his judgment in a state of mental agitation caused by the presence of danger, but the application of the mind to the determination of what precautions were necessary in approaching a place of danger while occupying a position in which deliberation was invited by the surroundings. We are of opinion that there was no room for a sensible or impartial man to draw more than one reasonable inference as to the negligence of the driver and the deceased. This is the test of whether or not the court may declare, as a matter of law, that negligence does or does not exist. Without assuming to hold that, in all cases and under all conditions, the crossing of an inter-urban electric railway is to be governed by the same rules as those applied to steam railways, we nevertheless feel that the rule of precaution laid down in Herbert v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 230, 53 Pac. 651, is applicable here, and the deceased and his driver failed to observe the requirement to avail themselves of their full opportunity to listen for the car which they knew might cross the road from behind the obstruction which prevented them from seeing its approach. In this the case is to be distinguished from Bilton v. Southern Pac. Co., 148 Cal. 443, 83 Pac. 440, and like cases.

The rule contended for by the respondent would preclude the court from finding as a matter of law that a person injured in crossing in front of a car had been guilty of contributory negligence in all cases in which such person had not deliberately brought about a collision. This is too narrow an application of the rule that a party must bear the harm which he brings upon himself. He is equally responsible where he "takes a chance" and makes a miscalculation (Schwanevode v. Hudson Co., 67 N. J. Law, 449, 51 Atl. 696), and where, as in the case at bar, he fails to think of some ordinarily prudent precaution which proper regard for his own safety, as well as that of those in the car whose lives he imperils by coming in contact with it, demands.

This view renders it unnecessary to mention the other errors assigned, but we have considered the testimony of Caseboom in the light of the inconsistencies due to the claimed surprise of the plaintiff, and have given full weight to the testimony of the impeaching witnesses and to the contradictory evidence of the other witnesses so far as applicable under section 2049, Code Civ. Proc. That is, without passing upon the errors assigned in the ruling and instruction of the trial court in respect to this matter, we have accepted both as correct for the purpose of determining the question of contributory negligence. For the same reason, we have also predicated our opinion upon the finding of the jury, rather than upon the ruling of the court on defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 378

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. GAGER.

(Civ. 593.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 10, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 8, 1909.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 124*)—PROCEDURE—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

The street opening act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376, c. 268) does not in terms specify the time as of which the value of property condemned shall be fixed, but section 6 provides that said action shall be governed by such "rules of the Code of Civil Procedure" as may be applicable thereto, except as otherwise provided. Held, that the time as of which the value shall be fixed is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, providing that in assessing compensation in condemnation proceedings, the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 332-344; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 8*) — PROCEDURE — "RULES OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE."

The phrase "rules of the Code of Civil Procedure" as used in Street Opening Act 1903, § 6 (St. 1903, p. 378, c. 268), means the laws or provisions of that Code, and not merely the rules governing pleading and practice as prescribed therein, especially in view of section 37 providing for a liberal construction of the provisions of the act to promote the objects thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. WORDS AND PHRASES—"RULES"—"LAWS."

The meaning of the word "rules" is of wide and varied significance, depending upon the context; in a legal sense it is synonymous with "laws."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4014-4023; vol. 8, p. 7701; vol. 7, pp. 6271-6272.]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 123*)—COMPENSATION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, providing that in assessing compensation in condemnation proceedings the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for property actually taken, is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 326; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 124*)—COMPENSATION—INTEREST FROM DATE OF SUMMONS.

Until a person is deprived of possession of property sought to be condemned, his right to the use and enjoyment thereof as it stood at the time of commencing the action is not abridged, and he is therefore not damaged until the actual taking of the property, and hence is not entitled to interest on the value of the property from the date of summons as part of his compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 332-344; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the City of Los Angeles against J. R. Gager. From a judgment confirming a report of referees, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Alderson and Elon G. Galusha, for appellant. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., and Howard Robertson, Deputy City Atty., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant was the owner of certain real estate lying between Central avenue and Naomi avenue in the city of Los Angeles, through which the city, under and in accordance with the provisions of the street opening act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376, c. 268), initiated proceedings to open Thirty-Fifth street. Pursuant to ordinance duly passed this action was instituted by the city attorney to condemn the land required for use in opening of said street. The complaint was filed therein, and summons issued on June 16, 1905. On March 15, 1906, the referees appointed to ascertain and fix the compensation to be paid to defendant for the land sought to be condemned filed their report, wherein and whereby they fixed the value of said property as of the time of the issuance of the summons in said action, to wit, June 16, 1905. Upon the hearing had by said referees for the purpose of ascertaining the facts necessary to enable them to fix such value, they refused to receive or consider evidence touching the value of the property at other than the time of the issuance of said summons. To this report defendant in due time filed exceptions, assigning as grounds therefor the action of said referees in so excluding evidence of value, and confining their inquiry to June 16, 1905, as well as the fact that they had not allowed defendant interest upon the value so fixed from said 16th day of June, 1905. Upon the hearing had thereon defendant claimed the property had greatly enhanced in value since the date of the issuance of summons in the action, and offered evidence tending to prove that the value of the property in February, 1906, was 25 per cent. greater than on June 16, 1905. The court excluded this evidence, and confirmed the report of the referees, and rendered and caused to be entered an interlocutory judgment in accordance therewith. The appeal is from this judgment, and an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that he is entitled to the value of the property as of the time when the referees made their report rather than as it stood at the time of the issuance of summons in the action, and that, if the value is fixed as of date June 16, 1905, then he is entitled to interest thereon to the date of payment. The street opening act of 1903 does not, in terms, specify the time as of which the value of property shall be fixed, but section 6 of the act provides that "said action shall, in all respects, be subject to and governed by such rules of the Code of Civil Procedure now existing, or that may be hereafter adopted, as may be applicable thereto, except in the particulars otherwise provided for in this act." As the act is silent as to the time as to which the valuation shall be placed upon the property, we must look to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure for a rule applicable to the case. Section 1249, Code Civ. Proc., provides: "For the purpose of assessing compensation and damages, the right thereto shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the summons, and its actual value, at that date, shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken." Appellant, however, vigorously contends that the provisions of this section are inapplicable. He insists that the word "rules," as used in section 6 of "the street opening act," refers to those rules only which govern pleading and practice as prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure. The meaning of the word "rules" is of wide and varied significance, depending upon the context. In a legal sense it is synonymous with "laws." In re Higbee, 4 Utah, 19, 5 Pac. 693; Watts v. Holland, 56 Tex. 54; Hunt v. Common Council, 45 N. J. Law, 279. The phrase "rules of the Code of Civil Procedure," as used in section 6 of said act, means the laws or provisions of said Code. By its terms the section does not provide that the action shall be governed by the rules of practice and procedure prescribed in said Code; and, in the absence of such limitation, it is to be governed by the rules or laws of said Code applicable to the action which are not otherwise provided for in the act. Had it been the intent of the Legislature to limit the effect of such provision to the rules of practice, such intent would undoubtedly have found expression in the act itself. See sections 1256, 1257, 1262, Code Civ. Proc. To give the section the narrow and limited interpretation contended for would do violence to section 37 of the act, which calls for a liberal construction of its provisions to promote the objects thereof. We think it clear that it was the intent of the Legislature that section 1249, Code Civ. Proc., should constitute the rule for ascertaining the amount of compensation and damages to be paid for land acquired by proceedings had under the provisions of the street opening act of 1903. Even in the absence of statutory provision upon the subject, the authorities bearing upon the question are by no means uniform in decision. No good purpose could be subserved, however, by citing or discussing these cases. Suffice it to say, that in this state we have a provision of law which, if constitutional, excludes all consideration of other than the value of the property at the date of the issuance of the summons in the action.

But appellant contends that this section 1249, Code Civ. Proc., is contrary to the provisions of section 14, art. 1, of the Constitution of California, and therefore unconstitutional. Counsel has with great industry collected a vast array of authority from other jurisdictions in support of such contention. If the question could be regarded as an open one in this state, his able and exhaustive presentation and authorities in support thereof would merit the most careful and painstaking consideration. Inasmuch, however, as the Supreme Court of this state has, since 1882, repeatedly and uniformly held to the contrary, the provision must be deemed immune from attack on constitutional ground. California Southern R. Co. v. Kimball, 61 Cal. 90; Tehama v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57, 8 Pac. 673; San Jose & A. R. Co. v. Mayne, 83 Cal. 566, 23 Pac. 522; City of Santa Ana v. Brunner, 132 Cal. 234, 64 Pac. 287; Pacific Coast Ry. Co. v. Porter, 74 Cal. 261, 15 Pac. 774; Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585.

Appellant next insists that, at all events, he is entitled to interest on the value of the land from the date of the issuance of the summons. The contrary has been held in San Francisco & San Joaquin Valley Ry. Co. v. Leviston, 134 Cal. 412, 66 Pac. 473. The same question was discussed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Shoemaker v. United States, 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170, under provisions for condemnation proceedings almost identical with those under consideration, and the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Shiras, said: "Interest accrues, either by agreement of the debtor to allow it for the use of money, or in the nature of damages, by reason of the failure of the debtor to pay the principal when due. Of course neither ground for such a demand can be found in the present case. No agreement to pay the interest demanded is pointed to, and no failure to pay the amount assessed took place. That amount was not fixed and ascertained till the confirmation of the report. * * * It is true that, by the institution of proceedings to condemn, the possession and enjoyment by the owner are to some extent interfered with. He can put no permanent improvements on the land, nor sell it, except subject to the condemnation proceedings. But the owner was in receipt of the rents, issues, and profits during the time occupied in fixing the amount to which he was entitled, and the inconveniences to which he was subjected by the delay are presumed to be considered and allowed for in fixing the amount of the compensation. Such is the rule laid down in cases of the highest authority. Reed v. Hanover Branch R. Co., 105 Mass. 303; Kidder v. Oxford, 116 Mass. 165; Hamersley v. New York, 56 N. Y. 533; Norris v. Philadelphia, 70 Pa. 332; Chicago v. Palmer, 93 Ill. 125; Phillips v. South Park Com'rs, 119 Ill. 626, 10 N. E. 230." Until a citizen is deprived of possession of the property sought to be condemned his right to the use and enjoyment thereof as it stood at the time of commencing the action is in no wise abridged. Therefore it cannot, in a legal sense, be said that he is damaged until the actual taking of the property.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 375

Ex parte THOMAS. (Cr. 116.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April, 10, 1909.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 81*)—POLICE POWER.

The courts have not attempted to define the extent of, and limitations upon, the exercise of the police power, but determine whether or not legislation is justified under the police power in the particular cases as they arise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 594*)—POLICE POWER—ORDINANCES—VALIDITY—REASONABLENESS.

The police power of a state extends to control in a proper manner of its parks, streets, and alleys, and the protection of the rights of the general public therein, and an ordinance making it unlawful to hold a public assemblage, or make public speeches, in any public park, or street, in a defined district within the city, was a valid exercise of its police power; and, in the absence of a showing of unreasonableness in fixing the boundaries as provided thereby, it will be presumed that the council fixed proper boundaries consonant with the purpose of the ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

In the matter of the application of May Thomas for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

Stephen L. Sullivan and Walter, Pratt & Ball, for petitioner. Guy Eddie, City Pros. Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Habeas corpus. Petitioner prays for her discharge from custody upon the grounds that she is restrained of her liberty by reason of an arrest under a complaint charging her with a violation of Ordinance No. 17,192, enacted by the city council of Los Angeles city, her contention being, first, that the city has no power to pass such an ordinance; and, second, that the same is unreasonable.

This ordinance in general terms makes it unlawful for any person to hold, conduct, or address any assemblage, meeting, or other gathering of persons, or to make any public speech, lecture, or discourse in any public park of the city, or upon any public street or alley within a defined district. No restrictions of any kind or character are sought to be imposed upon any person with relation to any of the streets or alleys outside of such district. The authority of the city of Los Angeles under its charter to make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, and sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general law is derived from the Constitution of the state. "It is impossible to state in terms the extent or the limitation of what is known as the police power, and courts have not attempted to do it. Whether or not that power has been exceeded in particular cases must be determined as the cases arise." In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 562, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529. That such police power extends to the preservation and control, in a proper manner, of public parks, streets, and alleys, and the protection of the rights of the general public traveling thereon, and upon every part thereof, without unnecessary interference, cannot well be questioned. This ordinance does not attempt to suppress freedom of speech, or seek to interfere with the citizen in the right to express his views upon any subject, political, religious, or otherwise, as is suggested by petitioner. It simply specifies a certain district within the city wherein no one may do the things prohibited. The question, and the only question, for determination is as to the reasonableness of the restriction in the particular case. There is nothing shown in this application from which a court may determine the reasonableness or unreasonableness in fixing the exterior boundaries of the specified district. Primarily it is for the legislative branch of the city government to determine, in the exercise of proper discretion, what streets, and within what particular portion of the city, the public welfare may demand such regulation. Where no abuse of discretion appears, it will be presumed that such legislative body acted wisely and fixed proper boundaries. Assuming the power of the city in the premises, the character or object of the assemblages prohibited are of no materiality. One may not violate the law, even though by so doing one may be of opinion that he is performing an act the result of which would be of benefit to the public.

Writ denied, and prisoner remanded.

---

for a partition thereof," it is no objection to an action for partition that plaintiff is in possession of the entire premises under an unexpired lease, under which defendant is not entitled to possession of his portion at the commencement of the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1170*) — REVIEW — EFFECT OF PREMATURE ACTION.

Where plaintiff was entitled to partition at the time of the trial, a proper judgment will not be reversed merely because the action was prematurely brought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4540; Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; L. G. Harrier, Judge.

Action by Wallace Buhrmeister against August L. Buhrmeister and another. From the judgment rendered, defendant August L. Buhrmeister appeals. Affirmed.

Paul C. Harlan, for appellant. F. R. Devlin, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for partition, and the appeal is from the interlocutory judgment.

The only point urged by appellant is that the action was prematurely brought. On February 18, 1903, H. G. Buhrmeister died testate, devising in equal shares the property sought to be partitioned to his six children, including appellant and respondent. By the terms of the will, as stated by appellant, plaintiff was given the use and occupation, rents, issues, and profits of said property for five years immediately after the death of the testator, at the annual rental of $300, $60 to be paid to each of the other five devisees annually by said plaintiff. These other devisees were directed by the testator, in his will, to execute to respondent a lease of the real property for the terms and upon the conditions already named. The said property was distributed to the six children, in accordance with the terms of the will, "at the expiration of the term of five years from the 18th day of February, 1903, or sooner determination of the right to the use thereof above vested in Wallace Buhrmeister." Plaintiff was in possession under said leasehold right until February 18, 1908, and during the years 1905 and 1907 he bought the interest in the property of all the other devisees, except that of appellant. The suit was begun November 27, 1907, nearly three months before the expiration of said leasehold interest, but it was not tried until some time after said lease had expired.

The facts are, then, that at the beginning of the action plaintiff was the owner of "an estate of inheritance," to wit, the fee in and to an undivided five-sixths of the property in controversy, and was in possession of the whole thereof by virtue of said lease, and the defendant was the owner in fee of the other one-sixth, but was not entitled to

10 Cal. App. 392

BUHRMEISTER v. BUHRMEISTER et al.
(Civ. 554.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 14, 1909.)

1. PARTITION (§ 19*)—RIGHT TO PARTITION—POSSESSION OF DEFENDANT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 752, providing that, "when several co-tenants hold and are in possession of real property * * * an action may be brought by one or more of such persons its possession until February 18, 1908. It is therefore argued that since one of the parties was not entitled to the possession at the time the complaint was filed, the case is not one in which "the co-tenants hold and are in possession" of real estate, and consequently not within the contemplation of the statute, which provides that "when several co-tenants hold and are in possession of real property as parceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, in which one or more of them have an estate of inheritance, or for life or lives, or for years, an action may be brought by one or more of such persons for a partition thereof according to the respective rights of the persons interested therein, and for a sale of such property, or a part thereof, if it appear that a partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners." Section 752, Code Civ. Proc.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

But appellant has misconceived the scope of this proceeding under our statute. The operation of the action of partition as known at the common law has been greatly enlarged. In fact, it is more comprehensive here than in many of the other jurisdictions. The earlier cases in this state are reviewed in Martin v. Walker, 58 Cal. 590, wherein it is said: "The case, therefore, presents but one question on this appeal, and that is, Can a tenant in common, who has never been in the occupancy of the land, maintain a suit in partition against a co-tenant, whose possession is adverse and hostile? It is claimed, on behalf of the respondents, that he cannot, that the proper remedy is by ejectment, and that until the possession has been recovered in that form of action, he is not in a position to bring partition. In support of this view of the law section 752, Code Civ. Proc., is relied upon."

* * * The terms of the above section, to the effect that 'when several co-tenants hold and are in possession' the action may be brought, give strong countenance to the doctrine advanced by the respondents, and there is no doubt that such is the doctrine laid down in other states of the Union, under statutes more or less similar to ours. But a different rule has been adopted in this state, and that rule has been too long established for us to depart from it, even if it did not receive our full sanction and support. But the rule would seem to be supported by section 759 of the same Code: "The rights of the several parties, plaintiff as well as defendant, may be put in issue, tried and determined in such action." This provision of the Code, it seems to us, gives the court in which the partition suit is brought full power and authority to try and determine in that proceeding all questions relating to the title as fully and completely as such questions could be adjudicated in an action of ejectment." In Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 500, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64, it was held that an action for partition may be maintained by the owner of an equitable title. "As legal and equitable remedies may be had in the same case, the owner of the equitable title to an undivided interest in land may sue to establish his right, and to obtain a partition of the common estate." It follows from the foregoing that it is no objection to the maintenance of the action that one of the parties here was not in possession. Indeed, it would seem to be a favor to the defendant that partition should be granted him while he is out of possession of the entire estate. The result is that he is awarded the portion to which he is entitled as though he were in possession, and his only real ground of complaint is that he obtains what he owns sooner than he should. His generous desire to postpone the enjoyment of his property, however commendable, really shows that he is not aggrieved by the judgment.

Again, if it must appear that both parties are at least entitled to the possession at the time of the bringing of the action, it should be held that by instituting the proceeding the plaintiff waives his right to the exclusive possession under the lease, and thereby both parties are relegated to their claim under the decree of distribution. But if plaintiff had insisted upon his exclusive possession until the expiration of said lease, under said section 759, Code Civ. Proc., there would seem to be no difficulty in the way of a partition subject to said temporary possession. It has indeed been held in New Hampshire, Hunt v. Hazelton, 5 N. H. 216, 20 Am. Dec. 575, "that no sound reason exists why there should not be a partition of the inheritance, notwithstanding one of the respondents had a subsisting lease of the petitioner's share for years." Even if there were merit in appellant's claim that the action was prematurely brought, no good purpose could be subserved by requiring a new proceeding to be brought to reach the same conclusion, under the same conditions as existed at the time of the trial. There is no contention that the judgment is unjust, or that it was not warranted by the facts as they existed at the time it was rendered, and it would be unreasonable to countenance the expense of a new trial that must lead to the same result as we have before us. Even where it has been held that the proceedings for partition cannot be maintained, or the relief prayed for granted, because of the disseisin of the petitioner, or because of a dispute in the title, it has been determined that the court may retain the action pending proceedings for the settlement of the legal title. Chapin v. Sears (C. C.) 18 Fed. 814; London v. Owerby, 40 Ark. 156.

We think there is no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 403

OLIVER v. BURNETT. (Civ. 546.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.)

April 15, 1909.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 15*)—DOMINANT AND SERVIENT TENEMENTS—TRACT UNDER ONE OWNERSHIP.

So long as a tract remains in one ownership, there can be no dominant and servient tenements as between different portions of the tract, and the owner may rearrange the quality of any possible servitude.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 15.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 16*)—INTERESTS PASSING BY TRANSFER—SERVITUDES.

Servitudes created by a grant or transfer of land must correspond to the benefits or burdens existing at the time of the transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 43; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—RIGHT OF WAY FOR DITCH—EXISTENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to show that, at the time of partition of land, there was a ditch right across the middle piece as partitioned, for the benefit of another portion of the tract, so as to pass such an easement to the person taking the other portion, as an appurtenance thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 60*)—INTERESTS IN LAND—RIGHT OF WAY FOR DITCH.

An agreement between owners of land, giving one of them a ditch right of way over the other's land, concerns an estate in real property within the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

5. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—ADVERSE USER—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to show adverse user of a ditch, running across the middle portion of partitioned land onto another portion thereof, after the partition, so as to give the owner of the other portion an easement therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

6. EASEMENTS (§ 7*) — CREATION — ADVERSE USER—DURATION OF USE.

Adverse user of a ditch right of way over land of another for one year would not be sufficient to establish an easement therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by O. Oliver against Robert B. Burnett. Judgment against plaintiff, and judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint. From an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Everts & Ewing, for appellant. M. K. Harris, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff and defendant are owners of adjoining tracts of land situate in Fresno county. As appurtenant to his land, plaintiff claims to have a right of way across the land of defendant for the purpose of maintaining a ditch to carry water from the main ditch of the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company to the lands of plaintiff for irrigating purposes, and brought this action to obtain a judgment establishing such right, and restraining defendant from interfering with plaintiff in repairing said ditch. Defendant denied the right of plaintiff, and by a cross-complaint sought damages caused by plaintiff to the land of defendant in repairing said ditch. The court found that plaintiff was not the owner of any such right of way across the land of defendant, and accordingly gave judgment that plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that defendant recover damages on his cross-complaint in the sum of $1. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and thereupon appealed to this court from the order denying his said motion.

Plaintiff's contention is that the evidence does not support the findings of the court to the effect that plaintiff was not the owner of any right of way for ditch purposes across the land of defendant. Both the lands of plaintiff and of defendant at one time were a part of a larger piece belonging to one William C. Caldwell. After his death the entire piece (which we will hereafter designate as the Caldwell tract) was, together with other property, distributed in undivided parts—one-half to his widow Paulina Caldwell, and one-half to his five minor children. This decree of distribution bears date March 26, 1877. The widow, Paulina Caldwell, died in 1887, and in 1891, as the result of a partition suit brought by the administrator of her estate, D. P. Blevens, against the other distributees of the estate of William C. Caldwell, or their successors in interest, the Caldwell tract was divided into three equal parts, and the western portion awarded in severalty to Margaret J. Caldwell Graff, the middle portion to Emily Caldwell Blevens, and the eastern portion to Laura Caldwell Ellis. The decree is dated April 7, 1891. The western portion was conveyed by Margaret J. Graff and her husband to plaintiff (Oliver) January 20, 1903. The middle portion was conveyed by Emily Caldwell Blevens and her husband to John M. Allison March 5, 1897, and by him and wife to George M. Rock and wife October 27, 1900, and by them to defendant (Burnett) January 29, 1904. The eastern portion, by mesne conveyances from Laura Caldwell Ellis, has been vested in Jane Young.

At some time long prior to the partition suit above mentioned, and when the Caldwell tract was held by one owner, or by several as tenants in common, a right to free water for irrigating said tract was acquired from the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company. The decree in partition makes no mention of this water right, or any right of way for a ditch or for any purpose over the middle or Burnett piece for the western or Oliver piece. Plaintiff, however, contends, as we understand him, that the evidence shows without conflict: (1) That at the time of the partition of the Caldwell tract, and for a long time prior thereto, water had been conveyed in a ditch across the middle or Burnett piece for irrigating the western or Oliver piece, and that in consequence thereof the right to such ditch for such purpose passed under the decree of distribution with the western or Oliver piece as an easement appurtenant thereto; (2) that it was agreed by parol by Mrs. Blevens that Margaret J. Caldwell Graff should have a ditch right across the middle piece for the benefit of the western piece, as consideration for her consenting that the middle piece be awarded to Mrs. Blevens; and (3) that a ditch right across the middle or Burnett piece, for the benefit of the western or Oliver piece, has been acquired by adverse user.

1. Undoubtedly it is the law that: "A transfer of real property passes all easements attached thereto, and creates in favor thereof an easement to use other real property of the person whose estate is transferred in the same manner and to the same extent as such property was obviously and permanently used by the person whose estate is transferred, for the benefit thereof, at the time when the transfer was agreed upon or completed." Civ. Code, § 1104; Pogue v. Collins, 146 Cal. 435, 80 Pac. 623; Pendola v. Ramm, 138 Cal. 517, 71 Pac. 624; Jones v. Sanders, 138 Cal. 405, 71 Pac. 506. And it may be conceded for the purposes of this discussion that the proceedings and decree in partition had the same effect, as between Mrs. Blevens and Mrs. Graff, who took under said decree the middle or Burnett and the western or Oliver piece of the Caldwell tract, respectively, as a deed would have had. But, unfortunately for appellant, it cannot be said that the evidence shows without conflict, or at all for that matter, that any such state of facts existed as would, between a grantor and grantee, raise an easement or ditch right over the middle or Burnett piece in favor of the western or Oliver piece.

The evidence shows that during the lifetime of Mrs. Paulina Caldwell she rented the entire Caldwell tract to some Chinese, who in 1884 and 1885 took water out of the canal of the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company onto the Caldwell tract, for irrigating the same. By plowing furrows they made a ditch over the most natural grade, through which they ran water for those two years across what are now the Young and Burnett pieces, onto what is now the Oliver piece, for irrigation purposes. At this time, however, the entire Caldwell tract was held in one ownership, and so continued until the partition in 1891. There is abundant evidence in the record that no water was run over the Burnett piece for irrigating any portion of the Oliver piece after 1885 until after the partition in 1891. Chas. F. Ellis, a witness for plaintiff, testified to the fact that the Chinese ran water across the Burnett piece in 1884 and 1885. Ellis was a son-in-law of Mrs. Caldwell, and his wife got the eastern piece in the partition in 1891. He rented the Caldwell tract from Blevens, the administrator of Mrs. Caldwell's estate in 1888. He testified that in 1889 water ran through the ditch on the Burnett piece onto the Oliver piece, but not to irrigate it. The water ran through onto the Caldwell piece, and formed a pond, and drowned out some barley. This testimony only showed the use of the ditch for the benefit of the Oliver piece in 1884 and 1885. Although he also testified that water ran through the ditch to the Oliver piece in 1889, it was not for irrigating such piece, or for its benefit, but was accidental and unintentional, and to the injury of the Oliver piece, which he then had planted to grain. He said: "This was in 1889. It run through several times. It frequently broke over me—too much water in the ditch, and it came through before it would be noticed." We can find nothing in the record tending to show that any water ran across the Burnett piece to the Oliver piece prior to the partition of the Caldwell tract, save during the years 1884 and 1885, when it was used for the benefit of the Oliver piece, and in 1889, when it ran onto the Oliver piece, through accident and to its injury, and was in no sense used for its benefit.

On the other hand, D. P. Blevens, the son-in-law of Mrs. Caldwell and administrator of her estate and husband of Mrs. Blevens, who took the middle or Burnett piece under the partition decree, testified that he had been familiar with the Caldwell tract since 1876. He testified that the ditch made by the Chinese was annihilated by plowing. "From 1885 for the next five or six years this ground was put in grain, and cultivated with gang plows, and they ran harrows over it, and you could not tell where the ditch was. Charlie Ellis plowed it two years himself. The ditch had been annihilated." He further testified that he made a new ditch, but never ran the water beyond the house. "I never in my time ran the water beyond the house." (The house was near the middle of the Burnett piece, and the ditch entered the Caldwell tract at the eastern boundary thereof. The Oliver piece is the western portion of the Caldwell tract.) Blevens made his ditch in 1890, and used it until his wife sold the Burnett piece to Allison in 1897, but never ran water through it for the purpose of irrigating the Oliver piece. He never ran the water beyond the house, which would be near the middle of the Burnett piece, and would not reach the Oliver piece at all. It is thus clear that at the time of the partition no ditch across the middle or Burnett piece was obviously, permanently, or at all used to convey water to the western or Oliver piece, for its benefit, or at all, nor had any such ditch been so used at any time since 1885, which was six years prior to the partition. This ditch had long since been abandone and annihilated, and no other since constructed to carry water to the Oliver piece, nor had any water been in any way since 1885 taken across the Burnett piece for the benefit of the Oliver piece. So long as the entire Caldwell tract remained in one ownership there could be no such thing as a dominant and servient tenement between different portions of the tract. During such ownership the owner may rearrange the quality of any possible servitudes. The servitudes created by a grant or transfer must correspond to the benefits or burdens existing at the time of the transfer. Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250, 17 Pac. 69; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 139. The contention of appellant that a ditch right across the Burnett piece passed to the Oliver piece, as appurtenant thereto under the decree in partition, cannot be sustained.

2. There is some evidence, given by the witness Ellis, to the effect that it was agreed between Mrs. Blevens and Mrs. Graff that Mrs. Graff should have a ditch across the middle piece for the benefit of the western piece, in consideration that she (Mrs. Graff) should allow Mrs. Blevens to take the middle piece. If it be conceded that this evidence was not contradicted, it was not in writing, nor carried into the decree of partition. That such an agreement concerns an estate in real property, and is within the statute of frauds, may not be gainsaid. Hayes v. Fine, 91 Cal. 391, 27 Pac. 772. We have been pointed to nothing in the evidence to take the alleged parol agreement, under the rules of equity, out of the operation of the statute of frauds.

3. The claim of adverse user must of course be predicated on user after the severance of the tenancy in common. We find in the record no evidence of any adverse user, save possibly during the year 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Blevens were in possession of the middle piece from the date of the partition till she sold to Allison in 1897. Blevens testified that during that time not a drop of water ran through the ditch for the purpose of running water onto the Oliver place. While Allison owned the middle or Burnett tract in 1899 and 1900, he ran water through the Burnett piece onto the western or Oliver piece, of which he was then lessee, to irrigate some nursery stock that he had thereon. He also permitted Mr. Atkinson, a subtenant of his of part of the Oliver place, to use water from the ditch to irrigate his holdings. Subsequently Mr. Rock, the grantee of Allison of the Burnett place, ran water through the Burnett piece to irrigate the nursery stock, which had also been sold to him. It is perfectly apparent that none of these acts amounted to an adverse user. They were by and with the consent of the then owners of the Burnett piece, and for the use and benefit of such owners. The only evidence that can plausibly be said to show an adverse user relates to a use during the season of 1903. It is very doubtful if this was in fact adverse; but, if it be conceded that it was, it was for but one year, and is, of course, insufficient to establish an easement by adverse use.

Appellant calls our attention to some rulings upon objections to the admission of testimony. We find no error in any of these rulings, and none of them are of sufficient importance to require discussion.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 388

BELL v. CAMM et al. (Civ. 567.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 12, 1909.)

1. COURTS (§ 12*)—JURISDICTION—PARTIES—VENUE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 395, provides that, in all other cases including an action on a note, the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial. Held, that the service of summons and a copy of the complaint or the voluntary appearance of a defendant invests the court with jurisdiction of the parties and control of all subsequent proceedings as provided by section 416.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 33-45; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 471*)—ACTION—ATTORNEY'S FEES—COMPLAINT.

Where a note provided that, in case of collection by suit, a reasonable attorney's fee should be allowed, a complaint thereon, alleging that $200 was a reasonable attorney's fee, was not objectionable for failure to allege what, if any, sum had been agreed on between plaintiff and his counsel as an attorney's fee for prosecuting the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1467; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

3. COSTS (§ 260*)—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL—DAMAGES.

Plaintiff sued on a note, the validity of which was not denied. Defendants demurred, and, their demurrer being overruled, failed to answer. Judgment was entered against them by default, from which an appeal was taken. Notice of appeal was filed June 2, 1908, and the record on September 16th following, after which appellants' counsel applied for an extension of time to file his opening brief, alleging that he had been making diligent efforts to settle the action and was satisfied that it would be settled in a short time. Held, that it appeared from such affidavit that the appeal was taken for delay, and that damages would be allowed on affirmation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 983-1003; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by W. J. Bell against F. B. Camm and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed, with damages.

E. L. Webber, for appellants. H. B. McClure, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action on a promissory note. The defendants demurred to the complaint generally and specially. The court overruled the demurrer and gave the defendants 10 days within which to answer. The defendants failed to answer within the time allowed for that purpose, and thereupon defaults were entered against them, and judgment rendered and entered in favor of plaintiff for the principal sum of the note with interest, and for $150 as attorney's fee. This appeal is from said judgment.

The note declared upon is for $3,000, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, said interest payable annually, and, if not so paid, to be compounded with the principal and thereafter bear a like rate of interest. The note was executed at Visalia, in Tulare county, and by its terms is payable at that place. It provides that, in the event of the necessity of its collection through legal proceedings, the makers "agree to pay a reasonable attorney fee to the holder of this note," etc. The complaint alleges that the sum of $200 is a reasonable attorney's fee for the prosecution of the action for recovery upon the note. The defendants demur specially upon the grounds, among others which it is unnecessary to particularly notice, that the court "has no jurisdiction over the persons of these defendants or the subject of the action," and that the complaint is "uncertain, in this, that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether or not plaintiff has agreed to pay his attorney herein the sum of $200, or what sum plaintiff has agreed to pay his attorney herein." The demurrer was properly overruled.

Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes the institution of an action of the nature of the one at bar "in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action * * * subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial," as provided by said Code. The service of the summons and of a copy of the complaint or the voluntary appearance of a defendant invests the court with jurisdiction of the parties and control of all the subsequent proceedings. Section 416, Code Civ. Proc. There can be absolutely no question that the court acquired jurisdiction of the subject of the action and of the persons of the defendants.

The point that the complaint is uncertain because it does not allege what, if any, sum was agreed upon by the plaintiff and his counsel as an attorney's fee for prosecuting this action is devoid of merit. The note provides in general terms that, in case of its collection through a lawsuit, a reasonable attorney's fee shall be allowed. The evident meaning of this provision is that such fee should be awarded as the judgment of the court trying the action might, from all the circumstances, deem reasonable. The plaintiff and his counsel could, of course, have made an agreement as to the amount of the fee to be paid; but, from the silence of the complaint upon the point, it must be assumed that they did not. We can perceive no objection to the course taken by the plaintiff in relying upon a quantum meruit as to the value of the services of his attorney, and thus leaving the determination of the question to the judgment and sound discretion of the court.

Respondent, claiming that this appeal is frivolous and was taken for delay only, asks that this court award damages against the appellants as provided in cases where appeals are made purely for purposes of delay, by section 957 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is plainly manifest that there is absolutely no merit in this appeal, and, furthermore, from the affidavit of counsel for appellants, upon which an enlargement of the time within which to file his opening brief was requested, it clearly appears that counsel himself knew that the appeal was without merit. The appellants made no denial of the due execution or validity of the note declared upon, but objected through a proceeding which obviously could be of no avail to them upon the point, that the proper place of trial was in another county than the one in which the action was brought. If they had desired in good faith to finally defend against the allegations of the complaint or plead to the merits, and they were entitled to a change of the place of trial, they should have proceeded in the only way pointed out by the Code for securing a change to the proper county. Section 396, Code Civ. Proc. But, having failed, at the time of interposing their demurrer, to file an affidavit of merits and a demand in writing for a change of the place of the trial of the action, they thereby waived their right to such change, even if the facts in reality entitled them to it. Cook v. Pendergast, 61 Cal. 78. The judgment in this action was rendered on the 4th day of May, 1908, and was entered on the 13th day of May, 1908. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed on the 2d day of June, 1908, and the transcript containing the record on appeal was filed in the Supreme Court on the 16th day of September, 1908. The affidavit upon which counsel for appellants based his application for an extension of time beyond that allowed by rule 2 of the Supreme Court, within which to file his opening brief, recites, among other things, "that affiant has been making diligent efforts to settle the affairs of H. H. Brown with a view to settling the present action now pending out of court," etc., and "that affiant is satisfied that this case will in a short time be settled, and to that end he believes that it would be a hardship to require the appellants to go to the expense of printing a brief," etc. From the foregoing statement in the affidavit referred to, we think it is not only clear that counsel himself had no faith in his appeal, but that the same was taken for no other reason than to delay the execution of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed, with damages awarded against the appellants in the sum of $50.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

10 Cal. App. 383

MIGLIAVACCA v. CITY OF NAPA et al.
(Civ. 614.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 16, 1909.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 46*)—AMENDMENT OF CHARTER—CONSTRUCTION OF PROVISIONS.

Under Const. art. 11, § 8, relating to the freeholders' charter, and providing that "the charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years," a proposed amendment, which was defeated at the election thereon, does not prevent submission of another proposition for amendment within two years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

Original application for writ of prohibition by Joseph A. Migliavacca against the City of Napa and others. Heard on demurrer to petition. Petition dismissed.

F. E. Johnston, for petitioner. Wallace Rutherford, for respondents.

HART, J. This is a direct application to this court for a writ of prohibition, the purpose of which is to restrain the respondents—the city of Napa and its mayor, city clerk, and councilmen—from submitting to the voters of the said city of Napa certain proposed amendments to the charter, to be voted upon by said voters at the general municipal election to be held in said city on the 3d day of May, 1909.

The city of Napa, as a municipal corporation, is governed by a freeholders' charter, adopted in accordance with the requirements of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. It appears from the averments of the petition that on the 20th day of January, 1909, under an ordinance previously adopted by the city council for that purpose, a special election was held in said city at which were submitted certain proposed amendments to said charter. None of these proposed amendments received the required number of votes for their ratification, and were therefore rejected by the electors voting at said election. On the 16th of February, 1909, "another petition, duly signed by more than 15 per cent. of the qualified voters of the said city of Napa, requesting the legislative authority thereof to submit certain proposed amendments to the charter of the said city to the qualified voters thereof for approval, was presented to and filed with the legislative authority of the said city," and in pursuance thereof the said legislative authority, on the 1st day of March, 1909, passed an ordinance, the same having been approved by the mayor on the same day, "for the purpose of submitting said last-mentioned proposed amendments to the said charter to the qualified voters of said city of Napa for approval." The respondents have interposed a general demurrer to the petition, and the single question thus submitted for consideration hinges upon the meaning of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. So much of that section of the Constitution as is pertinent to the inquiry here reads as follows: " * * * The charter, so ratified, may be amended at intervals of not less than two years by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified electors thereof at a general or special election, held at least forty days after the publication of such proposals for twenty days in a daily newspaper of general circulation in such city, and ratified by a majority of the electors voting thereon, and approved by the Legislature as herein provided for the approval of the charter." St. 1905, p. 1064, c. 28.

It is the contention of the petitioner that the foregoing provision of the Constitution means that the mere proposal of amendments of a freeholders' charter, without regard to whether they are ratified by the electors or not, exhausts the right of the legislative authority of a municipal corporation operating under such a charter to submit or propose other amendments to such charter within two years after the first proposal. In other words, it is the claim that it is immaterial whether proposed amendments are ratified or rejected by the electors to whom submitted, for the power cannot be exercised by the legislative body to propose either the same or other amendments within two years after amendments have already been proposed and voted upon. In thus construing the said provision of the Constitution, and in support of his position, the petitioner cites the case of Harrison v. Roberts, 145 Cal. 173, 78 Pac. 537. In that case a writ of mandate was asked to compel the board of election commissioners and the registrar of voters of the city and county of San Francisco to so arrange the ballots to be used at the general election held on the 8th day of November, 1904, as to enable the electors to indicate their votes upon certain amendments to the charter of said city and county, which had theretofore been proposed by an ordinance adopted for that purpose by the legislative authority of said city and county. It appeared from the petition for the writ of mandate that on December 4, 1902, a special election was held in the city and county of San Francisco, "at which election there were submitted to the electors thereof for ratification certain proposed amendments to the charter," some of which amendments so proposed

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"were ratified by the necessary majority of the electors," and thereafter, by concurrent resolution, approved by the Legislature. It will thus be seen that the date of the election at which it was sought to coerce the submission to the electors of the proposed amendments was a little less than two years from the election held in December, 1902, at which certain of the amendments to the charter then proposed were ratified by the electors. There were suggested in that case two different constructions of the constitutional provision in question, viz.: (1) That none of the steps necessary to the taking effect of an amendment to a charter—that is, the proposal, the ratification by the electors and the approval by the Legislature—can be taken within two years after approval by the Legislature of a prior amendment. (2) That no charter amendment must be approved by the Legislature within two years after a prior approval by the Legislature of an amendment of the same character. Neither of these constructions was sustained by the Supreme Court; but it was held that the provision as to the limitation of time within which proposals for the amendment of the charter may be made means that such proposals may be made at any time after the expiration of two years from the date of the election at which the electors have voted upon any prior amendment or amendments. The point thus decided in the case under review was the only one essential to the decision; but counsel for the petitioner here particularly rely upon the following language contained in the opinion in that case: "Our conclusion upon this question is that the only effect of the limitation is to prohibit a submission for ratification by the electors of any proposed amendment within two years from the submission for ratification of any prior amendment; in other words, that proposals for amendments may be submitted at elections only at intervals of two years."

This language would appear to sustain the position of the petitioner, and we would be compelled to so hold if it involved anything more than mere dictum; for it is clear that the language was not necessary to a decision of the only point in the case, viz., whether the time limit began with the election at which prior proposed amendments were voted upon or from the time of the approval of the ratified amendments by the Legislature. But we do not think it was the intention of the court to hold that, where proposed amendments to the charter were rejected at an election by the electors, the right to submit the same or other amendments at an election held within two years from the date of the prior election at which such proposed amendments were refused ratification is foreclosed under the terms of the Constitution. Among our reasons for this assertion is that the court in the case cited in effect declares, and obviously it is true, that the main reason for the provision that amendments of a charter shall be made only at intervals of two years is, to use the language quoted in the opinion in that case from Blanchard v. Hartwell, 131 Cal. 263, 265, 63 Pac. 349, 350, "to insure some degree of permanency, and to prevent frequent changes," and that such is the constitutional policy established by the provision of the Constitution concerned here. If proposed amendments to a charter are defeated at an election by the electors, certainly there could be no contravention of the "constitutional policy calculated to insure some degree of permanency, and to prevent frequent changes," in the exercise of the right to submit proposals for amendments at an election held within two years from the date of the election at which the prior proposals were defeated, for the very obvious reason that the attempt to amend in the first instance would be abortive and the result the same as if no effort had been made in that direction. But it seems to us that the language itself of the constitutional provision is so clear and definite that there is no necessity for resorting to construction to arrive at its true meaning. It plainly and unambiguously declares that "the charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years," and then proceeds to point out how such proposed amendments may be made; that is, as to the mode for exercising the power to amend, it provides that such amendments may be made "by proposals therefor submitted by legislative authority of the city, to the qualified voters thereof at a general or special election," etc., and, if ratified by the electors, by approval thereof by the Legislature. It is to be noted that the language of the provision is not that amendments of such charter may be proposed "at intervals of not less than two years," as counsel's construction of the provision would inevitably compel it to read, but that "the charter may be amended" at the intervals prescribed. In other words, the provision grants the power to amend, and at the same time points out the mode by which proposed amendments may be made.

The argument of counsel for petitioner necessarily assumes that the limitation as to time applies to that portion of the provision prescribing the mode of making amendments, rather than to that portion granting the right to amend. Of course, it is as apparent as language can make it that there is nothing in the language of the provision warranting any such assumption. The language of the provision of the Constitution we are considering could not, in our opinion, be less obscure as to the intention of the framers of our organic law with reference to the subject to which it relates, and, if it does not possess the meaning here claimed for it, then, indeed, it must be admitted that the task of finding language which would make a proposition plainer or clearer is well-nigh insurmountable.

Our conclusion is that, all the proposed amendments submitted at the prior election, held on the 20th day of January, 1909, having been defeated by the electors, the respondents are clearly within their rights, under the plain terms of the Constitution, in the matter of the submission, at the general municipal election to be held on the 3d day of May, 1909, proposals for amendments to the charter of the said city of Napa.

Therefore, and for the reasons given in the foregoing, the demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the alternative writ herein issued discharged.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

155 Cal. 577

SEALE v. CARR. (S. F. 4,753.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

Where, in partition, a defendant assented through his attorney to an award of attorney's fees to the codefendant and requested an award for services of his own attorney, he was estopped on appeal from urging that the awards were erroneous, because the services were not for the common benefit of the parties, within Code Civ. Proc. § 796.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3591-3610; Dec. Dig. § 882.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by Jessie D. Seale against Larkin W. Carr and another. From an order awarding attorney's fees to defendants, defendant Larkin W. Carr, appeals. Affirmed.

Dougherty & Lacey, for appellant. John K. & Roy L. Alexander, for respondent plaintiff. Jesse W. Bryan and John T. Williams, for respondent defendant.

HENSHAW, J. The action was in partition. At a hearing, before the entry of final judgment, the court made an award of attorney's fees to plaintiff in the sum of $2,000, to Sterling D. Carr, defendant and respondent, in the sum of $2,000, and to Larkin W. Carr, defendant and appellant, in the sum of $1,500. These awards must have been granted under the provisions of section 796, Code Civ. Proc. That section, so far as applicable, declares that "the costs of partition, including reasonable counsel fees expended by plaintiff, or either of the defendants, for the common benefit * * * must be paid by the parties respectively entitled to share in the lands." The interests of the three parties to the partition is not in dispute, and is one-third each. The appellant contends that upon the evidence before the court the award to himself, as well as to his codefendant, Sterling D. Carr, was unauthorized, improper, and erroneous, because it was not shown to the court that services for the common benefit had been rendered by Larkin W. Carr or Sterling D. Carr, or the attorneys of either of them.

If this matter were open for consideration upon the merits, much force would attach to and much support be found for appellant's contention in this regard; but it appears from the record that when the attorney for Sterling D. Carr asked, on behalf of his client, for an allowance by way of attorney's fees, and stated the nature of the services which he had rendered, and which he contended were for the common benefit, Mr. Andersen, the then attorney for Larkin W. Carr, appellant herein, and representing him at the hearing, sought on behalf of this appellant a similar allowance, addressing the court as follows: "The defendant Larkin W. Carr urges upon the court the right of compensation to his attorney in this matter, and urges that right upon the same ground urged by Mr. Williams, representing Sterling D. Carr, that the work so done by the attorney for Larkin W. Carr, the defendant, was for the common benefit of the estate, and that the interests of the defendant Larkin W. Carr were mutual with those of Sterling D. Carr, and for those reasons we ask that $1,500 be allowed as a fee for the services rendered." Without further quoting from the record, it is shown that Mr. Andersen was assenting to the allowances claimed by plaintiff and by Sterling D. Carr, and that the court finally stated: "I think that the amount asked for by each side is reasonable." If in fact, as appellant now contends, the court fell into error in making these allowances to defendants for the services of their attorneys, it is plain that the error was invited by appellant, and that he is estopped from here complaining of it. He distinctly gave his assent through his attorney to the award to Sterling D. Carr, and affirmatively invited and requested the award to himself, which he now urges to have been erroneous. It is too well settled to require the citation of authorities that the assent in the one case and the invited error in the second case precludes the party from taking advantage of the alleged error upon appeal.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.

(155 Cal. 534)

TRUE v. FOX et al. (L. A. 2271.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1909.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 445*)—STREET IMPROVEMENT CONTRACT—ASSESSMENTS—VALIDITY.

The presence, in a street improvement contract, of a stipulation that all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under the contract shall be sustained by the contractor, renders the assessment and all subsequent proceedings therein void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1065; Dec. Dig. § 445.*]

Beatty, C. J., and Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Bella M. True against E. R. Fox and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Fox appeals. Affirmed.

E. R. Fox, in pro. per. Elon G. Golusha, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to cancel a bond issued upon a street assessment and to enjoin the execution of a deed pursuant to a sale in the proceedings. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, canceling the bond. The defendant Fox appeals.

The contract for the street improvement in question required the work to be done under specifications which provided that "all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under this agreement * * * shall be sustained by the contractor." The presence of this stipulation, in a street improvement contract, has been held to render the assessment and all subsequent proceedings therein void, in repeated decisions of this court. Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 665, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213; Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 673, 67 Pac. 1091; Woollacott v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 701, 91 Pac. 612; Van Loenen v. Gillespie, 152 Cal. 222, 96 Pac. 87; Hatch v. Nevills, 152 Cal. xvi, 95 Pac. 43; Stansbury v. Poindexter (Cal.) 99 Pac. 182.

Upon the authority of those decisions, and upon the reasons stated therein, the judgment is affirmed.

LORIGAN, J., did not participate in the foregoing decision.

We dissent from the judgment, for the reasons given in the dissenting opinion in Woollacott v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 708, 91 Pac. 612: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.

(155 Cal. 579)

PEOPLE v. HAM TONG. (Cr. 1479.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1909.)

1. ROBBERY (§ 17*)—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY.

An information for robbery, which contains allegations charging larceny, but which fails to state that the property was taken from the prosecutor, does not charge robbery, but only charges larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Robbery, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 991*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—IRREGULAR JUDGMENT—CRIMINAL CASES.

The rule that, where a court has power to hear and determine a question, the fact that it erred in the determination does not render the judgment void applies in criminal, as well as in civil, cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2528; Dec. Dig. § 991.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 185*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—DISCHARGE OF JURY—EFFECT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1140, authorizing the court to discharge the jury on there being no reasonable probability that they can agree, a discharge of a jury for failure to agree does not permit accused to avail himself of the plea of once in jeopardy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 344; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 204*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—WAIVER.

Where a verdict, whether valid in form or not, has been rendered on an indictment, either good or bad, and accused for any cause moves in arrest of judgment, or applies to the court to vacate the judgment, he will be presumed to waive any objection to being put a second time in jeopardy, and he may ordinarily be tried anew.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 319; Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 192*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—REVERSAL OF CONVICTION.

Where the court erroneously determined that an information charged robbery, while in fact it only charged larceny, and the jury found, under the instructions of the court, that accused was guilty of robbery, accused, on reversal of the conviction, could be tried for larceny against his objection that he had once been in jeopardy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 376; Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Ham Tong was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Reversed.

Peter J. Crosby and Nathan C. Coghlan, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

MELVIN, J. This case was identical with that of the People of the State of California v. Ho Sing, and followed the same course in the District Court of Appeal. 6 Cal. App. 752, 93 Pac. 204. That court held that the information did not properly charge the crime of robbery, but that there was a full and adequate allegation of the crime of grand larceny. In the information there was no statement that the property was taken from the possession of Chung Kee, and the District Court of Appeal, following the authority of People v. Walbridge, 123 Cal. 274, 55 Pac. 902, determined that there was not a sufficient pleading of the crime of robbery. The Attorney General concedes the correctness of this ruling, and also of the one whereby it is found that there is an averment of grand larceny. The only question presented for our determination is whether or not the Court of Appeal properly ordered the discharge of the defendant from custody upon the authority of People v. Arnett, 129 Cal. 306, 61 Pac. 930. In that case the defendant had been charged with the crime of assault with intent to commit murder, and had been convicted of assault with a deadly weapon. The verdict was held to be a nullity (People v. Arnett, 126 Cal. 680, 59 Pac. 204) and on a second appeal (People v. Arnett, 129 Cal. 306, 61 Pac. 930) it was determined that the defendant had been once in jeopardy, and that he was entitled to his discharge, as it appeared from the minutes of the trial court, which were before the Supreme Court, that he had not consented to the discharge of the jury without verdict. If it be the doctrine of the cases of People v. Arnett, 129 Cal. 306, 61 Pac. 930, People v. Smith, 136 Cal. 207, 68 Pac. 702, People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 61, 67 Pac. 42, and People v. Curtis, 76 Cal. 57, 17 Pac. 941, that the defendant has been once in jeopardy in every case wherein a verdict of guilty of a crime not strictly embraced within the pleadings has been returned, and the jury has been discharged without consent, then those cases should be overruled. Section 1140 of the Penal Code, which is the basis of the decision in the cases just cited, is as follows: "Except as provided in the last section, the jury cannot be discharged after the cause is submitted to them until they have agreed upon their verdict and rendered it in open court, unless by consent of both parties, entered upon the minutes, or unless, at the expiration of such time as the court may deem proper, it satisfactorily appears that there is no reasonable probability that the jury can agree." In the case before us the learned district attorney attempted to set forth a charge of robbery in the information. The defendant was tried, and the jury instructed, upon the theory that the crime of robbery was fully alleged and supported by testimony sufficient, if believed, to establish the fact of the commission by defendant of the crime. There was a demurrer to the information, which the court overruled. The court had the right to hear and determine this question. Pen. Code, § 1002 et seq. It is a general rule that, where a court has power to hear and determine a question, the fact that it erred in such decision does not render its judgment void. Sherer v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 654, 31 Pac. 565; Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8; Washburn v. Kahler, 97 Cal. 58, 31 Pac. 741; Disque v. Herrington, 139 Cal. 4, 72 Pac. 336; Franklin Union No. 4 v. People, 220 Ill. 355, 77 N. E. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1009, 110 Am. St. Rep. 248. We see no reason why this rule should not be applied in criminal, as well as in civil, cases.

It has been well settled by decisions in this state that the discharge of the jury for failure to agree does not enable a defendant to avail himself effectively of the plea of once in jeopardy. People v. Greene, 100 Cal. 140, 34 Pac. 630; People v. James, 97 Cal. 400, 32 Pac. 317. It is true that section 1140 of the Penal Code gives the judge a right to discharge a jury without verdict when there is no probability that an agreement can be reached, but there is authority for the same rule in many American jurisdictions where no such statute exists. People v. Green, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 55; U. S. v. Perez, 9 Wheat. 580, 6 L. Ed. 165. In People v. James, supra, although the jury refused to agree upon a verdict, under a condition of the record entitling the defendant to an acquittal, and although such refusal was in the face of an instruction to acquit, this court held that a plea of former jeopardy could not be effectively set up upon the discharge of the jury. In the opinion in that case Mr. Justice McFarland wrote: "No doubt it would have been the duty of the jury to have acquitted the appellant, under these circumstances, at the first trial; and, if they had returned a verdict of guilty, the court would, no doubt, have granted a new trial. But we do not see that appellant is in a position different, in point of law, from that of any other defendant whom the jury should have acquitted, but failed, through erroneous notions of some of the jurors, to agree upon a verdict, and, after a reasonable time, were discharged." Can it not be said with greater force in this case that failure of the jury to return a verdict upon the charge of grand larceny was mere error, entitling the defendant only to a new trial? The jurors were acting under the law as given them by the court. It is true that the court was in error upon the question of the sufficiency of the information to charge robbery—error which seems to have been shared by the district attorney who drafted the information, and by defendant's attorneys, who specified in their demurrer, not that the crime stated was grand larceny, instead of robbery, but that both robbery and grand larceny had been alleged. The decision of the court that there was a valid, sufficient, properly drawn information averring robbery was the law of that case until the ruling was set aside or reversed, and the jury, acting under that law, rendered "their verdict," as that term in section 1140 of the Penal Code should be interpreted. If the information, though purporting to be one charging robbery, had contained no sufficient allegation of any crime at all, the case would be under the rule announced in People v. Lee Look, 137 Cal. 590, 70 Pac. 660, and People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76 Pac. 1028. In those cases it was held that the original information was defective because it contained no statement that the person killed was a human being, but this court decided that the defendant had not been in jeopardy upon the first trial. The difference between the Lee Look Cases and this one is that in this case there was a disregarded pleading, in which the defendant was accused of grand larceny; but he was not called upon, under the court's instructions, to defend against that accusation. Under the circumstances he was never in danger of conviction upon a charge of grand larceny. In other jurisdictions it has been held that a plea of former jeopardy cannot be sustained on proof that the conviction of the accused on the previous trial was set aside because of a void or illegal verdict. See 12 Cyc. 277, and cases there cited. In State v. Redman, 17 Iowa, 329, Mr. Justice Dillon, after reviewing the decisions, wrote:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"And we understand the settled doctrine to be that, where the verdict is a nullity (or so defective that no judgment can be rendered upon it), the defendant may again be put upon his trial, certainly where the verdict was intended to be one of conviction, for in such case it is rather a mistrial than a legal putting in jeopardy." In Fitts v. State, 102 Tenn. 141, 50 S. W. 756, the jury found the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, with a term of imprisonment for 15 years. Upon a former trial, misled by the instructions of the judge, a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree was returned, fixing the term of imprisonment at 21 years, one year more than the maximum term allowed by the statute. It was held that a plea autrefois convict was properly stricken from the files. The Supreme Court found that "the former verdict was unwarranted, and, being a nullity, no valid judgment could be pronounced upon it. It was therefore no bar to a second prosecution."

There are few questions upon which courts have differed more radically than they have disagreed upon those arising from considerations of jeopardy. We find all shades of opinion. There is the English rule that in felony cases the prisoner must be recommended to a pardon—granted as of course—whenever it appears that the judge at the trial committed error to his prejudice. It is now the generally accepted American doctrine that "whenever a verdict, whether valid in form or not, has been rendered on an indictment, either good or bad, and the defendant for any cause moves in arrest of judgment, or applies to the court to vacate a judgment already entered, * * * he will be presumed to waive any objection to being put a second time in jeopardy, and so he may ordinarily be tried anew." 1 Bishop's Crim. Law (7th Ed.) § 998. Starting with the same rule, which is substantially Blackstone's oft-quoted maxim, "No man is to be brought into jeopardy of his life more than once for the same offense," the courts of England and of the various American states have reached diametrically opposite conclusions in answering the most important question: "Does the reversal for error at the defendant's own request of a verdict of conviction waive jeopardy?" The other problems arising in connection with this subject have received diverse solutions. For example, it is held in some of the states, including California, that conviction of a lesser offense included within the charge of a greater is an acquittal of the major crime (People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376, 60 Am. Dec. 620; People v. Apgar, 35 Cal. 389; People v. Gordon, 99 Cal. 230, 33 Pac. 901; People v. Defoor, 100 Cal. 157, 34 Pac. 642; State v. Martin, 30 Wis. 216, 11 Am. Rep. 567; State v. Belden, 33 Wis. 120, 14 Am. Rep. 748; State v. Smith, 53 Mo. 140), while elsewhere there is, as Bishop says, "Some authority either contrary to, or quali-fyng, this doctrine" (1 Bishop, Crim. Law, [8th Ed.] § 1004). Some courts have decided that a verdict of guilty of a lower degree of a crime is no bar upon a new trial to conviction of the higher offense charged in the indictment. State v. Behimer, 20 Ohio St. 572; Bailey v. State, 26 Ga. 579. In short, so hopelessly at war are the decisions on the subjects of jeopardy, autrefois acquit, and autrefois convict that we find little settled doctrine upon any phase of these matters. Perhaps the safest rule is that announced in Stocks v. State, 91 Ga. 831, 18 S. E. 847, that the question of the propriety of discharging a jury depends upon the facts of each particular case. In the case here considered the entire theory of the court was based upon the supposition that there was a perfect charge of robbery. The court solemnly found and declared the pleading sufficient as an allegation of robbery, by overruling the demurrer, by the charge to the jury, and by denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Why should this form of error entitle a defendant to his discharge any more than should any other misdirection upon a question of law? The jury, acting according to the law as given them by the court, returned "their verdict," erroneous to be sure, but according to that declaration of the law which they were bound to accept as containing the principles to be followed by them in reaching "their verdict."

In view of the above conclusions we see no reason why the defendant should not be tried for the crime of grand larceny charged in the information.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.

SLOSS, J. I concur in the judgment. The defendant was in jeopardy as soon as he was placed on trial before a competent court and jury on an information charging grand larceny. If the jury had been discharged without reaching a verdict, and in the absence of one of the statutory grounds for discharging them (Pen. Code, §§ 1123, 1130, 1140), the defendant would be in a position to interpose the plea of once in jeopardy as a bar to a subsequent trial. But the jury were not discharged without reaching a verdict. They found the defendant guilty of robbery. This verdict, when compared with the averments of the information, was irregular, but it cannot be regarded as an absolute nullity. The judgment entered upon it would, if not directly attacked, have constituted a valid adjudication binding upon the defendant. Its sufficiency could not have been questioned collaterally, as, for example, on habeas corpus. The defendant's successful effort to set aside that verdict and judgment by means of a motion for new trial and an appeal is a waiver of his constitutional right to object to being placed again in jeopardy. In effect, he consents to be tried anew.

I concur: SHAW, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment. The verdict of the jury was not a nullity. Comparing it with the rest of the record, including the charge of the court, it is clear that it could not have been returned except as the result of a finding by the jury of every element of the crime of larceny. In other words, the jury did actually find the defendant guilty of larceny, but under the erroneous instruction of the court called it robbery. The verdict, however, is uncertain for the reason that, whether construed by itself or in connection with other parts of the record it cannot be known whether the jury would have found it to be grand or petit larceny. This renders a new trial necessary.

(155 Cal. 592)

PEOPLE v. DERWAE. (Cr. 1470.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 706*)—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—MISCONDUCT—REVERSIBLE ERROR.

In a prosecution for an attempt to commit burglary, the prosecutor opened defendant's examination by showing that he was a divorced man when he contracted his second marriage, and then inquired whether he knew the chief of police of Green Bay, Wis., where defendant had previously resided, and, on obtaining an affirmative reply, requested to know why defendant had not taken such officer's deposition on the issue of his good character. An objection to this question was sustained, whereupon the prosecuting attorney inquired if defendant had not had trouble with one of his daughters in Wisconsin, and, after an objection had been sustained to this question, asked if he had not attempted incest with his daughter. An objection to this was sustained, and the court instructed the jury fully not to consider such questions or be influenced in any manner thereby. Held that, defendant's guilt or innocence being a close question on the evidence, the misconduct of the prosecuting attorney constituted reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

Angellotti and Shaw, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

A. C. Derwae was convicted of an attempt to commit burglary in the first degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

George F. Buck, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

As we are in accord with the decision of the District Court of Appeal upon all but one subject presented by the record in this case, it will be necessary to consider only the matter of the alleged misconduct of the assistant district attorney who conducted the case on behalf of the people. The appellant was charged with the crime of burglary and was convicted of an "attempt to commit burglary in the first degree." The evidence was largely circumstantial; but the defendant, who took the stand in his own behalf at the trial, did not deny any of the essential physical facts put in evidence by the prosecution. He did, however, have an explanation of his conduct which, although it evidently was not believed by the jury, cannot be characterized as intrinsically improbable. The defendant owned in the city of Stockton a building which was occupied in part by a grocery store. At the back part of the store was a door opening into a portion of the building which was occupied by defendant and his family as a residence. Over this door was a transom large enough to admit the passage of a man. The grocers had, from time to time, missed articles from the store, and on Sunday, the 20th of September, 1907, they determined to make an effort to catch the thief. The store was closed at 11 o'clock in the morning, according to custom, and on that evening one of the proprietors of the grocery store and a companion entered the place and secreted themselves. When they went into the store, they noticed that the transom was open, and that there was a ladder inside reaching from the floor to the opening above the back door. From their hiding place the two men saw the defendant several times looking through the transom. Finally he reached inside for the ladder and begun to pull it upwards. At this juncture the witnesses sprang from their place of concealment, pulled the ladder from the grasp of defendant, and telephoned for the police. When the ladder was seized, Mr. Pezze called the defendant an uncomplimentary name and said: "I have been feeding you for the last five years. Now is time to stop you." Defendant replied: "Boys I want you to keep your cat out of the way from here. The cat has been bothering me and making so much racket." It was shown that the cat was in the store at the time and had been making some noise. There was evidence also that defendant offered to pay for anything which might be missing from the store, and that he endeavored to settle the matter with the owners. On this particular Sunday nothing was missed from the stock of the grocers. Defendant testified that he had been attracted to the store at the time he was discovered by sounds which he feared were made by burglars. He also stated that the ladder had been lowered into the store by him and his wife for the purpose of providing for the escape of the cat. It was shown that the defendant was a man of means, and that he had recently bought articles of the kind which had been missing from the grocery store. A number of residents of his old home in Wisconsin testified, by deposition, to his good general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

From the essential facts thus briefly stated, it will be seen that, while there was ample evidence to justify the verdict of the jury, this was not a case in which the evidence was so strong that a conviction would almost necessarily be secured, whether the prosecuting officer indulged in misconduct or not. The explanation of his demeanor and acts which the defendant offered was not on unreasonable one. There were certain admitted facts tending in some slight degree to sustain it. Of course, the jury, having an opportunity to observe the defendant's bearing and manner of testifying, could better weigh his testimony than we can. Ordinarily, we would say that their determination with reference to the truth or falsity of his statements was absolutely final and not reviewable; but, if the conduct of the assistant district attorney was such as would naturally prejudice the jurors against the defendant, who can say that such conduct was not the turning point in the case—that it, and it alone, did not cause the jurors to repudiate and cast aside testimony which otherwise might have availed to acquit the defendant?

The prosecutor opened his examination of the defendant by bringing out the fact that the latter was a divorced man when he contracted his second marriage. Then the assistant district attorney inquired whether or not the witness knew the chief of police of Green Bay, Wis. An affirmative reply having been given, the witness was then asked why he had not taken the deposition of the chief of police upon the issue of good character. Defendant's objection to this question was sustained. The avowed purpose of the inquiry was to show that defendant had not selected men of the standing of the chief of police as his sponsors in that community. Why the chief of police was mentioned by the prosecutor, rather than the postmaster (whose deposition was read later), or any other supposedly prominent person, does not appear; but, in view of what followed almost immediately, it seems more than probable that the jurors discerned some peculiar significance in this reference to the chief of police, because the prosecuting officer, in the face of the court's ruling, improperly insinuated that, while a resident of Green Bay, the defendant had been guilty of a horrible and unnatural crime committed with his own daughter. As soon as the court sustained the objection to the question with reference to defendant's failure to take the deposition of the chief of police of Green Bay, Wis., the assistant district attorney proceeded with the examination, as follows: "Q. How many children did you have? A. Eleven. Q. You had a daughter once didn't you, a daughter among those children? A. I did,

I got six. Q. Did you have any trouble with one of your daughters while you were at Green Bay, Wis.? A. Not that I know of. Mr. Buck: Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The Court: Objection sustained. I don't think the family relations of this man are material at all in this case. Mr. Rendon: Q. Did you have such relations, or attempted relations, with your daughter that are unnatural with a parent? Mr. Buck: One moment. We object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and assign it as misconduct on the part of the district attorney. The Court: Objection sustained. And, gentlemen, that objection was sustained, and the court suggested to counsel that the family ties of this man, his children, who they are, or where they live, are immaterial in this case, and the court now instructs you that when you come to decide this case you are to consider only the evidence which has been admitted by the court in the case and allowed to stand, and you are not to consider as evidence any questions asked by counsel upon either side; but you are to consider only the evidence in the case which has been permitted to stand as evidence. And side remarks of counsel, or questions asked by counsel upon either side, are not evidence, and you are not to be influenced thereby or governed in any way by any question they may ask, and the court hereby charges you that is one of the duties of the jurors." The highest commendation should be accorded the learned judge who presided at the trial for the promptness with which he rebuked the improper conduct on the part of the prosecuting officer and the efforts which he made to eliminate from the minds of the jurors the ill effects of the prosecutor's sinister suggestion. That official, however, almost immediately after the court's ruling and admonition to the jury, proceeded to interrogate the defendant with reference to the latter's acquaintance with the chief of police of Depere, Wis., where the defendant had once resided.

Courts have exhibited a strong disinclination to set aside convictions upon the ground of misconduct of district attorneys. This is eminently proper. The state should not be put to the expense and its officers to the trouble of a new trial unless it clearly appears that the rights of a defendant have been invaded and a fair trial has been denied him, because of the behavior of the prosecuting officer; but we cannot see how the highly improper conduct here revealed could fail to make its impression upon the minds of the jurors to the prejudice of defendant's rights. After persistently suggesting that for some reason defendant did not want the opinion of the chief of police of Green Bay, his former home, upon the subject of his general reputation for the moral qualities involved in the prosecution, the representative of the state of California asked this man on trial for his liberty, not if he had committed a similar crime to that for which he was being tried, not if he had been guilty of an ordinary offense (and such questions would have been very improper), but if he had not committed, or attempted, one of the most disgusting and atrocious crimes known. This was done after the court had ruled that the family relations of this man had nothing to do with the case on trial, and was followed by inquiries regarding the acquaintance of witness with another chief of police. It may be that the assistant district attorney showed no heat or malice in his manner, and that the jurors made no demonstration indicating that their passions were aroused against the defendant; but we cannot see how, in spite of the prosecutor's suavity, the apparent imperturbability of the jurors, and the court's prompt declaration of the law, such gross misconduct could fail to make its impression. In the case of People v. Valiere, 127 Cal. 65, 59 Pac. 295, where the court had promptly rebuked misconduct not more serious than that displayed by this record, this court said: "Rebukes do not seem to have any effect upon prosecuting officers, and probably as little on juries. The only way to secure fair trials is to set verdicts so procured aside." See, also, Spencer v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 107 S. W. 342.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I dissent. Assuming the fact of misconduct on the part of the district attorney, the only material question is whether such misconduct may have influenced the jury against the defendant in determining the question of his guilt or innocence. If it could not have done so under any reasonable hypothesis, the judgment should not be reversed, for a judgment should not be reversed on account of any erroneous ruling or misconduct not affecting the substantial rights of the defendant.

The claim that the particular misconduct alleged may have operated against the defendant is based wholly, of course, on the idea that it was an intimation by the district attorney that defendant at a time many years previously had, or attempted to have, unnatural relations with one of his daughters; but, so assuming, such intimation was not evidence, and the jury were clearly and unequivocally instructed that it was not evidence and should not be considered by them for any purpose. Nothing could have been clearer or more positive as to the duty of the jurors with regard to this question of the district attorney than the instruction of the trial court quoted in the opinion of this court, which was given immediately upon the asking of the improper question. There is no warrant in the record for the assumption that any of the jurors may not have been able to absolutely disregard the question of the district attorney and any intimation contained therein, and it must be assumed, of course, that they obeyed, so far as they were able to do so, the instruction of the court. To imply otherwise would be to assume that they were either incompetent to discharge their duties, or were willfully disregarding of the oath they had taken.

SHAW, J. I agree with the dissenting opinion of Justice ANGELLOTTI. There is positively nothing in the record, which is fully stated in the prevailing opinion, to indicate that, in asking the questions assigned as misconduct, the district attorney was acting in bad faith expecting to have the question excluded and intending to instill suspicion into the minds of the jury by the inference which he hoped they would draw from the fact of his putting the question. There is nothing to show that he did not believe that the questions were proper and that the fact sought to be elicited was material and relevant. We have therefore nothing more serious in the way of injurious misconduct than the fact that the district attorney put a question to the defendant, first in a form so general that it did not suggest anything more than a possible dispute with his daughter over some trivial matter, and then in more specific form pointing to possible incest, an immediate objection thereto, and a ruling by the court excluding the testimony. In civil cases such ruling alone is usually regarded as sufficient to inform the jury that they are not to consider the matter at all in deciding the case, and it is not customary to specifically instruct the jury to that effect, unless evidence has been actually given in response to the question; but here the court went further and told the jury, clearly and positively, that the matter inquired about was not evidence, and that they must not allow it to influence their decision. The rule announced amounts to this: That in seeking to elicit evidence by questions, and in deciding, as he often must, on the instant and in the necessary hurry and confusion of a trial, as to the relevancy of possible evidence that may be suggested to his mind at the moment, the district attorney must be infallible in his judgment, and that, if he makes a mistake, it is at the risk of committing an error beyond the power of the trial court to cure, an error which, ipso facto, makes further proceedings in the trial useless, and which will constitute a sure cause for a reversal on appeal. It seems to me that the doctrine necessarily assumes that jurors are inherently incapable of performing their duties and observing their oath, and that, instead of it being necessary for it to appear that the misconduct did affect the decision, it is to be in all cases presumed that it did so. While the line cannot be drawn and the rule cannot be stated so as to show precisely the gravity of the misconduct which will justify or require a reversal, it is my opinion that that shown in the present case falls far within the class which should be passed over by the appellate courts as nonprejudicial error.

155 Cal. 586

Ex parte BLAKE. (Cr. 1,519.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 27, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 147*)—LIMITATION OF PROSECUTION.

Pen. Code, § 801, providing that an indictment for any misdemeanor must be filed within one year after its commission, when considered in connection with the legislative interpretation of the matter, as indicated by section 1426a, added by Act April 17, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 979, c. 647), and providing that a complaint for any misdemeanor triable in a justice's or police court must be filed within one year after its commission, does not apply to the misdemeanors of the kind embraced in the charge of obtaining less than $50 by false pretenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 271; Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

2. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 3*)—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY.

Under the rule that habeas corpus will not lie for the correction of mere errors which may be reached by motion or on appeal, the statute of limitations, being a mere matter of defense, is not a ground for the discharge of a prisoner on habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 211*)—COMPLAINT—VERIFICATION.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1426, 1427, providing that proceedings before a justice's or police court for a public offense within the jurisdiction of such courts must be commenced by complaint under oath, and authorizing a justice to issue a warrant if satisfied by the complaint that the offense has been committed, when considered in connection with sections 811–813, relating to the examination of prosecutor and his witnesses before a magistrate, etc., a complaint on information and belief made before a police court charging the offense of obtaining less than $50 by false pretenses is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 423; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

In Bank. Application by R. C. Blake for a writ of habeas corpus against A. Wilson, chief of police of the city of Oakland. Petitioner remanded.

Burton Jackson Wyman, for petitioner. W. H. Donahue, Dist. Atty., and William T. Satterwhite, Deputy Dist. Atty., for A. Wilson, Chief of Police.

MELVIN, J. Petitioner was charged with obtaining a sum less than $50 by false pretenses. The complaint upon which a warrant was issued from one of the police courts of the city of Oakland charges the commission of the alleged crime as of a time more than one year before the verification and filing of the said pleading, and the complaining witness swore to the circumstances of the offense "upon his information and belief." Petitioner contends, first, that the prosecution is barred by the provisions of section 801 of the Penal Code; and, second, that a complaint on information and belief fails to give the police court jurisdiction of the offense. In support of the first proposition, we are asked to re-examine section 801 of the Penal Code in the light of its history, to determine whether or not the Legislature intended that section to apply as well to ordinary misdemeanors, cognizable in justices' and police courts, as to those prosecuted by indictment or information. It is unnecessary to consider petitioner's argument in detail for several reasons. First, because the operation of a statute of limitations is not ground for the release of a prisoner on habeas corpus; second, since the filing of the petition herein, the legislative interpretation of the matter has been indicated by the adoption of section 1426a of the Penal Code (approved April 17, 1909 [St. 1909, p. 979, c. 647]), which provides that "a complaint for any misdemeanor triable in a justice's or police court must be filed within one year after its commission" and because it has long been the settled law of this state that the provisions of section 801 of the Penal Code do not apply to misdemeanors of the kind embraced within the charge against this petitioner. People v. Ayhens, 85 Cal. 86, 24 Pac. 635; People v. Picetti, 124 Cal. 361, 57 Pac. 156; People v. Gray, 137 Cal. 269, 70 Pac. 20. That the statute of limitations is mere matter of defense, and is not a ground for discharge of a prisoner on habeas corpus, has been held in Ex parte Townsend (D. C.) 133 Fed. 75; U. S. v. Cook, 17 Wall. 168, 21 L. Ed. 538; Johnson v. U. S., 13 Fed. Cas. 867 (No. 7,418); In re Bogart, 3 Fed. Cas. 796 (No. 1,596). These decisions are based upon the fundamental rule that habeas corpus will not lie for the correction of mere errors which may be reached by motion or on appeal. In re Fife, 110 Cal. 8, 42 Pac. 299; In re Walker, 61 Neb. 811, 86 N. W. 510; Ex parte Miller, 82 Cal. 455, 22 Pac. 1113; 2 Spelling on Injunction and other Extraordinary Remedies, § 1206.

The other branch of this petition presents a more serious question. At first glance, it might seem that this matter had been determined by the decision of this court in Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619. In that proceeding this court was considering a complaint in which the petitioner was charged upon information and belief with the crime of murder. After the citation of sections 811, 812, and 813 of the Penal Code, the court used the following language: "Under these provisions, a magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest without some evidence tending to show the guilt of the party named in the warrant. The original information may be sufficient, though made only upon information and belief, if followed by the deposition of the complainant, or some other witness, stating facts tending to show the guilt of the party charged. Of course, where there was some evidence upon which the magistrate acted, we would not interfere. It may be also true that the original information might be treated as a deposition; and in such view, if it contained positive evidence of facts tending to show guilt, it might be sufficient as a basis for the issuance of a warrant. But a mere affidavit in the form of an information, containing no evidence, and followed by no deposition stating any fact tending to show guilt, is insufficient to support a warrant. The liberty of a citizen cannot be violated upon the mere expression of an opinion under oath that he is guilty of a crime." This would be conclusive of the whole matter if our method of procedure was the same in ordinary charges of misdemeanor made by complaint only, as it is in prosecutions for felony or so-called "higher misdemeanors" cognizable by the superior court and inaugurated in that court by information (after examination before a magistrate) or by indictment. But in California there is a wide difference between the method of commencing and prosecuting criminal actions before justices' or police courts and that by which a prosecution for felony is inaugurated and conducted. Section 1426 of the Penal Code is in part as follows: "All proceedings and actions before a justice's or police court, for a public offense of which such courts have jurisdiction, must be commenced by complaint under oath," etc. There is no provision in the law for the taking of depositions to support the complaint mentioned in this section. But the very next section (1427 of the Penal Code) makes it the duty of the justice of the peace or police judge to issue a warrant of arrest if he "is satisfied therefrom" (that is, from the complaint) "that the offense complained of has been committed." Section 811 of the Penal Code is as follows: "When an information is laid before a magistrate of the commission of a public offense, triable within the county, he must examine on oath the informant or prosecutor, and any witnesses he may produce, and take their depositions in writing, and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them." Section 812 of the same Code sets forth the requisites of the depositions of the prosecutor "and his witnesses," while the following section makes it the duty of the magistrate to issue a warrant of arrest if he is satisfied from the deposition or depositions that the offense complained of has been committed, and that there is reasonable ground to believe that the defendant committed it.

It will be seen, therefore, that there is a wide distinction between the methods of prosecuting charges of felony and those amounting only to ordinary misdemeanors. On the one hand, the magistrate may have opportunity of examining as many witnesses as he desires before issuing the warrant; while in the other case he is limited to the complaint itself as a basis for his action in signing a warrant of arrest. If the rule which petitioner is seeking to have established were adopted, it would be impossible in many cases to prosecute criminals at all. If, for example, each of several people knew a fact or facts, not sufficient alone to justify a conviction, yet in combination pointing directly to the defendant's guilt of a misdemeanor there could be no prosecution because no one could swear positively to the complaint. We do not think the Legislature intended to make such an absurdity possible. There is good reason, too, why the rule with reference to positive pleading should apply more strictly to felonies than to misdemeanors. All misdemeanors are bailable. Some felonies are not. There is little danger of a protracted imprisonment of one charged with misdemeanor. The conviction of a felony carries with it deprivation of citizenship and great lasting disgrace. It is therefore proper that one accused of such a crime should be imprisoned only upon positive evidence at least tending to connect him with the crime. No such great odium attaches to a conviction of a misdemeanor. Perhaps these considerations governed the Legislature somewhat when the rules of pleading in criminal actions were adopted. But, whatever may have been the reasons, the Legislature has seen fit to provide these different methods of inaugurating prosecutions for felonies and simple misdemeanors respectively. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that the purpose was to prevent the prosecution of any person charged with a crime triable in a justice's or police court, if no one could swear positively that the offense had been committed. This subject has been carefully considered by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in State v. Davie, 62 Wis. 305, 22 N. W. 411. In that case it is held, after a review of the leading authorities, that "as to informations and indictments the charge must be positive in all cases." The court then uses the following language: "In reference to the authorities that may hold that in all cases before an accused person can be arrested for crime a complaint must be made in positive terms and by a person who knows of all the facts constituting the offense, we are free to say that they are unreasonable, if nothing more. There would be, and could be, but very few arrests under such a rule. Crime frequently rests upon circumstantial evidence, and very numerous facts in the knowledge of numerous persons, and all such witnesses could not be speedily and summarily brought before the magistrate to make complaint, and they could not be compelled to do so if they could be found. A complaint is not a conviction, any more than an information or indictment, and the accused should not be fully tried upon all the evidence before he is arrested, and his case prejudiced thereby. The indictment or information is a mere charge of an offense; and why should a complaint before a magistrate be anything more to warrant the arrest of the accused? The rule contended for would make the execution of the criminal laws impracticable if not impossible, and many offenders would escape justice. It would be a very humane and safe rule for the criminal, but cruel and unsafe for society. The complainant may be in possession of such facts, by information or otherwise, as would give him good reason to believe that a certain person had committed an offense, and the persons who have knowledge of the facts of the crime may be either unable or unwilling to make complaint. What shall be done? Our statute sufficiently guards and protects the rights of accused persons, and, if strictly followed, there will be no danger of wanton or causeless arrests, and it is by our own statute that this complaint is to be tested." The closing sentence of the above quotation, it seems to us, states the true rule. We must be governed by our statute, and, unless the statute of California upon this subject be construed in such manner as to sustain complaints for minor offenses upon "information and belief," many offenders whose guilt could be easily established would absolutely escape punishment. We are aware of the wide difference of ruling in the courts that have passed upon this subject, but this may be partly explained, at least, by the difference in the statutes construed. In People v. Heffron, 53 Mich. 530, 19 N. W. 170, cited by petitioner, it will be noticed that the court calls attention to the method of procedure in that state, whereby other witnesses than the complainant may be examined before the issuance of the warrant. In Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 451, 5 N. W. 635, the information considered was one for felony. Loder v. Phelps (N. Y.) 13 Wend. 48, was a civil case under a statute requiring a litigant seeking the arrest of his debtor by affidavit to "state the facts and circumstances within his knowledge." In both Garnett v. Guynn, 7 Kan. App. 414, 53 Pac. 275, and State v. Gleason, 32 Kan. 245, 4 Pac. 363, the court's reasoning is based upon the constitutional provision that "no warrant shall issue but on probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation." The case of U. S. v. Collins (D. C.) 79 Fed. 65, had reference to a charge which should be preliminarily examined before a commissioner. That case is analogous to Ex parte Dimmig, supra. In Indiana complaints upon information and belief have been repeatedly sustained. Toops v. State, 92 Ind. 14; Franklin v. State, 85 Ind. 99; State v. Buxton, 31 Ind. 67; Curry v. Baker, 31 Ind. 155; State v. Ellison, 14 Ind. 380; Simpkins v. Malatt, 9 Ind. 543. It is true that the form of affidavit prescribed by the statute in Indiana contains the locution "as affiant verily believes," but in upholding an affidavit containing the formula "as affiant is informed and believes" the court in State v. Buxton, supra, places its ruling upon broad grounds, giving the reason for the ruling as follows: "It frequently occurs that the perpetrator of crime is convicted on the testimony of a number of witnesses swearing to different parts of the transaction constituting the body of the offense. No one person could swear on personal knowledge that the accused was guilty, and yet any one of the numerous witnesses might with a clear conscience have made the affidavit for the arrest." See, also, Sullivan v. State, 68 Ala. 528; State v. Hobbs, 39 Me. 212. Considering, therefore, the peculiar form of our statute prescribing the manner of commencing prosecutions for misdemeanors, and adopting the reasoning which seems most convincing from the decisions that really present less conflict than would at first appear, we are constrained to believe that the complaint upon which the warrant issued for petitioner's arrest was duly and properly verified.

It is ordered that the petitioner be remanded.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

155 Cal. 562

TURNER v. MARKHAM et al. (L. A. 2,081.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1909.
Rehearing Denied June 23, 1909.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 204*)—WRONGS TO CORPORATION—ACTION BY STOCKHOLDER—SCOPE OF ACTION.

An action by a stockholder for and on behalf of the corporation to redress a wrong which it has suffered, brought after the refusal of the officers of the corporation to prosecute, is an action by the corporation, and no recovery can be had for a personal injury to the stockholder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 204.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 99*)—ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY.

The parties in interest in a corporation owning no property may agree to sell all or any of the stock for anything of value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

3. ABANDONMENT (§ 3*)—INTENT.

Abandonment is governed by intent, and the intention to abandon must be established by declaration or conduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abandonment, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 30*)—AGREEMENT BY PROMOTERS—ABANDONMENT—EVIDENCE.

A parol agreement by the promoters of a corporation to be formed to subscribe for all the stock and to pay for it by securing and conveying to the corporation property of a third person, etc., is not shown to be abandoned by proof that one of the promoters took a contract for the purchase of the property in his own name as trustee for the corporation which had not then been formed, especially where he did this in furtherance of the agreement, and caused himself to be designated as trustee, so that, in the event of his death, there could be no question as to what disposition it was intended should be made of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 30*)—STATEMENT IN ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—FRAUD.

A statement in the articles of incorporation of a mining corporation that the entire amount of the stock had been subscribed, and would be paid by the subscribers deeding to the corporation mining locations now owned by the subscribers, was not fraudulent where the subscribers had at the time an equitable interest in the locations by reason of contract made by one of them in his own name as trustee for the corporation for their purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 30*)—FRAUDULENT STATEMENTS IN ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—EFFECT.

A corporation was not injured by a false statement in the articles of incorporation, reciting that the entire amount of the stock had been subscribed, and would be paid by the subscribers deeding to the corporation mining locations, where the subscribers subsequently acquired the locations, and conveyed the same to the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 30*)—ORGANIZATION—AGREEMENT OF PROMOTERS—PERFORMANCE.

The promoters of a corporation orally agreed to subscribe for all the stock, and to pay for it by securing and conveying to the corporation property of a third person. One of the promoters contracted in his name as trustee for the purchase of the property, and it was conveyed to the corporation. Every person interested in the corporation assented to the plan, but the board of directors of the corporation failed to formally accept the conveyance of the property. Held, that the parol agreement was performed, and any subsequent misrepresentation of the promoters in a sale of stock did not wrong the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

8. CORPORATIONS (§ 320*)—WRONGS TO CORPORATION.

The misconduct of officers of a corporation in falsely representing that they were selling treasury stock does not work a wrong to the corporation, but the injury results only to the individuals who purchase on the faith of the misrepresentation, so that a stockholder cannot sue on behalf of the corporation for such injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

9. CORPORATIONS (§ 320*)—WRONGS TO CORPORATION.

False statements made by an officer of a corporation to disaffected stockholders that he believed that there was about $11,000 in the treasury of the company did not injure the corporation, and a stockholder could not sue on behalf of the corporation therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by W. D. Turner against H. H. Markham and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant H. H. Markham and another appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Wright, Bell & Ward, Benjamin Page and Walter Trask, for appellants. Porter, Sutton & Cruickshank and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff, a stockholder of the American Boy Gold Mining Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Arizona, for and on behalf of the corporation, against the defendants Markham, president and general manager, and Coffin, secretary, to recover moneys alleged to have been misappropriated, and the value of stock of the corporation alleged to have been wrongfully issued to and taken by the defendants. Judgment was given against the defendants for $116,842.81 for moneys found to have been misappropriated and for the value of stock of the corporation wrongfully taken by the defendants. From this judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

The following facts are either found by the court or stand uncontradicted on the evidence: In 1889 the defendants Markham and Coffin, together with D. W. Field, F. S. Daggett, and G. D. Patten, were stockholders and the controlling directors of the American Girl Gold Mining Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Arizona, owning mining claims in San Diego county, Cal. The American Girl Gold Mining Company was working and developing its claims, and it was believed by its directors that these claims were of great value. Adjacent to the claims of the Girl Company were other unpatented claims held by Kendrick and Strickland. It was believed by the directors of the Girl Company that their pay vein or lode continued into the Kendrick and Strickland claims. It was believed, also, that the development work upon the Girl claims would prove the Kendrick and Strickland claims of great value. Inquiry being made, it was learned that these claims could be secured for $20,000. Whereupon Markham, Coffin, Field, Daggett, and Patten made and entered into an oral agreement, the terms of which are as follows: A corporation was to be organized by these five associates under the laws of Arizona, to be known as the American Boy Gold Mining Company, with an authorized capital stock of $300,000, divided into 6,000 shares of the par value of $50 each. The entire capital stock was to be subscribed for by the five associates, who were to pay for it by securing and conveying to the corporation the Kendrick and Strickland claims. The allotment of the 6,000 shares was to be as follows: To each of the five associates 800 shares; to one Thomas Johnson, the superintendent of the Girl Company, 400 shares for his services in aiding to secure the Kendrick and Strickland claims at a reduced figure; and 100 shares for which Johnson was to pay at the rate of $10 per share. The remaining 1,500 shares were to be issued to and held by defendant Markham as trustee for the associates. It was further agreed that each of the five was to guarantee and pay to Markham as trustee the sum of $8,000. This money was to be a fund in the hands of Markham, to be used by him in the purchase and for the development of the claims which the Boy Company was thus to acquire. Pending the payment by the individual associates of the $8,000 thus guaranteed, their stock, saving sufficient to enable them to qualify as directors, was to be issued to Markham as trustee. The Girl Company being a "going" mine, with water, power, and machinery, the development of its vein in the direction of the Kendrick and Strickland claims would tend to prove the latter's value, and so it was agreed that Markham in his discretion might expend the money either upon the Boy claims or upon the Girl claims. Coffin was authorized to obtain an option for the purchase for $20,000 of the Kendrick and Strickland claims, which were to be conveyed to the defendant corporation upon its organization. It was understood that portions of the stock should be sold to the public and the proceeds of such sales used in paying for the Kendrick and Strickland claims and in developing the property.

Following this agreement, upon June 21, 1899, a written agreement was entered into between Kendrick and Strickland on the one side, and Coffin, designated in the agreement as "trustee for the American Boy Gold Mining Company," wherein Kendrick and Strickland agreed to sell their claims to Coffin, Coffin agreeing to pay them $20,000, $5,000 to be paid on or before 60 days from June 20, 1899, and $15,000 on or before six months from June 20, 1899. The agreement provided that, upon the organization of the corporation and the payment of $5,000, Kendrick and Strickland would execute a deed of the claims and place it in escrow to be delivered to Coffin upon final payment by him of the $15,000. Articles of incorporation under the laws of Arizona were then prepared, and about the time of their execution a subscription agreement was executed as follows:

"We, the undersigned, do hereby subscribe for the amount of stock of the American Boy Gold Mining Company set opposite our respective names, and we further agree to pay for same by transferring to said corporation certain mines and mining claims, and other properties, money, or services, as may be received by the corporation as payment in full upon said stock.

| Name.                | Amount.        |
|----------------------|----------------|
| F. S. Daggett .....  | 20 shares.     |
| D. W. Field .....    | 20 shares.     |
| G. D. Patten .....   | 20 shares.     |
| Thomas Johnson ..... | 500 shares.    |
| Geo. D. Coffin ..... | 1,000 shares.  |
| H. H. Markham .....  | 1,500 shares.  |
| H. H. Markham .....  | 2,940 shares." |

In explanation of this subscription, it may be added to what has already been said that Coffin and Markham were to handle and dispose of the stock. The 1,500 shares subscribed by Markham was the trustee stock above mentioned. The 2,940 shares, as well as the excess of 200 shares, subscribed by Coffin over and above his 800 share allotment, or, in other words, the 3,140 shares apportioned, 2,940 to Markham and 200 to Coffin, represented, first, Markham's 800 shares, and, next, the 780 shares of the 800 shares actually subscribed for by Daggett, Field, and Patten, but to be held by Coffin and Markham, or sold by them, to make good Daggett, Field, and Patten's guaranty of $8,000 each.

The articles of incorporation were executed by Markham, Daggett, Patten, Field, and Johnson. Coffin, while not appearing as an incorporator, is an affirmative and uncontradicted witness to the effect that he knew of and took part in all of these agreements and transactions. The laws of Arizona required that the articles of incorporation should show "the amount of capital stock authorized and the time when and the conditions upon which it is to be paid in." The articles of incorporation of the American Boy Gold Mining Company declare as follows: "Art. 3. The amount of the capital stock authorized by the corporation shall be the sum of $300,000, divided into 6,000 shares of the par value of fifty ($50) dollars each, and the time when and the conditions upon which it is to be paid in are as follows: The entire amount thereof has been subscribed and will be paid in full upon the filing of these articles with the county recorder of the said county of Yuma, by the subscribers deeding to the corporation certain mines, mining locations and other property now owned by the subscribers in the state of California." On July 8, 1899, the corporation having been formed, a meeting of the stockholders was held in the city of Yuma, the principal place for the meeting of stockholders as named in the articles. At that meeting all of the stock of the corporation was represented in accordance with the terms of the subscription agreement. All of the stockholders were present by proxy, saving Johnson, who was present in person. Markham, Daggett, Field, Patten, and Johnson were elected directors, and by-laws were adopted, which, amongst other things, designated Pasadena, Cal., as the place for holding meetings of the directors. No further business appears to have been transacted. The meeting adjourned, and no other meeting of stockholders has ever been held. On July 17, 1899, a meeting of the directors was held in Pasadena, where officers of the corporation were elected as follows: Markham, president and general manager; Johnson, vice president; Coffin, secretary; Daggett, treasurer. No other business was transacted at this meeting, and no other directors' meeting has been held. Thereafter Markham, as president and general manager, and Coffin as secretary, assumed entire management and control of the corporation property. On July 11 or 12, 1899, $5,000 having been paid to them by Coffin, Kendrick and Strickland signed and acknowledged a deed of their mining claims to the American Boy Gold Mining Company, and deposited it in escrow in accordance with their agreement. On December 13, 1899, on payment of the balance of $15,000, the depository delivered the deed. Sales of stock were made to the public. Taking up these sales for the moment, upon the theory of the defendants that the associates became the owners of the stock under their guarantees to pay to the trustees the sum of $8,000 each, as to Coffin's allotment of 800 shares it is shown that he sold 699 shares for the total net price of $12,121.85, all of which money was delivered to Markham. Of the 101 shares remaining a certificate for 100 shares was taken by Coffin, and the remaining 1 share stands without certificate issued. Of Daggett's 800 shares, 790 were sold, producing $8,012.50, delivered to Markham, leaving a residue of 10 shares for which no certificate has been issued. Of Field's 800 shares 100 were sold, producing $2,000, and Field personally paid $6,000 additional to Markham. Patten's 800 shares were issued to him in two certificates of 655 and 145 shares respectively, Patten paying to Markham $8,000 therefor. Of Markham's 800 shares, 575 were sold, producing $7,450, leaving 225 shares for which no certificate was issued. Of Johnson's 500 shares, certificates for 400 were issued, and Johnson paid the sum of $1,000, which, under the parol agreement, was all that he was called upon to pay. Of the 1,500 shares, trustee stock, or joint-allotment stock, to be held by Markham for the common benefit of the associates, it is unnecessary to say more than that some of it was sold and the proceeds received by Markham. The total amount of money thus received by Markham was $52,654.35. This money was kept by Markham personally, and used by him in accordance with the understanding of the associates under their parol agreement. Thus $20,000 was paid to Kendrick and Strickland for their claims, $9,476.49 for the legitimate expenses of the corporation and for work on the claims, while the remaining sum of $23,177.86 was expended upon the properties of the American Girl Gold Mining Company and for the benefit of that corporation. Two thousand eight hundred and eighty shares of the stock are found to have been appropriated by Markham and Coffin and issued by them to various parties without consideration, and without authorization from the corporation, and they are charged with the reasonable market value of that stock at the rate of $20 per share, or $57,600. These sums of $23,177.86 and $57,600, the value of stock with interest, make the judgment of $116,842.81 awarded against Markham and Coffin for the benefit of the defendant corporation.

The facts above set forth outline the conflicting views or theories of appellants and respondents upon this appeal. By respondents it is insisted (and such is the effect of the findings of the trial court) that the oral agreement was not consummated, but was abandoned; that, therefore, all of the stock of the corporation was and continued to be its own treasury stock, saving such portions of it as were properly sold; that the mining claims of Kendrick and Strickland were bought with moneys derived from the sale of the treasury stock; that all of the stock of the corporation taken or caused to be issued by Markham and Coffin, excepting such as was sold to "outside" stockholders at full market value (found by the court to be $20 per share), was misappropriated stock, for the value of which, at $20 a share, Markham and Coffin were accountable to the corporation. Upon the other hand, the contention of the appellants is that the oral agreement of the associates was legal and was fully effectuated; that by its effectuation the associates became, in equity, the owners of all the capital stock of the corporation, and that in their subsequent dealings and transactions with this stock and with the moneys derived from the sale thereof the corporation, for whose benefit this action is maintained, and for whose benefit only it can be maintained, has suffered no wrong either at law or in equity. In terms appellants' views are presented under attacks upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, and to a consideration of this question of all controlling importance we are now brought.

At the threshold of this inquiry, however, it is proper to pause to point out what is the exact nature of the action before us. In its essence it is an action brought by the corporation itself to recover redress for some legal wrong which the corporation itself has suffered. To prevent a failure of justice, as where the governing board of directors or trustees of the corporation refuses to prosecute such an action, the law permits a stockholder to begin and maintain it on behalf of the corporation. But the fact that a stockholder is the nominal plaintiff in such an action, whether he prosecutes it as an individual stockholder or as a representative of a class of disaffected stockholders, does not in any manner or to the slightest extent enlarge the rights and remedies of the action. The action must still be founded upon some wrong which the corporation, as a corporation, has suffered, and for which, if itself were plaintiff, it could secure legal or equitable redress. Therefore, if the evidence shall establish that the corporation itself has suffered no wrong, cognizable either at law or in equity, it will matter not how just and how grievous may be the complaint of the individual stockholder, nor how complete may be the proof of his personal loss, damage, or injury. In this action on behalf of the corporation no recovery can be had, and the stockholder will be compelled to proceed by his individual action to obtain a personal recovery. 3 Pomeroy's Equity Jur. (3d Ed.) p. 2123 et seq.; Cook, Stock and Stockholders, § 692; Davenport v. Dows, 18 Wall. 626, 21 L. Ed. 938; In re Ambrose, etc., L. R. 14 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 390; Langdon v. Fogg (C. C.) 18 Fed. 5; Stewart v. St. Louis R. R. Co. (C. C.) 41 Fed. 736; Foster v. Seymour (C. C.) 23 Fed. 65. No conflict arises, or indeed could arise, over so plain a proposition, and it may seem superfluous thus to emphasize it. But it is here emphasized, first, because it is all important and to be continually borne in mind in considering the evidence; and, second, because of the conviction which an examination of that evidence forces upon us that, by oversight, the learned judge of the trial court failed to carry this distinction throughout the case, and erroneously confounded the wrongs and equities of the individual stockholders with the wrongs and equities of the corporation.

Stripped to its essentials, what, then, was the condition at the time of the organization of the defendant corporation? It was this: There stood a corporation, owning no property, whose stock was therefore absolutely valueless. It was perfectly legal and proper for all the parties in interest in such a corporation to do as here they agreed to do—sell all or any part of the stock of the corporation in return for mining claims, or for anything else of value. The stock could acquire a value only by the corporation acquiring property, and, if it chose to issue its 6,000 shares of stock for property of the value of five or ten or twenty thousand dollars, it did what it had a perfect right to do, and committed no wrong. If it issued its stock in exchange for property worth $20,000, the logical result would be that each of the 6,000 shares would be worth $3.33, and, if in that condition of its affairs its stock was sold for more than $3.33 a share, the enhanced price would be a "made" value, based upon the representations of the sellers and the anticipations of the buyers. Not only is a transaction such as that contemplated in the oral agreement of the associates good in law, but it is one of common, indeed almost of daily, occurrence in the formation of corporations. Chater v. Sugar Refining Co., 19 Cal. 219; Smith v. Ferries & C. H. Ry. Co. (Cal.) 51 Pac. 710; Kellerman v. Maier, 116 Cal. 416, 48 Pac. 377; Scadden Flat G. M. Co. v. Scadden, 121 Cal. 33, 53 Pac. 440; Garretson v. Crude Oil Co., 146 Cal. 184, 79 Pac. 838; Morawetz on Corp. § 267; Cook, Stock and Stockholders, § 38.

Since the agreement which the associates and incorporators proposed to carry out was not illegal, and since the court found that the agreement was entered into, the court must have concluded either that the agreement was abandoned, or that by reason of the fraud of the defendants (which fraud it must be borne in mind must have been a fraud perpetrated upon the corporation and not upon any individual stockholders thereof) they are estopped from asserting that it was effectuated. The findings of the court are not specific upon the question. It is found, for example, that the stock of the defendant corporation was not sold by the subscribers, but was sold for the corporation. It is found that none of the stockholders, excepting Markham, Coffin, Johnson, Field, Patten, and Daggett, knew of the agreement. It is found that all of the moneys which came into the hands of the defendants were received by them as the proceeds of the sale of the stock of the corporation, and that none was received as contributions from either Markham or Coffin. It is found that defendants Markham and Coffin themselves, and by their agents, represented to persons to whom stock was offered for sale and who afterwards purchased it that it was the stock of the corporation, and that the money received from the purchasers of the stock was to be used by the defendant corporation in paying for and developing the mining claims purchased from Kendrick and Strickland, and that these representations were made for the purpose of inducing these persons to buy the stock; that none of the subscribers to the articles of incorporation or to the stock conveyed or transferred to the mining company any mines, mining locations, or other property; that all of the stock issued and appropriated by the defendants was the property of the mining company. All these, and other findings to like effect, mean, as has been said, either that the parol agreement was abandoned and not effectuated, or that, if effectuated, it was effectuated under such circumstances of fraud as forbid recognition of it at the instance of the defendants.

Was the agreement abandoned? Abandonment is governed by intent, and the intention to abandon must be established by declaration or by conduct. All of the associates were witnesses in this case, save Patten, who was dead, and all testified to their understanding and belief, not only that the parol agreement was not abandoned, but was fully effectuated. The circumstance that Coffin took his contract of sale for the Kendrick and Strickland claims in the name of himself as trustee for the corporation which had not even then been formed certainly was not evidence of abandonment, and the circumstance is explained by Coffin that he did this in furtherance of the agreement, and caused himself to be designated as trustee, so that, in the event of his death, there could be no question as to what disposition it was intended should be made of the properties. Article 3 of the articles of incorporation above quoted, it is said, is too indefinite in its description, and contains a false statement to the effect that the subscribers own certain mining claims. But the indefiniteness amounts to nothing in view of the fact that it is not at all in dispute but that the property, and the only property, contemplated by the article, which the corporation was to acquire or ever expected to acquire, was the Kendrick and Strickland claims which were conveyed to it. And that there was an overstatement of the fact in the declaration that the mining properties were "now owned" by the subscribers was not a circumstance of fraud, first, because there was a certain equitable interest or ownership which they had in the property by reason of the contract made with Coffin; and, second, because, so long as the particular property was conveyed to the corporation, the corporation was not injured in the statement that the incorporators were the then owners of it. So far as the corporation and its rights are concerned, the case then stood that its articles show an executory contract (Pinney v. San Nelson, 183 U. S. 144, 22 Sup. Ct. 52, 46 L. Ed. 125; San Joaquin L. & W. Co. v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 70, 35 Pac. 349), whereby the corporation agreed to issue its stock to certain named subscribers in consideration of their deeding to it the Kendrick and Strickland mining claims. And, as the corporation owned no property and its stock was therefore valueless, it could acquire a value only by an exchange of its stock for property, coupled with the energetic efforts of the subscribers to increase the value of the property which was thus acquired. Every person, then in interest in the corporation, every person who by any possibility could be considered an officer or stockholder, joined in and assented to this plan. At the stockholders' meeting all of the stock upon the books of the company is shown as issued stock held in private ownership. By this we do not mean to be understood that the shares were actually issued, torn from the stock book, and delivered to the owners, but the stock itself was declared to be held and owned in private ownership and was all so voted. Here clearly there was no abandonment, but rather positive evidence of a prosecution to completion of the oral agreement. The corporation might have been heard to insist that the issuance of its stock should follow the conveyance to it of the Kendrick and Strickland claims, but it did not so object. The Kendrick and Strickland claims in due course were conveyed to and accepted by it, and the transaction thus became completely closed, saving for the one omission upon the part of the board of directors to have formal recognition and acceptance of the transaction entered upon their minutes. But can it be doubted that this omission was the result of mere inadvertence, and that it would have been supplied since the same subscribers remained as directors during all the time, if attention had been directed to it? And by its absence was the corporation injured? For that, after all, is the single question that forever must present itself in this case. The corporation, in effect, had agreed in its articles of incorporation and in the subscription list to sell all of its stock for the Kendrick and Strickland claims. It gave up its stock, it received and accepted the claims. As to it, the transaction was complete, and, except for some fraud put upon it, it was not in a position to repudiate the transaction. Every officer of the corporation knew the terms under which the stock was given up and the property received. Every one assented to it, and we are unable to perceive how from any possible view point it can be said that by this transaction the corporation was injured or defrauded to the slightest extent. The findings themselves throw light upon the matter. Those findings, while declaring that the use of the $23,000 spent by Markham and Coffin in developing the Girl mine was improper, assert in the same sentence that Markham and Coffin "believed that they had the right so to do under the oral agreement set forth." So, in finding that 2,880 shares of the stock was misappropriated by Markham and Coffin and issued and taken by them with authority of the corporation, it still again finds that they "believed that they had the right so to do under the oral understanding set forth." They could not have believed that they had the right so to do, as the court finds, unless they also held the belief, not that the oral agreement was abandoned, but that it had been fully effectuated. If it was so effectuated, then the case of the respondents is at an end. That the transaction was consummated to the last detail, saving only for the absence of a formal resolution of ratification upon the books of the corporation, this evidence, as we have reviewed it, clearly establishes, and that the absence of a resolution of acceptance is not a ground for complaint or repudiation upon the part of the corporation which has accepted the claims is also we think quite plain.

If the transaction, then, as we have said, was thus carried through, the subsequent conduct and representation of the defendants, whatever they may have been, could not have wronged the corporation, and here we think that the learned trial judge misconceived the effect of the evidence touching the later conduct and transactions of these defendants. Thus the books of account of the corporation, it is found, were wrongfully and erroneously kept. Under the theory that all the moneys derived from the sale of the stock belonged to the corporation, they were certainly imperfectly and erroneously kept. But the testimony of the treasurer of the corporation, Daggett, is that the corporation never had a dollar of money, and that of Coffin, the secretary, by whom in fact the books were kept, goes to the effect that while, in terms, they were named as account books of the corporation, all the moneys were received by Markham under the agreement, and the expenditures made by him, and in most instances by his personal check, and the books which he (Coffin) kept, were but a convenient method of showing to the parties in interest the dispositions made of the fund. So, too, the finding against Markham of depositing the funds of the corporation to his private account and expending them without authority, though in the belief that he had the right so to do, are pertinent and grave, under the view that these moneys were the moneys of the corporation, but amount to nothing more than what Markham had the right to do, if the oral agreement was consummated. And, indeed, it may be proper here to say that the case presents no feature of the misappropriation of any of these moneys for the individual benefit of any of the associates. The expenditure of every dollar which Markham received is shown to have been for the positive benefit of the corporation, either directly upon the properties themselves, or indirectly, though no less substantially, upon the adjoining Girl claims, whose development it is conceded would prove the value of the Boy properties. It is found, as above adverted to, that Markham and Coffin represented to certain of the stockholders that they were selling corporation stock or treasury stock, and these representations, it is argued by respondent, show that the defendants were then engaged in committing gross, actual, and intentional fraud, or that they then considered that the stock which they were selling belonged to the corporation. It is said also in this connection that these representations so found to have been made work an estoppel against the defendants from here denying that the stock was in fact the stock of the corporation. Precisely here we think the error of the trial court crept in. There seems to have been a confounding of the injury which may thus have resulted to the individual stockholder who purchased upon the faith of the representation, with an injury to the corporation, as well as the raising of an estoppel by the declarations of a party to one person, not in favor of that person, but in favor of another to whom the declarations were not made, nor even knowledge of them to be conveyed. Thus, if A. upon the street sells to B. his own stock, under the representation to B. that it is treasury stock, the corporation is not injured, nor is A. estopped in an action by the corporation from asserting that the stock was his own. B., to whom the representations were made, may have suffered by them, may have his cause of action for redress, and may insist upon an estoppel against A., but that estoppel only runs for his benefit and to prevent A. from taking advantage of the wrong which he has perpetrated, not upon the corporation, but upon B. And so, whatever may have been the representations of Markham and Coffin as to the treasury stock, only those who purchased in reliance upon such representations can be heard to complain. The same is true of the declarations made by Markham to the disaffected stockholders after work had ceased and the mining claims appeared to be of no value. He said he would furnish them a statement, and believed there was about $11,000 in the treasury of the company. These declarations did not injure the corporation, and the law preferring an interpretation of conduct that makes for fair dealing, rather than for fraud, they are certainly open to the explanation that what Markham in fact meant was that he had employed all of this money, as in fact he had, for the benefit of the corporation, and not for the individual benefit of himself or of any other person, and that he believed there was about $11,000 unexpended.

The conclusion thus reached, that the principal findings are unsupported, and that the conduct of Markham and Coffin and their associates, so far as the corporation is concerned, was not facinorous, renders unnecessary, we think, a consideration of any of the other propositions advanced by appellants.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed and the cause remanded.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

10 Cal. App. 410

BERKELEY DEVELOPMENT CO. v. MARX. (Civ. 573.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 20, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 17, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 898*)—STREET IMPROVEMENT WARRANTS—REQUISITE.

Street Improvement Act (St. 1885, pp. 155-157, c. 153, §§ 10-12, and section 9 as amended by St. 1891, p. 205, c. 147, § 6), authorizing the issuance of assessment warrants to the contractor, his agents, or assigns, and recognizing the assignee of the contract as one succeeding to the rights of the contract, when liberally construed as required by St. 1889, p. 168, c. 151, § 8, and St. 1893, p. 96, c. 79, § 16, does not require that the name of the contractor shall appear in the warrant, and a warrant issued to an assignee of the contractor, which omits the name of the contractor, is not void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1883; Dec. Dig. § 898.*]

2. COVENANTS (§ 119*)—COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES—BREACH—EVIDENCE.

In an action by an assignee of a grantee for breach of a grantor's covenant against incumbrances, based on the existence of a lien of a street assessment, under Street Improvement Act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153, as amended by St. 1891, p. 196, c. 147), the warrant, assessment, diagram, and certificate of the city engineer, together with the affidavit of demand and non-payment made by section 12 of the act (St. 1885, p. 157, c. 153) prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment, are admissible to show a lien on the property in favor of the holder of the warrant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 218; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by the Berkeley Development Company against Jacob Marx. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Titus, Wright & Creed, for appellant. George D. Metcalf and George M. Shaw, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Louis Titus was the grantee named in a deed of grant, bargain, and sale made by the defendant, and this action is by the assignee of Titus for an alleged breach of the covenant against incumbrances implied in the grant deed. The incumbrance is alleged to consist of the lien of a street assessment, created through proceedings taken by the city of Oakland, pursuant to the provisions of the so-called Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153). By the complaint it appears that a part of the land conveyed to Titus was included within the assessment district defined by the resolution of intention. The assessment, warrant, diagram, and certificate were issued and recorded November 14, 1904. The deed of conveyance was executed November 30, 1904. In order to discharge the lien of the assessment Titus paid the amount thereof on December 30, 1904. The complaint also shows that E. B. & A. L. Stone Company was the contractor; that before the work was finished J. Y. Eccleston by mesne assignments became the holder of said contract, and to him on November 14, 1904, the superintendent of streets issued the assessment, and attached thereto was a warrant authorizing "J. Y. Eccleston, his agents or assigns," to demand and receive the several assessments therein set out. The vital question in this case is: Was the assessment void by reason of the omission of the contractor's name from the warrant?

Section 9 of the Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153, as amended by St. 1891, p. 205, c. 147, § 6) provides as follows: "To said assessment shall be attached a warrant, which shall be signed by the superintendent of streets and countersigned by the mayor of the city. The warrant shall be substantially in the following form: Form of Warrant. By virtue hereof, I (name of superintendent of streets) of the city of _____ county of _____ (or city and county of _____) and state of California, by virtue of the authority vested in me as said superintendent of streets, do authorize and empower (name of contractor), (his or their) agents or assigns, to demand and receive the several assessments upon the assessment and diagram

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

hereto attached, and this shall be (his or their) warrant for the same. * * *

The act itself recognizes the assignee of the contractor as one who succeeds to all the rights and privileges of the contract. St. 1885, pp. 155-157, c. 153, §§ 9-12. And, liberally construing the act—as we are required to do—according to its terms (section 8, St. 1889, p. 168, c. 151; section 53, St. 1893, p. 96, c. 79), we are convinced that it is not essential to the validity of the assessment that the name of the original contractor should appear in the warrant. The case of Palmer v. Burnham, 120 Cal. 364, 52 Pac. 664, is not authority to the contrary. There the Supreme Court of this state, at the first hearing of the case in bank, upheld the judgment of the trial court against the validity of the assessment upon several grounds, one of them being that the warrant, not having been issued in the name of the original contractor, was void. Upon a rehearing, however, that opinion was modified by omitting all that portion which held that the warrant was void because issued in the name of the assignee. The case as thus modified is reported in 120 Cal. 364, 52 Pac. 1080.

The question was again raised in Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 207, 62 Pac. 500. There John T. Long was the original contractor, and the warrant was issued in the name of the "Western Contracting & Construction Company, assignee of John T. Long, agents or assigns." There the court said: "The form of the warrant which is prescribed in the street improvement act in terms authorizes and empowers the contractor, his agents, or assigns to demand and receive the several assessments, and the act declares that the warrant shall be 'substantially' in this form. The right of the contractor to assign the contract prior to the completion of the work is recognized in many portions of the act, and has been recognized by this court. Anderson v. De Urioste, 96 Cal. 404, 31 Pac. 266. After he has ceased to have any interest in the contract, or in the assessment therefor, there would seem to be no reason for the issuance of the warrant in his name, especially since the statute does not specially require it. Sections 9 and 10 of the act designate the assignee as the proper person to whom the warrant and assessment are to be delivered." It is to be noticed that Long nowhere in the warrant was designated as the contractor. In that case all that follows the name of the assignee is descriptio personæ. Litchfield v. Flint, 104 N. Y. 543, 11 N. E. 58. That part, so far as the validity of the warrant is concerned, might just as well be omitted. Hence the warrant here is just as much of a compliance with the act as was the warrant there.

The street improvement act provides that the assessment, diagram, and warrant, when recorded, shall create a lien on the property within the assessed district (section 9); that the contractor or his assignee may bring suit to recover the amount of the several assessments and interest; that in such suit the assessment, diagram, and warrant shall be prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's right to recover (section 12). The trial court in the case of Hadley v. Dague, after referring to these provisions of the act, said that as the record of the assessment, diagram, and warrant creates the lien, it follows that the lot owners will be protected by such record, and that they will be entitled to a release of the lien upon payment to the person who, on the face of the warrant, is entitled to receive the money. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 241, 249.

The omission of the name of the contractor from the warrant, and its issuance in the name of an assignee, does not in any way, it appears, affect the interest of the lot holders, and therefore we are of the opinion that the deviation in the warrant complained of was not a substantial departure from the terms of the act. In the case of Taylor v. Palmer, supra, cited by defendant, it was held that a warrant, issued in the name of the contractor, notwithstanding that it had been assigned prior to the issuance of the warrant, was not void. It did not hold that the warrant would be void if issued in the name of an assignee. On the other hand, the opinion goes far to sustain our position. There it is said: "The form of the warrant recognizes the assignable quality of these contracts, and the statute nowhere gives color to the suggestion of counsel that the recognition is confined to assignments made after the work has been performed. * * *

The property holder may safely pay to any one who, on the face of the warrant, is entitled to receive the money, especially in the absence of any notice to the contrary. * * *

If there is an assignee, and he chooses to allow his assignor to receive the warrant, and collect the money, thereby making him his agent for that purpose, and to take no steps to prevent it or to assert his claim in person, it is difficult to perceive why the property holder, who can under such circumstances safely make payment to the original contractor, should become so solicitous about the interests of any supposed assignee of his." If we do as the trial judge did in Hadley v. Dague, supra, and reversing the conditions present in the case of Palmer v. Taylor, supra, it can be said with equal force that, where there is an assignee and the street superintendent has ascertained the fact, and recognized his rights under the law by making the warrant payable to him, * * * and the property owner can safely make the payment to the assignee, who, on the face of the warrant, is entitled to receive the money, it is difficult to see why such property holder should become so solicitous about the imaginary interests of the contractor, or the observance, with extreme nicety, of a part of the form which was not intended to, and could not, affect his rights.

The trial court sustained an objection to plaintiff's offer in evidence of the warrant, assessment, diagram, and certificate of the city engineer, together with the affidavit of demand and nonpayment. The objection to this evidence was based on two grounds: First, that the assessment was void because of the form of the warrant; and, second, that the rule of evidence declared in section 12 of the act was available only in actions to foreclose the lien of the assessment. By what has been said on the main point in the case we have fully covered the first ground of objection, and only the second ground need be noticed. Section 12 of the street improvement act provides: "The said warrant, certificate and diagram, with the affidavit of demand and nonpayment, shall be held prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment and of the prior proceedings and acts of the superintendent of streets and city council upon which said warrant and assessment are based, and like evidence of the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action." In this case the plaintiff, as assignee of the grantee, Titus, was entitled to recover upon the covenant against incumbrances, provided the property was incumbered within the true intent and meaning of the deed to Titus. The evidence offered was admissible for the purpose of showing the regularity and correctness of the assessment, and that it created a lien upon the property in favor of the holder of the warrant within the meaning of the language of the section, and thus created an incumbrance which justified Titus in the payment made by him, and so formed the basis of plaintiff's action to recover in this case. Titus was entitled to the land free from incumbrances, as implied in the grant deed. If the evidence was such that it would make a prima facie case to foreclose the lien of the street assessment, it was admissible, for the purposes of this case, to show that there was an incumbrance upon the land conveyed to Titus.

No other point made need be discussed.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

---

(155 Cal. 535)

PEOPLE v. LE DOUX. (Cr. 1,403.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1909.
On Rehearing, June 24, 1909.)

1. JURY (§ 70*)—SUMMONING SPECIAL VENIREMAN—DISQUALIFICATION OF SHERIFF.

An unqualified opinion as to defendant's guilt, founded on an investigation of facts, disqualifies a sheriff from summoning special veniremen, and is ground for a challenge to the panel, under Pen. Code, § 1064, on account of bias of the officer, though he testifies that he acted fairly and impartially.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 327; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

2. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 85*)—POWERS—DISQUALIFICATION TO ACT.

The disqualification of a deputy sheriff does not disqualify the principal, but the deputy cannot act where his principal is disqualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Dec. Dig. § 85.*]

3. JURY (§ 70*)—SPECIAL VENIRE—DISQUALIFICATION OF SHERIFF.

A deputy cannot summon special veniremen, when his principal is disqualified by reason of an opinion as to the guilt of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 395*)—EVIDENCE—INCOMPETENCY—EVIDENCE WRONGFULLY OBTAINED.

Letters written by a woman accused of murdering her husband, showing her love for another, are admissible to show motive, though taken from her house in violation of the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 877; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

5. BIGAMY (§ 1*)—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS MARRIAGE.

Proof of a former marriage in fact is essential to sustain a charge of bigamy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bigamy, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-15; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

6. BIGAMY (§ 9*)—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS MARRIAGE.

A certified copy of an unacknowledged marriage certificate is not competent evidence of marriage in fact to prove a charge of bigamy unless accompanied by proof of the signature of the person making it, and of his authority to solemnize the marriage, although the certificate is recorded in the territory where the marriage ceremony was performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bigamy, Cent. Dig. §§ 34-53; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 442*)—EVIDENCE—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

Where the prosecution claimed that the accused poisoned her husband to escape the consequences of her bigamous relations with another, a marriage certificate, subscribed by the accused and the deceased, accompanied by proof of her signature, was admissible to prove motive, by showing her belief in the existence of a former legal marriage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1027; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

8. HOMICIDE (§ 166*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—MOTIVE.

Where the prosecution claimed that deceased was defendant's husband, and that she poisoned him because of her love for another, she was entitled to show that deceased lived on her earnings as a prostitute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 320-331; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 778*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY—PRESUMPTIONS OF INNOCENCE.

Where much evidence had been introduced to show defendant's motive for poisoning her husband, she was entitled to have the jury instructed with particularity as to the application of the presumption of innocence when conflicting presumptions arise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 778.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 778*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY—PRESUMPTIONS OF INNOCENCE.

An instruction that the presumption of innocence is the only presumption allowable in a criminal case, and that it is not overcome by any other presumption, but overcomes all other presumptions of whatsoever kind or nature, is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846-1857; Dec. Dig. § 778.*]

11. HOMICIDE (§ 233*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—MOTIVE.

Where the prosecution claimed that the accused poisoned her husband to escape the consequences of her bigamous relations with another, it was sufficient to prove that she believed that she had been legally married to the deceased, and that the marriage had not been annulled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 484*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EXAMINATION OF EXPERTS.

The best method for obtaining the expert opinion of a witness is through the medium of a hypothetical question; but, where the facts are simple, salient, and few, and the witness has heard the testimony, it is not necessarily error to ask him to state his opinion upon those facts without restating them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1072; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 484*)—EVIDENCE—EXAMINATION OF EXPERT.

A physician, upon stating that he had heard the testimony of certain witnesses, was asked: "Assuming each and all of the facts and circumstances testified to as true, what in your opinion was the cause of the death of the deceased," the victim of the homicide. Held error, because it was impossible to determine upon what facts the witness based his opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1072; Dec. Dig. § 484.*]

On Rehearing.

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1166½*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—OVERRULING CHALLENGE TO PANEL.

The rule that the Supreme Court will not review an alleged improper ruling on a challenge to an individual juror, when it appears that the jury was completed without the exhaustion by the accused of all peremptory challenges, is inapplicable to a challenge to the panel for bias of the summoning officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3115-3117; Dec. Dig. § 1166½.*]

15. JURY (§ 70*)—SUMMONING SPECIAL VENIRE—QUALIFICATION OF SUMMONING OFFICER.

The court may, on its own motion, determine whether the summoning officer is qualified to execute a special venire, before ordering its issuance to him, without a challenge for disqualification supported by affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Jury, Cent. Dig. § 327; Dec. Dig. § 70.*1*

Angellotti, Sloss, and Shaw, JJ., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Emma Le Doux was convicted of murder, and she appeals. Reversed.

Charles H. Fairall and Charles H. Crocker, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and C. W. Norton and Geo. F. McNoble, Dist. Attys., for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant was indicted for the murder of Albert N. McVicar. Upon trial she was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and the death penalty was imposed. From the judgment, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial, she prosecutes her appeal.

It is not contended that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment, but complaint is made of the ruling of the court upon challenge to the panel of jurors, of certain of its rulings in admitting and refusing to admit evidence, and of other rulings refusing to give instructions proffered by the defendant. To the better understanding of these questions the facts which the prosecution undertook to establish require brief narration.

Evidence was offered to show that the defendant married Albert N. McVicar, the deceased, in Bisbee, Ariz., in 1902. Thereafter she separated from him, and lived more or less continuously with her mother, near Jackson, Amador county, Cal. In August, 1905, she went with one Eugene Le Doux, who resided near her mother's place in Amador county, to Yolo county, where a marriage license was procured, and the two were married before a justice of the peace. After this marriage to Le Doux she returned with him to her mother's house, where they lived together as man and wife. Upon March 11, 1906, she met McVicar by appointment at Stockton, Cal. McVicar was employed as a timberman in a mine at Jamestown, was about 37 years of age, weighed about 185 pounds, was vigorous, and in good health. Defendant and McVicar took a room together at the California Hotel at Stockton, and remained there one night, McVicar registering, in the presence of the defendant, as "A. N. McVicar and wife." The next day the two went to a furniture store in Stockton, purchased household furniture, gave their residence as Jamestown, and ordered the furniture which they had purchased shipped to that place. That day, or the next day, they went to San Francisco, and from San Francisco the furniture company in Stockton received a telephone message from the defendant, in which she asked if the furniture had as yet been shipped to Jamestown, stating that, if it had been, it was to her regret, as she desired to make other shipping arrangements. On the 15th day of March the defendant and McVicar left San Francisco, and traveled directly to Jamestown, spending the night at one of the hotels, where again they were registered by McVicar as "A. N. McVicar and wife." On the following day McVicar resumed his work at the mine. The defendant informed the friends and acquaintances of McVicar that they had come to Jamestown to reside, and the two visited houses located near the mine with the apparent purpose of selecting a residence. The furniture which they purchased had arrived, and was at the depot. McVicar continued in his employment until Wednesday, the 21st day of March. At that time he ceased work, and drew from the company all the money due him, amounting to $163. The two left Jamestown together by train on the morning of March 23, 1906, which was Friday, and came directly through to Stockton, reaching the city just before the noon hour. They gave as a reason for their change of plans that defendant had represented to McVicar that her mother in Amador county would employ him upon better terms and wages than he was receiving; that he was to aid in farming operations, and in driving, or superintending the driving, of her mother's teams, which were engaged in hauling tailings from a mine. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the day of their arrival at Stockton they went again to the furniture store to make substitutions for furniture which they had purchased, stating that, because of a change in their plans, many of the articles which they had selected would be of no use to them. The proposed exchanges were agreed to by the furniture company, and McVicar, in the presence of the defendant, said that the articles were to be shipped to Amador county, and upon the suggestion of the defendant, gave the consignee's name as Eugene Le Doux, "my brother-in-law."

After transacting this business the two went again together to the California Hotel, again registered as "A. N. McVicar and wife," and were assigned to the room which they had previously occupied. They were seen going in and out of the building together upon the afternoon and evening of that day. McVicar appeared on the streets at half past 8 o'clock in the evening, and purchased two or three flasks of whisky at a neighboring saloon. The two were in their room at 9:15 o'clock, and the light was then burning as late as half past 12 o'clock. Early on the following morning, which was Saturday, the defendant was seen by several persons in the corridor of the hotel. At about 10 o'clock in the morning she went to a store about half a block from the hotel, and purchased a trunk, for which she paid, giving directions to have it sent to the California Hotel, and to room 97, which was the room she and McVicar had been occupying. Soon after this she went again to the furniture company, and discussed the matter of the exchange of the goods which had been purchased. She spent about an hour in the store looking over different articles, and purchased several. She left the store about half past 11. A few minutes thereafter she entered another store, where she purchased a rope, stating that she wanted to use it to rope a heavy trunk in which she intended to ship some dishes. This rope she carried away with her. From there she went to an express stand upon the street, and engaged an expressman, sending him to the depot to bring a suit case, and enjoining him to make haste as, upon his return, she would have a trunk for him to take to the 1 o'clock train. The trunk had been delivered at room 97, but, the door being locked, it was left standing in the hall. The expressman obtained the suit case, and in like manner, and for the same reason, left it in the hallway. At about 15 minutes past 12 the defendant appeared again at the stand of the expressman, and told him that she could not be ready to take the 1 o'clock train, asking him to come at 2 o'clock and get the trunk. She then went to a millinery store, purchased and paid $8 for a hat, next to a dry goods store, where she purchased and paid for articles of wearing apparel to the value of $15.75. In the store she stated that it was necessary for her to go to San Francisco, but that she would return by the first train in the morning, as her husband was coming down from Jamestown to meet her. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon she sent a telegram to one Joseph Healy in San Francisco, asking him to meet her upon the train's arrival. About the same time the expressman went to the California Hotel, and, assisted by another man, took the trunk which was in room 97, the trunk being packed, roped it with the rope which was lying in the room, carried it to his wagon, and delivered it at the Southern Pacific depot. The defendant had been at the depot before the expressman arrived, and had displayed considerable uneasiness over the fact that her baggage had not come, and undertook to telephone to the California Hotel concerning it. It was at this time that the expressman came in sight, and she abandoned her effort to telephone. The expressman delivered the trunk and the suit case in the baggage room of the depot, and went away.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The trunk was put upon one of the baggage trucks of the company, and remained there for about an hour, until the 4 o'clock train reached the station. It was put into the baggage car of that train. It was then discovered that the trunk bore no check or other identification mark. Upon this discovery the trunk was put back upon the truck, where it remained until 5 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon. It was then carried into the baggage room, where it remained until about half past 8 o'clock in the evening. In moving the trunk the suspicions of the baggageman were excited by a peculiar thumping noise, which came from it when it was turned over or on end. One of the baggagemen, who had been in that employment for 14 years, and had handled dead bodies every week, smelled at the lock of the trunk, and detected an odor which he believed to be that of a human body. The chief of police and the district attorney were sent for, and the trunk was opened. Inside of the trunk was found the body of Albert N. McVicar. The body was entirely dressed except for the absence of a coat and shoes. An autopsy was performed that evening, and from a visual inspection every vital organ appeared in a normal and healthy condition, and there were no external wounds of consequence, and no evidence of the use of any irritant or corrosive poison. Certain portions of the various organs of the body, including the bladder holding the urine, were removed for further examination. These parts were taken to San Francisco, and there analyzed by a chemist, whose examination revealed the presence of morphine in quantity more than sufficient to have caused death. The defendant took the 4 o'clock train from Stockton to San Francisco, and remained in San Francisco at a hotel, registered under the name of M. T. Williams. Joseph Healy met her in San Francisco. The next day she purchased a ticket for Stockton, and took the Santa Fé train, but proceeded no further than Antioch, in Contra Costa county. Healy accompanied her as far as Point Richmond. Leaving the train at Antioch, she went to the Arlington Hotel, and registered as Mrs. Jones. This was on Sunday. The following day she was placed under arrest. It was further shown in evidence that, while McVicar and defendant were in San Francisco, the defendant had received from Dr. Dillon a vial filled with half-grain morphine tablets, and that thus the defendant was in possession of the kind of poison which caused McVicar's death. It was also shown that the defendant had represented that McVicar was in very poor health, and had not long to live, while, in fact, he was in excellent health. Defendant after her arrest asserted that there was a third person in the room at the time of McVicar's death, a man by the name of Joe Miller; that Miller had gone to San Francisco with her on the train after the death, and came across the bay with her to San Francisco from Point Richmond, and then decided not to accompany her further. But it was shown by the witness Healy that it was he who had accompanied her. The watch and chain of the deceased was in the possession of the defendant at the time of her arrest. From these facts the prosecution argues that the defendant deliberately planned to trick and deceive McVicar, for whom manifestly she could have had no affection, into drawing his money, going with her to Stockton, purchasing and paying for furniture to be shipped to Eugene Le Doux, whom she represented to be her brother-in-law; that then, out of love for Le Doux, and to avoid exposure of her dual life and bigamous relationship with him, it became necessary, as a part of her plot, to kill McVicar as she did. The defense offered to prove that the defendant had been a common prostitute, and had been put in a house of prostitution by McVicar.

During the impanelment of the jury the court ordered a special venire to issue for 75 men. The order was directed to the sheriff of the county. Code Civ. Proc. § 226. Upon the return of the venire the defendant challenged the panel, under section 1064 of the Penal Code, on account of the bias and prejudice of the sheriff. Evidence was taken upon this, from which it was made clearly to appear that the sheriff had been engaged in gathering evidence for the people; had procured witnesses for the people; had talked with these witnesses; and had thus come to entertain an unqualified opinion that the defendant was guilty. True, the sheriff testified that, notwithstanding this opinion, he could try the case, "probably as well as any man that would sit upon the jury," and that he would be governed entirely by the law and the evidence. But this answer does not to the slightest extent avoid the effect of his previous declarations. So far as the challenge for bias is concerned, the sheriff in such a case is put by the law precisely in the position of a trial juror (Pen. Code, § 1064), and a state of mind which would disqualify a juror equally disqualifies the sheriff. The possession of such an opinion absolutely disqualifies, saving only where the opinion is founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety (Pen. Code, § 1076), and where, notwithstanding such an opinion so founded, it is made to appear to the court that the person can and will act impartially and fairly upon the matter to be submitted to him. But where the opinion is founded, as is here shown to be founded, not upon public rumor, or statements in the public journals, or common notoriety, but upon a direct investigation of the facts, the disqualification is absolute, and the testimony of the juror or sheriff that, notwithstanding such opinion, he could and would act fairly and impartially is utterly without substance or weight. People v. Landis, 139 Cal. 429, 73 Pac. 153; People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99.

Section 1064 of the Penal Code declares that, when the panel is formed from persons whose names are not drawn as jurors, a challenge may be taken to the panel on account of any bias of the officer who summoned them which would be good ground for challenge to a juror. The sheriff to whom the order was issued, having clearly been shown to be disqualified, the question is presented, does the disqualification of the sheriff extend to his deputy? or, phrasing it differently, is a deputy qualified to act where his principal is disqualified? It is not disputed, and indeed has been decided, that the deputy who actually summons the veniremen under section 1064 may be disqualified, and the panel successfully challenged for such disqualification under the section above cited. People v. Ryan, 108 Cal. 583, 41 Pac. 451. Moreover, it is unquestioned that a disqualification of the deputy does not disqualify the principal. But, within the range of an extended investigation, we have discovered no authority, and none has been pointed out to us by the respondent, which holds that the disqualification of the principal does not disqualify his deputies. Yet this is the position which the respondent takes, and which manifestly, from the necessity of the case, it is obliged to take. The contention is that the disqualification under section 1064 is a personal disqualification, going only to, and extending no further than, the person actually summoning the jurymen. But to this position there are insuperable objections. A deputy is merely the agent of his principal. He acts solely by virtue of the power conferred upon his principal; and, when the power of the principal is withdrawn, the legal ability of the deputy to act ceases absolutely. The law recognizes deputies only through their principals, and their acts must be done in the name of their principals. Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449; Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 402. The law has never recognized the existence of the power of the deputy to act in a given matter, where that same power has been withdrawn or withheld from the principal. The reasons for this are twofold. First, as a matter of simple logic, since a deputy is but an agent, acting solely and exclusively within the power conferred upon the principal, if upon the principal has not been conferred a given power, the attempted act of the deputy is wholly without the principal's authority, and therefore absolutely void; second in case of the disqualification of the principal, as by interest, whatever may be the nature of that interest, it would be manifestly unjust to the adverse party if, while the law forbade the sheriff to execute a process for this reason, he could direct the execution by a deputy owing his position and its emoluments to his favor. It is too plain to require discussion that in such case the possibility of wrong or evil, sought by the law to be avoided in the disqualification of the principal, would be but perpetuated, if his deputies were allowed to act. So it will be found that in no case where a principal is disqualified does the law make the slightest recognition of the deputies, or ever attempt to empower them to act. Says Blackstone (3 Black. Comm. 355): "If the sheriff be not an indifferent person, as if he be a party in the suit, or be related by either blood or affinity to either of the parties, he is not then to be trusted to return the jury, but the venire shall be directed to the coroners, who in this, as in many other instances, are the substitutes of the sheriff, to execute process when he is deemed an improper person." Sections 4191 and 4192 of the Political Code are but enactments of this common-law rule, and, as declared in People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 54 Pac. 830, are to be construed with section 226, Code Civ. Proc., from which authority to direct the special venire in this case is drawn.

An examination of the authorities will disclose that they are in unison upon the proposition. In Minott v. Vineyard, 11 Iowa, 90, the question arose, and the court declared as follows: "By section 411, Code 1851, the sheriff is made responsible for the acts of his deputy, and when the principal is disqualified on account of interest, prejudice, partiality, consanguinity, or from being a party to the record, his deputy is also." In May v. Walters, 2 McCord (S. C.) 470, the sheriff was disqualified. It was held that the writ should have been served by the coroner, and not by the sheriff's deputy. In Wood v. Carpenter, 9 N. H. 153, a writ of replevin was directed to the sheriff or his deputy. The writ was served and returned in the name of the principal by a deputy. The sheriff was the person sued. It was held that the disqualification of the principal disqualified the deputy, and that the writ should have been directed to, and served by, the coroner. In Hillyer v. Pearson, 118 Ga. 815, 45 S. E. 701, the sheriff was a party to the suit. It was declared that, where such a disqualification arises, it is mandatory that process shall be directed, not to the sheriff or his deputies, but to the coroner, and that, where process was directed to the sheriff and his deputies, service of the process was void, even though made by one of the sheriff's deputies. In Knott v. Jarboe, 58 Ky. 506, where the sheriff was a party to the suit, though not personally interested in it, and served process, the Supreme Court said the act of a sheriff in executing process in cases in which he is a party or is interested is so manifestly inconsistent with public policy, and with the impartial administration of justice, that its performance has always been prohibited, and the court proceeds: "The sheriff is never allowed to execute his own process; and, so careful is the law in guarding the interest of the defendant in such a case, not even the deputy is permitted to execute the process, but it must go to the coroner, an officer not supposed to be under the influence of the sheriff. A deputy, it is true, is appointed by the principal sheriff, and regularly acts in the name of the principal, and the principal is liable for any improper conduct of the deputy in the exercise of the office. But the recourse which may be had to the principal may not be adequate to guard the interest of the defendants against the wily acts of an interested deputy." In McLeod v. Harper, 43 Miss. 42, it is declared that a sheriff is incompetent to serve a process in a suit to which he is a party, or in which he is interested, and process addressed to such interested officer will be quashed on timely application to the court. Thus it is seen that all of the authorities agree upon the principle, and announce the rule that, where the principal is disqualified, his deputy is likewise disqualified and process served under these circumstances is voidable. Therefore the challenge to the panel should have been allowed.

It has been said that the motive which the people ascribed for the crime, and in proof of which they introduced evidence, was twofold: First, because of defendant's love for Le Doux, with whom the people contend she had contracted a bigamous marriage; and, second, to escape the legal consequences of this bigamous relationship, when it was apparent that that relationship could no longer be concealed from McVicar. As evidence under the first ground, the people introduced certain loving and endearing letters, written by defendant to Le Doux. These letters were obtained by a deputy sheriff of Amador county, acting under instructions of the sheriff of San Joaquin county, but without warrant or authority. It appears that this deputy sheriff went to the house where defendant had resided, entered upon the premises, and took such letters and papers as he found, without the authority of a search warrant, or any other authority, though without the objection of any person present. The only person present, who in any sense could have represented the family, was a minor brother of defendant. It is contended, and indeed it may not be disputed, that such search and seizure was absolutely unwarranted in law, though had under color of authority of an officer of the law. It was in clear violation of the constitutional guaranty, state and federal, of the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures. Const. Cal. art. 1, § 19; Const. U. S. Amend. art. 4. But the question here presented is whether these documents, thus improperly obtained under the circumstances indicated, were for that reason not entitled to be received. In Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746, there came under the court's review the provisions of a customs revenue law, which authorized a court of the United States, in revenue cases, on motion of the government attorney, to require the defendant or claimant to produce in court his private books, invoices, and papers, or else the allegations of the attorney were to be taken as confessed. It was held that the law does not require actual entry upon the premises, and search for, and seizure of, papers, to constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the meaning of the fourth amendment. A compulsory production of a party's private books and papers, to be used against himself or his property in a criminal or penal proceeding, or for a forfeiture, is within the spirit and meaning of the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that in a criminal case a defendant shall not be compelled to be a witness against himself. It is further said that the seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evidence against him is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself; and, in a prosecution for a crime, penalty, or forfeiture, is equally within the inhibition of the fifth amendment. In the later case of Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575, the question arose as to the admissibility in evidence of papers and documents illegally taken from the possession of the defendant. It was there decided that the court considers only the competency of the evidence, and not the method by which it was obtained. The rule laid down in 1 Greenleaf, § 254, is quoted as the correct rule. It is to the following effect: "It may be mentioned in this place that, though papers and other subjects of evidence may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered, or otherwise unlawfully obtained, this is no valid objection to their admissibility, if they are pertinent to the issue. The court will not take notice of how they were obtained, whether lawfully or unlawfully, nor will it form an issue to determine that question." In the Adams Case it was contended that the incriminatory evidence was illegally obtained, because the search warrant under which the officer acted was limited in character, but the Supreme Court held that the ground was untenable, saying: "Evidence which is pertinent to the issue is admissible, although it may have been procured in an irregular, or even in an illegal, manner." Boyd v. United States, supra, is reviewed and distinguished, and the decision in the Boyd Case, however general its language may be, is limited solely to the case where the defendant is compelled himself to give evidence against himself, or where, if he did not produce the demanded evidence, it was to be a confession of the truth of the matters charged. It thus appears that whatever wrong may be perpetrated by the invasion of one's constitutional rights against unreasonable search and seizure, the redress for that wrong is not in the exclusion of pertinent evidence which may be obtained by the seizure. The courts, upon the mere question of admitting or rejecting evidence, will not take cognizance of the mode of its production, unless it be shown that the defendant has been compelled himself to give or produce it. So it is said by this court in People v. Alden, 113 Cal. 264, 45 Pac. 327, "nor does the competency of evidence in any way depend upon the means by which it is brought to the court, where it is offered in evidence." The letters were, therefore, properly admitted in evidence.

The evidence to establish the marriage between defendant and the deceased consisted of declarations by defendant to several people; introductions to many people of the defendant by McVicar as his wife; her acceptance of this role; a telegram from defendant signed by herself as Mrs. McVicar; the repeated registration in hotels by McVicar, in the presence of defendant, of her as his wife; the cohabitation of the two; and their reputations as husband and wife. The rule of Lord Mansfield, declared in Morris v. Miller, 4 Burr. 2057, making necessary proof of a marriage in fact, where the charge is bigamy or criminal conversation has been adopted and consistently adhered to in this state. Case v. Case, 17 Cal. 598; People v. Anderson, 26 Cal. 129; White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; People v. Beevers, 99 Cal. 289, 33 Pac. 844. Even the declarations or admissions of a defendant, together with proof of cohabitation and reputation, are not sufficient evidence to establish such a criminal charge, without some further proof of an actual marriage. People v. Beevers, supra. As tending to prove the marriage in fact, the court admitted in evidence the original of a marriage license, issued in the territory of Arizona, authorizing the marriage of the deceased and this defendant under the name of Emma T. Williams, and also the indorsement upon the same instrument of the certificate of Rev. H. W. Studley, to the effect that at Bisbee, Ariz., he, a minister of the gospel, did join "in the holy bonds of matrimony, according to the laws of this territory, A. N. McVicar of the county of Cochise, territory of Arizona, and Emma T. Williams, county of Cochise, territory of Arizona." The court also admitted in evidence a duly certificated and authenticated copy from the records of the county of this license and certificate. It is contended that these papers were improperly admitted, in that there was no independent proof, either of the facts contained in the declaration of the minister, no proof that Studley was an "ordained" minister, and thus authorized under the laws of the territory to join in marriage, and no authentication of the signature of Studley. And it is said, and truly said, that such a marriage certificate is but a private writing, that proof of its execution and truth of its contents should have been made, and that the mere fact that it was a miscellaneous record of the county of Cochise, Ariz., did not prove any of these matters, nor entitle it to admission in evidence without such proof; that the certificate of recordation did not render it admissible, but merely placed the foreign record on the same footing as a domestic, leaving its admissibility depending entirely upon the pertinent rules of evidence. Ordway v. Conroe, 4 Wis. 45; Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cranch, 408, 3 L. Ed. 386. Appellant's position in this respect is absolutely sound. Wherever it is necessary, as in a criminal charge of bigamy or criminal conversation, to prove a marriage in fact as distinguished from a marriage by inference and circumstance, often termed a "common-law marriage," it must be shown that the person who solemnized the marriage was one having authority so to do (26 Cyc. 358), and a paper purporting to be a marriage certificate, signed by one purporting to be authorized by the laws to solemnize a marriage, is not competent evidence of the marriage, unless accompanied by proof that the person making the certificate was in fact authorized to solemnize such marriage (State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 21; Faustre v. Commonwealth, 92 Ky. 34, 17 S. W. 189). A marriage certificate does not prove itself. Proof of the signature of the person by whom it purports to have been signed, and of his authority to perform the marriage ceremony, is necessary. Hill v. Hill, 32 Pa. 511; Erwin v. English, 61 Conn. 502, 23 Atl. 753; State v. Hodskins, 19 Me. 155, 36 Am. Dec. 742; State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 480; People v. Crawford, 62 Hun, 160, 16 N. Y. Supp. 575; Finlay v. Finlay, 31 L. J. P. & M. 149; People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250, 68 N. W. 157; Ellis v. Ellis, 11 Mass. 92. The record of such an unacknowledged private writing as this is not made evidence of the truth of the recitals contained in it. Brown v. Griffith, 70 Cal. 15, 11 Pac. 500; Grant v. Oliver, 91 Cal. 163, 27 Pac. 596, 861; McCarthy v. Hart, 8 L. C. Rep. 369; Bowman v. Little, 101 Md. 273, 61 Atl. 223, 657, 1084; State v. Thompson, 31 Utah, 228, 87 Pac. 709.

Where a private writing is acknowledged, the certificate thereof becomes prima facie evidence of the execution (Code Civ. Proc. § 1948), but these writings were not acknowledged. Where not acknowledged, a writing must be proved in one of three ways: By any one who saw the writing executed, or by evidence of the genuineness of the handwriting of the maker, or by a subscribing witness. Code Civ. Proc. § 1940. Such execution must be shown before it is entitled to admission. Sinclair v. Wood, 3 Cal. 98. In an effort, then, to establish a marriage in fact in proof of a criminal charge of bigamy, the evidence here offered, without supporting proof of the facts and the execution, would be clearly inadmissible. But it is to be remembered that the criminal charge in this case was not bigamy. The evidence was offered as tending to establish a motive, and not to convict the defendant of the crime of bigamy. In establishing the motive, it was not compulsory upon the people to prove that the relation was in fact bigamous. It was sufficient to prove that the defendant believed that it was bigamous, or, in other words, believed that she was in law the wife of McVicar at the time when she subsequently married Le Doux, and at the time when, as alleged, she took McVicar's life. The motive for the crime would be as strong in the one case as in the other. Her conduct would be governed by her belief of the fact, and not by the existence of the fact. To prove her guilty of bigamy the marriage in fact would have to be shown, as otherwise there could be no second illegal marriage, and consequently no crime. But a motive for the homicide is satisfactorily established by showing the defendant's belief in the existence of a former legal marriage, no corpus delicti. The truth of the matter upon which that belief is founded becomes an inconsequential matter. Now, in admitting the license and certificate, it was established that the affidavit required by the laws of Arizona for the procurement of a marriage license was made by this defendant, and that the signature to this affidavit was her own. It is thus shown that she contemplated contracting a marriage with McVicar in Arizona, and took steps to the end that such marriage might be legally consummated. Additionally it was shown that to the marriage certificate signed by the minister, Studley, were subscribed "A. N. McVicar, groom, Emma T. Williams, bride," and the signature "Emma T. Williams" was proved to be that of the defendant. Here is furnished some evidence, so far as this defendant is concerned of the truth of the declarations contained in the certificate; and, whether or not this marriage to McVicar was in point of law legal, the evidence certainly went to establish that the defendant had contracted a marriage in fact which she believed to be legal, and we hold that, by virtue of the proved signature of the defendant to this certificate, it was admissible in evidence upon the question of her motive.

As has been stated, the theory of the prosecution was that the defendant killed the deceased because of the love she bore Le Doux, and by reason of the fact that McVicar was about to discover that her relations with Le Doux were bigamous. As tending to disprove this theory of motive, the defendant offered to show, and endeavored to show, that her relations with McVicar were and had been illicit since 1903, that she had been placed in a house of prostitution by McVicar, and that he lived off of her earnings as a common prostitute. Appellant contends that she was entitled to have this evidence go before a jury upon the question of motive; that upon this evidence could be founded a reasonable argument against the prosecution's theory; that it would tend to overthrow any inference of her love for Le Doux; that it was not probable that a man would place his wife in a house of prostitution, while he might be willing that a mere mistress should so live; that it would be evidence of her love and devotion to McVicar that she would so prostitute herself at his request, and give him the earnings of her shame; that it would tend to establish that her affections were centered rather upon McVicar than upon Le Doux. Clearly we think this evidence was admissible. Its weight, of course, was for the jury. Where marriage is asserted by one party and denied by the other, and where, as here, the motive of a crime is sought to be established before a jury, the whole conduct, life, and character of the parties as affecting this question is open to inquiry. Bell v. Clarke, 45 Misc. Rep. 272, 92 N. Y. Supp. 163.

Finally, upon the question of motive, the defendant asked certain instructions as follows: "The jury are further especially charged that the presumption of innocence is the only presumption allowable in a criminal case, and it is not overcome by any other presumption. There cannot be two presumptions standing together, one for the guilt, and the other for the innocence, of the accused. Consequently the presumption of knowledge, the presumption of the continuance of a fact, state, or condition shown once to exist, the presumption of the continuance of life or of marriage, are all overcome by the presumption of innocence. You are instructed that the presumption of innocence overcomes all other presumptions, of whatsoever kind or nature." "If you believe from the evidence that the defendant and Albert N. McVicar were married in September, 1902, at Bisbee, Ariz., and further believe that the defendant married Eugene Le Doux in August, 1905, at Woodland, Cal., then, in that event, the court instructs you that, before you can ascribe to the defendant, as a motive for committing the crime charged, a desire to avoid any question of a bigamous marriage, or any result therefrom, it must be fully and satisfactorily proved, beyond all reasonable doubt, that the marriage between Albert N. McVicar and the defendant had never been annulled, and that the defendant knew that it had not been." These instructions were refused. In support of the refusal it is not asserted that the matter of these instructions was covered by others actually given. It is contended that the court repeatedly instructed upon the presumption of innocence, and that this was sufficient. It was not. Since so much of the evidence had been directed to this question or motive, the defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed with particularity as to the application of the presumption of innocence where conflicting presumptions might be said to arise. The matter is discussed in Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 261, 43 Pac. 756, 31 L. R. A. 411, 52 Am. St. Rep. 180. Speaking now without specific reference to the instructions asked, we hold that the defendant was entitled, upon request, to proper instructions upon this subject-matter. As to the instructions actually propounded, the court was justified in its refusal to give them, for they go further than is warranted by the law. The instructions declare that the presumption of innocence is the only presumption allowable in a criminal case, that it is not overcome by any other presumption, but does overcome all other presumptions of whatsoever kind or nature. Such, however, is not the law. All presumptions are evidence. Conclusive presumptions (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1961, 1962) are not overcome by the presumption of innocence, nor are many disputable presumptions so overcome. Over certain disputable presumptions, though not over all, the presumption of innocence will prevail. Instances of disputable presumptions over which the presumption of innocence will prevail are given in Hunter v. Hunter, supra. But, on the other hand, it is a presumption that every person is sane. Insanity may be shown, and thus overcome the presumption. Yet, in the absence of evidence, the presumption of innocence would not prevail so as to justify a jury in presuming against sanity. Furthermore, the proposed instructions declare that the prosecution must fully and satisfactorily prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the marriage between McVicar and the defendant had never been annulled, and that the defendant knew it had not been. So far as motive is concerned, to which this evidence was introduced, it was sufficient for the prosecution to satisfy the jury that the defendant believed that a legal marriage between herself and McVicar existed, or, stating it conversely, and more nearly in the language of the proposed instruction, it was only necessary for the prosecution to establish that the defendant believed that she had been legally married to McVicar and that the marriage had not been annulled.

To certain physicians called as expert witnesses the prosecution addressed the preliminary question whether they had heard the testimony of certain other witnesses. Upon answering in the affirmative they were then asked the following question: "Now, doctor, assuming each and all of the facts and circumstances testified to by these gentlemen I have named as true, what in your opinion was the cause of the death of A. N. McVicar, the deceased person mentioned in this case?" The objection of the defendant to this question was overruled. It should have been sustained. The best way to obtain the opinion of an expert witness upon a matter which is the subject of expert evidence is through the medium of a hypothetical question. Unsatisfactory as that method unquestionably is, it is the least objectionable known to the law. To countenance the practice here adopted would but aggravate existing evils, and destroy whatever value may be attached to such evidence. It assumes that every fact which the witness has heard is in his mind, while some may have been forgotten. It allows the expert to assume that unstated evidence upon which he bases his opinion has been proved to his satisfaction, while, to the minds of the jurors, it may not have been proved at all. It permits the expert to base his opinion upon some undeclared fact, or set of facts, to which he may give great weight, yet which in the minds of the jurors may be entitled to little or no consideration whatever. It makes it impossible for the jury ever to determine upon precisely what facts the expert has based his opinion, and thus makes it forever impossible for them to say what weight should be accorded to that opinion. And in this view it matters not whether the evidence in the case be actually conflicting or not. The vice still remains, if it be said that the evidence is unconflicting, since it is for the jurors alone to say what weight shall be given to this, or that, or the other evidence tending to establish a given fact. And where the evidence is unconflicting, the jurors may hold that the evidence offered is insufficient to prove some particular fact. So it is said in People v. Akin, 66 Mich. 476, 33 N. W. 828, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512: "An expert can never be safely permitted to state that he has heard or read the testimony of a witness or witnesses, and then base his opinion upon such testimony, without stating the particular points of the evidence, the facts upon which he rests his conclusion. There is no reputable authority for any such method of examining an expert witness." In People v. McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250, 24 N. E. 465, 18 Am. St. Rep. 820, it is said: "We think it is not competent in any case to predicate a hypothetical question to an expert upon all of the evidence in the case, whether he has heard it all or not, upon the assumption that he then recollects it, for it would then be impossible for the jury to determine the facts upon which the witness based his opinion, and whether such facts were proved or not."

In thus pointing out what we conceive to be the best method for obtaining the expert opinion of a witness, we would not be understood as saying that every departure from that method involves error, necessitating the reversal of a case. Cases may arise where the facts upon which the opinion is sought are simple, salient, and few. If it be made to appear that the expert has heard the testimony by which those facts have been presented, it would not necessarily be held error that he was asked to state his opinion upon those facts, without a restatement of them. Howland v. Oakland, etc., Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 487, 47 Pac. 255. But the danger in a departure from the approved procedure is that, in the generality of cases, the facts themselves are in question, and disputes are numerous and complicated, and, under these circumstances, injury may be worked to a litigant by an adverse expert opinion so adduced.

We have thus discussed all of the matters which we deem necessary in contemplation of the new trial, which must be ordered; and, for the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur. There can be no doubt that the trial judge erred in disallowing the challenge to the panel of talesmen returned upon the open venire, and it cannot be held that the failure of the defendant to exercise all her peremptory challenges was a waiver of her exception, or a conclusive proof that the error was without prejudice, unless we were willing, which I am not, to lay down a rule of practice entirely new in this state, and supported by very meager authority elsewhere, and that in a capital case involving the life of a woman. Such a rule, moreover, is wholly unnecessary, since the existing statute affords ample means for preventing the trouble which has arisen in this case. This open venire was issued, as it is in all such cases, under section 227 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows: "When there are not competent jurors enough present to form a panel the court may direct the sheriff, or an elisor chosen by the court, to summon a sufficient number of persons having the qualifications of jurors to complete the panel, from the body of the county, or city and county, and not from the bystanders; and the sheriff or elisor shall summon the number so ordered accordingly and return the names to the court." The language of this section clearly implies that the judge must, in making the order, determine whether the service of the venire shall be made by the sheriff or by (the coroner) or an elisor. He must, in other words, provide in advance for its service by a competent officer, and the only way to do this is to examine the sheriff and his deputies, and the coroner, if necessary, to see that the writ is not issued to a person disqualified to act as a juror in the case. This may always be done in the presence of the defendant and his counsel in a criminal case; and I have no doubt that their waiver at that time of any objection to the sheriff or coroner, or the person named as elisor, by refusing or failing to challenge his competency when given the opportunity, would justify a denial of their challenge after the return of the venire. For it is not true, as contended by counsel, that the statute gives the parties an absolute right to challenge the panel at any time before a juror is sworn. It is true it cannot be taken after a juror is sworn; but it does not follow that it may not be waived, in a case like the present, by the refusal of the opportunity to object, when it is offered at the time when, according to the plain intent of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 227, supra), it is the duty of the court to determine whether the sheriff (or coroner) is competent to act, and, if not, to appoint a competent person as elisor.

On rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied. In the petition two matters are pressed upon the attention of the court which merit consideration.

1. It is argued, with much apparent earnestness, that because defendant had not exhausted all of her peremptory challenges at the time of her acceptance of the last juror, and the impanelment of the jury, she should not be listened to in the appellate court, where she urges the error of the trial judge in overruling her challenge to the panel because of the bias of the sheriff. No one versed in the law can question, or we think does seriously question, the grave error that was committed in overruling defendant's challenge to the panel, and in proceeding with the selection of the jury from such venire. But it is said that, as the authorities are abundant, and the rule well settled, to the effect that this court will not review the alleged improper ruling of the trial court upon a challenge interposed to an individual juror, if it shall be made to appear that the jury was completed without the exhaustion by the defendant of all peremptory challenges, so the same rule should be applied to a case such as this, where the challenge is to the whole panel; and, if it shall be made to appear, as here it does, that a jury was taken while defendant still had unused peremptory challenges in reserve, it should be held, as matter of law, that the error of the trial court is conclusively presumed to have been without injury to the defendant. Or, wording it differently, we are asked to say to defendant's counsel: "If you had arbitrarily exhausted your peremptory challenges, we would then, for the admittedly erroneous ruling of the trial court in denying your challenge to the panel, have granted your client a new trial. But because you did not thus exhaust your peremptory challenges, we will not consider your objection, and your client must go hang." Quite obviously the sole result which could ensue from this would be the execution of this woman, under a new ruling upon a question of law. And this ruling would serve only to hang the woman, since in every subsequent case, enlightened by the extraordinary view thus expressed, defendants would exhaust their peremptory challenges, and so bring the matter before this court under circumstances which, as has been said, it is conceded would cause a reversal of the case.

But the reason why this court refuses so to rule does not rest alone, nor even largely, upon the fact, grave though it be, that the ruling would be the death warrant of a woman who, if her lawyers could have seen into the workings of the mind of the appellate court, would easily and assuredly have prevented this result by exercising their peremptory challenges—the reason of this court's refusal is based upon the fact that there is no true, substantial similarity between the two classes of cases, and that therefore the application of the rule touching the challenge of an individual juror to the case of a challenge to a panel would be, not only without reason in law, but against the reason of the law. For where a venire has been regularly served by the proper officer, in contemplation of law a panel composed of qualified, dispassionate, fair-minded men is brought into court. If upon examination it shall prove that some one of those men is biased, the taint affects him alone. He may be disposed of by a peremptory challenge. The next juror or jurors called to the box are still presumed to be qualified men, legally selected. Therefore, if a defendant, while still having peremptory challenges in reserve, shall allow the jury to be completed, and then on appeal complain that the court refused to excuse John Roe upon his challenge for bias, the complete answer is that the defendant had it in his power to have relieved himself of the obnoxious juror, and refused to do so, and that he shall not therefore be heard to complain of an injury, the evil effects of which he was easily able to have avoided by the exercise of the power of peremptory challenge conferred upon him by law.

But how is it when a just challenge has been interposed to the array, to the whole panel, because of the interest or bias of the party summoning them? There is then before the court, not the case of a single juror who may be proved to be disqualified, while his fellows stand qualified, but every man so summoned is obnoxious to the law, and is in law a disqualified juror. The question is not then whether an individual juror has successfully passed an examination for actual bias upon voir dire, for if the summoning officer has been astute enough and wicked enough, he has procured evil-minded men who can, and will, do just this thing. But whether he does or does not, the law looks with abhorrence upon the possibility of this being done, and will not subject a defendant to the compulsion of selecting his jurors from men so summoned. In the one case the taint attaches to the individual juror only; in the other, it attaches to the whole panel and procedure, and the legal vice is affixed to every juror summoned. What avail, then, for a defendant to exhaust his peremptory challenges, knowing, as he must, that he will still be compelled to select his jurymen from men who have been called in against him without warrant of law, and who, for aught that he can tell, may prove secretly more hostile than those who are then in the box? In the case of the challenge to the individual juror the defendant is called upon to excuse him because of the assurance that the next man is qualified. In the case at bar each and every succeeding man is equally disqualified, and had this defendant exhausted her nine peremptory challenges, she would still have been called upon to complete her jury from men all summoned with like illegality, and who might have been more obnoxious than were those whom, under the compulsion of the court's erroneous ruling, she felt obliged to accept. Here, then, is the broad distinction in the two classes of cases, and here also is the reason why the law will not permit the inquiry to go further than a determination as to whether or not the panel was legally chosen. For, if it was illegally chosen, and the defendant compelled, with or without the exhaustion of her peremptory challenges, to select a jury from such a panel, by no conceivable circumstances can such a defendant be said to have been accorded his constitutional right to a fair trial under the laws of his land.

The industry of the state's attorney has resulted in the discovery of but one case which even seemingly bears out his contention. If it fully bore out his contention, it would suffice to say that it stands alone against the great weight of contrary adjudication. But it does not so stand. In the case to which we have referred the sheriff had been set aside as disqualified, notwithstanding which order he summoned the jury. The Supreme Court of Colorado declared that defendant's challenge to the panel should have been sustained for this, unless there had been a waiver of the error, and proceeded briefly to point out the circumstances which, in its view, constituted a waiver. As one of the facts and circumstances, it stated that the defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges. But the waiver was not founded upon this circumstance, but upon other facts set forth, to the effect that defendant's counsel expressly stated that the jurors included in the panel were not prejudiced, or illegally drawn or summoned, in any other respect than for the reasons specified. Says the Supreme Court: "As defendant's counsel admits, not only the personal qualifications of the jurors, but that as jurors in all respects they are unobjectionable, it would be idle to quash the panel when no possible injury could result to the defendant from selecting a jury therefrom." Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419. We are not concerned with the soundness of the Colorado court's ruling to the effect that the facts which it presents did constitute a waiver. The one matter which it is desired to point out is that the waiver which the court found did not rest upon a failure of the defendant to exhaust his challenges. None of the cases cited by the Colorado court has any bearing upon the question, and the case itself contains no discussion of the proposition here presented.

2. In the concurring opinion of the Chief Justice, which is hereby adopted, it is pointed out that it is the duty of the trial court to determine whether the summoning officer is qualified or not before ordering the special venire to issue to him. Objection is made that the court is helpless in this regard, and has not the power to proceed in the manner indicated. It is said that only when the sheriff and coroner are parties, or when either is a party in a proceeding against the other, or when either of these officers is a party, and there is a vacancy in the office of the other, can the court proceed of its own motion, but that in every other case it can proceed only upon a challenge for disqualification supported by affidavit. This restriction thus sought to be imposed upon the general powers of a court of record narrows those powers to the point of absurdity. It would mean that, if the judge actually knew that the sheriff was disqualified by consanguinity or interest, he would be compelled to remain silent, issue to him a venire, which he knew was to be illegally served, and await the action of somebody before he was able to correct the error. No such shackles as these embarrass a judge in the performance of this duty. It is true that the power of a judge to appoint an elisor is not unlimited and unqualified, but it is equally true that it is his duty to do so in a proper case, and that case may as well be made upon the judge's own initiative as upon that of a party litigant. It is competent and proper for him, with the parties before the court, to interrogate the summoning officer, sheriff, or coroner, to call upon the prosecution or defense so to do, to the end that he may learn at the outset whether that officer is qualified, and if he be not, then to avoid the unnecessary delay and expense which would be imposed upon the state, and upon litigants, by placing the venire in disqualified hands.

ANGELOTTI, J. I dissent from that portion of the foregoing opinion which is numbered "1," and also dissent from the order denying a rehearing.

Assuming that the challenge to the panel was well based, I believe that, under the circumstances shown by the record, the objection should be held to have been waived. It appears that five members of the special panel were selected to complete the jury, seven jurors having been selected from the previous panel, properly drawn and summoned. To my mind appellant's objection practically amounts to no more than that these five jurors so selected from the special panel should not have been allowed to act, for the sole reason that they were not properly selected and brought into court. It affirmatively appears, however, that after the challenge to the panel was disallowed, the defendant participated in the examination of the individual jurors composing the same, passed without objection or challenge, each of the five jurors ultimately taken from said panel to complete the jury, and allowed such jurors to be sworn to try the case, without exercising the right of peremptory challenge as to any of them, although she then had nine unused peremptory challenges. Under these circumstances, I believe that she should be held to have waived her objections so far as these five jurors were concerned. To my mind the principle applicable is that stated in People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 136, 197, 48 Pac. 75.

I concur: SLOSS, J.

SHAW, J. I agree that the trial court may forestall a challenge to a special venire of jurors, for bias of the summoning officer, by examining them in the presence of the defendant and his attorney, at the time of ordering the special venire, and allowing the defendant to participate in such examination. In that case I doubt not the defendant would be deemed to have waived a challenge for any cause covered by such examination, unless he then filed an affidavit alleging disqualification. I also agree that in many cases it would be a useless formality to require a defendant to exhaust his peremptory challenges, in a vain effort to rid himself of jurors whom he really considered objectionable because of the bias of the officer who summoned them. But I think in the present case, the circumstances show that the proceeding caused no prejudice to any substantial right of the defendant, and a practical admission of this fact by the defendant. The only substantial right involved was the right to a trial by a fair, unbiased, disinterested jury of qualified citizens, selected according to the forms of law by persons without bias toward her. This the record shows she actually had. The fact that the possession of an opinion by the sheriff, who did not summon the jury, works a technical disqualification of the deputies who did perform that service, is not, as I believe, such an important departure from the forms of law as to require a reversal of the case, in the total absence of any claim that it did in fact in any wise affect the character of the jurors selected. For these reasons, and because I considered the other errors alleged to be equally unsubstantial, I did not concur in the original judgment of reversal herein.

10 Cal. App. 477

HUBBARD v. LEE et al. (Civ. 549.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 29, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1097*)—LAW OF THE CASE.

The decision of the court on appeal is the law of the case on a subsequent trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4358-4368; Dec. Dig. § 1097.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—PERFORMANCE OF ADDITIONAL WORK—ESTOPPEL.

Where additional work is performed or material furnished pursuant to the demand of the owner of the building based on the theory that the contract for its erection has not been fully performed, the owner is estopped from asserting that the contract was completed before the additional work was performed or materials furnished, though such was the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—PERFORMANCE OF ADDITIONAL WORK—ESTOPPEL.

Where the owner of a building took the position that it was not completed and consistently maintained until a designated date, that it was not completed, and repeatedly stated to the contractor and the architect that the building was not completed, and that more work must be done before the building would be accepted, and the architect, as agent in supervising the construction of the building, repeatedly made the same statements to a materialman, who relied thereon, the owner was estopped from asserting that the building had been completed prior to such designated date, though, in fact, it had been completed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by T. B. Hubbard against C. H. Lee, administrator of Eugene A. Lee, deceased, and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order refusing to amend the conclusions of law and to vacate the judgment as entered, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

See 6 Cal. App. 602, 92 Pac. 744.

A. H. Jarman and Will M. Beggs, for appellant. Beasley & Fry and J. S. McGinnis, for respondents.

HALL, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, as assignee of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros., materialmen, to foreclose a lien in the sum of $1,894.90 for materials used in constructing certain buildings upon the property of defendants' intestate, Eugene A. Lee, who was one of the original defendants in the action, but has died since the action was brought. The contractors, Hastings & Son, are also defendants, but made no defense other than to file a formal answer. Plaintiff also sought a personal judgment against Lee for the sum of $1,894.90, basing this claim upon a notice given Lee on June 26, 1906, that plaintiff's assignors had furnished the contractors certain materials used in constructing the buildings. This notice intercepted $526.35 in the hands of Lee, for which the court gave plaintiff judgment against C. H. Lee as such administrator, but refused to give judgment for any lien. Plaintiff insists that on the findings made by the court he is entitled to a lien against the property of Lee for the amount sued for. He accordingly in due time made a motion under section 663, Code Civ. Proc., to amend and correct the conclusions of law and to vacate the judgment as entered, and that a judgment awarding him a lien for the amount of his claim and foreclosing the same be entered. His motion was denied, and this appeal is from such order and judgment.

The contract under which the buildings were built was never filed in the recorder's office, and no notice of the completion of the buildings was ever filed in said office. The claim of lien was filed on the 23d day of July, 1906. The court found that the buildings were actually completed on December 1, 1905. The court, however, found certain other facts, which appellant contends have the effect to estop defendant from asserting that the buildings were completed prior to May 9, 1906. Whether or not the facts found work such estoppel is the only question presented by this appeal; for, if the claim of lien was filed in time, it is not contended that plaintiff should not have judgment enforcing his claim of lien for the full amount sued for. The case was before this court on a former appeal, when the judgment was reversed because of error committed by the trial court in refusing to admit evidence as to statements made by the owner Lee and his architect to plaintiff's assignors between the months of September, 1905, and May, 1906, to the effect that the Lee houses were not completed. It was there held that such testimony "was competent for the purpose of proving or tending to prove the fact as to when the buildings were completed, and also for the purpose of proving that defendant Lee was estopped from claiming that the lien was not filed in time." The discussion in the opinion as to the admissibility of said evidence was mostly in regard to its effect as an estoppel. It was there said: "In the present case the owner not only failed to file any notice as to when the building was completed, but now claims that his statements to the lien claimant, that the building had not been completed, were immaterial, and the court held that the plaintiff 'had no right to rely upon the statements of the owner.' If the claimant could find no notice of record, if he could not rely upon the statements of the owner, and if he could not rely upon the statements of the architect, his right to file a notice of lien, and thus save his rights, was a mere hazard. If he had filed it before the building was completed, it would have been too early. If he waited beyond the statutory time, it was too late. If the owner by his own declaration intentionally led plaintiff to believe that the buildings were not completed, and plaintiff acted upon such belief, and by reason of such declaration, as to the completion of the buildings, he cannot now be permitted to falsify such declaration." Hubbard v. Lee, 6 Cal. App. 602, 92 Pac. 744. What was there decided has become the law of this case. Hoadley v. City and County of San Francisco, 70 Cal. 324, 12 Pac. 125; Benson v. Bunting, 141 Cal. 464, 75 Pac. 59; Franz v. Mendonca, 146 Cal. 643, 80 Pac. 1078. It thus only remains for us to see whether or not the findings of fact bring the case within the rule of estoppel thus laid down.

A portion of the contract between the owners and contractors is set out in the findings, from which it appears that the work and materials were to be done and furnished under the direction and supervision, and subject to the approval, of the architect employed by the owner. After finding that plaintiff's assignors did furnish the material to the contractors between April 28, 1905, and May 4, 1906, to be used in, and that the same actually were used in, the erection and construction of the buildings, the court found: "That practically all of said building materials were furnished by said firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. prior to November 1, 1905, with the exception of certain minor mill work furnished on May 4, 1906, for the purpose of remedying certain trivial imperfections in said buildings. * * * That said buildings were erected on said property heretofore described according to the terms of said contract between Eugene A. Lee and the said defendants A. W. Hastings & Son, and were ready for occupancy and were actually occupied by the defendant Lee and his tenants on or prior to the 1st day of November, 1905. That upon the occupancy of said buildings the work of their construction ceased for a period of 30 days, and that said period of 30 days expired on December 1, 1905, on which day said buildings were actually completed. That said A. W. Hastings & Son, as said contractors, performed labor upon and used materials in the construction of said buildings on the 8th and 9th days of May, 1906, but that the said labor performed and materials furnished were to remedy certain trivial imperfections therein. That certain trivial work was done on the 17th day of May, 1906, in perfecting and painting certain window screens. That said Eugene A. Lee continued to occupy one of said houses as his residence, and resided therein at all times after said completion until the time of the commencement of this action. That between October 1, 1905, and April 11, 1906, the said A. W. Hastings as such contractor, and said Wesley W. Hastings as such architect, separately and repeatedly and during each month between said dates stated to the firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. that said buildings were not completed, that the owner had not accepted the job, and that there was more work to be done before it was completed, and that there were two payments still due. That said firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. relied upon the truth of the statements made to them by said A. W. Hastings and said Wesley W. Hastings, and did not further investigate the matter, either by visiting the premises or inquiring of the owner in regard to the completion of said buildings, except as hereinafter set forth. That during all of said period of time, to wit, between the 1st day of October, 1905, and the 11th day of April, 1906, the said Eugene A. Lee repeatedly stated during each month to his contractors, A. W. Hastings & Son, and to his architect, Wesley W. Hastings, that the buildings were not completed, that there was more work to be done, and that said work must be done by said contractors before he as the owner would accept the same. That on April 6, 1906, the said Wesley W. Hastings left the city of San Jose, and, immediately upon learning of said fact, plaintiff, as one of the partners of the firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros., and A. L. Hubbard, an employé of said partnership, went to the home of said defendant Eugene A. Lee, and there interviewed him in reference to the completion of said buildings. That said Eugene A. Lee then and there stated to said T. B. Hubbard, in the presence of A. L. Hubbard, that the said buildings were not completed, that he had not accepted them, and that certain work must still be done by said contractors before said buildings were completed. That on or about May 1, 1906, said Eugene A. Lee stated to Will M. Beggs, the attorney of, and while acting for, the firm of Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. that the job was not completed. That immediately thereafter said T. B. Hubbard caused said contractors to complete said buildings to the satisfaction of said defendant Eugene A. Lee. That a carpenter, an employé of said contractors, under the personal supervision of said defendant Eugene A. Lee, performed such additional work on said buildings as he directed, which work consisted in remedying said trivial imperfections to the satisfaction of said owner on the 8th and 9th days of May, 1906, with the exception of the painting of certain screens, which was done on the 17th day of May, 1906."

We think the facts thus found by the court bring the case within the rule of estoppel laid down by this court on the former appeal. While it is true that the court found that the buildings were actually completed, save for some trivial imperfections, on the 1st day of December, 1905, it is perfectly clear from the findings that the owner took the position that they were not completed. Notwithstanding the trivial imperfections, he might have recorded a notice of the completion of the buildings, which would have set at rest any controversy on this point. Instead of so doing, he consistently maintained until some time in May, 1906, that the buildings were not completed. According to the findings, he repeatedly during each month from October 1, 1905, to April 11, 1906, stated both to his contractor and his architect that the buildings were not completed, and that more work must be done by his said contractors before he would accept the same. His authorized architect and agent in the supervising of the construction of said buildings repeatedly each month during the same period made the same statements to plaintiff's assignors. They relied on these statements—as we have before decided they had a right to do—until they learned that the architect had left the city, when they made inquiries of the owner, Lee, when he stated that the buildings were not completed, that he had not accepted them, and that certain work must still be done by said contractors before said buildings were completed. Thereafter Hubbard & Carmichael Bros. furnished certain mill work to the contractors for the purpose of remedying the imperfections in the buildings, and said contractors used said materials in remedying said imperfections on the 8th and 9th days of May, 1906, as required and directed by the owner.

These facts estop the owner from claiming that the buildings were completed prior to May, 1906, under the rule laid down upon the first appeal of this case, and which fully accords with the established law on this subject. The rule is thus laid down in 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 399: "If additional work is performed or materials furnished in compliance with a demand made by the owner * * * based upon the theory that the contract for labor or material had not been fully performed, the owner is estopped to assert that the contract was completed before such additional work was performed or materials furnished, though such was clearly the fact." See, also, 27 Cyc. 147, 148; Stidger v. McPhee, 15 Colo. App. 252, 62 Pac. 332; McIntyre v. Trautner, 63 Cal. 429; Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Gt. Northern Ry. Co., 74 Minn. 30, 76 N. W. 953; Minneapolis Trust Co. v. Gt. Northern Ry. Co., 81 Minn. 28, 83 N. W. 463; Nichols v. Culver, 51 Conn. 177; Hubbard v. Brown, 8 Allen (Mass.) 590; Turner v. Wentworth, 119 Mass. 459; Farnham v. Richardson, 91 Me. 559, 40 Atl. 553; Cole v. Uhl, 46 Conn. 296. The facts found bring this case squarely within the rule above quoted.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the trial court directed to enter judgment upon the findings of fact in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 501

WINCHESTER v. PAYNE. (Civ. 517.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 1, 1909.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 86*)—BURDEN OF PROOF—OWNERSHIP.

Where, in ejectment, defendant denied plaintiff's ownership or right of possession, plaintiff must show that deeds which he offered in evidence embraced the land claimed if that did not clearly appear from the description therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 20*)—HIGHWAYS.

Where the only monuments called for in plaintiff's deed were two streets, the description will be construed to mean the lines of the streets as they were actually laid out, in absence of evidence showing a different intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 123-130; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 157*)—BEST EVIDENCE.

Where the ownership of property depended on the location of certain streets named as monuments in the deed, in absence of evidence as to the official location of the street B, the best evidence the case afforded was admissible to establish their location.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

4. EJECTMENT (§ 94*)—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In ejectment for property bounded by certain streets, where plaintiff did not locate the property with reference to the official map referred to in the deed or the survey made therefrom, evidence held to sustain the finding of the trial court that plaintiff had not located the property so as to show that the description in the deed included the tract in controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by Sarah A. Winchester against Orven D. Payne. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Day and Day & Day, for appellant.
Henley C. Booth, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action in ejectment. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges ownership and possession by plaintiff of a strip of land fronting on Montecito street eight feet and six inches, and extending at the same width 175 feet into the east quarter of block 273 of the city of Santa Barbara, along the southwesterly line of said quarter, and that the defendant on August 1, 1906, ousted her from the possession thereof. The answer is, in effect, a general denial.

Plaintiff showed no connection with the paramount source of title, but the record contains this recital: "It is agreed by the parties hereto, plaintiff and defendant, that the basis of title is contained in a deed from Isaac J. Sparks to Ramona Trussel, which deed conveys to the grantee named therein a tract of land known on the official map of the city of Santa Barbara as Square 273, and bounded by Rancheria, Castillo, Gutierrez, and Montecito streets." This deed is dated September 1, 1858, and was recorded September 3, 1858, in the records of Santa Barbara county. Plaintiff also introduced in evidence three other deeds of mesne conveyance through and by which the title of said Ramona Trussel to the easterly quarter of said block was on the 10th day of October, 1885, vested in plaintiff. The particular descriptions in these and each of said deeds were the same, and are in the words and figures following: "Commencing at a point in city block two hundred and seventy-three (273) at the intersection of Montecito and Castillo streets, and running thence in a southwesterly line along the line of Montecito street 225 feet; thence at right angles into said block 225 feet; thence at right angles 225 feet to Castillo street; thence along the line of Castillo street 225 feet to the place of beginning." Plaintiff's respective predecessors in title, taking successively under each of said deeds, went into possession of and occupied continuously since the year 1878 a lot of land of the dimensions above given, which did not include the strip in question, but adjoined it immediately to the northeast; and neither they nor plaintiff have ever been in the actual occupancy of this strip. No objection was made to the introduction of these deeds on the ground that the description therein did not include the premises in dispute when they were admitted in evidence; admitted they made a prima facie showing that plaintiff held the title and was entitled to the possession of the premises therein described. But, as the ownership, possession, right of possession of plaintiff, and the ouster of plaintiff by defendant were denied by the answer, it was necessary for the plaintiff to show, after these deeds were introduced, that the description in them embraced the premises in controversy, if this did not clearly appear from such description. Walbridge v. Ellsworth, 44 Cal. 353.

The stipulation as to the common source of title by consent locates the disputed strip of land in square 273, as shown "on the official map of the city of Santa Barbara," and this "square" is by the same instrument shown to be bounded by Rancheria, Castillo, Gutierrez, and Montecito streets. No attempt, however, was made to locate the lines of the property by this map, or to determine the location of the intersection of Montecito and Castillo streets, the initial point of the description in plaintiff's deed, by this map or the monuments of the survey which it is presumed to represent. The only monuments called for in the deed to plaintiff are the two streets last named. In the absence of any evidence to establish a different intention, the description in the deed must be construed to mean the lines of these streets as they were actually laid out; in other words, according to their true location. Orena v. Newlove, 153 Cal. 136, 140, 94 Pac. 628. Appellant contends that she has done this by showing that it appears from a survey of a portion of the block made by the city engineer in March, 1906, that the frontage of the block on Montecito street is 450.44 feet, and that after deducting the disputed strip which was first inclosed by defendant in March, 1906, there remains but 217.2 feet between it and the east corner of the block at the intersection of Montecito and Castillo streets, and that, as the eight-foot strip is necessary to complete the 225 feet frontage to which she shows title, her right of possession is established. This survey so relied upon was based upon monuments placed in the streets to indicate their location by one George F. Wright, who made a survey or re-survey of the streets of the city in 1889. The purpose or intent of or authority for the survey is not shown. The only matter in the record which can be construed as giving it any authoritative value is that the lines of the streets as laid out in accordance therewith are now recognized as official lines by the city and acted upon by it. Respondent, on the other hand, relies upon a showing that prior to the year 1903 the fence on the Castillo-street side of the plaintiff's property was located about eight feet northeasterly from where it now stands, and that the rest of the fence along the Trussel block, on that street, and the fence along block No. 292, the next block to the southeast of block 273, were at least as early as 1882, and said other fences ever since have been, and still are, on a line with each other, and located about eight feet northeasterly from the line of plaintiff's fence; that, when the fences were so located, Castillo street was open for travel its full width between the fences on either side thereof; and that the street so fenced was traveled as early as the year 1882. He contends that on the authority of Orena v. City of Santa Barbara, 91 Cal. 621, 28 Pac. 268, and Oglesby v. City of S. B., 119 Cal. 114, 51 Pac. 181, he has thus established the line of Castillo street so that plaintiff has her full 225 feet frontage on Montecito street without the eight-foot strip in question.

In the absence of proper evidence essential to the correct official location of either the block or the streets surrounding it, the trial court was justified in accepting the best evidence the case afforded, or, if it afforded none, in applying the presumption which the law provides where there is a failure to present satisfactory evidence. In sustaining his conclusions, it is not necessary that we assume that the learned judge who tried the case construed the opinions in the two cases above cited as supporting the view of respondent that fences are original evidence of the street lines. We do not regard those cases as so holding. In both of them the respective parties to the litigation properly sought to locate the lines of an "official" survey to support title the paramount source of which rested thereon for purposes of description. The difficulty of locating the original monuments of the official survey recognized by both parties to each of said actions led to the consideration of two methods of determining where the lines of the streets of that official survey ran. In the Orena Case the trial court adopted the theory that measurement from the initial point of the original survey, the location of which was known, was the proper method of locating a disputed point, following the ordinance of the city declaring this to be a rule of evidence in all such cases; but it was shown by recognized monuments of the original survey in the immediate vicinity of the property in litigation that the original survey was inaccurate, and the Supreme Court in reversing the judgment in that case declared that in determining the location of the line of the street in question the initial point would not necessarily be of greater or less importance than those monuments found in the vicinity, and that measurements on the street in question would be of more value than those made elsewhere; that, in the absence of original measurements, it would be important to ascertain the boundaries of the streets as actually opened and used, and, if such location had been generally acquiesced in by the public, by lot owners, and by the municipality, in the absence of more certain evidence, it would be conclusive of the location of the lines of the official survey. Incidentally it was also determined that the ordinance attempting to legislate upon the matter of what should be received as evidence was void. In the Oglesby Case evidence as to the true location of the monuments of the Haley survey (which was the official survey of said city and stated in the opinion in that case to have been made in 1851) was lacking, and the testimony as to the location of the older improvements, such as fences, etc., was conflicting, and the trial court based its judgment of the location of the lines of the Haley survey of Laguna street upon those fences and improvements which were located approximately where the lines of the street were ascertained to be by a measurement from the initial point. In neither of these cases was it determined that a fence was original evidence of the location of a street. As said by the opinion of the Supreme Court in affirming the judgment in the Oglesby Case: "Here we have some evidence as to the true location of the lines based upon the Haley survey. The evidence is conflicting to be sure, but, being so, we cannot say which is right or which is wrong"—and so the finding of the trial court was not disturbed.

Respondent, however, has not presented the evidence of the location of the fences upon the theory that it was locating the line of the Haley survey, for, as he properly says, in his brief, "there is not a syllable of testimony in this case to show what the official survey of the city of Santa Barbara was at any time referred to in the oral or documentary evidence, or what it is now." In other words, the court was left to determine the location of a street from evidence of the city engineer and his assistant that the city now (in 1906) recognizes a certain line as the southwesterly line of Castillo street, and the testimony of a witness that prior to 1903, from at least as early as 1882, the fence inclosing plaintiff's property line stood eight feet farther to the east and was then in line with fences on either side which were in effect the same line prolonged. In the absence of any attempt of the appellant to locate her property with relation to the official map called for in her chain of title, or the survey from which that map was made, or by any other evidence showing, or tending to show, the true location on the ground of the streets with reference to which it was located, we are of opinion that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed on the ground that plaintiff's evidence failed to locate her property on the ground so as to enable the trial court to determine from the description in her deed whether or not it covered the strip in dispute. If the trial court regarded the meager evidence given as entitled to consideration, it created a conflict as to the location of the streets. The city apparently did not, in 1906, recognize the fences along the sides of the street as showing street lines, while the property owners, including plaintiff and her predecessors in title, had done so from 1882 to 1903, and the other property owners continued to recognize the fences as the lines of the street to the time of trial. The recognition of a certain line by the city in 1906 does not necessarily establish that this was the "official" line of a street in 1878 where there is evidence tending to show that about that time the street as traveled was otherwise located. The finding of the trial court, if considered as based upon the facts mentioned, determined which evidence was of the greater value, and its conclusion in this regard will not be disturbed.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 426

HOUGHTON CO. v. KENNEDY. (Civ. 535.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 23, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 22, 1909.)

1. SALES (§ 68*)—CONSTRUCTION.

By a written instrument defendant assigned to plaintiff all right, title, etc., in and to "all the following described personal property and appurtenances to real estate, to wit: All of the fences and buildings of every description," etc., situated on certain described lands, including any "such property situated on the town site of R. or in the vicinity thereof." Held that the instrument covered a barn situated within 300 feet of the town site.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 184; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—MERGER OF NEGOTIATIONS IN WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Under the express provisions of Civ. Code § 1625, the execution of a contract in writing supersedes all oral negotiations concerning its matter which preceded its execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Houghton Company (a corporation) against J. W. Kennedy. From the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for appellant. J. P. Bernhard and Francis C. Huebner, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action to restrain defendant from removing a barn from the land of plaintiff. Defendant, besides answering, filed a cross-complaint in claim and delivery for the said barn, and obtained judgment for the possession thereof, or the value thereof, in the sum of $1,000. Upon the hearing of plaintiff's motion for a new trial the court ordered that, unless defendant should consent to a reduction in the amount of the judgment for the value of the barn to the sum of $750, a new trial should be granted. Defendant so consented, and the motion was thereupon denied. Plaintiff in due time appealed from this order as well as from the judgment.

The barn in question was originally built by defendant upon land belonging to one J. F. Houghton, the grantor of plaintiff; but, though built upon the land of Houghton, it is conceded by appellant, as we understand him, that it belonged to defendant, and might be by him removed, unless defendant, by a certain written instrument executed by himself and wife on or about the 19th day of April, 1905, assigned and transferred said barn to plaintiff. In a special verdict the jury found, in effect, that defendant had not assigned or transferred said barn to plaintiff, and the court adopted said verdict as a part of its findings. Defendant was a tenant of plaintiff, and had become much indebted to it. On the 19th day of April, 1905, plaintiff and defendant effected a settlement of their respective claims, evidenced by four writings, three of which bear date April 18, 1905, but all were delivered on April 19, 1905. One of these writings was executed by defendant and his wife, two by plaintiff, and the third by defendant. By the first of these writings defendant and his wife "assigned and transferred and delivered unto the Houghton Company, a corporation, all of their right, title, estate, claim or interest in or to all of the following described personal property and appurtenances to real estate, to wit: All of the fences and buildings of every description, and all engines, pumps, appurtenances and pipe lines, scales, watering troughs and other property and appurtenances of like character and description, all situated upon or connected with the lands and property described in a certain lease between J. F. Houghton and J. W. Kennedy, dated October 1, 1901, and the lands and property described in a certain trust deed from said J. W. Kennedy and wife to H. B. Houghton and H. F. Gordon, trustees for J. F. Houghton, dated the 15th day of December, 1898, and recorded in volume 220 of Deeds, page 430 et seq., Fresno County Records, together with and including all of the connections and appurtenances used in connection with said property situated upon said lands, or in the vicinity thereof, including any such property situated upon or extending through or under the town site of Rolinda, or through or under the streets, roads or highways thereon, or in the vicinity thereof." It is upon this writing that plaintiff depends, as showing a transfer of the barn in question from defendant to plaintiff. The barn is not situated upon the lands described in the lease or deed of trust referred to in the assignment. Neither is it situated upon the town site of Rolinda, but it is situated in the vicinity of such town site, upon land that Kennedy had been permitted to use by Houghton, the undisputed evidence being that the barn is situated about 300 feet from block 8 of said town site. It is this undisputed fact that is relied on as bringing the barn within the terms of the assignment; appellant's interpretation of the words of the assignment being that it is a direct conveyance of all buildings situated upon certain described property, or situate upon the town site of Rolinda, or in the vicinity thereof. A careful examination of the instrument has convinced us that this interpretation is correct.

In the first part of the assignment is an enumeration of certain kinds of property assigned, described as situated upon, or connected with certain described lands. Next follows language intended to carry the connections and appurtenances of said enumerated property, whether such connections be upon said lands or in the vicinity thereof. The barn does not come within any of this language, however, for the evidence is that it was neither upon the lands described, nor physically connected with it, or used in connection with any improvements thereon. It is the concluding language of the assignment that covers the barn, to wit, "including any such property situated upon or extending through or under the town site of Rolinda, or through or under the streets, roads or highways thereon, or in the vicinity thereof." The words "any such property" refer to such property as had before been enumerated, which includes "buildings of every description," and the entire clause brings within the operating words of the assignment buildings of every description situated upon the town site of Rolinda or in the vicinity thereof. We are unable to fairly read the words of the assignment in any other sense.

Respondent invokes the rule that, where there is a conflict of evidence, this court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury or the findings of the court. But there is no conflict as to the words of the assignment, nor as to the location of the barn. Kennedy did testify that, at some time prior to the settlement between him and plaintiff, he had asked Houghton to take the barn, and allow the value thereof to Kennedy on a settlement, and that Houghton refused, but no settlement was agreed upon at this time; and, when the settlement was finally effected, the contract was reduced to writing, by the terms of which the barn was assigned by defendant to plaintiff. The preceding negotiations testified to by Kennedy were clearly superseded by the written contract. Civ. Code, § 1625. The record does not present a case of a conflict of evidence, but simply a case for the interpretation of a written contract.

The judgment and order should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 430

LONG v. NEWMAN et al. (Civ. 590.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 23, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 22, 1909.)

1. BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS (§ 39*) — MORTGAGES — FORECLOSURE — NOTICE OF AMOUNT DUE.

The by-laws of a building and loan association provided that the whole premium on loans shall be divided into a certain number of installments, payable monthly. A note, made by plaintiff on his procuring a loan, provided that the principal and interest, together with the whole premium, should become payable at the company's option if any installment was not paid when due; plaintiff waiving notice of the exercise of such option. The instrument assigning plaintiff's shares of stock as security for the note, as required by the by-laws, contained a like provision, and made the by-laws a part thereof. Civ. Code, § 639, makes the whole loan due at the option of the board of directors when any member is six months in arrears in the payment of interest or premium. Held that, where plaintiff was in default for more than six months, defendant was entitled to declare the whole loan due, and sell the property, without notifying plaintiff of the exact amount due, and plaintiff's willingness to pay the interest and principal due would not prevent defendant from exercising the right to sell the property on default, in absence of a showing of fraud or mistake in allowing credits, and a tender by plaintiff of the full amount due, specifying it.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Building and Loan Associations, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 65*)—PRESUMPTIONS—KNOWLEDGE OF LAW.

One is presumed to know the law defining his obligations under a contract which he executes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 954*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—DISSOLUTION OF INJUNCTION.

An order dissolving a temporary injunction is within the trial court's discretion, and will not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of a clear abuse thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3818; Dec. Dig. § 954.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 163*) — TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER—DISSOLUTION.

Where both the statute and the contract clearly authorized a loan association to declare a loan due and payable in case of nonpayment of premiums, etc., for a certain time, and there was no valid excuse for a member's failure to comply therewith, a temporary injunction, restraining the foreclosure of the trust deed as authorized on default, was properly dissolved, and it would have been an abuse of discretion not to dissolve it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Suit by Mary J. Long against Simon Newman and others to enjoin the sale of property upon foreclosure of a trust deed, and for other relief. From an order dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dudley Kinsell, for appellant. Naphtaly & Freidenrich, for respondents.

HART, J. The defendant Pacific Loan Association is a building and loan corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of this state. On the 30th of April, 1901, the plaintiff, having borrowed from said defendant the sum of $4,200, on the general plan of building and loan concerns, executed and delivered to said defendant her promissory note in said amount, payable 10 years after date, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. For the purpose in part of securing the payment of said loan, the plaintiff executed a deed of trust to a certain lot or piece of real property situated in the city of San Francisco to the defendants Simon Newman and Henry Sinsheimer as trustees, with full power to sell said premises at public auction to satisfy the loan secured from said Pacific Loan Association, in the event of default by the plaintiff in any of the payments required by her contract with said association.

It is alleged in the complaint that the defendants, claiming that the plaintiff had failed to make the payments required of her under her contract, had taken steps to sell said premises "on the 12th day of March, 1908." It is alleged that the plaintiff "has caused to be fully paid and discharged all of the interest due upon said promissory note, but the said defendant Pacific Loan Association has disputed such payments, and has claimed a larger sum and amount to be due than is actually due under the terms of said instrument," etc.; that the plaintiff has at all times been, and is now, ready, able, and willing to pay all interest, charges, and penalties of "every kind and character justly due from her to said corporation defendant, under the terms of said promissory note, or in any manner whatsoever due from her to said corporation defendant, but the said corporation defendant has at all times refused to accept, and still refuses to accept, the payment of any other sum or amount than the full amount wrongfully and unjustly claimed by it as aforesaid." It is alleged that the defendants Newman and Sinsheimer, threaten to sell the said premises; that said property is of the value of $9,000, and that "a sale, or purported sale, thereof, as threatened by said defendants, will cause great and irreparable injury to the plaintiff, and will cast a cloud upon her title to the premises aforesaid, and that such injury will be of a character for which pecuniary damages will not afford adequate compensation." The prayer is that the defendant corporation be required to account "to this court for all moneys paid by, and credits due to, said plaintiff upon said promissory note," so that the amount, if any, due from plaintiff to the corporation may be adjudged by the court; that a provisional injunction or temporary restraining order be made, enjoining and restraining the defendants or their agents from publishing the said premises as for sale, and from selling the same, etc. The complaint is verified, and upon the filing thereof the court below caused to be issued a temporary injunction as prayed for therein. On the 3d day of April, 1908, upon motion of the defendants previously noticed, said motion having been made on the pleadings (complaint and the affirmative matter set up in the answer) and an affidavit of Emil Gunzburger, secretary of the corporation defendant, the court made an order dissolving the temporary injunction. It is from said order that this appeal is taken.

The only points made by the appellant on this appeal are those involved in the contention that the amount claimed to be due is unliquidated and disputed, and that, under the terms of the trust deed, she was entitled, at the hands of the corporation, to specific notice of the exact amount due it from her before the right to sell the property covered by said deed accrued to said corporation; or, to put the proposition as it is stated in his brief by counsel for the appellant: "That a specific demand for the precise sum due was absolutely necessary as a condition precedent to the publication of notice of, or proceedings by the trustees for, the sale of the property; that before a sale could be lawfully attempted the plaintiff was entitled to have a statement of the amount due, and an account of the items, including the character of the fines and penalties claimed, and also a statement and accounting of the dividends, and accumulations of the stock, to be added as a credit to the payments by her"—that the corporation having failed to so apprise plaintiff of and demand from her the precise balance due it from her, she was entitled to the continuance of the preliminary injunction until the amount due was determined by the court, and an opportunity presented to her for a redemption of her property. Hence it is claimed, the court erred in its order dissolving the preliminary injunction.

The facts as alleged in the answer, and as disclosed by the affidavit of the secretary of the corporation, do not, in our opinion, support the contention of the appellant.

By the provisions of section 1, of art. 15, of the by-laws of the defendant corporation, the same being set forth in full in the answer, there are two plans upon which said corporation makes loans—one known as the "gross premium plan," and the other as the "installment premium plan." By the former plan the amount of the premium is deducted from the amount of the loan when made, while under the last-mentioned or "installment premium plan" the whole amount of the premium is divided into 120 equal installments, "one of which shall be paid by the borrower monthly, on the first Wednesday of each month, until the whole amount of premium is paid, or the loan has been satisfied." Section 2 of said article of the by-laws provides that "each stockholder, for each share of stock he may hold, shall be entitled to a loan of two hundred dollars from the funds of the association by assigning for each two hundred dollars, or fraction thereof, so loaned, one share of the stock of the association as collateral security, together with a mortgage on real estate," etc. On the 30th day of April, 1901, the plaintiff and her husband borrowed from the association the sum of $4,200 on the installment premium plan, the amount of the premium being divided into 120 equal monthly installments of $10.50. The plaintiff and her husband executed and delivered to the corporation their promissory note for the amount of the loan, payable 10 years after date, with interest at 7 per cent.,

payable monthly, and further promised to pay the monthly premium of $10.50. As security for the payment of the note the plaintiff and her husband pledged to the association the 21 shares of capital stock in the association held by plaintiff, and as further security for the payment of said note they executed and delivered to the corporation the deed of trust to which we have hitherto referred, and covering the property, to restrain the sale of which by the corporation is the object of this proceeding. It will thus be seen that the plaintiff, under the terms of the loan, obligated herself to make the following monthly payments to the association: $24.50 for interest, $10.50 for premium, and $21 for dues, aggregating a monthly payment of $56.00.

The note provides, among other things, that "in case said monthly interest, or any part thereof, or any of said installments of premium aforesaid, or any part thereof, is not paid as it comes due and payable, then the whole of said principal sum, and the interest due thereon together with the whole of said premium, shall be and become forthwith, due and payable, at the option of the holder hereof, and notice of the exercise of such option is hereby waived." A covenant of similar tenor and import to the foregoing is contained in an instrument executed by the plaintiff and her husband assigning to the association her shares of stock therein as security for the payment of said note.

From the affidavit of Gunzburger it appears that plaintiff, for two or three years after securing the loan, made payments regularly, but after that time "the payments became irregular, and were made after long intervals"; that "during all the time since April 30, 1901, plaintiff had a passbook, which was issued to her by said defendant corporation, wherein was entered each payment as made by plaintiff," and that in all said transactions plaintiff was represented by her son, Percy V. Long, Esq.; that "during the entire year of 1906 no payment whatever was made by plaintiff to defendant corporation on account of interest or premium, as specified in said promissory note, or on account of dues, except the sum of $112, paid by her through Percy V. Long, on the 26th day of November, 1906"; that "since said last-named day no payment whatever has been made by plaintiff, either on account of interest or premium or dues." On the 10th of May, 1907, said Gunzburger, as secretary of said association, addressed a letter to the plaintiff, informing her that her "account is beyond the time allowed by the by-laws many months and the Building and Loan Commissioners have issued instructions to collect or foreclose all such accounts," and requesting her to pay up and satisfy her delinquencies immediately.

On October 23, 1907, one C. C. Hamilton, representing plaintiff, wrote to Gunzburger, stating that "about two months ago, the statement of the Pacific Loan Association against Mary J. Long was forwarded to me for investigation," and declaring that he (Hamilton) was unable to understand the statement and certain specified items therein contained, and requesting Gunzburger to send him information "concerning the nature of this instrument [referring to the deed of trust] that will enable me to understand the condition of the indebtedness mentioned." To this letter Gunzburger replied, under date of October 25, 1907, explaining minutely the nature of the contract between the plaintiff and the corporation, and stating that, if Mr. Hamilton would call at the office of the association, he would be given all the information relative to the transaction he might desire. To this last letter it does not appear that there was any reply, either by Hamilton or the plaintiff. Gunzburger, in a letter under date of December 10, 1907, informed the plaintiff that at the next meeting of the board of trustees of the association it would adopt a resolution authorizing the trustees to proceed to act under the power vested in them by the deed of trust, and sell the property described in said deed, said letter, moreover, containing the following: "If you wish to avoid expenses, call at once and either pay or arrange about giving a deed without costs."

Later a sale of the property under the trust deed was ordered, notice whereof having been published for three successive weeks, and the time specified for such sale being the 5th day of March, 1908. "On the day prior to said last-named date," proceeds the affidavit of Gunzburger, "Mr. C. C. Hamilton, representing the plaintiff, requested that such sale be postponed for one week. Thereupon said sale was postponed until the 12th day of March, 1908. Plaintiff's said representative was informed of said postponement, and notice of said postponement of said sale was duly published." Gunzburger further deposes that he has had some experience in dealing in real estate in the city of San Francisco; that he is familiar with the property covered by the trust deed, and with the value thereof; "that said property is assessed on the last assessment roll at the sum of $3,540, and the market value of said property, in the opinion of deponent, does not exceed the sum of $6,000."

The foregoing statement represents, substantially, the facts upon which the court below founded the order complained of on this appeal.

Section 639 of the Civil Code contains, among others, the following provisions: " * * * Whenever a borrowing member shall be six months in arrears in the payment of his dues, or interest, or premium, the whole loan shall become due at the option of the board of directors; and they may proceed to enforce collection upon the securities held by the association. The withdrawal value, at the time of the commencement of the action, of all shares pledged as collateral security for the loan, shall be applied to the payment of the loan, and said shares, from that time, shall be deemed surrendered to the association." The Legislature of 1907 (St. 1907, p. 927, c. 502, § 1) amended this part of said section so that now, when a borrowing member is in arrears three months, the whole loan shall become due at the option of the board of directors, etc. It is thus to be observed that the statute itself, where the contract does not itself fix the time, practically fixes the time at which the whole loan shall become due, in the case of a borrowing member who is in arrears for a period of six months in the payment of either his dues, or interest, or premium, by investing the directors of the association with the discretion of so declaring and thereupon proceeding to enforce collection of the whole amount upon the securities held by the association.

The several instruments executed by the plaintiff and her husband, and which constitute the written evidence of the terms of her contract with the association, plainly provide for the payments required to be made, and the penalty for, or the consequences of, default in any of such payments in accordance with the requirements of the statute. The plaintiff is presumed to know the law from which is derived the vitality of the contract into which she entered, and presumably read and became thoroughly familiar with the full import and scope of the terms of said contract before making herself a party to it. She must therefore have known and fully understood that in her agreement she emphasized the provisions of the law in conferring upon the board of directors the discretionary power of declaring, and conclusively determining, that the whole loan shall become due (that is, payable) in the event that she was in default for a period of six months in any of the payments which she promised and thus obligated herself to make. Moreover, she had a passbook, in which were inserted all credits to which she became entitled by reason of the payments made by her. Besides, she was a member of the association, and as such must be deemed to have some knowledge of its by-laws, and particularly is this true since the collateral agreement by which she pledged her 21 shares of stock in the association as partial security for the repayment of the loan makes the by-laws a part of its terms.

The complaint itself declares that the association rendered an account to the plaintiff, showing that the principal and interest on the promissory note amounted to the sum of $8,056.81; that the plaintiff was entitled to a credit thereon of $2,058.00, leaving a balance due of $5,998.81. It is true that the complaint alleges that the plaintiff "claims" that the large balance so claimed is "in consequence of penalties incurred by plaintiff, the kind, character, and amount of which are unknown to plaintiff," and declares that the same do not exist, yet there is no allegation charging fraud or mistake against the association in its claim as to the balance due as exhibited by the statement so rendered; nor is there any evidence in the record that said statement was incorrect, or that the plaintiff was not thus fully apprised of the precise state of her account with the association. If the account, in the opinion of the plaintiff, was erroneous for any reason; if it contained incorrect items of charges against her; if, in short, she were without sufficient information as to the status of the account to enable her to offer the exact amount due the corporation, and thus satisfy all delinquencies—she could have experienced no difficulty in securing full knowledge of the same at the association's office, to which, according to the undisputed facts, she had been repeatedly and importunately invited for that purpose, and to which, as a member, she had a right to go at any time without invitation, and make full investigation into her affairs with the association. This she did not do, and if now she must suffer to some extent by reason of the sale of her property, her own inexcusable remissness is alone responsible for it.

But, it is absolutely clear that she was in arrears in her payments, beyond the time after which the law provides that the directors may, in their discretion, order the property to be sold, and that she knew she was so in default, and the board of directors, having in the exercise of their option declared the whole loan to be due, in ordering the property to be sold, and taking the steps necessary to sell the same, were clearly within their rights under the law and the contract, whether plaintiff had previously been notified of the precise amount due or not; for, as to a borrowing member, the law does not prescribe any notice in the case of arrearages in any payments he is required to make. Civ. Code, § 639, supra. Nor do we find any such requirement in any of the several instruments constituting the contract between the association and the plaintiff. In other words, under the terms of her contract, as well as under the provisions of the law, the plaintiff had by her delinquencies forfeited her rights under said contract, if the directors of the corporation so determined, and the trustees thereupon authorized to proceed with a sale of the property for the satisfaction of the loan.

The contention of the appellant to the effect that the allegation in the complaint that plaintiff is ready, able, and willing, "and now offers, to pay all of such interest and penalties as may be found to be justly due from her to the corporation defendant by this court, and in addition thereto to pay the sum of $4,200, the principal of said promissory note," operates to prevent the sale of the property cannot be maintained under the averments of the complaint. The appellant does not offer a specific amount, and, besides, there having been default in the required payments for a period of six months, the law gives the association the right, without any qualification, to sell the property under the terms of the trust deed, if the directors after delinquencies covering that period elect to exercise that right. Of course, we do not mean to be understood as saying that, had plaintiff alleged in her complaint that there were erroneous debits against her in the account, and that such overcharges were due either to mistake or fraud on the part of the association, and had offered to pay the full amount, specifying the same, minus such erroneous charges, she would not have been entitled to an adjustment of the account by the court and an order restraining the sale of the property pending such determination. But, as we have seen, there is no charge of mistake or of fraud, and her complaint does not point out specifically the alleged overcharges, but in a general way only states that the interest charged exceeds the "interest justly due," and that "the said corporation defendant is not entitled to any of the penalties by it claimed," etc.

We have examined the cases of Porter v. Jennings, 89 Cal. 445, 26 Pac. 965, and Bullard v. Kempf, 119 Cal. 13, 50 Pac. 780, cited by counsel for appellant. These cases have no application to the facts as disclosed by this record.

It is the settled rule in California that an order granting or dissolving an injunction is a matter of discretion with the lower court, and that such discretion will not be interfered with by a reviewing court, unless it clearly appears that it has been abused. In the case at bar the facts are such, in our opinion, as would justify an appellate court in holding it to be an abuse of discretion if the court below had refused to dissolve the injunction pendente lite. The law by which the contract into which plaintiff entered is expressly authorized is unambiguous, the terms of said contract are themselves clear and plain, and there is no valid reason disclosed excusing plaintiff's failure to comply therewith, or, having so failed, to prevent the association from securing its due by a foreclosure upon the securities pledged for the repayment of the money loaned. It is not shown, as before stated, that the association has in any wise violated the law, or done any other wrong which would justify a court of equity in interposing in plaintiff's behalf.

The order appealed from is, for the foregoing reasons, affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

10 Cal. App. 460

PEOPLE v. WEIR. (Cr. 165.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 28, 1909. Rehearing Denied May 26, 1909; Denied by Supreme Court June 24, 1909.)

ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 74*)—INDICTMENT—REQUISITES—DESIGNATION OF INSTRUMENT.

An indictment under Pen. Code, § 245, punishing one who commits an assault upon another with a deadly weapon, etc., which alleged that accused assaulted another "with a certain deadly weapon, to wit, a large shovel," was not objectionable as not showing that the instrument described was in fact a deadly weapon, as it would have been sufficient to merely allege that the offense was committed with a deadly weapon without further describing the instrument; the only effect of the description being to confine the proof to the character of the instrument described.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 120; Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

W. J. Weir was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and, from the judgment and an order denying a motion in arrest, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. A. Williams, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The information in this case charged the defendant with the crime of "an assault with a deadly weapon, to wit, a large shovel." He was tried and convicted of the offense charged, and thereafter judgment was pronounced that defendant pay a fine of $500, with the alternative of imprisonment in the county jail of Fresno county. This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment.

The information was filed under section 245 of the Penal Code, which reads as follows: "Every person who commits an assault upon the person of another with a deadly weapon or instrument, or by any means or force likely to produce great bodily injury, is punishable," etc. The charging portion of the information alleges the assault to have been made upon the person of G. Brocks by the defendant with a "certain deadly weapon, to wit, a large shovel." Defendant contends that the information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, in this: that the words "a large shovel" are too indefinite to show that the instrument described was in fact a deadly weapon. The authority relied upon is the case of People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 Pac. 170. But that case is radically dissimilar from this, as will be patent when it is noted that in that case the information did not attempt to charge an assault with a deadly weapon, but "an assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury"; and the Supreme Court there held that the language of the section "or by means or force likely to produce great bodily injury" is a general and comprehensive term, designed to embrace many means or forces which, aside from a deadly weapon or instrument, may be used in making an assault, and that, therefore, an offense under this part of section 245 cannot be charged in the language of the section, but the particular things and acts which constitute the offense must be alleged. In the case at bar the offense is stated to have been committed with a "deadly weapon," and, as the term "deadly weapon" has a well-recognized meaning, it was sufficient to use that term in the indictment without further description of the particular instrument employed. The cases in this state so hold.

In People v. Savercool, 81 Cal. 650, 22 Pac. 856, the defendant was charged with "an assault with a deadly weapon, to wit, a revolver"; and there it was said: "Examining the information, we find that it follows the language of that section. This is all that is necessary. The ultimate or issuable facts which the statute declares to constitute the offense are to be pleaded substantially in the language of the law, while probative facts, such as the intent with which an assault is made, and the 'present ability' to do it, must be proved, but need not be alleged in the information or indictment"—citing cases. "It being charged that the assault was made with a 'deadly weapon,' as the statute prescribes, it was unnecessary to have described it further as 'to wit, a revolver,' as was done. The kind of weapon was a matter of proof only." In People v. Congleton, 44 Cal. 92, it is said that an indictment for an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to do bodily injury to another may in general terms aver the assault to have been made "with a deadly weapon"; that in so doing it would but follow the language of the statute by which the offense itself is defined. In People v. Perales, supra, the Supreme Court say: "The term 'deadly weapon' has a precise, well-recognized meaning, and the nature of such weapon as being one likely to produce great bodily harm is well understood. It is expressly declared by the statute a specific means, the use of which in making an assault shall constitute an offense, and therefore, under the general rule, an assault with it may be pleaded in the language of the statute." It thus clearly appears that the information is sufficient and proper in form. The only effect of the words "a large shovel" in the information was to confine the prosecution to proof that the assault was made with the instrument described, and not with some other. People v. Savercool, supra; People v. Carson (Cal.) 99 Pac. 970.

The defendant upon his conviction was fined $500, with the alternative of 250 days in the county jail. This alternative did not exceed the terms for which the defendant might have been imprisoned for the offense of which he had been convicted, and therefore the judgment is not subject to the objection urged against it by defendant. Pen. Code, §§ 245, 1205.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 440

HOLDT et al. v. HAZARD et al. (Civ. 609.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 23, 1909.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 97*) — MINING PARTNERSHIP—EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

Where parties expressly agreed that they would hold and work certain mining claims for their joint use and benefit, and did some work on the premises, a partnership existed between them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 222; Dec. Dig. § 97.]*

2. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 12*) — MINING CLAIMS — QUALIFICATION OF LOCATOR — ALIENAGE.

The question of qualification of the locator of a mining claim so far as the validity thereof is affected by his alienage cannot be raised in actions between private persons wherein the United States is not made a party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 12.]*

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 29*) — PUBLIC MINERAL LANDS — LOCATION OF CLAIMS — NECESSITY OF ACTUAL POSSESSION.

Where persons make a valid location of mineral claims on the public domain in accordance with Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1427) relating to such locations, their right of possession will continue until they have, in fact, abandoned it or forfeited it by failure to do the requisite amount of work within the prescribed time, and they need not keep an actual possession of the claims.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 29.]*

4. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 20*) — PUBLIC MINERAL LANDS — LOCATION OF CLAIMS — SUFFICIENT MARKING OF BOUNDARIES.

Where notices were posted upon each mineral claim located on public domain, designating the place of posting as the starting point, which notices contained calls and distances to certain stakes at the four corners of each claim, the area of which was 600 feet by 1,500 feet, and the stakes thus called for were set and in some cases stones piled around them, there was a sufficient marking of the claims.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 40-44; Dec. Dig. § 20.]*

5. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 38*) — ACTIONS — JUDGMENT — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

A judgment in an action to determine the right of possession to mineral claims on public lands as between two contesting locators, which described the claims in accordance with the notices posted thereon, which constituted a part of the markings of the claims, and contained other data so that the claims could be identified with reasonable certainty, sufficiently described them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 38.]*

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by Iver M. Holdt and others against R. D. Hazard and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Day & Day, for appellants. Carpenter & Gibbons and R. V. Bouldin, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover possession of three certain mining claims from which it is alleged plaintiffs were ousted by defendants. Judgment went for plaintiffs, from which, and an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants prosecute this appeal.

The complaint alleges that on November 16, 1906, and at the time of instituting the suit, plaintiffs, who were partners for the purpose of working the same, were the owners, in possession of, and entitled to the possession of three certain mining claims situated in section 33, township 28 south, range 11 east, Mt. Diablo meridian, San Luis Obispo county, each of which claims was 600 feet in width by 1,500 feet in length, bounded and marked by certain stakes and monuments thereon, which said claims were known as "Crown Copper and Silver Claim," "Black Horse Copper and Silver Claim," and "Saddlerock Silver and Copper Claim"; that while plaintiffs were such owners, so possessed, and entitled to the possession thereof, defendants did on November 16, 1906, wrongfully and unlawfully enter thereupon and did oust and eject plaintiffs, and since said date have unlawfully withheld possession thereof. The answer is a general denial.

The findings attacked by appellants upon specifications of insufficiency of evidence to support the same are, in effect, that each of said plaintiffs was a citizen of the United States; that they agreed to hold and work said claims as joint owners and partners therein; that at the time of making said locations plaintiffs discovered ore in place in ledges upon each of said claims, which ore so found justified plaintiffs in believing that the claims contained mineral in paying quantities; that at the time plaintiffs made their locations the lands were unoccupied and part of the public domain; that on September 2, 1906, plaintiffs, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 6, tit. 32, Rev. St. U. S. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1422-1442), posted a notice upon each of said claims, particularly describing the same and the boundaries thereof, together with the names of the locators; that on September 3 and 4, 1906, plaintiffs, by stakes and monuments, marked the boundaries of each of said claims so "that a person unfamiliar with said lands could readily have found all of said stakes and said mounds and could thereby have determined the boundaries of said claims with reasonable certainty." The court also found that on October 12, 1906, defendants ousted plaintiffs from the possession of said claims and posted notices of location upon the Black Horse claim, designating it as the "Andicondi" claim, located by defendant Hobson, and posted a notice of location upon the Crown claim, designating it as the "San Ramon" claim, with defendant Hazard as the locator thereof; that ever since said date said defendants have retained possession of said lands; that as to the Saddlerock claim, located in the name of Rebecca Holdt, defendants in open court disclaimed any claim or right to possession thereof. The evidence without conflict fully supports the finding as to the discovery of ore. Indeed, appellants conceded in open court that the mines contained ledges of mineral, but they denied plaintiffs' discovery. Book v. Justice Min. Co. (C. C.) 58 Fed. 106; Muldrick v. Brown, 37 Or. 185, 61 Pac. 428. The evidence touching the question of a partnership between the plaintiffs, as found by the court, tends to prove an express agreement between the parties that they should hold and work the claims for their joint use and benefit. This, together with evidence of the fact that some work was done upon the property, is sufficient to support the finding.

The finding to the effect that each of said plaintiffs was a citizen of the United States is not supported by the evidence. That question, however, was not in issue, and, so far as it concerned the rights of the parties to this action, it was wholly immaterial whether plaintiffs were citizens or aliens. Their citizenship is a matter which concerns the government of the United States only. Notwithstanding the fact that the contrary has been held in some jurisdictions, it is now well settled by the decisions of the courts of the United States that the question of qualification of the locator of a mining claim, so far as the validity thereof is affected by his alienage, is one which cannot be raised or determined in actions between private individuals wherein the United States is not made a party. Billings v. Smelting Co., 51 Fed. 338, 2 C. C. A. 252; Manuel v. Wulff, 152 U. S. 507, 14 Sup. Ct. 651, 38 L. Ed. 532; McKinley Creek Min. Co. v. Alaska Min. Co., 183 U. S. 563, 22 Sup. Ct. 84, 46 L. Ed. 331; Snyder on Mines, § 267; Costigan on Mining Law, § 47; Tornanses v. Melsing et al., 109 Fed. 710, 47 C. C. A. 596.

The question involved here is the right of possession between two contesting locators, and it may be conceded, as contended by appellants, that at the time defendants entered upon and took possession of the claims plaintiffs were not in the actual possession thereof. Such being the case, plaintiffs' rights must rest upon the finding of the court to the effect that at the time of defendants' entry plaintiffs had made a valid location of the claims, in accordance with the provisions of section 2324, Rev. St. U. S. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1427), and, in the absence of any supplementary local regulation, nothing further was required. "After a valid location has been made the locator need not keep an actual possession of the claim. His right of possession will continue until he has in fact abandoned it, or has forfeited it by failure to do the requisite amount of work within the prescribed time." Harris v. Kellogg, 117 Cal. 488, 49 Pac. 708; Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 26 L. Ed. 735. This finding, however, is attacked upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain it.

The evidence clearly tends to show the posting of notices upon each claim designating therein the place of posting as being the starting point, which notices contained calls and distances to certain stakes at the four corners of each claim, the area of which was 600 feet by 1,500 feet. It also clearly tends to show that the stakes thus called for in the notices were set, and, in some cases, stones piled around them. Appellants concede that, "taking all this evidence together, the court might find that plaintiffs did or did not set stakes, and the finding would not be likely to be disturbed, but it seems impossible to find therefrom that the lines were so marked that they could be easily traced." In Southern Cross, etc., Min. Co. v. Europa Min. Co., 15 Nev. 383, it was held that "stakes and stone monuments set at each corner of the claim and at the center of each of the end lines is a sufficient marking of the boundaries" under the most stringent construction of the act of Congress; and in Gleeson v. Martin White Min. Co., 13 Nev. 442, it was held that setting stakes at the four corners constituted a sufficient marking. To the same effect, see Oregon King Min. Co. v. Brown, 119 Fed. 48, 55 C. C. A. 626; North Noonday Min. Co. v. Orient Min. Co. (C. C.) 1 Fed. 522; Howeth v. Sullenger, 113 Cal. 547, 45 Pac. 841; Green v. Gavin (Cal. App.) 101 Pac. 931. Under these authorities, we think the evidence ample to sustain the finding that plaintiffs had made valid locations of the claims, and, in the absence of any showing of abandonment or forfeiture thereof, they were entitled to possession of the same.

There is no merit in the contention that the judgment is void for uncertainty in describing the property. It describes the claims in accordance with the notices posted, which constitute a part of the markings of the claims (Willeford v. Bell [Cal.] 49 Pac. 6), which, taken with other data contained therein, is sufficient to enable one to identify the property with reasonable certainty.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 522

PEOPLE v. COURTRIGHT. (Cr. 118.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 5, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 1, 1909.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—EVIDENCE OF OTHER OFFENSES—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial for robbery, the prosecutor showed that, on discovering that his house had been entered during his absence, he made a search thereof, and found accused in a room, and that accused at the point of a revolver compelled prosecutor to deliver his money and other valuables, the evidence of the manner in which an entrance into the house had been effected was admissible, as detailing the surrounding circumstances connected with the crime, though it proved another crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822-824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Jamison, Judge.

Harry Courtright was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Judson Brown, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. The defendant was convicted of robbery, and appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial.

The insufficiency of the record is such that no review can be had of the action of the court in denying the motion to set aside the information, on the ground that before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate. People v. Lonnen, 139 Cal. 634, 73 Pac. 536; People v. Williams (Cal.) 97 Pac. 634.

Upon the trial of the cause the prosecuting witness testified that he was living alone in his bungalow at Redondo, and left his home about half past 6 in the evening, and did not return before 10 the same evening; that upon his return he discovered that his house had been entered during his absence, and trunks and drawers had been opened and the contents disarranged; that he discovered the odor of tobacco smoke in the house; that an examination of one of the drawers showed that a revolver, kept by him therein, was missing, and that he found lying upon a chair a driftbolt, which was produced in court; that, observing these conditions, he instituted a search through the house, and upon opening the bathroom door found the defendant therein, armed with a revolver in general appearance suggesting the weapon belonging to the witness; that the defendant so armed compelled the witness to deliver up his money, watch, and other valuables; that the house was lighted, and he was able to carefully examine the features of the robber, and positively identified the defendant as such person. Witness, after recounting the events connected with the robbery and the departure of the defendant from the house, further testified that the next morning he examined the windows of the house for the purpose of seeing how entrance was gained thereto, and that he found a dent in the sill of the bathroom which corresponded in size and shape with the iron bolt found in the room. Defendant objected to the introduction of evidence tending to show the manner in which an entrance to the house had been effected, upon the theory that it tended to prove another substantive and distinct crime. This objection was properly overruled. The statement in connection with the manner of entrance into the house was proper, as detailing the surrounding circumstances connected with the crime charged. It being relevant, the fact that it also tended to prove another offense was not a ground of objection to it. People v. Craig, 152 Cal. 46, 91 Pac. 997.

Error is claimed in several other particulars, but they seem to us too trivial for serious discussion or consideration. Nothing appears therefrom which could in any manner prejudice defendant, who seems to have had a fair trial, and to have been very properly convicted under the evidence.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 445

Ex parte DRIGGS. (Cr. 125.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 26, 1909.)

HABEAS CORPUS (§ 92*)—PROCEEDINGS—SCOPE OF INQUIRY.

On application for a writ of habeas corpus by one committed by an examining magistrate, the court will not examine the record to determine whether there was testimony warranting the commitment, but to see if there was testimony tending to show the commission of an offense and petitioner's criminal connection therewith, from which a reasonable probability of his guilt might be inferred, warranting the magistrate in acting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

Petition by Gertrude Driggs for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

C. F. McNutt and Noleman & Smyser, for petitioner. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and W. J. Ford, Deputy Dist. Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The complaint filed before the magistrate was sufficient. The instrument alleged to have been forged was such as might be made the basis of fraud after utterance. People v. Collins (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 1109, and cases cited. The delivery of the instrument by petitioner to the notary public was a representation of its genuineness and an utterance of the alleged forged instrument in contemplation of law. Such delivery to a public officer cannot be said to be a delivery to a private agent. Homan v. Wayer (Cal. App.) 98 Pac. 80. The record of the instrument, by whomsoever requested, was constructive notice of such record, and the absence of a disavowal thereof might be regarded by the magistrate as evidence tending to show a ratification or adoption of the act. The expert evidence under the circumstances of the case—the death of the principal having intervened—was competent to establish the offense, without preliminary proof of absence of authority to sign the name of the person sought to be charged.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In applications for writs of this character, we will not enter into an examination of the record with a view of determining whether or not the testimony, in our opinion, warrants the commitment, but rather into an examination of the record to determine whether or not there was testimony from which the examining magistrate was warranted in acting. In other words, is there evidence in the record tending to show the commission of an offense and petitioner's criminal connection therewith, from which may be inferred a reasonable probability of the petitioner's guilt?

Writ denied.

10 Cal. App. 450

PEOPLE v. HEACOCK. (Cr. 83.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 27, 1909. Supplemental Opinion
May 4, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 470*)—EVIDENCE—SUBJECTS OF EXPERT TESTIMONY.

Where the issue was whether the death of decedent was occasioned, on the one hand, by his falling downstairs, or by his striking his head against a lounge, or, on the other hand, by the criminal act of accused, and the evidence connecting accused with the death was circumstantial, and depended on eliminating, as a possible cause of death, the fact that it was accidental, the question whether the wounds and bruises on the body of decedent, and the hemorrhage discovered, might have been caused by the fall was for the jury, and was not a proper subject of expert testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1059; Dec. Dig. § 470.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 223*)—EVIDENCE—PROCEEDINGS AT INQUEST.

Testimony of accused, taken at the examination before the coroner, is properly excluded, when offered by him while a witness for the prosecution was cross-examined, with a view of explaining the condition of accused at the time he gave the testimony, as defendant himself might have taken the stand for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 466; Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 223*)—EVIDENCE—PROCEEDINGS AT INQUEST.

Testimony of accused, taken at the examination before the coroner, is properly excluded, when offered to rebut the testimony of a witness as to statements made by accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 466; Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 224*)—EVIDENCE—PROCEEDINGS AT INQUEST.

Testimony of the wife of accused, taken at the examination before the coroner, is properly excluded; she being present at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 467; Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 721½*)—IMPROPER ARGUMENT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Under Pen. Code, § 1322, providing that neither husband nor wife is a competent witness, except with the consent of both, and section 1323, providing that the refusal of accused to be a witness cannot be used against him on the trial, the district attorney in his argument to the jury should refrain from commenting on the failure of the wife of accused to testify, especially where the wife had been charged with the offense in the complaint filed with the magistrate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1673; Dec. Dig. § 721½.*]

6. HOLIDAYS (§ 5*)—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

In view of Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that courts shall be always open, legal holidays excepted, and Code Civ. Proc. § 10, as amended by St. 1907, p. 561, c. 287, making every Saturday from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock midnight a holiday, and sections 134, 135, as amended by St. 1907, pp. 681, 682, c. 358, authorizing courts to be open on holidays for specified purposes, trial courts ought to treat Saturday afternoon as a legal holiday.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Holidays, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3321.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Jesse Heacock was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

See, also, 97 Pac. 77.

L. Gonsalves, Weldon & Held, and J. E. Pemberton, for appellant. W. L. Jenkins, Robert Duncan, Dist. Atty., and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of murder of the second degree, and was sentenced to imprisonment for the period of 15 years. He appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Defendant and his wife were living in a house belonging to deceased, Fred Steinhart, in the town of Caspar, Mendocino county, and deceased occupied a room in the same building. He was a laborer, working in a lumber camp, from which he had returned in the evening on May 4, 1908, the day of his death. So far as disclosed by the evidence, he was last seen alive about the hour of 7 p. m. of that day on his way to his room. He made some small purchases at the store of the Caspar Lumber Company, and from there went to a saloon, where he had one or two drinks of beer, and purchased 15 cents worth to take with him. He was somewhat intoxicated, though not staggeringly drunk. He was not again seen by any witness at the trial until about 9 o'clock, two hours later, when his dead body was found lying on the floor of the sitting room occupied by defendant and his wife, both being present, when the neighbors first became aware of the death of the deceased. A stairway led from this sitting room to the upper story, where there was a room occupied by deceased, and opposite this stairway door a lounge in the sitting room was situated, and about six or seven feet distant therefrom. The door mentioned opened towards the stairs into a narrow space about its width, and the stairway continued from this landing or space nine steps to a landing, and turned a right angle, continuing five steps to the upper floor. The deceased was found lying with his feet in the stairway door sill, and his head about two feet from the lounge. The first witness called as to the appearance of the body was F. H. Sanborn, a practicing physician and surgeon of the place. He testified to having made an examination of wounds he found on the head of deceased, on the night of May 4th, about the hour of half past 10; that he did not strip the body or examine it; that he found a wound on top of the head, and another "right behind the lobe of the left ear," and he also "noticed a discoloration of the left eye"; that he found considerable blood around the body; and that "the face was badly swollen." He also testified that the defendant, who was present, "asked me to look at the corner of the lounge, to notice the hair. * * * He directed me at once to this corner here [pointing], lock of hair right there. He did not call my attention to any blood on the lounge." He further testified: "I did not interfere with the body any more, you know, because I did not want to interfere with the coroner. * * * I do not think there was sufficient loss of blood to cause the death of Steinhart." He was not afterwards called to aid in the autopsy, and saw no more of the body.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Cal. Rep. 102-105 P.—5

1. The following proceedings were had: "Q. I will ask you whether or not in your opinion the bruises or wounds that you observed upon the head and face of Steinhart were sufficient to cause his death? A. Well, allowing for his age I would say yes; the wounds were sufficient to cause death. Q. I will ask you whether or not in your opinion the wounds and bruises you perceived and found upon the head and face of Steinhart could have been made by a person falling against the head of this lounge? Mr. Pemberton: We object to that on the ground it is calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness upon matters not the proper subject of expert testimony. The Court: I overrule the objection. Mr. Pemberton: We save an exception. A. I believe not. Q. I will ask you whether or not, in your opinion as a physician and surgeon, the wounds and bruises that you saw upon the face and head of Steinhart, and the hemorrhage that you observed there, might have been caused by a person falling down the stairway indicated upon this diagram here, which has been testified to be six feet in height to the first landing? Mr. Pemberton: We object to that on the ground it calls for a conclusion and opinion of the witness upon a matter not a proper subject of expert opinion, and upon the further ground that it assumes that the man fell down from the landing, or somebody said that he did, for which there is not a particle of proof in the case. The Court: I overrule the objection. Mr. Pemberton: We save an exception. Witness answering: I believe not." He was afterwards asked on cross-examination whether his opinion above given was as a layman or as a physician, and answered: "That is my personal opinion both ways."

It is urged that this was prejudicial error, and with this contention we are constrained to agree. In the case of People v. Westlake, 62 Cal. 303, a medical witness, who had made a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased, was asked this question: "State from the examination you gave the wound, the course of the ball, and the condition of the deceased, whether, if he were moving in a northwesterly direction, or standing facing a northwest direction, he could have received that wound from the pistol shot fired by a person standing north of him and facing south." The Supreme Court said: "Whether the wound of which deceased died could have been inflicted by a pistol shot fired by the defendant from a certain direction was a fact to be found by the jury from the evidence of the circumstances in which the homicide was committed, or to be inferred from the relative position of the parties when the shot was fired. It was not such a matter of science or skill as required the opinion of an expert."

In People v. Smith, 93 Cal. 445, 29 Pac. 64, the defendant was charged with murder, and the defense was that in shooting the deceased the defendant, who was also shot in the encounter, acted in self-defense, and in the determination of this question it became material to ascertain the position in which the defendant was at the time when he was shot. A witness, who was a physician and surgeon, was called by the people, and was asked this question: "Will you state, if you can, from your examination of this man's [the defendant's] arm and your familiarity with gunshot wounds, if you are familiar with them, in what position in your judgment this man's arm was at the time that wound was received?" Over objection the witness was allowed to answer. The Supreme Court said: "The court erred in the admission of this evidence. The subject-matter of the inquiry was not one in relation to which the opinion of an expert can be properly received. The position of the wound being given, and the course taken by the bullet known, the jury was fully as competent to determine the relative positions of the parties to the difficulty as was the witness." In Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 281, 29 Pac. 481, 484, 18 L. R. A. 124, a machinist, conversant with machinery, was asked certain questions as to the condition of a certain shaft that had caused the injury complained of, and of its effect when brought in contact with clothing, and whether dangerous or not. The Supreme Court held that it was error to admit the testimony. Said the court: "Such questions are to be determined by the jury themselves, either from their own experience in matters of common observation, or from all the evidence in the case, and cannot be asked of witnesses, even if such witnesses are experts in some particular art or science. Sappenfield v. Main St. R. R. Co., 91 Cal. 60, 27 Pac. 590. If the court permits the jury to be influenced by the judgment of such witnesses, it deprives the litigants of their right to have the jury render its verdict upon the facts in the case, and to this extent substitutes the judgment of the expert for what should be the judgment of the jury." In the case of People v. Lemperle, 94 Cal. 45, 29 Pac. 709, a medical witness was permitted to give an opinion as to the distance of the muzzle of the pistol from the wounded man when fired. The court said: "That the ruling was erroneous there can be no doubt. A physician is not, as such, an expert upon such matters. If he found that the flesh was burned or contained unburned powder, he would have known that the pistol must have been near, but this is matter of common observation, and not a matter of special knowledge. The facts being stated, it was for the jury to judge"—citing People v. Westlake, supra; People v. Smith, 93 Cal. 445, 29 Pac. 64.

In the case at bar the vital question at issue was the cause of Steinhart's death—whether by accident, as was claimed by defendant, by his having fallen downstairs, or by striking his head against the lounge in the sitting room, or in some other accidental manner, or whether the cause of his death was by criminal violence administered by some person. The evidence connecting defendant with Steinhart's death was wholly circumstantial, and its strength depended very much upon eliminating, as a probable or possible cause of death, the fact claimed that he was injured by accidentally falling downstairs or by his head coming in contact with the lounge in falling. These were matters for the jury to determine from the facts and circumstances proven, and were not the proper subjects of expert testimony. As was said in Kauffman v. Maier, supra, to permit the jury to be influenced by the judgment of such witnesses would deprive the defendant of his right to have the jury render its verdict upon the facts in the case, and to this extent would substitute the judgment of the expert for what should be the judgment of the jury. Obviously the evidence was prejudicial.

2. Error is claimed because the court refused to allow defendant to introduce the testimony of defendant taken at the examination before the coroner, which was offered while a witness for the prosecution was under cross-examination by defendant's counsel, for the purpose of "explaining the condition defendant was in when he gave it." We see no error in this ruling. The defendant could have taken the witness stand had he desired to make explanation. Defendant offered this testimony several times for the purpose of rebutting testimony of witnesses as to statements made by the defendant. The refusal of the court to admit the testimony was proper.

3. During the cross-examination of the coroner called by the prosecution, defendant offered in evidence the testimony of defendant's wife, taken at the inquest. The court very properly refused its admission. She was present at the trial. Her testimony taken at the inquest was not admissible.

4. During the opening argument of the assistant district attorney, Mr. Jenkins, he addressed the jury, in part, as follows: "If the man had fallen down the stairway as he stated, an accident had befallen him or happened, gentlemen of the jury, is there anything about it he would want to cover up? Is there anything about it he wouldn't want his wife to testify to? Gentlemen of the jury, she is here to-day, why doesn't she give you an explanation of it?" Defendant's counsel objected that the district attorney "has no right to comment upon the failure of the wife to take the stand or anybody else. * * * And we save an exception to the very improper comment made by the assistant district attorney, and ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard that comment, and consider it as never having been made. The wife had the right to stay off the stand, and it is their duty to hold this not in the least against the defendant." Mr. Jenkins: "As to the defendant, I say I have nothing to say, he has the right to stay off the stand. Mr. Pemberton: We save an exception to this. By the Court: Proceed with the argument. Mr. Pemberton: And we save our exception." The court took no other action, and the incident was closed at this point. Section 1323, Pen. Code, provides that the neglect or refusal of the defendant to be a witness "cannot in any manner prejudice him, nor be used against him on the trial of the proceeding"; and we have held it error for the district attorney to comment upon the defendant's failure to testify. People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463. But the section makes no similar provision as to the failure of the wife of a defendant to testify, though section 1322 does make her incompetent, except by the consent of both husband and wife. The question is a new one so far as we are advised. As the case must go back for a new trial it is perhaps unnecessary to go further than to advise that the district attorney refrain from such comment hereafter. The reason which underlies the provisions of section 1323 applies with much force to the wife, who is made incompetent to testify for or against her husband in a criminal action, except both consent. The wife may be willing to testify, but the husband may not consent, and to put him in the position of refusing and subjecting his defense to comments for availing himself of a statutory right might be very prejudicial. It was in evidence before the jury that both defendant and his wife were charged with the murder of Steinhart in the complaint filed with the magistrate, which would seem to emphasize the impropriety of commenting upon her failure to testify.

5. It appeared that the evidence closed, and the argument to the jury was completed, in the forenoon of Saturday, July 18, 1908, in time for the court to have instructed the jury before noon. The defendant called attention to the fact that Saturday afternoon was a holiday, and requested the court to instruct the jury and submit the case before the beginning of the holiday. The court denied the request, to which defendant excepted, and thereupon the court adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m., and then instructed the jury and submitted the case to them. After having retired, and while deliberating upon their verdict, the jury requested (but at what time does not appear) that the instructions be sent to the jury room, and the same instructions which had been read to the jury were so sent. The Legislature amended section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1907 by adding the following: "Every Saturday from twelve o'clock noon until twelve o'clock midnight is a holiday as regards the transaction of business in the public offices of this state, and also in political divisions thereof when laws, ordinances, or charters provide that public offices may be closed on holidays; provided, this shall not be construed to prevent or invalidate the issuance, filing, service, execution or recording of any legal process or written instrument whatever on such Saturday afternoons." St. 1907, p. 561, c. 287. The Constitution provides that the Supreme Court "shall always be open for the transaction of business" (article 6, § 2), but the provision as to superior courts (article 6, § 5) reads: "They shall be always open (legal holidays and nonjudicial days excepted). * * * Injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued and served on legal holidays and nonjudicial days." Section 134, Code Civ. Proc., provides that: "No court shall be open, nor shall any judicial business be transacted, on Sunday [naming also other holidays] except for the following purposes: (1) To give, upon their request, instructions to a jury when deliberating on their verdict. (2) To receive a verdict or discharge a jury. * * * Provided, that the Supreme Court and the superior courts shall always be open for the transaction of business; and provided further that injunctions and writs of prohibition may be served on any day."

It was held in People v. Town of Loyalton, 147 Cal. 775, 82 Pac. 620, that "all transactions not within the statutory prohibition may be carried on as on any other day," and in People v. Soto, 65 Cal. 621, 4 Pac. 664, it was held that the Legislature may allow or disallow the transaction of all or any class of judicial business on legal holidays, and that section 5, art. 6, of the Constitution, does not in terms prohibit any legal business on holidays. In Heisen v. Smith, 138 Cal. 216, 71 Pac. 180, 94 Am. St. Rep. 70, it was said that "in this state the transaction of 'judicial business' on Sunday or holidays is forbidden (Code Civ. Proc. § 134), but that these terms cannot be extended to the service of process, or other ministerial acts." Reclamation District v. Hamilton, 112 Cal. 603, 44 Pac. 1074, points out, without reconciling the apparent conflict between the provisions of the Constitution and those found in section 134, Code Civ. Proc., supra, the statute declaring that the Supreme and superior courts "shall always be open for the transaction of business" and the Constitution that the superior courts shall always be open (legal holidays and nonjudicial days excepted). Section 1142, Pen. Code, provides: "While the jury are absent, the court may adjourn from time to time, as to other business, but it must nevertheless be open for every purpose connected with the case submitted to the jury until a verdict is rendered or the jury discharged."

There is some force in the suggestion of the Attorney General that the amendment of section 10, Code Civ. Proc., does not refer to court proceedings. Even so, there remains the constitutional provision that superior courts are always open except on holidays, and these courts uniformly refrain from transacting judicial business on such days. See Heisen v. Smith, supra, pp. 218, 219, 71 Pac. 180, 94 Am. St. Rep. 70. The point is not likely to again arise in this case, and we do not decide it.

Some other alleged errors are assigned, but they relate to matters which in all probability will not again occur, and need not be noticed.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

Supplemental Opinion.

PER CURIAM. Since the foregoing opinion was filed, our attention has been called to an amendment of sections 134 and 135, Code Civ. Proc., which was passed the day after section 10, Code Civ. Proc., was amended, as set forth in the opinion in which section 134 was quoted as it existed prior to 1907. The amendment of sections 134 and 135 will be found in Statutes of 1907, pp. 681, 682, c. 358. Section 134 by that amendment reads: "No court, other than the Supreme Court, must be open for the transaction of judicial business on any of the holidays mentioned in section ten, except for the following purposes: (1) To give upon their request, instructions to jury when deliberating on their verdict; (2) to receive a verdict or discharge a jury; (3) for exercise of the powers of a magistrate in a criminal action, or in a proceeding of a criminal nature. Injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued and served on any day." Section 135, as amended, reads: "If any day mentioned in the last section happen to be the day appointed for the holding or sitting of a court, or to which it is adjourned, it shall be deemed appointed for or adjourned to the next day." We said in the opinion that it was not necessary to decide the question; nor is it, in view of our decision on other questions. But under the present state of legislation we venture to suggest to trial courts that it would be safer to treat Saturday afternoon as a legal holiday until the question has been determined.

10 Cal. App. 423

RAUER'S LAW & COLLECTION CO., Inc.,
v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.
(Civ. 640.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.

April 22, 1909.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 160*)—NOTICE OF APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTORY PROVI-SION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 974, providing that notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice's court must state whether the appeal is taken from the whole or part of the judgment, and, if from part, what part, and whether the appeal is taken on questions of law or fact, or both, where the notice recited that the appeal was taken from the whole judgment, the section was substantially complied with, and appellant was entitled to a trial of his case de novo, though it did not appear from the notice whether the appeal was taken on questions of law or fact, or both.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 160.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Petition by Rauer's Law & Collection Company for writ of prohibition to the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and others. Writ denied.

Macks & Tomskey, for petitioner. Wm. Sea, Jr., for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an original proceeding for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court above named from proceeding with the trial of a certain case. The petition for the writ alleges that the petitioner had excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties on an undertaking on appeal from the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and that the said sureties, or others in their place, had failed to justify within due time. An order to show cause was issued upon this petition; but it is now stipulated by the parties to the said appeal that the notice of exception to the sufficiency of the sureties was not served within the time prescribed by law, which disposes of the main point made by the petition, inasmuch as the sureties were not called upon to justify in the absence of such notice.

One other point, suggested at the oral argument, remains to be considered. It concerns the sufficiency of the notice of appeal. The notice was in the following terms: "Please take notice that the defendant hereby appeals to the superior court * * * from the judgment made and entered in justice's court * * * in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, and from the whole thereof." That part of section 974, Code Civ. Proc., providing what the notice of appeal from a judgment of a justice's court shall contain, reads as follows: "The notice must state whether the appeal is taken from the whole or a part of the judgment, and if from part, what part, and whether the appeal is taken on questions of law or fact, or both." From the notice of appeal it will be observed that it does not appear whether the appeal was taken on questions of law or fact, or both; but, inasmuch as it was taken from the whole of the judgment, we think the section quoted was substantially followed, and that on the notice the appellant is entitled to a trial of his case de novo. Section 624 of the practice act (St. 1851, p. 150, c. 5), as amended by the statute of 1854 (St. 1854, p. 70, c. 54, § 54), in providing what the notice of appeal shall set forth, was precisely the same as section 974 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the Supreme Court, in passing upon a similar notice to the one here, held it sufficient. The lower court had decided that the notice was defective, and dismissed the appeal, and the Supreme Court said: "It is difficult to perceive on what ground the judgment of the court was based. The amendments to the practice act (St. 1854, p. 66, § 38) provide that, when the appeal is taken on questions of law alone, it shall be heard upon a statement of the case; when the appeal is taken upon questions of fact, or upon both questions of law and fact, the action shall be tried anew in the county court, the party being entitled to a jury if he desires it. The party could readily discover whether the appeal was upon the law merely, or for the purpose of a trial de novo, by looking at the records. The object of the notice is both to apprise the opposite party of the appeal, and as to what the appeal is from. In this case there could be no mistaking it, and there could be nothing more definite than an appeal from 'the whole judgment.'" Price v. Van Caneghan, 5 Cal. 124.

The writ is denied.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 415

SAN DOMINGO GOLD MINING CO. v. GRAND PACIFIC GOLD MINING CO. et al. (Civ. 570.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 21, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 17, 1909.)

1. EXECUTION (§ 321*)—SALE—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

A sheriff's deed to the purchaser at an execution sale relates back to the date of the levy of an attachment in the case, provided the attachment proceedings are regular.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 948; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 321*)—SALE—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

The court, in a suit to restrain mining on land claimed by plaintiff under a sheriff's deed to the purchasers at an execution sale under a judgment in an action in which an attachment was issued, cannot assume error in the attachment proceedings, and, in the absence of evidence of any defect therein, the sheriff's deed will be deemed to relate back to the date of the attachment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 948; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 901*)—BURDEN TO PROVE ERROR.

Where the record was silent on the subject, the court could not assume that the facts as stated by appellant making an objection were conceded by respondent, or that any evidence was offered in aid of objection; but the burden was on appellant to show that the objection was supported by the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3670; Dec. Dig. § 901.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 210*)—TITLE OF PURCHASER.

The legal effect of an owner of two-thirds of property, authorizing in writing the owner of the remaining one-third to convey the same, cannot be questioned by a stranger to the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 428; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 231*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE—DEFECTS—EFFECT.

Any defect in the acknowledgment of a deed in the chain of plaintiff's title is immaterial, where plaintiff at the time it received its deed was ignorant of any outstanding title in another, thereby becoming a bona fide purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 538; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

6. EXECUTION (§ 200*)—SALES—OBJECTIONS—RIGHT TO MAKE.

One not in privity with the judgment debtor or interested in the estate cannot profit by any irregularity in an execution sale of the property arising from the fact that the sale was made to an administratrix, and a subsequent purchaser from the administratrix takes a good title, though she might be refused credit in her account for the amount expended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 827; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

7. COVENANTS (§ 69*)—PERSONAL COVENANTS—"COVENANT RUNNING WITH THE LAND."

An agreement for the purchase of a mining claim from the patentee, which recites that the patentee may have the exclusive right to work the mine until he is paid the price, and that for further security the purchaser transfers shares in a mining company on the consideration that the patentee will convey the property to the purchaser, and signed by the purchaser alone, is a personal covenant on the part of the purchaser, and is not a covenant running with the land, under Civ. Code, §§ 1460-1462, defining "covenants running with the land."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1698-1703.]

8. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 55*)—TITLE ACQUIRED BY PURCHASER.

A patentee of a mining claim contracted for the sale of the claim to a third person, and on the following day he executed a deed absolute in form conveying the claim to a corporation without referring to the contract. A purchaser from the corporation at the time of the purchase had no actual knowledge of any equitable claim of the third person arising out of the contract. Held, that the contract and deed were not contemporaneous instruments, because they were not between the same parties, and because there was no connection between the rights accruing to the parties, and the purchaser of the corporation acquired title freed from any equities arising under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Action by the San Domingo Gold Mining Company against the Grand Pacific Gold Mining Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. Everett Ball and J. F. Davis, for appellants. Chickering & Gregory and Snyder & Snyder, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was begun June 22, 1904, for the purpose of enjoining defendants from mining upon or removing ore from two certain placer mining claims, known as the "Bully Boy" and the "Buckeye." The defendants disclaimed any interest in the latter, but asserted title to the former claim, consisting of about 70 acres, and the question in dispute is as to the ownership of this "Bully Boy" claim. Plaintiff relies upon title by mesne conveyances from the patentees and also by prescription.

The deeds received in evidence seem to connect plaintiff with the original source of title. The conveyance, however, from one W. A. Keefer to the Jupiter Gravel Mining & Water Electric Power Company, dated November 21, 1896, must be disregarded, as it is admitted that the said Keefer was adjudged a bankrupt in 1887; but, as pointed out by respondent, this deed is not a necessary link in plaintiff's chain of title, for the corporation known as the "Jupiter Deep Blue Gravel Hydraulic Mining Company" acquired the title on November 4, 1879, and did not purport to convey it to Keefer until June 14, 1884. On April 9, 1883, an attachment was issued in the case of Manuel v. Jupiter Deep Blue Gravel Hydraulic Mining Company and levied upon the property on April 10, 1883. Judgment was rendered in said action in favor of plaintiff on September 8, 1884, and on December 10, 1887, the property was sold under execution to Eliza S. Baker, as administratrix of the estate of Samuel Baker, deceased, and a sheriff's deed therefor given to her on July 6, 1888. Eliza S. Baker, as administratrix, on April 9, 1889, conveyed the property to plaintiff's immediate predecessor in interest, the Jupiter Gravel Mining & Water Company. The record shows that in the matter of the estate of said Samuel Baker, deceased, a decree was entered confirming the sale of all interest of said estate to the said company. It is not disputed that the sheriff's deed related back to the date of the attachment, if the attachment proceedings were regular. "The property is sold under the final process issued on the judgment; but the deed made to the purchaser at the sale, as the last of the series of acts, takes effect from the date of the levy of the attachment, as the first of the series of acts, and perfects the title to the property from the day when it was taken by the officer, for the satisfaction of the judgment." Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 174. The record upon its face therefore shows the title to be in respondent; but it is the contention of appellants that a close inspection will reveal certain infirmities that invalidate the apparent title and render indefensible the finding of the trial court "that plaintiff is, and ever since the 28th day of June, 1898, has been, the owner" of said mining claim. We think, however, the contention of appellants is untenable.

In reference to said sheriff's deed to Eliza Baker, it is admitted that it conveyed all interest of the said Hydraulic Mining Company No. 1 which it had September 8, 1884, the date of the judgment; but it is denied that it relates back to the time of the levy of the attachment, for the reason that the undertaking in said attachment proceeding was defective, and that on motion for a dissolution the court so found but allowed the plaintiff to file a new undertaking "nunc pro tunc," thereby going beyond the jurisdiction of the court. But waiving the question whether that consideration could be invoked in this action, since it does not appear that any motion was made in the original action to dissolve the attachment, it is sufficient to say that the record contains no evidence of any defect in said undertaking or of any such order made by the court. We cannot, of course, presume error, and all intendments are in favor of the action of the trial court. All that appears as to the point is the objection of counsel in the following language: "We object, in addition to the objection that it is not rebuttal, that the attachment is void, as there was no proper undertaking on attachment. The court, on defendant's motion to dissolve the attachment, July 5, 1884, allowed a new undertaking filed nunc pro tunc." As the record before us is silent as to the matter, we cannot assume that the facts as stated by appellant were conceded by respondent, or that any evidence was offered in aid of the objection. The burden was upon appellants to show that the objection was supported by the facts, and this they failed to do.

The claim that the deed from Eliza Baker, administratrix, to the Jupiter Gravel Mining & Water Company of September 13, 1888, was void because acknowledged by her as "Eliza S. Baker, widow," is without merit. If any such defect existed, it was cured by another deed of April 9, 1889, executed by the same grantor. In reply to appellants' suggestion that this deed conveyed only the interest of the estate, which was one-third of the property, it is only necessary to allude to the fact that the owner of the other two-thirds in writing authorized the conveyance, and the legal effect of his act could certainly not be questioned by any one who is a stranger to his title; but we deem to be sound and unanswerable this statement by respondent: "The deed would not be void in any event, even if not recorded. Defendants do not claim under Eliza Baker, and, if the predecessor of the plaintiff was a bona fide holder as against the original locators and defendants, the benefit of that bona fide holding would now inure to plaintiff, even if none of the subsequent conveyances had been recorded." It is apparent therefore that any defect in the acknowledgment must be immaterial if, as it sufficiently appears from the evidence, plaintiff at the time it received its deed was ignorant of any outstanding title in appellants.

The position is equally untenable that the conveyance to Eliza Baker was void for the reason that she was the administratrix of an estate, and therefore could not purchase property at execution sale. It would be an anomalous and manifestly inequitable doctrine that any one not in privity with the judgment debtor or interested in the estate could profit by any such irregularity. The fact must be that the proceeding is not void, but simply voidable at the instance of those whom the administrator in his official character represents. A subsequent purchaser takes a good title, although the administrator may be refused credit in his account for the amount expended. In Briggs v. Chicago, K. & W. R. Co., 56 Kan. 526, 43 Pac. 1131, it

Is held that: "An administrator receiving as assets of the estate of his decedent a promissory note secured by mortgage, and having obtained a judgment on the note and a decree of foreclosure, may bid in the land at the foreclosure sale as administrator in satisfaction of the indebtedness, wholly or in part, and the sheriff's deed will pass the title to him as administrator." To the same effect are Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa, 278, 32 N. W. 340, and Lockman v. Riley, 95 N. Y. 64.

The case of Sedgwick v. Sedgwick, 65 Cal. xx, 4 Pac. 570, cited by appellants, while containing language to the effect that an executor or administrator has no authority to bid in property for the estate, and that such a sale is void, presented an entirely different legal aspect from the case at bar. That action was brought by the judgment debtor against the estate for damages. The only parties who could contest the sale were before the court, and the validity of the purchase was directly involved. The plaintiff as the basis of his action probably insisted that the sale was invalid, and no doubt the defendant urged the same ground for the conclusion that it could not be held for damages. At any rate, from the meager report we have of the case we are satisfied that the decision was right, although the language used must be limited to the peculiar facts therein involved.

The contention in which appellants apparently have the most confidence is, as stated by them: "That by the agreement with Keefer contemporaneous with the deed to the Jupiter Deep Blue Gravel Hydraulic Mining Company, the deed was to become operative only upon the payment of the purchase price of the property which was never paid, and that all persons, including the respondent, had full notice of the rights of appellants and took subject to said rights." The said agreement which it is insisted was contemporaneous with the deed and should be construed with it, as far as material, is in the following language: "This indenture made the 21st day of May, A. D. 1878, by and between W. A. Keefer, party of the first part, and C. Hammerschmidt" and the other patentees—mentioning their names and respective interests in the mine—the parties of the second part, "witnesseth that whereas, the said parties of the second part, who are the owners of the Bully Boy Placer Mine Company's property described as follows: * * * For and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to them paid, and other considerations, to wit, 12,960 shares of the capital stock of the Jupiter Deep Blue Gravel Hydraulic Mining Company, to be held by the parties of the second part, as collateral security until the payment to them by the party of the first part of the sum of $2.50 per share of said capital stock; and it is further agreed between the party of the first part and the parties of the second part that the parties of the second part shall have the exclusive right to drift the gravel and extract the gold from the same and enjoy all the rights and benefits for such labor until such time as their claims under this contract are satisfied. And it is hereby agreed that the parties of the second part shall, as fast as possible to do so, complete their title by United States patent, which has been applied for and deliver the same to the party of the first part. Witness my hand and seal this 21st day of May, 1878. W. A. Keefer." This instrument was acknowledged by said Keefer June 30, 1878, and recorded July 22 following. The deed, however, was in the usual form, dated May 22, 1878, and was executed by the patentees to the said Jupiter Deep Blue Gravel Hydraulic Mining Company, and no reference was made therein to any other instrument or agreement. This deed was recorded June 14, 1878. Parol evidence was admitted "that it was understood in the first place that two of the owners should sign the deed so as to give Keefer a chance to let people understand that he could sell the mine or incorporate—to give him a chance to handle the mine." The two signed, and "then the others came in, and all signed the deed."

It is clear that, in order to overcome the apparent record title of respondent, it must be held, either that the said agreement and deed in legal effect disclose the equitable title to be in the patentees, or that respondent at the time of its purchase of the land had actual or constructive notice of facts sufficient to put it upon inquiry as to the claim of appellants. The said agreement signed only by Keefer is plainly a personal covenant on his part, and not one running with the land. Sections 1460, 1461, and 1462, Civ. Code. This is not seriously contested by appellants, and we shall therefore not discuss it. It is claimed, though, that we have a case for the operation of the doctrine announced in Bryan v. Grosse et al. (Cal.) 99 Pac. 499, and Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 300, 86 Pac. 686, and other decisions to the effect that: "His conscience is bound by the covenant, whether in law it runs with the land or not. The precise form of the nature of the covenant or agreement is quite immaterial. It is not essential that it should run with the land. A personal covenant or agreement will be held valid and binding in equity on a purchaser taking the estate with notice. It is not binding upon him merely because he stands as an assignee of the party who makes the agreement, but because he has taken the estate with notice of a valid agreement concerning it which he cannot equitably refuse to perform."

But respondent does not stand in the relation of assignee to Keefer, who made the agreement, and there is nothing in the record itself that would apprise plaintiff of the claim that the transaction in which said Jupiter Mining Company was concerned amounted to a conditional sale, or anything less than what the deed imports. Keefer enters into an agreement with the patentees that they may have the exclusive right to work the mine until they are paid the purchase price, and for further security he transfers to them certain shares in said mining company upon consideration that they will convey the property to said Keefer. The instrument is somewhat awkwardly drawn; but it was undoubtedly intended to be an agreement for the sale and purchase of the mining property. The record does not show, however, that anything was ever done in pursuance of said agreement. As we have seen, on the next day the patentees execute a deed absolute in form, not to Keefer, but to a corporation to whose interest respondent has succeeded. The instruments are therefore not contemporaneous, not between the same parties, and the record discloses no connection whatever between the rights and obligations accruing to Keefer through said agreement and those of the mining company growing out of said deed. No one looking at the record would have any reason to conclude that the grantors reserved any interest in the property, or that the conveyance was burdened with any condition not expressed in the deed. If the principle contended for by appellants were generally recognized, scarcely any title would be safe from attack. The evidence further shows that the respondent at the time of the purchase had no actual knowledge of any equitable claim of appellants. The contention that the possession of the property by certain of the patentees was constructive notice of their equity cannot prevail here over the finding of the trial court, as there is evidence to the effect that only one of them was on the premises, and he stated that he had no claim to the mine, but was there under a license.

Appellants do not contend for adverse possession, but simply rely upon the alleged defects in respondent's title. The foregoing is therefore decisive of the controversy and renders immaterial—even if assailable—the finding in favor of respondent's prescriptive right.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 494

BOYE et al. v. ANDREWS (KAPPLER, Intervener). (Civ. 526.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 30, 1909.)

1. DEEDS (§ 58*)—SUFFICIENCY OF DELIVERY.

The owner of land executed a deed thereof, and delivered it to the grantee, after which the deed was returned to the grantor and inclosed in an envelope, which was directed to the county recorder, and this was placed in a larger envelope and directed to the person that the grantor had named in his will as his executor, with directions on the outer envelope to send the inclosure to the recorder on hearing of the death of the grantor, and the executor sent the deed to the recorder as directed. Held, that the deed transferred the property to the grantee, and that its validity was not affected by its return to the grantor and his placing it in the hands of his executor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 130–135; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 69*)—VALIDITY—EFFECT OF DEBTS OF GRANTOR.

The validity of a transfer of land without consideration a short time before the death of the grantor, as between the grantee and the grantor's heirs and executor, is not affected by the fact that the grantor was in debt, nor that he was living on and in possession of the premises at the time of his death, nor by anything that the grantor did or said after the delivery of the deed, nor by the grantor's physical condition, unless such condition had some relation to his mental condition at the time the deed was executed, nor by the fact that sufficient property did not remain after the conveyance to pay the debts and legacies mentioned in his will made prior to the execution of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 471*) — OPINION EVIDENCE — PERSONAL RELATIONS.

In an action to quiet title to property transferred by the owner a short time before his death, a question whether the grantee was "in a confidential relation" with the grantor during his sickness was rightly excluded as calling for the conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

4. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 90*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action to quiet title, plaintiffs claimed as the heirs of a deceased owner, and alleged that the owner died intestate. Held, that the burden of showing intestacy was on plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 129*)—TITLE TO LAND—ACTION TO RECOVER—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action to quiet title brought by heirs of a former owner against the owner's grantee, in which the owner's executor intervened, the jury were properly instructed that, to entitle the executor to recover possession, the jury must find that at the time of testator's death he had the right of ownership and possession of the land; that it was subject to testamentary disposition, and had not, in fact, been conveyed to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 533–536; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

6. DEEDS (§ 194*)—PRESUMPTION OF DELIVERY.

A deed is presumed to have been delivered at its date, and, where delivery is presumed or shown, the burden is upon the party disputing that fact to show the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 574–583, 623; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

7. DEEDS (§ 195*) — BURDEN OF SHOWING WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

Where a deed is delivered, the burden of showing want of consideration is upon the person contesting it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 584–586; Dec. Dig. § 195.*]

8. QUIETING TITLE (§ 47*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS AS TO OWNERSHIP.

In an action to quiet title, where the presumption of continuous ownership in a former owner was overcome by the evidence, the court properly refused to instruct that, because ownership was admitted in such former owner on a date specified, it would be presumed, unless proved to the contrary, that such ownership continued until the death of such owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

9. DEEDS (§ 211*)—VALIDITY—PRIMA FACIE CASE.

Evidence in an action to quiet title against the grantee of the deceased owner held insufficient to cast the burden on defendant of showing the fairness of the transfer, and that it was free from fraud, artifice, or undue means.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action by Sophie C. F. Boye and another against Charles A. Andrews. Charles Kappler, intervener. Judgment for defendant, and the intervener appeals. Affirmed.

Coburn & Collier, for appellant. C. W. Strother, for respondent. Loewy & Gutch, for plaintiff Sophie Boye.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to quiet title to real estate. Charles Kappler, as executor of the last will of plaintiffs' testate, intervened. The issues were tried by a jury, and defendant Andrews had the verdict on which judgment was entered accordingly. Intervener Kappler appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs do not appeal. Kappler, as executor, claimed the property in dispute as belonging to the estate of Boye, deceased, denied Andrews' ownership, and alleged by an amendment filed during the trial that the deed under which Andrews claims title was executed by deceased while suffering from a cancer and under the influence of opiates, and while "his mind was in no fit condition" to transact business, and that the deed was executed through the "duress, menace, fraud, and undue influence of said Andrews" and "was against and without the consent and knowledge of said deceased." It appeared that some time in August, 1904, deceased, who was 70 years of age and had never married, and was then suffering from a cancer, went to San Francisco and was operated upon at a hospital; that defendant, Andrews, and intervener, Kappler, were both there and both were old acquaintances and friends of deceased. On September 1, 1904, while at the hospital and just before going to the operating table, deceased made a will, which was entirely in his own handwriting, by which he devised the property in question to Andrews and also made small bequests, among them one of $500 to intervener Kappler, who was named as executor of the will. The balance, including the property in question, was devised to Andrews. Some time early in September, 1904, deceased returned to his home ranch in Siskiyou county and to the property in question, and there remained until November 23, 1904, when he died. Prior thereto, to wit, on November 3, 1904, he executed a deed of the property in dispute to defendant, Andrews, and the question most seriously urged now by appellant is as to the delivery of this deed at the time of its execution. There was evidence tending to show that on November 3, 1904, deceased sent for Martin Marx, attorney at law and notary public, and stated to him that he desired to convey the land in question to defendant, Andrews, and that he wanted Marx to prepare a deed from deceased to Andrews, explaining to Marx what property he wanted to convey. Marx went to his office, prepared the deed, affixed his seal to the acknowledgment, but did not affix his signature thereto. He returned to the house of deceased, and, in the presence of the nurse of deceased and of Andrews read the deed to deceased and handed it to him, who signed it, whereupon Marx attested it by his signature as notary and handed it to deceased, who then handed it to Andrews. It appeared that, after the deed was delivered to Andrews, Boye expressed a wish that Kappler be given custody of the document, although he did not want him to know its contents, and that he be requested to have it recorded after Boye's death. Marx explained that, as the deed had been delivered to Andrews, Boye's wish could be accomplished without affecting the transfer. Thereupon Marx prepared one envelope in which was placed the deed, and the envelope was sealed and directed to the county recorder. This envelope was then placed in a larger envelope, which was directed to Kappler, and on it were written directions signed by Boye that, upon hearing of the death of Boye, Kappler was to open the package and send the inside envelope to the recorder. The reason assigned by Boye for this was that Kappler was his friend, and had been attending to some of his business, and already had the custody of his will, and he feared he might be offended if he was not intrusted with this document. It appeared that the package was delivered to Kappler, and at Boye's death he opened it and found the sealed envelope directed to the recorder, and the deed was accordingly delivered to the latter and duly recorded. As already stated, both Kappler and Andrews were with Boye at the hospital in San Francisco, and Kappler testified that a few days before Boye returned to his home he made a will and gave it to Kappler, and the latter came home with Boye and his nurse, and it was by this will that Boye devised to Andrews the property now in dispute. We do not deem it necessary to set out the testimony, for it is amply sufficient to sustain-the implied finding of the jury that the deed was executed by Boye and delivered to the grantee, Andrews, and was, in fact, the accomplishment of his wish previously expressed in his will. The evidence was wholly insufficient to warrant a finding that Boye was influenced unduly to make the deed by anything said or done by Andrews or that there was any force, menace, or fraud connected with the transaction, or that Boye was not in the full possession of his mental faculties and fully comprehended what he was doing. Boye was suffering physically from his ailment, but there was no evidence of mental impairment. There was evidence that at times his sufferings had to be relieved by hypodermic injections of opiates, but there was no evidence that at other times he was not entirely competent to transact business and there was evidence that he directed his affairs in considerable detail during the last month of his sickness.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The delivery of the deed to Andrews having been completed and its object effectuated, the subsequent custody by Kappler did not change the effect of the delivery, nor operate as a recall of the deed nor was it so intended. The purpose of placing it in the hands of Kappler to be recorded after the grantor's death was not inconsistent with the delivery shown, nor was it inconsistent with the intention of the grantor, which latter was clearly proven to have been to presently part with the title to the property and convey it to the grantee. The deed was, after its delivery, placed in Kappler's custody for the purpose only of recordation, and not for delivery to Andrews, and Kappler was therefore no more than the agent or bailee of both parties for that purpose only. What Boye's motive was for withholding the knowledge of the conveyance from Kappler is immaterial, for nothing remained to be done to complete the transfer of title to Andrews.

There are numerous assignments of error claimed to have occurred at the trial and in giving or refusing instructions to the jury which will be briefly disposed of. It was immaterial what debts deceased owed if before his death he had conveyed the property to Andrews, and, for like reason, it was immaterial that deceased was living on and in possession of the premises at his death. This latter fact would not prevent his conveying the property. Evidence of what Boye did and said after the delivery of the deed was inadmissible if in disparagement of Andrews' title; so, also, was evidence of his physical condition, unless it had some relation to his mental condition at the time the deed was executed which was not offered to be shown. His physical condition alone furnished no sufficient evidence of mental incapacity. A witness was asked whether or not Andrews was with Boye during his sickness "in a confidential relation." The objection was rightly sustained, as calling for the conclusion of the witness. It was immaterial whether the property remaining after the conveyance to Andrews would be sufficient to pay the debts and legacies mentioned in the will. The will took effect only at the testator's death, and he had a right to dispose of his property by deed before death.

The court instructed the jury that under the issues the plaintiffs must show that at the death of Boye he was the owner of the property in question and died intestate. Plaintiffs claimed that there was no will and alleged that deceased died intestate. Obviously it was upon them to show such to be the fact. It was the uncontradicted evidence that no claims had been presented to the executor, that notice to creditors had been duly published, and the time for presenting claims had elapsed. The court properly instructed the jury that, to entitle the executor to recover possession of the land in question, the jury must find from the evidence that at the time of his death the deceased had the right of ownership and possession of this land, and that it was subject to testamentary disposition, and had not in fact been conveyed to defendant Andrews. It was immaterial under the issues in the case whether there remained sufficient property to pay the debts, expenses of administration, and legacies if deceased had previously to his death conveyed the property in question to Andrews. The court gave an instruction stating the law, should the jury find the facts as to the delivery of the deed and its subsequent custody by Andrews, as we have above briefly given them, and instructing the jury that if they should find that the deed was in fact delivered "absolutely and without any restriction other than that it should be held by Charles Kappler in safe-keeping until the death of said Charles Frederick Boye and then be recorded in the office of the county recorder, then such delivery would have the effect in law to pass the title immediately upon its delivery by the said Charles Frederick Boye to Charles A. Andrews," and that the subsequent possession of the property by Boye "would not have the effect in law to revest or restore the ownership of the property in the grantor, Boye, which had vested in Andrews, if you find that it had so vested." The court also instructed the jury that a deed is presumed to have been delivered at its date, and that, delivery presumed or shown, the burden is then upon the party disputing that fact to show otherwise. We see no error in these instructions. The court also rightly instructed the jury that, if they should find that the deed was in fact executed and delivered, the burden of showing want of consideration was upon plaintiffs and interveners.

The court properly refused to instruct the jury that because it was admitted that on November 3, 1904, deceased was the owner of the property, it is presumed that, unless proved to the contrary, such ownership continued until his death. The previous instructions covered the proposition. The presumption of continuous ownership was met and overcome by the evidence. The evidence was wholly insufficient to cast the burden upon defendant Andrews to show the fairness of the transaction and, that it was free from fraud, artifice, or other undue means. It was not error to refuse to instruct the jury that such burden was upon defendant.

We do not deem it necessary to notice in detail the other instructions asked by defendant and refused by the court. Some of them relate to matters sufficiently covered by instructions given, others are incorrect statements of the law, and others are an invasion of the functions of the jury as the exclusive judges of the facts. The instructions as given fully and correctly stated the law to the jury.

We discover no prejudicial error in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

10 Cal. App. 471

LEMON v. HUBBARD et al. (Civ. 618.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 28, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 22, 1909.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 503*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JUDGMENTS IMPEACHABLE COLLATERALLY.

If the object of a plaintiff can be ascertained from the allegations of his complaint, and the court has power to grant the relief demanded and jurisdiction of the parties, the judgment is not open to a collateral attack, though the complaint may be bad in substance, and hence where a plaintiff suing on several causes of action to obtain a lien on a threshing outfit for work done thereon, under Civ. Code, § 3061, giving a lien to one performing work in, about, or upon a threshing machine, referred in his complaint to the statute, and in the first cause of action alleged that the work was done in, about, and upon the thresher, but omitted that averment in reciting the other causes of action, and claimed a lien thereon, stating that defendant claimed an interest in the thresher, the complaint sufficiently showed an intention to assert a lien against the thresher on account of the work, under the statute, so that a judgment for the whole sum demanded and directing sale of the thresher to satisfy the lien was not void and open to collateral attack; it affirmatively appearing that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 943; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 503*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JUDGMENTS IMPEACHABLE COLLATERALLY.

If the court erred in directing the sale of the thresher in the absence of averments in certain of the causes of action showing that the work had been performed in and upon the machine, or in rendering judgment for the whole amount claimed, and in excess of the amount found due under the first cause of action, such errors could only be corrected upon appeal or upon proper showing by motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, giving the court power to relieve a party from a judgment taken against him by mistake, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 943; Dec. Dig. § 503.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 127*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

An appeal lies from a default judgment, and defendant may also move to set it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 885; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 363*)—SETTING ASIDE—"PROCEEDING TAKEN AGAINST HIM."

In so far as a judgment for plaintiff is defective and fails to finally adjudicate his rights, it is a proceeding taken against him, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, giving the court power to relieve a party from a proceeding taken against him through his mistake, etc., and a plaintiff may invoke the aid of the section as well as a defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 705; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

5. JUDGMENT (§ 337*)—SETTING ASIDE—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, giving the court power to relieve a party from a judgment or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, etc., should be liberally construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 665; Dec. Dig. § 337.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 344*)—SETTING ASIDE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The vacating of a judgment or proceeding for mistake, surprise, etc., lies largely in the discretion of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 673; Dec. Dig. § 344.*]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 127*) — COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION — AMENDMENT OF PLEADING — NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where an action was brought on several causes of action under Civ. Code, § 3061, giving a lien to one performing work in, about, or upon a threshing machine, which lien extends for 10 days after the person ceases the work, but the complaint, as to all but one of the causes of action, failed to allege that the work was done in, about, or upon the threshing machine, an amendment to cure the defect was not a statement of a new cause of action, which would be barred by the 10-day limitation, but simply an allegation of omitted facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 545; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

8. ACTION (§ 1*) — "CAUSE OF ACTION" — "REMEDY."

A "cause of action" is distinguished from the "remedy," which is simply the means by which the obligation or corresponding action is effectuated, and also from the "relief" sought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1015-1019; vol. 8, pp. 7598-7784; vol. 7, pp. 6073-6075.]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

The vacating of a default judgment on plaintiff's motion and permitting him to amend his complaint, if error, was not prejudicial to defendant, since the effect was to re-establish defendant's rights as a litigant and entitle it to have determined any issues it might raise by answer, from which it had been debarred by default, which effect was the same as if defendant had procured a reversal on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4062; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by Frank Lemon against the Holt Manufacturing Company and another. There

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes was judgment for plaintiff, which on his motion was vacated and plaintiff given leave to file an amended complaint, and the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Charles G. Lamberson and Frank Lamberson, for appellant. C. L. Flack and Jacobs & Flack, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendant Holt Manufacturing Company from an order after judgment vacating such judgment and giving plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint.

The plaintiff on November 10, 1906, filed his complaint against defendants, in which he sets up as a first cause of action: That between June 1 and November 1, 1906, he had at the instance and request of defendant Hubbard performed work in, about, and upon a certain threshing machine, known as the "Holt Combined Harvester," while engaged in threshing and in the use and possession of Hubbard, all in the counties of Tulare and Kern; that Hubbard agreed to pay for said services $686, which sum was a reasonable compensation for such services, and no part of which has been paid, except the sum of $131.60; and that there remained due, owing, and unpaid from defendant Hubbard to plaintiff for such services the sum of $554.40; that the defendant Holt Manufacturing Company claimed some interest in said harvester, but that the same was subordinate to plaintiff's claim; that plaintiff claims a lien upon said steam harvester for such work and labor by the action commenced within 10 days after cessation of the work. In 13 subsequent causes of action plaintiff sets out the performance of work and labor by various persons at the request of Hubbard and the reasonable value thereof, that cessation from work was had on November 1, 1906, that each of said persons so performing said labor claimed a lien upon the Holt combined harvester, that each and all of said persons performing labor had assigned and transferred their claims for labor and the lien claimed thereunder to plaintiff, and that plaintiff claimed a lien by virtue of the act of March 21, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 618, c. 461), upon said combined steam thrasher for all of such work and labor, and in each cause of action it was averred that the Holt Manufacturing Company claimed some interest in said steam thrasher, subordinate, however, to the claim of lien of plaintiff. The prayer was for the aggregate amount of all of the claims for work and labor, including that of plaintiff and those assigned to him, for attorney's fees, for the enforcement and foreclosure of the lien of plaintiff as against the steam harvester and its appliances, under the act above mentioned, and that a special execution issue for the sale of said harvester. This complaint was verified, summons issued thereon and served upon defendants, and within due time, no appearance or answer having been filed, default of defendants was regularly entered, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Hubbard for the amount claimed in the complaint; and it was ordered and decreed that plaintiff had a lien on the steam harvester for the aggregate amount of such work and labor, and for certain attorney's fees and costs, and the execution was directed to issue for the sale of said harvester. That thereafter an execution was issued, and the same was levied upon said harvester. That thereupon the appellant paid into the hands of the clerk of the court, for the use of plaintiff, the sum of $580.40, the amount of the first cause of action, and instituted an action in claim and delivery against the sheriff under which he took possession of said threshing machine. Thereupon, on the 21st day of February, 1907, plaintiff moved the court to vacate the judgment theretofore entered in his favor, praying the court that he be permitted to file an amended complaint, setting forth that such judgment was made and entered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect of plaintiff, as shown by affidavits set out in the transcript. The court upon the hearing of this motion made its order vacating the original judgment and gave plaintiff leave to file an amended complaint, from which last-mentioned order this appeal is taken.

It will be observed that all of the causes of action, from the second to the fourteenth, inclusive, were incomplete, in that it is not averred that the work or labor was performed in, with, about, or upon the threshing machine. The act of March 21, 1905 (now section 3061, Civ. Code), gives a lien to any one performing work or labor in, about, or upon a threshing machine to the extent of the value of his services, which lien extends for 10 days after such person ceases such work or labor, provided within that time an action is brought to recover the amount of the claim. The original complaint clearly showed the intention of plaintiff to assert a lien against the harvester on account of the work and labor. This is manifest by the reference in the complaint to the thrasher and plaintiff's claim of lien thereon, the reference to the section of the law giving a lien for work and labor upon a thrasher, and the statement that appellant claimed an interest in such thrasher. It cannot be said that no cause of action was attempted to be stated which would entitle plaintiff to relief. "If the object of a plaintiff can be ascertained from the allegations of his complaint, and the court has power to grant the relief demanded, and jurisdiction of the parties, the judgment is not vulnerable to a collateral attack, although the complaint may in fact be bad in substance." Brush v. Smith, 141 Cal. 470, 75 Pac. 55; Crane v. Cummings, 137 Cal. 202, 69 Pac. 984. The true criticism of the complaint is in relation to its incompleteness in not fully developing the facts which entitled plaintiff to the relief demanded. In our opinion the judgment was not void; it affirmatively appearing that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person of defendant, and the relief was such as was demanded in the complaint and specified in the summons. If it were error upon the part of the court to render a judgment directing the sale of the harvester, in the absence of averments in certain causes of action showing that the work which had been performed by Hubbard was in and upon the machine, or in rendering a judgment within the amount claimed in the prayer but in excess of the amount found due by the first cause of action, nevertheless, it was a matter which could be corrected only upon appeal, or upon proper showing by motion, if made within the time limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Mayo v. Ah Loy, 32 Cal. 480, 91 Am. Dec. 595; Blondeau v. Snyder, 95 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 591; Wood v. Jordan, 125 Cal. 262, 57 Pac. 997. The apparent abandonment by plaintiff of his rights acquired under the levy was no doubt occasioned because he was apprehensive of the result of a direct attack upon his judgment by appeal. While it has generally been held that a default judgment is, in effect, a consent judgment, and that a direct appeal will not lie from a consent judgment, yet in this state, under the decision in Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 144 Cal. 3, 77 Pac. 662, it is apparent that the judgment would be open to attack by a direct appeal or by motion to vacate and set it aside. Plaintiff was therefore placed in a position where, through an appeal within the time limited by the statute, his judgment might be reversed. In so far as the judgment was defective and failed to finally adjudicate the rights of plaintiff, it was a proceeding taken against him, and it was permissible for him to invoke the aid afforded by section 473, Code Civ. Proc. Bernheim v. Cerf, 123 Cal. 170, 55 Pac. 759. That a plaintiff as well as a defendant may invoke the relief provided by section 473, Code Civ. Proc., has been frequently decided. That such section should be liberally construed is established. That the granting of such relief is largely within the discretion of the court is unquestioned. The effect of the order vacating the judgment under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., was only affording such relief as could have been obtained through a reversal on account of the error involved in the incompleteness of the complaint. It follows therefore that, while the judgment so rendered was valid and enforceable and not subject to collateral attack, the order vacating the same on account of the error was not improper, having in view the rights of litigants to have their controversies speedily and effectively determined. In making this order, even though no direct attack by defendant had been made, the court was exercising its jurisdiction in a pending proceeding, and in granting such relief the rights of appellant were in no wise prejudiced, provided, of course, that the amendment proposed—which was only to the effect that the work and labor was performed upon the machine—was not in fact stating a new cause of action; for, when the judgment was vacated, either upon plaintiff's motion, as was done here, or by appeal by appellant, the effect was the same. In either case the appellant's rights were re-established as a litigant through which it was entitled to litigate and have determined any issues which by answer it might raise, from which it had been barred by its default. Under the allegations of the original complaint and the manifest intent thereof, the amendment proposed was not the statement of a new cause of action which would be barred by the 10-day limitation, for appellant was a defendant to the original complaint and served with process before the statute had run in its favor. Jeffers v. Cook, 58 Cal. 150. Against appellant, the action was commenced by the assignee of those who did the work. The amendment did not go to establishing any other cause of action against the parties before the court, but simply to allege omitted facts under which the relief as against the property could be effectively granted. "The 'cause of action' is to be distinguished from the 'remedy'—which is simply the means by which the obligation or the corresponding action is effectuated—and also from the 'relief' sought." Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 426, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53, and cases cited; Frey v. Vignier, 145 Cal. 251, 78 Pac. 733; People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 5 Cal. App. 440, 90 Pac. 556.

In our opinion therefore there was no error in granting the relief to plaintiff by the order made, the affidavits disclosing, as they did, such mistakes as would warrant the court in granting the relief, and, were even such error conceded, the same was in no sense prejudicial to appellant.

Order affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 447

CLAVO v. CLAVO et al. (Civ. 602.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 27, 1909.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 247*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—STATUTORY PROVISION—CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND.

Prior to the amendment of Civ. Code, § 172, by Act March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 425, c. 220), providing that a husband cannot make a gift of community property or convey the same without a valuable consideration without the wife's consent in writing, the husband had the power to convey community property without the wife's consent, and the amendment is not retroactive and does not deprive the husband of his vested right to dispose by gift, without the wife's consent, of community property acquired prior to such amendment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 879; Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 267*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—CONVEYANCE IN FRAUD OF WIFE.

The failure of a husband to take title to community property in the name of his wife, in accordance with his promise to her, and his subsequent transfer of the property, do not constitute a fraud upon the wife unless done with a fraudulent intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 930; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; L. G. Harrier, Judge.

Action by Ann Clavo against John Clavo and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Kierce & Gillogley, for appellant. Bell, York & Bell and Theo. A. Bell, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to set aside a deed to real property as void. Defendants had judgment, from which plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll.

It was alleged in the complaint and found by the court: That plaintiff and N. Clavo (now deceased) intermarried in January, 1879, and shortly thereafter and prior to 1890 acquired the property in question as community property; that at the time the purchase of said property was made the said N. Clavo agreed that the deed should be made to Ann Clavo, plaintiff, but said deed was not so made, of which fact plaintiff was ignorant by reason of her incapability to read; that on January 17, 1893, the said N. Clavo conveyed said property by deed of gift to the defendants Joseph Clavo and John Clavo, without consideration; that said N. Clavo, by gift deeds disposed of all the real and other property belonging to the community of plaintiff and her said husband (but at what time does not appear), by reason whereof "the rights of plaintiff in her full share of the community property were endangered and dissipated"; and that he thus "deprived himself of the means of supporting his wife, plaintiff herein, and those dependent upon him, and plaintiff was obliged to seek and obtain aid and support from her son by a former marriage." As a conclusion of law the court found that plaintiff has no interest in the property the subject of the action, and that defendants are entitled to judgment. The question here involved arises under section 172 of the Civil Code, which relates to the power of the husband over community property, as amended March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 425, c. 220), by the following provision: "Provided, however, that he (the husband) cannot make a gift of such community property, or convey the same without a valuable consideration, unless the wife, in writing, consent thereto." The property in question was acquired prior to 1891, and the question is: Could the husband convey it by gift after the amendment of 1891 without his wife's consent given in writing?

It is conceded by appellant that the reasoning in Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, sustains the judgment in this case; but it is contended that the facts in the two cases differ, and, furthermore, it is claimed that the question was not necessarily involved in the Spreckels Case, and what was there said on the subject was "pure dictum." An examination of the reported case will show that the parties to the action treated the point decided as involved, and the opinion is devoted almost entirely to its consideration. It was there decided that prior to the amendment of 1891 to section 172 of the Civil Code, forbidding the husband to give away community property without the consent of the wife in writing, the Code vested in the husband all the elements of absolute ownership of the community property, to the exclusion of the wife, whose interest was a mere expectancy, and, as to all the world except the wife, there was, prior to the amendment, no distinction between the community estate and the separate estate of the husband as respects the power of disposition, and the amendment of the Code cannot be construed retroactively so as to deprive the husband of his vested right to dispose by gift of community property which was acquired prior to the amendment, without the written consent of the wife. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Temple, concurred in by Justices Henshaw, Harrison, and McFarland. Chief Justice Beatty concurred in the judgment, as he stated, "but upon a somewhat narrower ground than that taken in the opinion of Mr. Justice Temple." A rehearing was denied, and we cannot doubt but that the result reached on the question was the deliberate and thoroughly well-considered judgment of the court, which it is our duty to follow.

It is also urged that the transactions as pleaded imply fraud of such character as to warrant the annulment of the deed. The deed in question was executed on January 17, 1893, and the action was not brought until November 7, 1905, and the husband was living when it was commenced. There are no allegations of fraud in the complaint, and no finding of fraud was made by the court. The only averment from which appellant infers fraud is that relating to the agreement that the deed to the property was to be in her name; but there is no averment that her husband caused it to be made in his name through any fraudulent intent. His gift conveyance was not fraudulent in itself, and, if claimed to have been so in fact, it should have been pleaded and proved. The averments that he subsequently (when does not appear) conveyed by gift his remaining property presented no issue in this case, and no relief was asked because thereof; but even as to these transactions it is not alleged, nor is it found, that they were consummated with any fraudulent intent.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 484

RYAN v. OAKLAND GAS, LIGHT & HEAT CO. (Civ. 566.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 29, 1909. Rehearing Denied May 27, 1909; Denied by Supreme Court June 28, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 256*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.

In an action for injuries received by plaintiff by the falling in of the walls of the trench where he was at work, plaintiff alleged that the falling in was due to the nature of the soil, but on the trial it was disclosed by evidence that defendant, about a year prior to the accident, had excavated another trench close to the one in which plaintiff was injured, which had been filled up. Held, that it was proper to allow plaintiff to amend his complaint, setting up the digging of such trench as the cause of the weakening of the walls of the trench in which he was injured, as such amendment only states an additional fact, developed during the trial, as to the cause of the falling in of the walls of the trench.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 815; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 217*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECT OR DANGER.

Where a servant employed to dig a trench knows the kind of soil, and all the facts and circumstances surrounding the employment, and the danger to which he is exposed, he assumes the risk of the trench caving in upon him, unless the cause of the caving in of the walls is hidden and is unknown to the servant, but is known to the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 584; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS FOR JURY—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Const. art. 6, § 19, forbids judges to charge as to matters of fact, but permits them to state the testimony and declare the law. In an action for injuries to a servant, received by the caving in of the walls of a trench, which were not braced, the court charged that any duty of defendant to brace the side of the trench was partially discharged if it furnished the materials for braces, competent men to put them in, and a competent man to see that it was done. If these persons were guilty of negligence in not bracing the trench, and it caved, the act being one which it was the duty of the employer to perform, the defendant company was responsible. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, as taking from the jury, the duty of the defendant to brace the trench, which was one of the issues in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 466; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where contradictory instructions are given, and it cannot be told which one the jury followed, the case will be reversed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4219; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 527*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EFFECT OF DIGGING TRENCH.

In an action against a master for injuries caused by the caving in of the walls of the trench in which plaintiff was at work, evidence of a civil engineer as to the effect of digging a small trench near the one in question as weakening the walls of the trench was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2334; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The admission of expert testimony to prove an undisputed fact of common knowledge is not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4163; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Mathew Ryan against the Oakland Gas, Light & Heat Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Myrick & Deering, for appellant. Fitzgerald & Abbott, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff by reason of defendant's negligence in allowing the walls of a trench in which plaintiff was working to fall upon him. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, on which judgment was duly entered. The court denied the motion of the defendant for a new trial, and this appeal is from the judgment and order denying said motion.

The court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit, as there is evidence sufficient to support the verdict. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss the evidence in detail, and we will not do so, except so far as necessary to the discussion of other questions raised by appellant.

There was no error in allowing the plaintiff to amend the complaint during the progress of the trial. In the original complaint the negligence of defendant was alleged to consist in its failure to brace the walls of the trench where plaintiff was engaged in digging the earth and deepening the trench; it being alleged that the plaintiff did not know of the danger to which he was exposed, and that such danger was well known to the defendant. The language of the original complaint as to the particular facts is as follows: "That the upper stratum of the wall and bank of said trench, which at said time and place fell and caved in on plaintiff, as hereinafter stated, was to plaintiff, and to the common understanding, apparently, visibly and palpably composed of a compact adobe or clay soil about 2 feet thick, on which grass was growing. That the middle and lower portion of said wall and bank was to plaintiff, and to the common understanding, apparently, visibly and palpably of a slightly damp, firm soil, in which were no cracks. That said wall and bank, to plaintiff's eye and mind, and as a matter of common observation, showed no danger of falling or caving in on plaintiff, without being propped, or braced, or secured, and showed no evidence of weakness. That as a matter of fact the said wall or bank was not of a stable or fixed nature, and the soil of which it was composed was not of the firm, solid, and compact character which, from its outward side, plaintiff believed it to be, as aforesaid, but, on the contrary, was composed of loose earth that had been used to fill in said street. Its said outward side was only about 3 feet distant from a brick wall possessed by, and in the use of, defendant, and fronting on said Grove street, and against which brick wall said side of said trench rested. That because of the said character of said soil of said side of said trench, and its said situation, the said bank of said trench, when said trench was excavated to the depth of 5 or 6 feet, as aforesaid, was liable to, as it in fact did, as hereinafter stated, fall away from said brick wall and cave in."

It was disclosed by the evidence during the trial that the defendant, about a year prior to the accident to plaintiff, had had excavated another trench, about 18 inches deep, and about 2 feet wide, between the said brick wall and the trench where plaintiff was working, and had laid therein an iron pipe, after which the said small trench was refilled with earth, so as to leave no visible trace of its having been excavated. It was the theory of the plaintiff, upon such facts being developed, that the small trench that had been excavated and filled with earth about a year prior to the time the plaintiff was injured, as it ran parallel with, and very near to, the trench in which plaintiff was at work, weakened the wall of the trench where plaintiff was at work, and thus caused the wall on the side nearest the old trench to give way and fall in on plaintiff. Plaintiff claimed that he knew nothing about the digging of the old trench until it developed during the trial. In the amended complaint the plaintiff stated said new matter as follows: "That on or about one year prior to the 5th day of July, 1904, the said defendant excavated another trench about 18 inches deep and 2 feet wide between said brick wall and the said trench where said plaintiff was working, parallel therewith for 20 feet or more, and about 2 feet distant therefrom, and laid an iron pipe about 2 inches in diameter in the said trench excavated prior to July 5, 1904, as aforesaid, and then filled in said last-mentioned trench so as to leave no visible trace thereof; that the excavating of the last-mentioned trench and the laying of an iron pipe therein, as aforesaid, weakened the wall of the trench in which plaintiff was working, and made it dangerous to the life, body, and limbs of plaintiff while employed as aforesaid, unless the walls and banks of said last-mentioned trench were properly braced; that plaintiff was never informed by defendant, and was entirely ignorant of the fact, that another trench had been excavated as aforesaid between said brick wall and the trench in which he was working, as herein set forth."

The evidence tended to show a different or additional cause for the caving of the trench in which plaintiff was working other than that specifically set forth in the original complaint. In our opinion, if it was necessary to set up such facts in the complaint, it was not only in the discretion of the court to allow the amendment, but it properly allowed it in furtherance of justice, and with a view to disposing of the case on its merits. The jurors and the witnesses were present, and the trial was in progress, and then and there was the time for the court to liberally exercise its discretion in allowing amendments for the purpose of arriving at the truth. No doubt but that if the amendment had necessitated a continuance or required further evidence on the part of defendant, such continuance would have been granted upon such terms as would have been just and proper; but it does not appear that the defendant was taken by surprise, or that any continuance was asked for. The amendment did not state any new cause of action. The cause of action was based upon defendant's negligence, which it is alleged caused the wall to cave in upon plaintiff. The amendment only stated another and additional fact, developed during the trial, which plaintiff claimed caused, or contributed to, the falling in of the bank of the trench.

The court committed prejudicial error in refusing to give defendant's instruction numbered 19, and in giving it as modified by the court without the consent of defendant. Under the pleadings in the case it was made an issue as to whether or not it was the duty of the defendant to brace the walls of the trench. It is alleged that the wall "fell and caved in on plaintiff, whereby, and because of the said carelessness and negligence of defendant and its said superintendent and vice principal in failing and neglecting to brace and secure said bank and wall to prevent it from falling and caving in * * *" plaintiff was injured. The answer denied that the "place was dangerous to the life, body, or limbs of plaintiff while employed therein, unless the walls and banks of said trench were braced and secured from falling or caving in on plaintiff while standing therein, and denies on information and belief that said danger consisted in the liability that the walls or banks might fall or cave in on plaintiff, while working in the trench in which he was employed, because of the character of the soil." The answer further denied and averred as follows: "Denies that plaintiff was, on the 5th day of July, 1904, when working in said trench, inexperienced as to, or ignorant of, or did not know, the risks and danger to his life, body, and limbs attendant upon said excavation and construction of said trench to the depth and width in said complaint alleged, and to the depth and width in which said trench actually was excavated at the time of said accident, without having the said bank and walls braced and secured; avers that the danger of said walls or banks falling or caving in on plaintiff was as apparent, visible, and palpable to plaintiff, and as open to common observation, as to this defendant, and further avers that it was a risk and peril commonly incident to plaintiff's employment, and a peril which could have been discovered by the use of ordinary care, and in this behalf denies that the said danger was not apparent or visible or palpable to plaintiff, or open to common observation, and denies that it was not a danger or peril commonly incident to plaintiff's employment, or a peril which he could have discovered by the use of ordinary care."

If the plaintiff knew the kind of soil in which the ditch or trench was being excavated, and all the facts and circumstances surrounding the same, and the danger, if any, to which he was exposed, he took upon himself the risk and the peril incident to his employment. Ordinarily a laborer employed to dig a trench 4 or 5 feet deep, where the surface of the earth had not been disturbed on some prior occasion, and where there was no hidden or unknown danger, would do so at his own risk, and could not recover for injuries caused by an unforeseen accident. In this case, however, the plaintiff attempted to show an exception to the general rule by proving that the bank caved by reason of a hidden cause known to the defendant, and unknown to the plaintiff, and that such hidden cause made it incumbent on defendant to brace the banks of the trench so as not to endanger the plaintiff while working therein. It was therefore the pivotal point in the case as to whether the locality of the trench, and its proximity to a danger known to defendant and unknown to the plaintiff, made it incumbent on the defendant, and a part of its duty, to brace the walls of the trench where plaintiff was working. Defendant claimed, and offered evidence to prove, that it furnished materials, implements and competent workmen to brace the trench wherever necessary, and that it did all it could do when it so supplied materials and fellow workmen to keep the place where plaintiff was at work in a safe condition. In accordance with this theory it offered the following instruction, numbered 19, and asked that it be given to the jury, to wit: "A master is not bound to follow the details of the work which he has employed others to do. So far as any duty on the part of the defendant is concerned to brace the side of the trench, the defendant company discharged that duty when it furnished the material to brace, furnished competent men to put in the braces, and a competent man to see that it was done. If these persons were guilty of negligence in not bracing the trench, and it caved, the defendant company cannot be charged with negligence, or held liable for the damages resulting to plaintiff from such caving." The court refused to give said instruction, but modified it so that it read as follows: "A master is not bound to follow the details of the work which he has employed others to do. So far as any duty on the part of the defendant is concerned to brace the side of the trench, the defendant company partially discharged that duty if it furnished the materials to brace, furnished competent men to put in the braces, and a competent man to see that it was done. If these persons were guilty of negligence in not bracing the trench, and it caved, the act being one which it was the duty of the employer to perform, the defendant company is responsible"—and gave it as thus modified.

It is thus seen that the court refused to instruct the jury that the defendant discharged its duty if it furnished the material with which to brace the trench and competent men to put in the braces, but that in such case the defendant had only partially discharged its duty. It also instructed the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to brace the trench. We cannot read the instruction with any other meaning; "the act being one which it was the duty of the employer to perform." In other words, the jurors were told that, if the defendant furnished the material with which to brace the trench, and competent men to see that the bracing was done, and the men did not brace the trench, the defendant failed to perform its duty, and "the defendant company is responsible." Whether the depth of the soil, the hidden causes known only to defendant, and the character of the soil were such facts as to make it the duty of the defendant to brace the trench was a question peculiarly for the determination of the jury. We cannot say that the instruction was not injurious to defendant. It took away from the jury the right to decide as to whether it was the duty of the defendant to brace the trench. It told them that, if the men employed by defendant to brace the trench did not brace it, the defendant was guilty of negligence and responsible.

The court submitted special issues to the jury as to whether or not defendant provided lumber, materials, and implements sufficient in quantity and quality so that the walls of the trench might be braced, and as to whether or not it furnished men, and gave instructions to so brace the trench. It was perfectly useless to submit such issues to the jury when the court informed them that it was the duty of the defendant to brace the trench. It was an admitted fact that the trench was not braced. The jury was thus told that it was the defendant's duty to brace the trench, and, in effect, told that the employees of defendant did not brace it, and that the defendant was responsible.

It is declared in the Constitution of the state (article 6, § 19): "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." In Weiderkind v. Tuolumne C. W. Co., 65 Cal. 431, 4 Pac. 415, the court below instructed the jury: "If you find from the evidence that the defendant did not have sufficient gates to let out the water, so as to prevent any break that occurred below the top of the dam from being enlarged by the continual flow of the waters through it, then said dam was insufficiently and negligently constructed. It should have had gates sufficient to let all the water out by degrees so as to prevent a flood below by a sudden breakage of the dam." The judgment was reversed, and the court said: "The court might as well have charged them that, if the dam was not of certain dimensions, or constructed of a particular kind of material, it was insufficiently and negligently constructed. The defendant had a right to have the opinion of the jury on those questions."

In City of Santa Ana v. Gildmacher, 133 Cal. 395, 65 Pac. 883, it appeared that the court, in an action to condemn a strip of land for a sewer, instructed the jury to find for the defendant on the question of the necessity for the condemnation; and the instruction was held to be a charge as to a matter of fact, and erroneous. The court said that the question as to the necessity of the condemnation is one of fact, to be determined by the jury in view of all the evidence in the case. See, further, Holloway v. Pasadena, etc., Ry. Co., 130 Cal. 177, 62 Pac. 478; Manning v. App. Cons. G. M. Co., 149 Cal. 35, 84 Pac. 657; Hampton v. Occidental, etc., S. S. Co., 139 Cal. 706, 73 Pac. 579; Kerrigan v. Market St. Ry. Co., 138 Cal. 506, 71 Pac. 621. In the last-mentioned case the court instructed the jury: "In connection with the foregoing instruction I further charge you that stakes or uprights were a necessary part of said flat car as it was used on May 3, 1898; that said stakes were appliances within the rule which requires a master to furnish, with reasonable care, proper and adequate appliances for the purpose of carrying on the proposed work." The court in its opinion, in which it held the instruction to be erroneous, and a charge as to a matter of fact, said: "The court practically told the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to adjust proper stakes or uprights on said car on the day of the accident. Whether or not it was defendant's duty to do so was, in view of certain evidence relied on by the defendant, for the jury to determine from all the evidence in the case."

The instruction is not only erroneous in the respect pointed out, but it is contradictory of another instruction, numbered 24, in which the court stated to the jury as follows: "Thus you are instructed that, if you find that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the falling of the side of the trench because it was not braced or shored up, yet if you also find that the defendant did furnish materials to brace the banks of the trench so that it could not fall, and also a carpenter to aid in putting in such bracing, and that the plaintiff and said carpenter were engaged in the same general employment, then I instruct you that the neglect to brace the banks was the neglect of fellow servants of the plaintiff, and that he cannot recover damages herein, but that your verdict must be for the defendant." In this instruction the jurors were told that the neglect to brace the banks by fellow servants was not the neglect of defendant, and that in such case the verdict must be for the defendant; while in instruction numbered 19, hereinbefore quoted, the jurors were told that for negligence of the men "in not bracing the trench, the act being one which it was the duty of the employer to perform, the defendant company is responsible." Where instructions are inconsistent and contradictory, and it is impossible to tell which instruction was followed by the jury in reaching their verdict, the case will be reversed. Sappenfield v. Main St., etc., R. R. Co., 91 Cal. 48, 27 Pac. 590; People v. Westlake, 124 Cal. 452, 57 Pac. 465; Lemasters v. S. P. Co., 131 Cal. 105, 63 Pac. 128; Quint v. Dimond, 147 Cal. 707, 82 Pac. 310.

The court did not err in admitting the evidence of the civil engineer Brier as to the effect of the old and small trench, and the pipe laid therein, upon weakening the walls of the trench in which plaintiff was working. While it would probably appear to most practical men that the effect of such small ditch and the pipe being laid therein would be to weaken the walls of the ditch in which plaintiff was working, yet we are not prepared to say that such fact would be a matter of common knowledge to the extent that the testimony of an expert would not be admissible. Fraternal Construction Co. v. Jackson (Ky.) 89 S. W. 265; Quigley v. H. W. Johnson Mfg. Co., 26 App. Div. 434, 50 N. Y. Supp. 98; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017. If it be conceded that the matter was one of common knowledge, it was not prejudicial error in this case to admit the evidence. The evidence of an expert as to an undisputed fact of common knowledge could not injure any one.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss any other point. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

155 Cal. 599

WORTH v. WORTH. (L. A. No. 2,277.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 143*) — ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS.

There is a sufficient acknowledgment in writing of the indebtedness to take it out of the operation of the statute, where an attorney, having full charge of the matter for the mortgagee to the knowledge of the mortgagor, wrote the mortgagor in regard to renewing or paying the note, in view of the fact that it would soon outlaw; and the mortgagor replied that he thought an agreement to extend the old mortgage would be enough, but would make a new one if necessary, and that nothing ever outlawed with him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 597-603; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

2. LIENS (§ 16*)—LOSS—LAPSE OF TIME.

A lien is not extinguished by lapse of time, so long as the principal obligation is kept alive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 193*)—OBJECTION NOT MADE BELOW.

Objection that the amended complaint contained an additional cause of action cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1226-1240; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADINGS.

Insertion of a second cause of action in the complaint was harmless; the relief being based solely on the first cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 750*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—SPECIFICATIONS—NECESSITY.

The question of sufficiency of the evidence to warrant certain findings cannot be considered on appeal; the record showing no specification of any particular wherein the evidence was insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3079; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 750*)—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR—SCOPE.

The facts on which is based the objection that the court erred in allowing counsel fees in a mortgage foreclosure suit, and that otherwise the judgment was excessive, being shown on the face of the findings, the point is available on a claim that the findings do not sustain the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3074-3083; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

7. MORTGAGES (§ 581*)—FORECLOSURE—COUNSEL FEES.

A mortgage, though containing no provision for counsel fees, being given to secure a note, secures the counsel fees provided in the note in case of suit to enforce it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1669-1679; Dec. Dig. § 581.*]

8. MORTGAGES (§ 581*)—FORECLOSURE—COUNSEL FEES.

The mortgage containing no provision for counsel fees, none other than provided in the note can be allowed on foreclosure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1669-1679; Dec. Dig. § 581.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 238*)—REVIEW—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

Objection that the findings do not support the judgment is not waived by failure to proceed in the lower court by motion, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663½, to have a proper judgment entered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1348-1352; Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Minnie Worth against C. Worth. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

F. E. Davis and J. W. Cochran, for appellant. E. A. Meserve, for appellee.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, in an action brought by plaintiff to foreclose the lien of a mortgage given by defendant to plaintiff, to secure the payment of a promissory note dated February 15, 1899, for $2,500, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and payable March 1, 1902.

1. It appears from the amended complaint that this action was not commenced until shortly after the expiration of four years from the maturity of the note. A demurrer was interposed to the amended complaint, based on the ground that it appears on the face thereof that said action is barred by section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prescribes four years as the period within which an action must be brought on a written contract. The amended complaint, however, contained allegations which, in our opinion, made it good as against this demurrer. In addition to other acknowledgments alleged, it was alleged as follows: On January 30, 1906 (several weeks before the expiration of the four-year period), Mr. Meserve, the attorney for the plaintiff, who, to defendant's knowledge, had full charge of this matter for plaintiff, wrote to defendant, as follows: "January 30, 1906. C. Worth, Esq.—Dear Sir: Mrs. Minnie Worth has called my attention again to the fact that your note to her for $2,500.00, dated Feb. 15, 1899, due March 1, 1902, will outlaw during the month of February next, and has asked me to take the matter up with you looking to its renewal or payment. Will you please give the matter your immediate attention, and oblige, Yours very truly, Edwin A. Meserve." To this, defendant immediately responded as follows: "Los Angeles, Cal., 2—2, 1906. Edwin A. Meserve, City—Dear Sir: In response to the mortgage referred to in yours of recent date. I see no necessity of making a new mortgage. An agreement extending the old mortgage will have the same effect, won't it; however if you must have a new mortgage will make it. Nothing ever outlaws with me. Truly yours, C. Worth." It was further alleged that plaintiff would have commenced her action prior to March 1, 1906, but for said statement and offer to renew, upon which she relied. Counsel for defendant have not pointed out why this was not a sufficient acknowledgment in writing of the indebtedness to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations, and we can conceive of no reason why it did not have such effect. See Foster v. Bowles, 138 Cal. 346, 351, 71 Pac. 494, 649, and cases there cited. A lien is not extinguished by lapse of time, so long as the principal obligation is kept alive. See Weinberger v. Weidman, 134 Cal. 600, 66 Pac. 869. The demurrer was properly overruled.

2. Some complaint is made on this appeal that the amended complaint contained a second cause of action based on the note alone, and without any allegation as to the mortgage. No objection by way of demurrer or otherwise was made to this joinder, and the relief granted by the judgment was based wholly on the allegations contained in the first count. We cannot see that any objection on this ground is now available to defendant, or that he could have been prejudiced in the slightest degree by the insertion of this cause of action.

3. It is urged in the briefs that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant certain of the findings of fact, but a sufficient answer to this claim is that the record on appeal fails to show any specification of any particular wherein the evidence was insufficient. This is not a case of alleged insufficient specifications, but a case of no attempt at specification at all. We are therefore precluded from considering the question suggested.

4. It is claimed that counsel fees were not secured under the terms of the mortgage, and that the court, therefore, erred in making the amount allowed plaintiff therefor, $175, a lien on the mortgaged premises, and payable out of the proceeds of the foreclosure sale. The facts upon which this objection is based are shown on the face of the findings, and the point is available to defendant on a claim that the findings do not sustain the judgment. But there is no force in the objection on its merits. The language of the mortgage as to counsel fees is practically the same as that contained in the mortgage in Klokke v. Escailer, 124 Cal. 297, 56 Pac. 1113, where it was held that the counsel fees were not secured by the mortgage. But this case differs from that, in that the note here itself contains a provision for "7% on principal, as attorney's fees in such suit" in the event that suit is commenced to enforce payment of the note. The mortgage was given to secure "said note," which included the contract to pay the attorney fee provided for therein. The attorney fee was therefore secured by the mortgage. The case in this respect is the same as County Bank v. Goldtree, 129 Cal. 160, 163, 61 Pac. 785, and Peachy v. Witter, 131 Cal. 316, 319, 63 Pac. 468. The amount allowed was, however, excessive. The trial court was not warranted in allowing more on this account than was stipulated for in the note. The findings show that there was due on the principal only $2,220, so that the utmost the trial court could properly allow was $155.40. The amount allowed should be decreased by $19.60. We do not understand that a party waives his objection that the findings do not support the judgment by a failure to proceed in the lower court by motion, under sections 663 and 663½, to have a proper judgment entered.

5. In another respect, shown by the findings, is the judgment excessive. It is specifically found that defendant has paid $1,740 on account of said note, $1,460 thereof being interest thereon to May 15, 1906, and $280 thereof being on account of the principal. While it is further said that this leaves $2,320 due on the principal, it is manifest that this conclusion cannot be true, and that the balance due for principal was only $2,220. It thus appears indisputably from the figures found by the trial court that the amount due at the date of the findings and decree, July 29, 1907, on account of principal and interest, was $2,434.06, instead of $2,586.07, the amount adjudged, a difference in favor of defendant of $152.01. This objection we think is also available to defendant, as an objection that the findings do not support the judgment.

There is no other point requiring notice.

It is ordered that the judgment be, and the same is hereby, modified by inserting the amount "$2,434.06" in lieu of the amount "$2,586.07" wherever the same occurs therein, and also by inserting the amount "$155.40" in lieu of the amount "$175.00" wherever the same occurs therein; and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

(155 Cal. 604.)

PEOPLE ex rel. SCHOLLER v. CITY OF LONG BEACH. (L. A. 2,230.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 34*)—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—ELECTION.

Under the statute relative to the annexation of territory to cities, and providing that the question shall be submitted to the qualified electors residing in the territory to be annexed, and that the election shall be held in conformity with the general election laws, a temporary resident of the territory, not a resident in the sense that would qualify him to vote at a general election, was not qualified to vote on the question of annexation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

2. QUO WARRANTO (§ 29*)—LACHES.

August 16, 1905, an election was held under St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247, for the purpose of annexing certain territory to the city of B., and the vote in favor of annexation was certified to the Secretary of State August 22d. Proceedings to annex part of the same territory to the city of P. were pending when the B. proceeding was begun. An election for the annexation to P. was held September 5th, and the result in favor of annexation was certified September 7th. Another proceeding for the annexation of still another part of the same territory to P. was afterwards had, whereby the same was certified as annexed November 30, 1906. From the beginning the legality of the annexation to B. was in dispute, and March 30, 1907, quo warranto proceedings were commenced to determine the validity of the annexation to B. Held, that the state was not estopped by delay and recognition to question by quo warranto the validity of the annexation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 33*)—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY.

Deering's Gen. Laws, p. 638, § 2 (St. 1889, p. 371, c. 251), providing for the organization of cities under which the city of B. was organized, provide that the county board of supervisors shall establish the boundaries which shall remain until by action authorized by law for the annexation of additional territory the boundaries shall be changed. St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247, provides a scheme for annexation of territory, and declares that the boundaries of any city may be altered and new territory annexed by proceedings to be had as provided for in the statute. Const. art. 11, § 6, declares that cities shall not be created by special laws, but that the Legislature by general laws shall provide for the organization of cities, and that all special charters shall be subject to and controlled by general laws. The city of B. attempted to annex territory, but the proceedings were legally ineffectual to accomplish the result, and thereafter the city adopted a charter prepared by a board of freeholders as provided in Const. art. 11, § 8. Held, that the fact that such charter described the boundaries of the city of B. as including the territory which the city had sought to annex did not accomplish an annexation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Quo warranto by the People by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, on the relation of T. E. Scholler, to determine the right of the city of Long Beach to exercise corporate jurisdiction over Terminal Island. From a judgment for the People, and from an order denying a new trial, respondent appeals. Affirmed.

Stephen G. Long (Ralph C. Harrison, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Henry Stieglitz, and J. W. McKinley, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action in quo warranto to determine the right of the defendant, as a municipal corporation, to exercise corporate jurisdiction and control over certain adjacent territory comprising a seaside summer resort now usually known as Terminal Island. A proceeding was had under the act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), for the purpose of annexing this territory to the city of Long Beach. An election to determine such annexation was held on August 16, 1905. In the territory proposed to be annexed the election officers made return that 73 votes were cast in favor of the annexation and 72 votes against it. The vote in the original city being favorable, a record of the result was made and certified to the Secretary of State and filed by him on August 22, 1905, and ever since that date the said city has claimed the right to exercise municipal control over the said territory, upon the theory that it had been duly annexed to the city by said proceeding. The same proceeding was under consideration by this court in Haskell v. Long Beach, 153 Cal. 543, 96 Pac. 92, a suit by a private person. In that case certain alleged informalities and defects in the ballots cast at the annexation election were held to be lawful and the attempt to annul the proceedings in that action failed. In the case at bar the complaint alleged that 17 persons who voted in favor of annexation at the election in the territory to be annexed were not at that time residents of said territory, hence not entitled to vote; that a majority of the legal votes cast in said territory was against the annexation; and that, therefore, the proceeding was void. This question was not presented in the Haskell Case. The court below found that two of these persons, Patterson and Blankenhorn, were not at the time residents of the territory and were not lawful voters at said election; that they voted thereat in favor of annexation; and that without these votes there was not a majority for the annexation. Upon this ground judgment was given declaring that the territory was not a part of the city of Long Beach. Appeals are taken both from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. A bill of exceptions presents the evidence on the subject.

The evidence shows that for some years prior to 1905 these two persons had been residents and householders without the territory, each living with his family in a house owned by himself, Mr. Patterson in Los Angeles, and Mr. Blankenhorn in Pasadena, and that it had been customary for each of them to live with his family at Terminal Island for several months in the summer season, usually the months of July, August, and September, each returning to his home at the end of the outing. Patterson owned the house which he occupied at Terminal Island. Blankenhorn rented and occupied a furnished house while there. This custom they followed in 1905, going to the seaside with their respective families about the 1st of July and returning the latter part of September. Neither of them testified that at the time he was there in 1905 he had any intention to make Terminal Island his home, or to reside there permanently, and there were many circumstances in evidence indicating the absence of such intention. Without further recital of the evidence, it is sufficient to say that, while each of them doubtless honestly believed that he had a legal right to vote at the annexation election, the evidence was sufficient as to each to support a finding that he had not such legal residence and was not entitled to vote. The statute requires that the proposition of annexation shall be submitted "to the electors residing in the territory proposed" to be annexed, at a special election held for that purpose; that "the qualified electors residing in said territory so proposed to be annexed shall be entitled to vote upon such proposition"; and that "the holding and conducting of such election shall be in conformity, as far as may be, with the general laws of this state concerning elections." Under these provisions, no one would be lawfully entitled to vote at such election, unless he was at the time a permanent resident of the territory, a resident in the sense that he would be a qualified elector therein at a general election if, prior thereto, his residence therein had continued for the required time. See Huston v. Anderson, 145 Cal. 328, 78 Pac. 626. It is not necessary here to inquire with respect to one who had taken up his permanent residence there whether such residence must have continued for any specified period prior to the election in order to entitle him to vote. Patterson and Blankenhorn were not residents of the territory at all in the sense above stated. They were mere temporary summer residents without intent to remain, and were not voters at that place. The contention of the appellant that the statute was intended to permit any person to vote at such election who happened at the time to be bodily present there with such family as he had, regardless of his intent to remain there and make it his home or domicile, cannot be sustained. Huston v. Anderson, supra. If one who went there with his family to remain for a period of three months, and then return to his former residence, were to be considered a qualified elector, the line could not be drawn at any specific period, and every summer visitor who was a citizen of the state on the date of the election could vote, regardless of the time he came or of his intention to remain. The statute uses the phrase "electors residing in the territory" with reference to an election to be held therein to determine a political question—that is, the boundaries of a political subdivision of the state—and it cannot reasonably be understood to mean or refer to any other than a legal residence therein, as distinguished from an actual, but transitory, residence or sojourn. Huston v. Anderson, supra. The court below was right in holding these votes illegal and that in consequence thereof the annexation proceedings were void.

This action was not begun until March 30, 1907. The court finds that during the interval of 19 months that elapsed after the culmination of the annexation proceedings and before the action was begun the city of Long Beach was exercising municipal control over the annexed territory, and collecting municipal taxes on property situated therein. The defendant contends that it is to be presumed, also, that the annexation was in that interval acquiesced in and recognized by the public authorities of the state as a part of Long Beach, and upon these facts it is asserted that the state, by this delay, acquiescence, and recognition, is estopped to question the validity of the annexation, or has by its laches lost its right to do so. In support of this proposition, counsel cite State v. Des Moines, 96 Iowa, 521, 65 N. W. 818, 31 L. R. A. 186, 59 Am. St. Rep. 381; State v. Leatherman, 38 Ark. 81; Jameson v. People, 16 Ill. 257, 63 Am. Dec. 304; People v. Maynard, 15 Mich. 470. No valid public recognition of the validity of the annexation has been shown, except that of the city of Long Beach itself. On the other hand, it appears that proceedings to annex a part of the same territory to the city of San Pedro were pending when the Long Beach proceeding was begun; that an election for the annexation to San Pedro was held on September 5, 1905, and the result in favor of annexation certified to the Secretary of State on September 7, 1905, by which that territory became annexed to San Pedro, if the Long Beach proceeding was invalid; that another proceeding for the annexation of still another part of the same territory to San Pedro was afterwards had whereby the same was certified as annexed thereto on November 30, 1906; and that the legality of the annexation to Long Beach has been in dispute from the beginning, as shown by the case of Haskell v. Long Beach, supra, which was begun immediately after the Long Beach annexation election in August, 1905. Under these circumstances, we do not think the state is precluded from inquiry into the validity of the proceeding. There has been no such acquiescence or recognition as appeared in the cases cited by appellant on this point, and no such lapse of time as would be necessary to sustain the defense of laches. The freeholder's charter, as will be shown, was wholly ineffective as to this territory. It appears that thereafter, on February 5, 1907, the people of Long Beach, at an election held for that purpose, adopted a city charter for the city of Long Beach, prepared by a board of freeholders as provided in section 8, art. 11, Const., and that this charter was duly approved by a majority of the members of the Legislature on February 26, 1907 (St. 1907, pp. 1170-1240, c. 15). This charter described the boundaries of the city, and included, as part of the city, the territory attempted to be annexed thereto by the proceeding which we have declared to be void. It is claimed that this charter so adopted has the force and effect of a law fixing the city boundaries, and that it makes the territory in question a part of the city of Long Beach, notwithstanding the invalidity of the previous annexation.

The constitutional provisions for the adoption of special city charters are designed and adapted to give the people of any existing city an opportunity to frame their own laws to control their municipal affairs and government, according to their own desires and notions. No provision whatever is made for considering the wish or voice of any persons outside the city with regard to such charters, or in relation to the addition of territory to such city by the extension of the boundary lines in the described corporate limits in such proposed charters. On the contrary, it is specifically declared that "a city," manifestly referring to any city already organized, "may frame a charter for its own government," the special charter to be prepared by a board of freeholders selected by the voters residing within the city, the freeholders must all have resided within the city for the five years preceding their selection, and the charter, when thus prepared, must be submitted to the qualified electors of such city for ratification before approval by the Legislature. The people of any outside territory have no opportunity to express their wishes. Thereupon, the section declares, the charter shall become the organic law of such city. All this clearly implies that the special charter is to apply only to territory already erected into a municipality, and it negatives the idea that the provisions of such special charters were intended to delegate to a city the power to enlarge its limits when enacting a new charter, or amending an old one. The erection of territory into a city and the change of the boundaries thereof are matters within the general political power of the people, and there can be no doubt that the people, by their Constitution, could delegate to any city the power to annex and bring within its municipal jurisdiction any adjacent territory without consulting the inhabitants of that territory. But we should not declare that a grant of such arbitrary power was intended to be made in any Constitution, unless we should find it expressed in unequivocal language not capable of any other reasonable interpretation. Our Constitution does not contain any language purporting to delegate such powers to cities. The provision concerning freeholders' charters may be given full effect without including a delegation of power to a city to annex territory. The obvious meaning is that such charters are to apply to cities as they exist, and this we hold to be the correct construction.

Section 6 of the same article of the Constitution declares that cities shall not be created by special laws, but that the Legislature by general laws shall provide for the incorporation and organization of cities, and, further, that all special charters of any cities "shall be subject to and controlled by general laws," except in municipal affairs. Under this latter provision, it is now settled that such special charters are paramount in all matters exclusively of municipal concern, but that in all other affairs, all affairs of state policy and government, the general laws control. Upon this principle it is held that the annexation of territory to a city is not a municipal affair within the meaning of section 6, but is a matter pertaining to the state at large and within its general powers and functions, and hence that the general law upon that subject controls. People v. Oakland, 123 Cal. 604, 56 Pac. 445. In that case it was claimed that the annexation of territory was a municipal affair, and that the provisions of the charter, so far as they related to that subject, were paramount. The court said that the annexation of territory was "a thing that could not be accomplished through any provision of the charter of the city of Oakland, or otherwise than under the statutory authority given by said act," and that, "as the Legislature alone has the power to authorize such annexation, it must have the power to prescribe the terms, conditions, and mode of annexation."

The decision in People v. Oakland, 92 Cal. 611, 28 Pac. 807, holding that territory could be excluded from a city by a change in the boundaries thereof in a new freeholders' charter omitting some of its territory, referred to a charter adopted in 1888. This was prior to the passage of the act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 356, c. 246), providing for the exclusion of territory from cities, and at a time when there was no general law in force authorizing such exclusion. Whether or not it could be accomplished by a freeholders' charter when there was a general law covering the subject is a question not settled by that decision. It may be observed, however, that the question of exclusion is one which affects a part of the existing city, and of which the inhabitants of the territory to be excluded would have notice and upon which they would have an opportunity to vote and to exercise their influence. In these respects it is to be distinguished from the question of the addition of outside territory. But the decision relates solely to the exclusion of territory, and it is not authority for the proposition that territory could be annexed by a freeholders' charter, even in the absence of a general law upon that subject.

The provisions of the general law are inconsistent with the theory that such annexation can be accomplished by a freeholders' charter. Section 2 of the general law providing for the organization of cities, under which Long Beach was incorporated, declares that, in the proceeding to incorporate a city, the county board of supervisors shall establish and define its boundaries, and that "the boundaries so established by the board of supervisors shall be the boundaries of such municipal corporation until by action, authorized by law for the annexation of additional territory to, or the taking of territory from, said municipal corporation, such boundaries shall be changed." Deering's Gen. Laws, p. 638, § 2; St. 1889, p. 371, c. 251. The act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247) provides a complete scheme for the annexation of territory, and declares that "the boundaries of any incorporated town or city, whether heretofore or hereafter formed, incorporated, reincorporated, organized or reorganized, may be altered, and new territory annexed thereto, incorporated and included therein, and made a part thereof, by proceedings to be had and taken as in this act provided." It was this act which was held to provide the exclusive method for the annexation of territory to cities in People v. Oakland, 123 Cal. 604, 56 Pac. 445.

Our conclusion is that the part of the freeholders' charter of Long Beach, purporting to include within the limits of that city territory not previously a part thereof, was ineffective and void, and that it did not make such territory a part of that city.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

Cal. App. 463

CARY v. BLODGETT et al. (Civ. 532.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 28, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 22, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 58*)—POWERS.

A municipal corporation can exercise only the powers granted in express words, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, and those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient but indispensable, and the rule of strict construction of corporate powers is not applicable to the ordinary clauses in the incorporating acts of municipalities, though it is applicable to grants of powers which are out of the usual range or which may result in public burdens.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 271, 272*)—POWERS—WATER AND LIGHT.

General Municipal Incorporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 898), § 862, empowering cities of the sixth class to acquire, construct, and maintain waterworks and works for light for the inhabitants thereof, authorizes a city of the sixth class to construct and maintain a plant to supply its inhabitants with water and light for their private use as well as for public purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 726, 727; Dec. Dig. §§ 271, 272.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 93*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION—"MUNICIPAL AFFAIR."

General Municipal Incorporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 898), § 862, empowering cities of the sixth class to acquire and maintain waterworks and works for light, relates to matters constituting a "municipal affair," and it is not invalid as special legislation because the power conferred is confined to cities of the sixth class.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 102; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4619; vol. 8, p. 7726.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 296*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ESTIMATES OF COST—SUFFICIENCY.

The estimate of the cost of a combined plant for supplying the inhabitants of a city with water and light is sufficient, where the estimate shows the cost of the completed plant, though it does not separate the cost of the plant for supplying water from that for supplying light, though the law contemplates that separate estimates shall be made for each separate improvement or structure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—BONDS FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ELECTIONS.

Under General Incorporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 898), § 862, authorizing cities of the sixth class to acquire waterworks and works for light, and St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing a city to incur an indebtedness for the cost of a municipal improvement by submitting the question to the voters, a proposition for the issuance of bonds for the construction of a combined plant to supply water and light to the inhabitants of a city of the sixth class may be submitted as a single proposition, the duty of determining the necessity for the expenditure and the propriety of submitting it to the electors, together with the phraseology in which it shall be submitted, being cast on the municipal authorities subject to a reasonable regard for the privilege of the electors to be informed as to the purposes and cost of the proposed improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Nutter, Smith and Norton, Judges, in Bank.

Action by Edward C. Cary against J. M. Blodgett and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, for appellant. Edward I. Jones, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought against the trustees, clerk, and treasurer of the city of Lodi, a municipality of the sixth class, to enjoin and restrain them from selling or disposing of certain bonds to the amount of $76,000 which had been voted by the electors at a special election called for that purpose for a combined plant for supplying said city of Lodi and its inhabitants with water and electric light. The decision was in favor of defendants, and the appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll.

For the general authority to incur the indebtedness and to issue the bonds respondents rely upon the act of the Legislature of

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1901, entitled "An act authorizing the incurring of indebtedness by cities, towns and municipal corporations for municipal improvements, and regulating the acquisition, construction or completion thereof." The portion of said act sufficient for the purpose of the discussion is as follows:

"Section 1. Any city, town or municipal corporation incorporated under the laws of this state may as hereinafter provided incur indebtedness to pay the cost of any municipal improvement requiring an expenditure greater than the amount allowed for such improvement by the annual tax levy.

"Sec. 2. Whenever the legislative branch of any city, town or municipal corporation shall by resolution passed by vote of two-thirds of all its members and approved by the executive of said municipality, determine that the public interest or necessity demands the acquisition, construction or completion of any municipal improvement, including bridges, water works, water rights, sewers, light or power works or plants, buildings for municipal uses, school houses, fire apparatus and street work or other works, property or structure necessary or convenient to carry out the objects, purposes and powers of the municipality, the cost of which will be too great to be paid out of the ordinary annual income and revenue of the municipality, * * * it may call a special election and submit to the qualified voters of said city, town or municipal corporation the proposition of incurring a debt for the purpose set forth in said resolution, and no question other than the incurring of the indebtedness for said purpose shall be submitted; provided that propositions of incurring indebtedness for more than one object or purpose may be submitted at the same election. The ordinance calling such special election shall recite the objects and purposes for which the indebtedness is proposed to be incurred, the estimated cost of the proposed public improvement," etc. St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32.

The specific grant of power as to cities of the sixth class, involved in the present controversy, is contained in section 862 of the general municipal incorporation act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 898), which provides that "the board of trustees of said city shall have power: * * * (3) To contract for supplying the city or town with water for municipal purposes, or to acquire, construct, repair and manage pumps, aqueducts, reservoirs or other works necessary or proper for supplying water for the use of such city or the inhabitants or for irrigating purposes therein. * * * (13) To acquire, own, construct, maintain and operate street railways, telephone and telegraph lines, gas and other works for light and heat; public libraries, museums, gymnasiums, parks and baths."

No question is raised by appellant as to the regularity of the proceedings culminating in the vote authorizing the issuance of the bonds, except in regard to the estimate of the cost of the improvement hereinafter to be noticed, but he claims the judgment should be reversed for the following reasons: "First, the city of Lodi has no right or authority in law to sell to its inhabitants electric light; second, the bonds voted were illegal and invalid by reason of the fact that no separate estimates were given to the city of Lodi by any engineer prior to the election at which said bonds were voted, showing the estimated cost for a plant for supplying the city of Lodi and its inhabitants with water, or a separate estimate for supplying electric light; third, the bonds are invalid because there was an estimate only for a combined plant for supplying water and electric light; fourth, the said bonds are illegal and invalid for the reason that the electors were not given an opportunity to vote separately upon the proposition for supplying the city of Lodi and its inhabitants with water, and upon the proposition of supplying them with electric light."

1. The general rule as to the power and authority of municipalities has been stated by Judge Dillon and approved by the courts, as follows: "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: (1) Those granted in express words; (2) those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; and (3) those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable." 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp., § 89. He further says (section 91) that: "The rule of strict construction of corporate powers is not so directly applicable to the ordinary clauses in the charter or incorporating acts of municipalities as it is to the charters of private corporations; but it is equally applicable to grants of powers to municipalities and public bodies which are out of the usual range, or which may result in public burdens, or which in their exercise touch the right to liberty or property, or as it may be compendiously expressed, any common-law right of the citizen or inhabitant." In this principle announced by Judge Dillon appellant claims to find justification for his first contention. It seems clear, though, to us that in the grant of power to cities of the sixth class, if not explicitly expressed, it is at least necessarily implied, that the municipality shall have the authority to furnish the inhabitants for private use as well as the general public with electric light. In the grant there is no specification as to the purposes for which the light is to be furnished, and therefore we think no purpose for which such works are usually designed and operated was excluded from the contemplation of the Legislature in the enactment of the statute. Indeed, it would be a strained and unnatural construction of the language used to hold that the works were to be devoted simply to corporate uses. When the city is expressly authorized "to acquire, own, construct, maintain and operate * * * gas and other works for light and heat," the incidents of such ownership and right of operation necessarily follow. Appellant's view derogates from the ordinary meaning of the terms used and writes into the statute a restriction of the use, which we have no right to assume was in the mind of the Legislature. If the same grant were made to an individual, no one, of course, would contend for such a limitation; but it is sought here because of the idea that it is hardly within the legitimate functions of a municipality to furnish light to its inhabitants. But the modern decisions recognize this as a public use and not outside of the usual range and scope of municipal authority. In Jacksonville Electric Light Company v. City of Jacksonville, 36 Fla. 229, 18 South. 677, 30 L. R. A. 540, 51 Am. St. Rep. 24, it is held that: "A charter conferring upon a city council power to provide for lighting the city by gas or other illuminating material, or in any other manner, authorizes the erection and maintenance, at public expense, of an electric plant of sufficient power to light, not only the streets and public places in the city, but also to supply in connection therewith, electric lights for the inhabitants of the city in their private houses." A large number of cases is therein cited in support of the court's conclusion, among them being Thompson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. City of Newton (C. C.) 42 Fed. 723; Linn v. Chambersburg Borough, 160 Pa. 511, 28 Atl. 842, 25 L. R. A. 217; Opinion of the Justices, 150 Mass. 593, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L. R. A. 487; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214.

In the Thompson-Houston Electric Light Co. Case, supra, Mr. Justice Shiras said: "It has been the uniform rule that a city in erecting gasworks or waterworks is not limited to furnishing gas or water for use only upon the streets and other public places of the city, but may furnish the same for private use." The case of Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41, cited by appellant, is not opposed to the foregoing view. The particular clauses of the Stockton charter therein construed are as follows: "The council shall have power to pass ordinances: * * * (5) To provide for and regulate * * * lighting and watering of the streets, avenues and public places. * * * (17) To provide for * * * such lights * * * as are necessary for the convenient transaction of public business." It is clear that the power was expressly limited to the purposes therein enumerated. By the specification of the particular purposes, in accordance with a familiar rule of construction, other purposes were excluded. It was very properly said by the court that "the terms of the express grant of the power to provide light for the public purposes named do not indicate any intention to give the distinct and larger power to establish a plant for furnishing light for private use to all the inhabitants of the city who may desire it, and no such intention can be imputed to the framers of the charter from the language there employed." And it is also held that the power to construct works for the express purpose of supplying light to the inhabitants is not incidental to or included in the power to construct such works to supply light for public streets and public buildings. The difference in that case and this is between the grant of a power for special and expressly enumerated purposes and the grant for all usual and necessary purposes.

The suggestion of appellant that the attempted grant is unconstitutional because it is special legislation, in that it is confined to cities of the sixth class, is answered by the Supreme Court in the case of Ex parte Jackson, 143 Cal. 564, 77 Pac. 457, wherein it is said: "As to such matters—i. e., matters coming within the proper scope of a municipal charter, or, in other words, municipal affairs—there is a distinction recognized by the Constitution between the various classes of municipal corporations, which justifies the varying legislation. So long as the legislation as to such matters contained in such a charter operates alike upon all municipal corporations coming within the class for which the charter exists, it is under our constitutional provisions a 'general law' fully authorized by section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution." The ordinance under review there was one requiring a license tax for carrying on the business of a livery and feed stable adopted in pursuance of the provision of the general municipal corporation act granting such power to cities of the sixth class. It was held to be immaterial whether there was or not any similar provision in the charter of other cities. It is not disputed that the matter before us is a "municipal affair," and therefore the provision in question is not open to the imputation of special legislation.

2. The contention that separate estimates of the cost of a plant for supplying water and of one for supplying light are required is entirely without merit. The law, indeed, contemplates that separate estimates shall be made for each separate improvement or structure; but it does not require the impracticable attempt to determine and declare what part of the cost shall be appropriated to each purpose in case of the construction of one plant or mechanism capable of supplying various needs of the community. The construction for which appellant contends would lead to the absurd result that, however advantageous on the ground of economy or efficiency might be the course pursued in the present instance, the plan must be rejected for the reason that the trustees did not adopt the more expensive and probably less feasible scheme of separate plants to furnish water and electric light. The proposal, being for a definite sum for a single definite plant, satisfies the requirement of any reasonable interpretation of the law. In State ex rel. Chillicothe v. Wilder, 200 Mo. 97, 98 S. W. 465, the Supreme Court of Missouri aptly said: "As for the second ground for refusing to register the bonds, to wit, that it contained two propositions, one for a waterworks plant and the other for an electric light plant, so that the voters were compelled to vote for the whole proposition, and could not vote for one against the other, we think that a reading of the ordinance and the notice of election indicates that the bonds were to be issued for one plant only, to wit, 'a waterworks and electric light plant,' and that the ordinance and the notice of election in this case do not violate the rule announced by this court in State ex rel. Bethany v. Allen, 186 Mo. 673, 85 S. W. 531. We think it was the clearly expressed purpose in this case to erect one plant, on one site, to be conducted by one management and in this manner save the expense of another plant. * * * We know of no reason, and none is suggested, why one plant, at least so far as the power and machinery are concerned, could not be made available and we think such was the intention and purpose of the council in passing this ordinance, and that the objection of the auditor to the bonds on this ground cannot be sustained. Upon a new submission of the proposition, however, it should be for a combined waterworks and electric light plant." It may be said that the submission here was substantially in the language so recommended by the Missouri court. In harmony with the foregoing, the Supreme Court of this state, in the City of Oakland v. Thompson, 151 Cal. 572, 91 Pac. 337, held that: "Where the scheme of the city had in contemplation the acquisition of several distinct parcels of land widely separated for park purposes, the object to be accomplished was single in its purpose, and under the act of 1901 the municipal authorities had discretion to submit at the special election held under the act the question of the acquisition of all such lands as a single proposition to be voted on." In People v. Counts, 89 Cal. 15, 26 Pac. 612, it was held that: "The specification of a purpose to construct two wagon roads with the bonds to be issued is not objectionable as being expressive of more than one object or purpose." The cases cited from this state by appellant are easily distinguishable from the foregoing, and, if there is a decision anywhere condemning such a proposal as the one before us, it should not be followed.

3. What has already been said applies to the third and fourth considerations submitted by appellant. Holding as we do that the proposal presented by the trustees was within the power granted by the statute and the Constitution, it follows that the elector cannot complain because he was not afforded the opportunity to vote for one proposition and against the other. As suggested by the learned counsel for respondents: "The fact is that the elector can scarcely ever vote upon that precise proposition which, of all the possible and authorized propositions, he prefers. He may favor the specified purpose, but not the specified amount of the proposed debt, or vice versa; yet he must vote, if at all, upon a proposition which combines both purpose and amount." The duty of determining the necessity for the expenditure and the propriety of submitting it to the electors and the particular phraseology in which it shall be expressed is cast upon the trustees subject to a reasonable and practicable regard for the right and privilege of the electors to be informed as to the purposes and cost of the proposed improvement that they may exercise at the polls an intelligent and discriminating judgment as to their own interests and the public welfare.

We see no reason to disturb the judgment of the lower court, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 572

KAUFFMAN, DAVIDSON & CO. v. W. F. SHAW & CO. (Civ. 594.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 10, 1909.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 20*)—PERFORMANCE OF AGREEMENT.

Where plaintiff agreed to accept from defendant a certain sum in satisfaction of a note, together with interest thereon from a certain date to be paid within a specified time, payment of such sum without payment of the interest did not constitute sufficient performance of the agreement, and plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole amount due on the note, less the payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

2. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 20*) — BREACH OF AGREEMENT—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

The agreement having provided that the amount paid was to be deemed a payment on account in case the agreement was not fully performed, it was not necessary for plaintiff to return any portion of the sum so paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Kauffman, Davidson & Co. against W. F. Shaw & Co. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Marcus Rosenthal, for appellant. Edwin L. Forster and Robert R. Moody, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover the sum of $1,006.85 upon a promissory note dated June 13, 1906, less the sum of $503.42, which it is alleged was paid thereon on the 18th day of September, 1906. The case was tried before the court, and findings filed, upon which judgment was entered for the defendant.

The defendant in its answer claimed that it had been released from the payment of the full amount of said promissory note by virtue of an agreement of compromise, under the terms of which it was to pay the plaintiff the sum of $503.42 in full payment of said promissory note, and that said compromise agreement had been fully performed on its part. The court found in relation to the said compromise agreement as follows: "That on the — day of August, 1906, at the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, by its certain writing, the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to accept the sum of $503.42, with interest thereon from June 13, 1906, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, in full payment of principal and interest mentioned in said promissory note above set out and mentioned in the complaint herein, provided and on the express condition precedent that such payment be made within 90 days from and after the date of the execution of said agreement, and by said agreement it was further provided that said agreement was strictly upon the condition precedent that all and singular the terms, provisions and conditions thereof be fully performed, and, in the event of the failure in the performance of any of said provisions, terms, and conditions, then the plaintiff should be and thereby was released from any obligation thereunder and from any obligation to accept less than the full amount of its claim in settlement thereof, and that time was in all respects of the essence of said agreement, and that if at the expiration of said period of 90 days the said sum of $503.42, with said interest thereon, should not have been paid, then said agreement should be and become null and void, and the plaintiff should be released from all obligation to accept said sum in settlement of its claim, and that such payment of said last-named sum and interest should be deemed merely a payment on account by the said defendant to the said plaintiff, and, further, that in the event of the violation of said agreement in any respect by the said defendant, or in the event of the failure in the performance by defendant of any of the terms or conditions in said agreement set forth, plaintiff should at its option be released from said agreement and from its conditional obligation to accept said sum and interest in settlement of its claim. That said agreement has never been set aside by agreement between the parties hereto or by any order or judgment of any court. That said defendant did on or about the 18th day of September, 1906, pay to said plaintiff the sum of $503.42, and that the plaintiff did immediately thereupon demand of said defendant the payment of said interest thereon, and said defendant did thereupon promise to and with the plaintiff to pay the same on the next day, but that neither said interest nor any part thereof has been paid, and that the plaintiff did thereupon, to wit, on or about the 15th day of November, 1906, and after the expiration of said period of 90 days, demand of and from the defendant the payment of the remainder of the principal and interest of said promissory note, but that no part of the principal or interest of said promissory note has been paid, save and except the said sum of $503.42. That said sum of $503.42 or any part thereof has never been tendered to or returned to defendant by plaintiff or by any person on behalf of plaintiff." It appears from the above findings that under the express agreement of the parties time was of the essence of the contract, and that the parties agreed that, unless the full amount was paid as provided for in the said composition agreement, then the said agreement should be void, and any payment that had been made thereunder should be deemed merely a payment by the defendant to plaintiff on account of the said promissory note. The court finds—and it is so stated in the agreement—that interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from June 13, 1906, was to be paid upon said $503.42. It further appears that the interest was not paid, and that the defendant promised, at the request of plaintiff, to pay it the next day, but did not do so. It further appears that on the 15th day of November, after the expiration of the period of 90 days, the plaintiff again demanded payment of the balance due on said promissory note, with interest, but the defendant neglected and refused to pay the same. It is elementary that the defendant, in order to have availed himself of the composition agreement, and of the payment of the amount justly due to the plaintiff, must have complied strictly with the terms of the contract under which it was agreed that it should be released from a part of its indebtedness. Under the composition agreement, if the $503.42 and the interest thereon had been paid within the times provided for in the agreement, then the defendant would have been released; but the amount was not paid, and it is no answer to the proposition that only the interest remained unpaid. The court cannot stop to speculate in regard to the amount—whether only a few dollars or half the composition agreement or three-fourths of it should release the defendant. It could only be released by paying the amount in the manner and at the time and according to the agreement by which plaintiff agreed that it should be released.

Nor was it necessary for the plaintiff to return any portion of the $503.42 paid to it. That was by the express agreement of the parties to be deemed a payment on account in case the composition agreement was not fully kept and performed. It is not for the court to make contracts for the parties; nor to allow the defendant to be relieved because it came very near complying with its contract. The contract was not performed, and the judgment should have been for the plaintiff for the amount due upon the promissory note, less the payment, to be credited as of the date when it was made.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 515

McDONALD v. HOFFMAN. (Civ. 573.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 5, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 116*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT—"APPLIANCE"—SCAFFOLDS.

The scaffold, erected by carpenters for their work upon a building, is not an "appliance" within the rule making it the duty of the master to furnish servants safe appliances with which to work, as the master's duty is performed when he has employed competent men and furnished them with proper tools and lumber and materials with which to erect the scaffold.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 207; Dec. Dig. § 116.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 455.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 189*)—"FELLOW SERVANTS"—FOREMEN.

A foreman in charge of the construction of a building is a "fellow servant" of the carpenters employed on the building, in the construction of a scaffold under his direction, to be used in their work on the building, as the master's responsibility in case of an accident is not fixed by the grade of service, but the character of the act, and the act to furnish a safe scaffold was not a part of the master's duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 427-448; Dec. Dig. § 189.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2716-2730; vol. 8, p. 7662.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by A. D. McDonald against Victor Hoffman. A judgment of nonsuit was entered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

C. L. Dam and Charles S. Burnell, for appellant. Myrick, Deering & Gibbons, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff, caused by the falling of a scaffold, while he was in the employ of the defendant as a carpenter engaged in building a warehouse on Sansome street, in the city and county of San Francisco. At the close of the testimony offered by plaintiff the court granted the motion of the defendant for a nonsuit, and judgment was accordingly entered. Plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the order so made. The sole question here is as to whether or not the court erred in granting the nonsuit.

The facts as shown by the pleadings and evidence are briefly as follows: The plaintiff at the time of the injury was in the employment of the defendant as a carpenter in the construction of a building and warehouse. He was one of a number of carpenters employed by the same defendant in constructing the same building. The defendant was the contractor, and one Owens, also a carpenter, was the foreman under whom plaintiff was working. The plaintiff, the foreman Owens, and all the carpenters were engaged in the same general work in and about the erection and construction of the building. It became necessary in the course of construction to place or construct trusses to support the roof of the one-story portion of the building. In order to do this a cord or tiebeam was lifted into position, one end on the outer brick wall, the other end on the girder in the center of the building. This tiebeam was so lifted into place by three or four carpenters. While this work was in progress Owens called to several of the carpenters, including plaintiff, to bring their tools and erect a platform or scaffold upon which to work. There were plenty of planks on hand with which to build the scaffold, and which were used in building scaffolds in connection with the building, and the platform was built by laying these planks from the tiebeam to the nearest truss that had already been placed. Plaintiff was one of the carpenters who built the scaffold. The defendant furnished materials sufficient in quantity and quality with which to build the scaffold, and it is not claimed that any of the carpenters employed with plaintiff in the same general employment were incompetent, or that the defendant was guilty of negligence in employing them. It is alleged that Owens was incompetent and unfit to act as foreman, and that defendant employed him knowing him to be so incompetent and unfit for the work in which he was engaged, but plaintiff did not attempt to prove that Owens was incompetent. It is alleged "that on the said 17th day of April, 1903, it became and was the duty of plaintiff, in the course of his employment by defendant as such carpenter, to go upon the scaffold as aforesaid, and, while engaged in the performance of his duties as such carpenter and such employé of the defendant as aforesaid, plaintiff went and was upon said scaffold; and while engaged thereon in his said employment the said scaffold, by reason of its said inherent weakness and said imperfect, defective, and dangerous character thereof, broke and gave way and fell down, without any negligence or fault of plaintiff existing or contributing thereto, by reason whereof plaintiff was cast and thrown from said scaffold. * * *

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is claimed by the appellant that the scaffold was an appliance, and thus is within the rule that it is the duty of the master to furnish to his employes and servants safe appliances with which to work.

We do not think that this scaffold was an appliance within the meaning of the law, but a place on which to stand while working, and a place built by the men who were working. It was the duty of defendant to furnish his men with proper tools, lumber, and materials with which to erect proper scaffolds or platforms to be used in the construction of the building. When he had done this he had done all that any reasonably prudent person would be required to do under like circumstances. It was then the duty of the employes to construct the scaffold in a workmanlike manner, so that it would be a reasonably safe place upon which to work. They were carpenters; they knew where scaffolds had to be used, and the purposes for which they were to be used. They built the scaffold, and if it was not built of such strength as to answer the purposes for which it was built, they have only themselves to blame for the unhappy accident. An employer is not required, where he furnishes a nail, or bolt, or rope, or planks with which to build a scaffold, to stand over each man to see that the nail is properly driven to the proper depth, the bolt properly secured, the rope properly adjusted or tied, or the planks properly placed on substantial supports. He sufficiently performs his duty when he employs competent men, and furnishes suitable and proper nails, bolts, ropes, and lumber, as the case may be, with which to erect the place upon which to work, or for the putting together of the materials in the building.

It is claimed that Owens was a vice principal, and not a fellow servant, and that the defendant is to be treated as if he himself erected the scaffold. This question has been settled to the contrary by the Supreme Court of this state in many cases. In Noyes v. Wood, 102 Cal. 392, 36 Pac. 766, the rule is thus stated by Judge Temple: "Plaintiff testified that Wayne was foreman and in charge of the work for defendants, and as such put up the scaffold and ladder which fell with plaintiff. It is therefore claimed that the negligence of Wayne was the negligence of his principals—the defendants. Upon this theory the case was tried and was argued here by appellant. Of course, under repeated decisions of this court, the grade of work of employes is an immaterial circumstance. Defendants would not have been liable to the plaintiff for the negligence of Wayne even if he had had entire charge and control of the work, with full power to hire and discharge the men. Davis v. S. P. Co., 98 Cal. 19, 32 Pac. 708, 35 Am. St. Rep. 133; Congrave v. S. P. Co., 88 Cal. 360, 26 Pac. 175; Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916; Stevens v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 100 Cal. 554, 34 Pac. 706. He was still but a fellow servant with plaintiff; and as his competency is not questioned defendants are not liable for his negligence." Among the later cases are Donovan v. Ferris, 128 Cal. 54, 60 Pac. 519, 79 Am. St. Rep. 25; Leishman v. Union Iron Works, 148 Cal. 274, 83 Pac. 30, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, 113 Am. St. Rep. 243; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 600, 45 Pac. 1017. It is settled in this state that it is not the grade of service which fixes the master's responsibility in case of accident; it is the character of the act. The act of furnishing a safe scaffold in this case is not one which it was the duty of the defendant to perform. Owens was not therefore a vice principal, but a fellow servant; and the fact that he was foreman made him none the less a fellow servant.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 507

Ex parte AVDALAS. (Cr. 97.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 4, 1909.)

1. INNKEEPERS (§ 16*)—FRAUD OF BOARDER—SUFFICIENCY OF ACCUSATION.

A complaint, charging that accused did willfully and unlawfully defraud one T., keeper of a boarding house, by leaving and going away from the said boarding house without first paying his bill, with deliberate intent to defraud the said T. out of the amount due thereon, etc., did not state an offense under Pen. Code, § 537, making it a misdemeanor for any person to obtain any food or accommodation at a boarding house, without paying therefor, with intent to defraud the proprietor or manager thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Innkeepers, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

2. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 30*)—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION—INSUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

The complaint clearly discloses an attempt at charging an offense under the section, though so defectively drawn as to be bad on demurrer, and hence habeas corpus would not lie, as the writ cannot be made to subvert the office of a demurrer; its sole purpose being to test the question of jurisdiction in the class of cases to which it is applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 304*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—PROVISIONS OF STATUTE.

The court may take judicial notice of the provisions of a statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 701; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—SUFFICIENCY OF ACCUSATION—STATUTORY OFFENSES—FOLLOWING LANGUAGE OF STATUTE.

The general rule that, in charging a crime, if the allegations are substantially in the language of the statute it is sufficient does not mean that the language of the statute must be literally followed, and in some cases a literal following of the language of the statute, without other averments, would not be sufficient, but the true rule in proceedings before justices is, as expressly declared by Pen. Code, § 1426, that the offense must be set forth with such particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable accused to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of, and to answer the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 290; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"KEEPER."

Webster defines a "keeper" as one who has the care, custody, or superintendence of anything, or one who has or holds possession of anything.

[For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3923-3926.]

6. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 30*)—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION—INSUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—"KEEPER."

The word "keeper" having a broader meaning than either the word "proprietor" or "manager," as used in Pen. Code, § 537, making it a misdemeanor for a person to obtain food or accommodation at a boarding house without paying therefor, with intent to defraud the proprietor or manager thereof, inasmuch as it may include either or both, the use of the word "keeper," instead of "proprietor" or "manager," in charging an offense under the section sufficiently indicated that the person alleged to have been defrauded was either proprietor or manager, or both, of the boarding house referred to, at least for the purposes of a habeas corpus proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

Application of George Avdalas for a writ of habeas corpus. Alternative writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Tuttle & Tuttle, for appellant. C. A. Tuttle, for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner was convicted by a jury in the justice's court of township No. 9, in Placer county, upon a complaint purporting to charge him with a misdemeanor under the provisions of section 537 of the Penal Code, and was thereupon sentenced to pay a fine of $60, or, in default of the payment thereof, to be confined in the county jail of said county at the rate of one day for each dollar of said fine.

That portion of the provisions of said section within which it was sought, by the charging part of the complaint, to bring the alleged act of the petitioner reads as follows: "Any person who obtains any food or accommodation at an hotel, inn, restaurant, boarding house or lodging house without paying therefor, with intent to defraud the proprietor or manager thereof, * * * is guilty of a misdemeanor." It is claimed by the petioner that the complaint upon which he was convicted does not state a public offense under section 537 of the Penal Code, supra, and that therefore the court was without jurisdiction to try him upon the purported charge, and that he is now restrained of his liberty under a judgment which is absolutely void. The charging part of the complaint is in the following language: "The said defendant, at the time and place last aforesaid, did willfully and unlawfully defraud the said Theros Theros, keeper of a boarding house, by leaving and going away from the said boarding house without first paying his bill, with deliberate intent to defraud the said Theros Theros out of the amount due thereon, to wit, $45." It was admitted at the hearing of this petition that the petitioner had taken an appeal from the judgment of the justice's court to the superior court of Placer county, but that said appeal is still pending.

It is scarcely necessary to remark that the complaint upon which the petitioner was convicted could not for a moment be regarded as sufficient as an accusatory pleading if tested by a demurrer. It is undoubtedly obnoxious to every criticism to which it is subjected by counsel for petitioner. But the question here is, How far may an inquiry be extended, in a proceeding upon habeas corpus in a case like the one here, where it is manifestly clear, from the averments of the complaint, that there is thus at least an attempt to charge an offense known to the law, within the jurisdiction of the justice's court? The question is not altogether free from difficulty in view of the decisions, if we do not misapprehend the full import of some of the more recent ones involving a discussion of the proposition.

In the case of Ex parte Ruef, on habeas corpus, 150 Cal. 605, 89 Pac. 605, the claim, on behalf of the petitioner that the indictments failed to state a public offense was rejected in that proceeding, the court saying: "We think the true rule is that, where an indictment purports or attempts to state an offense of a kind of which the court assuming to proceed has jurisdiction, the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on habeas corpus. Here the indictments clearly attempt to charge extortion, a crime defined by section 518 et seq. of the Penal Code, and within the jurisdiction of the superior court." This appears to be only a restatement of the rule as it was applied to cases of misdemeanor in early cases decided by the Supreme Court. Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129; Ex parte Williams, 121 Cal. 328, 53 Pac. 706. In the last-mentioned case, in which the petitioner, as is the case here, was restrained of his liberty for an alleged violation of section 537 of the Penal Code, it is said: "While the inquiry on habeas corpus may extend to the question whether the complaint or information charges an offense known to the law, since this objection goes to the question of jurisdiction, the proceeding may not be made to subserve the office of a demurrer; and, if the facts alleged squint at a substantive statement of the offense (italics mine) no matter how defectively or inartificially they may be stated, or however confused and beclouded they may be rendered through intermingling them with immaterial or unnecessary averments, the writ will not lie"—citing Ex parte Whitaker, 43 Ala. 323, and Matter of Prime, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 340.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Cal.Rep. 102-105 P.—7

But my attention is called to the recent case of Ex parte Greenall, 153 Cal. 767, 96 Pac. 804, in which the court appears to extend the doctrine as to misdemeanors, and accords to it much wider scope than it has ever before been given in any other case which I have yet seen, as I understand the decision. The petitioner in that case had been convicted in a justice's court on a complaint charging him with an infraction of the provisions of a statute passed by the Legislature of 1907, designed for the regulation of the practice of medicine and surgery, osteopathy, and "other systems or modes of treating the sick or afflicted," etc. The complaint in that case seems to have attempted "to state an offense of a kind of which the court assuming to proceed has jurisdiction," as the court said was enough as to an indictment in the case of Ex parte Ruef, supra, or, as was said in Ex parte Williams, supra, squinted "at a substantive statement of the offense." In the Greenall Case the question of the sufficiency of the complaint to state a public offense under the statute involved therein is treated as though arising on a special demurrer. But the court answers the contention of the respondent in that case "that, if there is in this state such an offense as that of which petitioner was convicted, the sufficiency of the complaint is immaterial on habeas corpus," as follows: "The rule of the Ruef Case has never been applied by this court to proceedings in courts of inferior, as distinguished from courts of general, jurisdiction. To the contrary, it has been the uniform practice to consider on habeas corpus the question of the sufficiency of the complaint in such inferior courts, and to discharge the prisoner where such complaint failed to show a public offense under the laws of the state."

I frankly confess that I am unable to perceive any logical ground for drawing a distinction between felony and misdemeanor cases, where, in either case, the accusatory document fails to state facts sufficient to show the commission of a public offense known to the law, unless it is intended to arbitrarily declare that, because the law furnishes no method by which misdemeanor cases may be carried to the higher courts for the correction of errors, the writ of habeas corpus may be extended in its scope, in such cases, and made to perform practically the office of a writ of error. I see no serious objection to thus enlarging the scope of the writ, in which event there would then appear a valid reason for the distinction which appears to have been established in the Greenall Case. Of course, it is only a trite declaration to say that the sole purpose of the writ of habeas corpus is to try and determine questions of jurisdiction in the class of cases to which it is applicable, and, obviously, if either a complaint in a justice's court, or an indictment, absolutely fails to state any public offense known to the law, the court in which such accusatory pleading is filed is manifestly without jurisdiction to restrain the liberty of the person so charged, or to put him upon trial under such pretended complaint or indictment. It does not definitely appear from the opinion in the Greenall Case, supra, that the court intends to hold that the writ of habeas corpus, as to misdemeanors of which justices' and police courts have jurisdiction, shall serve the purpose of a writ or proceeding for the correction of errors, and therefore I agree with the court, in the case of Ex parte Williams, supra, that the writ is not to be made to subserve the office of a demurrer.

Section 537 of the Penal Code is a valid statute. Ex parte Ruffin, 119 Cal. 487, 51 Pac. 862, and Ex parte Williams, supra. This court may, of course, take judicial notice of its provisions, and that it contains several different clauses describing as many different acts, any one of which constitutes a public offense of which a justice's court has jurisdiction. As seen, it provides, inter alia, that any person who obtains any food or accommodation at an hotel, inn, restaurant, boarding house, or lodging house, without paying therefor, with intent to defraud the proprietor or manager thereof, may be punished as for a misdemeanor. The complaint here, while defectively and inartificially drawn, and could not for an instant, as before stated, resist the force of a demurrer, nevertheless clearly discloses an attempt at charging an offense under that section. It cannot be said, without challenging common intelligence, that a mere reading of the document will not at once indicate that it was sought therein to charge the petitioner with the violation of the first clause of section 537 of the Penal Code.

Counsel for petitioner, criticising the complaint as though its sufficiency were being tested by a special demurrer, declares that it cannot be ascertained from its allegations whether the alleged "bill" was incurred for "food or accommodations at any hotel, inn, * * * or boarding house," etc., and whether the "defendant defrauded the proprietor or manager of any hotel," etc. In support of the first-stated criticism it is suggested that the alleged "bill" may have been "incurred for laundry, livery hire, or any such matter."

Tested by this proceeding, I think the complaint must not be construed into an absurdity, for certainly it would be absurd to say that the "bill" referred to in the complaint was incurred for some purpose which this court judicially knows could not be made the foundation of a criminal prosecution, if incurred under the circumstances shown by the complaint. I have said that the complaint, by its allegations, fairly represents a "squint" at a substantive statement of a public offense under section 537 of the Penal Code. If this be true, would it not do violence to common sense to declare that the "bill" alleged in the complaint was not incurred for "food or accommodation" at the boarding house of which the complaint alleges that the party alleged to have been defrauded is the keeper? It is a fact within the range of common knowledge that "laundry work" and "livery hiring" are not amongst the natural concomitants of the business of keeping a "boarding house." With equal logic and reason it could be argued that the word "bill," as used in the complaint, might refer to the fee of a lawyer or the wages of a laborer. The word should be given, in this proceeding, the meaning it must naturally import in the connection in which it is used in the complaint. This court, as I have declared, judicially knows that the offense sought to be charged is that denounced by the section of the Code referred to, and it would therefore be absurd for the court to say that the word "bill" has reference to some other subject or matter than some one of those to which the section relates.

I think the second objection to the complaint is equally as untenable in this proceeding. The statute uses the words "proprietor or manager" of an inn, hotel, or boarding house, whereas the complaint alleges that the complaining witness is "keeper of a boarding house," and counsel insists that this deviation from the language of the statute is fatal to the jurisdiction of the court. It is true that, as a general rule, in charging a person with a crime, if the allegations of the accusatory pleading are substantially in the language of the statute under which the charge is made, it is sufficient. But this rule does not mean that the language of the statute should be literally followed. In some cases a literal following of the language of the statute without some other averments would not be sufficient to state an offense. The true rule is that, if the offense charged is set forth with such "particulars of time, place, person, and property as to enable the defendant to understand distinctly the character of the offense complained of, and to answer the complaint," then the pleading is impregnable against demurrer. Section 1426, Pen. Code.

The meaning of the word "keeper" as employed in the complaint is not so obscure or indefinite as to compel a court to declare, in a proceeding of this character, that, by its use in lieu of either of the words used in the statute as descriptive of the persons who may be defrauded, the want of jurisdiction in the court of the person of the petitioner is made to appear. In truth, the word has a broader meaning than either the word "proprietor" or "manager," as employed in the statute, for it may include either or both. According to Webster, "keeper" is one who has the care, custody, or superintendence of anything," or "one who has or holds possession of anything." Colloquially the term "saloon keeper" is generally understood to mean the proprietor of a saloon. I think the phrase "keeper of a boarding house" has commonly the same meaning. If the complaint had alleged that the complainant was "the owner of a boarding house," counsel would surely not, on demurrer, contend that the language of the statute had not been substantially followed, the complaint being otherwise sufficient, although the word "owner" is not used in the section. I entertain no doubt that the word "keeper" as used in the complaint, so far as that part of the document is concerned, with sufficient clearness, at least for the purposes of this proceeding, indicates that the party who is alleged to have been defrauded by the petitioner is either proprietor or manager, or both, of the boarding house referred to in the complaint.

The petitioner, as seen, has preserved the last remedy available to him in the ordinary course of law, and I do not hesitate to venture the opinion that, had he pressed his appeal in the superior court, there would have been no necessity for seeking his summary discharge through this proceeding.

For the reasons stated in the foregoing, the alternative writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

10 Cal. App. 534

POTOMAC OIL CO. et al. v. DYE.
(Civ. 661.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 6, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 7*)—NATURE OF WRIT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where one has a substantial right to protect or enforce, and there is no other adequate remedy at law, he is entitled, as a matter of right, to mandamus, or at least it is an abuse of discretion to refuse it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 128*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—TITLE TO CORPORATE OFFICE.

The courts of the state will entertain an action of mandamus by a foreign private corporation against one of its officers, resident of this state, of whom it cannot obtain jurisdiction in its own domicile, to compel such officer to turn over books, papers, etc., belonging to the corporation, notwithstanding the title to the office may be incidentally involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 263; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

Application by the Potomac Oil Company and another for writ of mandamus against J. M. Dye. Demurrer to petition overruled, and motion to dismiss proceedings denied.

H. J. Stevens and O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, for petitioners. J. W. P. Laird and C. L. Clafin, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Mandamus. Petition shows the corporation petitioner was incorporated under the laws of the territory of Arizona, with its principal place of business at Phoenix, Ariz., and a provision in its articles of incorporation that it should have a branch office in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., and that the purpose of its incorporation was to buy, lease, hold, and operate oil lands and oil wells, and deal in the products thereof throughout the United States; that all its property is situated in the state of California, and it is, and has been for several years, engaged in operating its said property in that state, and during all this time all its business transactions and operations have been, and now are, carried on through its office established at Los Angeles in the state of California, in accordance with the provisions thereof in its articles of incorporation; that all of its directors' meetings, except two or three, have, since December 29, 1908, been held in California, and that its fixed purpose and intent is to continue to so carry on its business and operations in said state; that the officers of said corporation, according to the provisions of the by-laws thereof, are elected and hold office at the pleasure of the board of directors; that more than a year prior to the date named the respondent was elected secretary of said corporation, and continued to hold that office until the said 29th day of December, 1908, when the petitioner B. M. Lovell was, at a meeting of the board of directors thereof, held in accordance with the by-laws at Phoenix, Ariz., regularly elected to succeed him, and said B. M. Lovell ever since said date has been, and now is, the secretary of the said corporation petitioner; that respondent, during the time he was secretary of said corporation and ever since, has been, and now is, a resident of the state of California, and while acting as such secretary maintained an office of said corporation in the county of Kern, state of California, where he kept in his possession the books, seal, papers, and other matters and things connected with said office of secretary; that he still retains custody, possession, and control of such office, and of the books, papers, and other matters pertaining thereto, and refuses to deliver the same to petitioner B. M. Lovell, or admit him into the use or enjoyment of said office, or any of the privileges thereof, notwithstanding respondent has been notified of Lovell's election to said office, and the said Lovell has, as secretary of said corporation, made demand for the books, papers, matters, etc., belonging thereto. The prayer of the petition is for a writ of mandate commanding the respondent to turn over all books, papers, etc., belonging to said office of secretary to said Lovell, and also the office itself, and to admit Lovell to the use and enjoyment thereof, and to all the rights and privileges incident thereto. An alternative writ issued in accordance with the prayer of the petition, and for return thereto respondent files a demurrer to the petition, a motion to dismiss the proceedings, and an answer. The issues of law raised by the demurrer and motion to dismiss present the questions of: The jurisdiction of this court to deal with the internal affairs of the corporation petitioner, its domicile being in the territory of Arizona, and the appropriateness of the remedy by mandamus.

For the purpose of passing upon the issues of law raised by the demurrer and motion to dismiss, the petitioner appears in the light of a foreign corporation, seeking to recover from a former officer the books, papers, etc., of his former office, he having refused to give them up after his term of office has expired; such former secretary being a resident of this state, having the books, etc., in his possession in this state, and entirely removed from the jurisdiction of the courts of the state of which the petitioner is a resident. While it is possible that the prayer might suggest that title to the office is involved in the controversy, the allegations of the petition leave no question in this regard. It hardly seems necessary to cite authorities to show that on the face of the petition this court has jurisdiction to entertain such a proceeding.

As to the remedy. Mandamus is no longer treated as a purely prerogative writ. In its use in an original proceeding in modern practice the writ has come to be considered as merely an action at law between the parties. The right to the writ, and the power to issue it, has ceased to depend upon any prerogative power. It is nothing more than the ordinary process of a court of justice to which every one is entitled, where it is the appropriate process for asserting the right he claims. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 176, 2 L. Ed. 60; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. 524, 615, 9 L. Ed. 1181; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 98, 16 L. Ed. 717; U. S. v. Henry Co., 6 Wall. 166, 198, 18 L. Ed. 768. Mandamus, although it is an extraordinary legal remedy, is in the nature of an equitable interference, supplementing the deficiencies of the common law. It will ordinarily be issued where a legal duty is established, and no other sufficient means exists for enforcing it, says the Connecticut court in Bassett v. Atwater, 65 Conn. 355, 32 Atl. 937, 32 L. Ed. 575. In this case a mandamus issued to enforce a provision of a by-law of the corporation relating to the calling of a special meeting of the stockholders, a distinction being drawn between a contractual right and a duty imposed by the by-laws of a private corporation; it being conceded that the writ would not lie to enforce a mere private contractual obligation. Its issuance is not necessarily a matter of right, but lies rather in the discretion of the court, but where one has a substantial right to protect or enforce, and this may be accomplished by such a writ, and there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, he is entitled, as a matter of right, to the writ, or, perhaps more correctly, in other words, it would be an abuse of discretion to refuse it. Notwithstanding the loss of its prerogative character, <sup>4</sup> courts, in the issuance of the writ, will still be governed by the same rule and purpose for which it issued at common law, to wit, in order to prevent a failure of justice. Gay v. Terrance, 145 Cal. 144, 78 Pac. 540.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

As a means to compel a person claiming to act as an officer of a private corporation to deliver up to the corporation its seal, books, papers, records, etc., it has been frequently issued; the leading case to this effect being the case of American Railway Frog Co. v. Haven, 101 Mass. 398, 3 Am. Rep. 377. Other cases in the same jurisdiction (Massachusetts) approving this rule are cited in New England Mut. Life Co. v. Phillips, 141 Mass. 535, 6 N. E. 541. See, also, Haupt v. Rogers, 170 Mass. 71, 48 N. E. 1080, 1082. Says the Missouri Court of Appeals: "It is now well settled that mandamus will lie upon the petition of a private corporation to compel the surrender of its records, books, and papers, which are unlawfully withheld by one of its former officers." State v. Davis, 54 Mo. App. 447, 450. Even where the books, records, etc., detained were purchased and paid for by the secretary and the corporation had not repaid him, it was held that this gave no right to detain them when he ceased to be secretary, and that mandamus would issue to compel their delivery to the corporation. State v. Goll, 32 N. J. Law, 285, 292. It has been held proper for the writ to issue for this purpose at the suit of a foreign corporation, under circumstances which cannot well be distinguished from those in the case before us, under a statute identical with ours (State v. Cronan, 23 Nev. 437, 49 Pac. 41, 43); and we find nothing in the authorities cited from this state in conflict with this view, so that the demurrer will have to be overruled, and the motion to dismiss denied.

In respect to the jurisdiction of this court to try the issues raised by the answer in a proceeding of this kind, we are of the opinion that it is competent for us to do so. So long as the respondent remains without the jurisdiction of the territory of Arizona, it is apparent that the courts of that territory will be powerless to determine, either the relation of the respondent to the office of secretary, or his rights in respect to the books, papers, etc., belonging to the office, for the purpose of enforcing the adjudication so had in the state of California. No other remedy has been suggested in which the title to the office could be first tried in this state but that of quo warranto, and the cases cited to support this view all relate to title to public offices. Smith v. Olds, 3 Cal. 167, 58 Am. Dec. 398; Meredith v. Supervisors, 50 Cal. 433; Kelly v. Edwards, 69 Cal. 460, 11 Pac. 1. No distinction being drawn in People v. Harvey, 62 Cal. 508, and the record not disclosing the character of the office in question, it will be assumed that it is the same as in the other cases. The reason for the denial of relief by mandamus in these cases was because there was an adequate remedy at law in the quo warranto proceeding. No such reason exists where the office in question is one in a private corporation. The title to such an office cannot be tried in an action in equity (New England v. Phillips, 141 Mass. 535, 6 N. E. 534); or by quo warranto in most jurisdictions (Haupt v. Rogers, 170 Mass. 71, 48 N. E. 1080). And it cannot be tried in an action in replevin to recover the papers and books, or a suit for a mandatory injunction, in a jurisdiction in which by statute the proceeding in quo warranto is made applicable. Standard Co. v. Byers, 31 Wash. 100, 71 Pac. 766. We are of opinion that it is competent for the courts of this state to entertain an action by a foreign private corporation against its officers resident of this state, of whom it cannot obtain jurisdiction in its own domicile. (Miller v. Quincey, 179 N. Y. 294, 72 N. E. 116), and that in this state the remedy by mandamus is appropriate for the purpose of the proceeding before us, notwithstanding the title to the office may be incidentally involved.

Demurrer overruled, and motion to dismiss denied.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J

10 Cal. App. 524

PEOPLE v. WARD. (Cr. 119.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 5, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 51*)—EVIDENCE.

In a trial for larceny of a horse and bridle, having a single driving rein, testimony that witness was awakened about 1 o'clock on the morning of the day following the theft; saw in his yard a horse, from which a man was running away; that as witness approached the horse to secure him, he saw some one coming from the direction in which he had seen the man running; that the man claimed the horse, on which was a bridle with a single driving rein; that the man resembled the defendant, and he believed him to be the same person—was admissible as tending to prove defendant in possession of a horse at the time when, and in the vicinity where, the horse with such a bridle was stolen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 144; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

2. LARCENY (§ 55*) — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a trial for larceny, evidence held sufficient to support a verdict of guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Jamison, Judge.

J. D. Ward was convicted of grand larceny, and from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Sturges, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted upon an information charging him with the crime of grand larceny. The subject of the larceny was a certain horse belonging to one Frank A. Marston. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The first assignment of error is that the court erred in denying the defendant's motion to strike out the entire evidence of witness John Beardsley, who testified on behalf of the prosecution. It appears that the horse was stolen from Marston's stable in Pasadena on the night of August 9th, and that with the horse there was taken a bridle having attached thereto a single driving rein. Beardsley lived on the road leading from Pasadena to Los Angeles, at which place the horse was subsequently found in a stable which defendant had theretofore rented, and of which, the evidence tended to show, he was in the exclusive possession. Beardsley, in effect, testified that he was awakened about 1 o'clock on the morning of August 10th, and, looking out, saw in his yard a horse, from which a man was running away; that as he approached the horse for the purpose of securing him, he (Beardsley) saw some one coming from the direction in which he had seen the man running; that this man claimed the horse, upon which was a bridle to which was attached a single driving rein; that the man in size, build, voice, and walk, marked by a noticeable limp in the left leg, resembled the defendant, who was likewise lame, and whom he confidently believed to be one and the same person. This testimony, taken in connection with the evidence of other circumstances, was competent, in that it tended to prove defendant in possession of a horse at a time when, and in the vicinity where, a horse with this peculiarly marked bridle had been stolen. There was no error in denying the motion to strike out. Any objection thereto should be directed to its weight rather than to its competency.

There is no merit in the claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. The evidence tends to prove that on August 6th defendant, claiming to be a horse trainer, rented a barn at 916 South Broadway in the city of Los Angeles; that he took possession of the barn and put a padlock upon one of the doors thereof; that the horse was stolen from Marston's stable on the night of the 9th of August, and found in this barn on August 15th, from which it was recovered by Marston on the 18th of August; that a bridle with a piece of rein attached thereto similar to that taken was found in the barn with the horse; that defendant was arrested on August 13th, at which time he had in his possession a key which unlocked the padlock with which one of the doors to said barn was secured. This and other evidence, considered with that of Beardsley heretofore referred to, was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding a verdict of guilty. Whether or not it constitutes proof is a question, "in the first instance, for the jury, and, in the second, for the trial judge upon hearing the motion for new trial." People v. Cain, 7 Cal. App. 163, 93 Pac. 1037; People v. Wong Chong Suey, 110 Cal. 117, 42 Pac. 420.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 526

PEOPLE v. TURPIN. (Cr. 161.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 6, 1909.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 253*) — PREMEDITATION AND DELIBERATION.

Evidence held sufficient to show premeditation and deliberation to sustain a verdict of murder in the first degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 525; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 282*) — QUESTIONS FOR JURY — DEGREE OF OFFENSE.

The degree of murder is particularly a matter for the determination of the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 574; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 332*) — APPEAL AND ERROR — REVIEW OF QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The degree of murder being a question for the jury, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the verdict as to the degree of the crime, except in a clear case of absence of evidence to support it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 699; Dec. Dig. § 332.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 823*) — INSTRUCTIONS — ERROR CURED BY GIVING OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court in a prosecution for homicide used some objectionable expressions in an instruction as to self-defense, but in other instructions fully and correctly set forth the law as to self-defense, the defects in the former instruction are cured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1992; Dec. Dig. § 823; * Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 718, 719.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Edward Turpin was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

Aynesworth & Sprouse and N. C. Caldwell, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder for the killing of Frederick Roetzcher on the 16th day of June, 1908, in the county of Fresno. He was convicted of murder in the first degree, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment for life. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The killing of Roetzcher by defendant was admitted; the only defense attempted being that the killing was done in necessary self-defense. Deceased and his partner, Otto Trehse, were farmers, and resided on their farm, situated near Fowler, in Fresno county. The homicide occurred on this farm. There also resided on this farm one Carl Leyman, an employé of the partners, and one Mrs. Stella Crane and her three young children. Mrs. Crane was employed to do the cooking and housework on the place, and had been so employed for about six weeks prior to the day of the tragedy. Defendant was acquainted with all the persons living on the Roetzcher place, and since the employment of Mrs. Crane had frequently called on her there. Evidence was given that he had sometimes visited her clandestinely and late at night; that prior to the day of the homicide both the deceased and his partner, Otto Trehse, had told defendant that he was not wanted at their home, and had forbidden him to come there. Upon two occasions at least he had been so forbidden by deceased. On Monday afternoon, June 15, 1908 defendant borrowed a six-shooter revolver loaded in five chambers, of one David Wright, in the town of Fowler, saying at that time that he "just wanted to carry it this evening." Shortly after getting the pistol, and at about 7 o'clock of the same evening, defendant appeared at the Roetzcher house while the inmates were at supper. Deceased stepped out of the house to the back porch and met defendant, who said he had a letter for Mrs. Crane, and insisted on giving it to her in person. Deceased informed Mrs. Crane of this, and she came out and received the letter, which was written by defendant. Defendant came on a wheel, and after four or five minutes left, and returned to Fowler. Apparently nothing unpleasant occurred at this visit. After supper the three men members of the household also left the premises, but before doing so deceased, according to evidence given by Mrs. Crane, had a talk with her about defendant, in which he said that he thought defendant would come to the house again that night, and stated that he (deceased) would kill defendant if he came on the place again. Deceased returned home at about 10 o'clock, while his partner stopped for a short while at a neighbor's immediately across the road from the Roetzcher place. Deceased, according to the testimony of Mrs. Crane, immediately went to her room, where she was lying on the bed with her three sleeping children, and engaged her in conversation about defendant. As he started to leave her room, he looked out of the window, and then quickly left the room, went to his own room, and then passed out onto the porch, clammimg the door as he did so. (In deceased's room a shotgun was usually kept, and had been placed there this particular afternoon upon being returned by a neighbor who had borrowed it. It had been put away unloaded.) Mrs. Crane testified that she next heard a person, whom she believed by his voice to be deceased, say, "I'll shoot you, you son of a bitch," and a person, whom she believed from his voice to be defendant, say, "Don't you move, don't you move, don't you move." This was followed by some shots. She then heard some one run by her window. On going out of the house she found deceased lying at the bottom of the steps leading from the back porch. Subsequent examination disclosed that he had about his face three confused wounds, one gun-shot wound near the left eye, and two gun-shot wounds entering the chest, either of which was fatal. He died shortly after midnight. Deceased's shotgun was found under the window of Mrs. Crane's room, where defendant testified that he had dropped it as he fled from the premises after shooting deceased. This shotgun was unloaded by Mrs. Crane, and the cartridges afterwards taken possession of by the sheriff. No testimony was given as to whether they bore any evidence or marks showing that the gun had been snapped. Defendant fled from the premises to Fowler, where he got a coat and changed his hat for one belonging to a friend, borrowed some money, took a horse from his father's barn, and on the horse continued his flight to Fresno, where he bought a ticket to Stockton, but was arrested about 1 o'clock as he attempted to board the train. On being arrested he gave his name as Baker, but later admitted that he had shot deceased, and on learning he was dead said he was "damn glad of it."

Mrs. Crane was not examined as a witness for the prosecution, but was a witness for defendant, with whom she was evidently very friendly. The defendant was a witness on his own behalf. He gave no reason for borrowing the pistol on this occasion, saying simply that he did not know why he borrowed it this particular evening. He testified that he left a saloon at Fowler about 10 o'clock and went to the Roetzsch house to call on Mrs. Crane. He testified: That deceased had never told him not to come to the place, but that, on the contrary, on that afternoon he, defendant, had told deceased that he was coming back that night, and that deceased said "All right." That, as he passed Mrs. Crane's window, he tapped on the screen and walked on toward the porch steps. That as he reached the steps deceased came out with a shotgun in his hand, and closed the door and walked towards defendant, and asked "Who it it?" and I says, 'It's me'; but he says, 'Is that you, Ted?' I says 'Yes'; and he says, 'You son of a bitch, I'll kill you.' As he did, he rushed off the porch, come down off the steps, and threw his shotgun up at me. Whether the shotgun snapped or whether it breeched, I don't know, and as he did I grabbed, that is, I got it with my hands, caught the barrel and threw my gun up, pulled my gun and told him not to move—I think three different times, but he kept fighting all the time, and he grabbed hold of my gun, and as he grabbed it I jerked the gun loose from him and struck him with it along the face, and then he grabbed hold of his gun with both hands and jerked back, and I had right hold of the muzzle of his gun, the muzzle of the gun was right in my hands, small grip on it. He grabbed his gun with both hands, when I shot him three times. I ain't sure I shot him three times. When I hit, struck him with this gun, the gun went off. One shot, I ain't sure."

It is not contended that the evidence is not sufficient to justify the verdict except in that it is claimed that the jury was not warranted in finding premeditation and deliberation necessary to constitute murder of the first degree. With this claim we cannot agree. From the evidence the jury might well believe that defendant armed himself in full expectation of an encounter, and with the deliberate purpose to take advantage of the occasion to kill his rival; that the claim of self-defense was but a pretense; that the encounter was deliberately sought for the purpose of killing the deceased; and that the killing was but the accomplishment of such deliberately formed purpose. The degree of murder is peculiarly a matter for the determination of the jury, and this court will not interfere with a verdict as to the degree of the crime except in a clear case of absence of evidence to support it. This is certainly not such a case.

The only errors relied on concern the giving of certain instructions, and the refusal to give others. The court instructed the jury as follows: "You are further instructed that, under the law of this state, every person has a right to protect his home from intrusion, and to employ such force as may be necessary to repel the intruder." Later on, after giving instructions that are not criticised, covering nine folios in the transcript, the court, in defining the right of self-defense, after referring to the right as a part of the law of nature, and one recognized in the laws of all civilized people, said: "The right is expressly recognized in our statutes, and the conditions under which it may be asserted are clearly defined. These are (1) that the party was not himself the first aggressor, or, if the aggressor, that he had in good faith withdrawn from the contest before the fatal shooting; (2) that the slaying was necessary to prevent the infliction upon himself of great bodily injury by the party slain. To justify the killing of another in self-defense, it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing that, in order to save his own life or to prevent his receiving great bodily harm, the killing of the other was absolutely necessary, and it must appear that the person killed was the assailant, or that the slayer had already and in good faith endeavored to decline further struggle before the fatal wound was given."

Appellant discusses these instructions together, and urges that when considered together and in relation to the evidence in the case they were calculated to impress upon the jury (1) "that the coming of defendant upon deceased's ranch was an assault, and that such coming made defendant an assailant; (2) that such coming of defendant upon the ranch was in law an intrusion upon deceased's home; (3) that deceased might, under his rights, and as a protection to his home, make a deadly assault upon defendant if defendant would not otherwise leave the ranch, although he made no assault and used no violence against either deceased or his home; (4) that defendant could not defend himself against such deadly assault upon him by deceased until defendant had first endeavored in good faith to leave deceased's ranch."

The instructions above set forth are certainly not free from objections, and contain some loose and inaccurate statements. Among other things the court was unfortunate in the use of the word "aggressor," instead of the statutory and approved word "assailant," in the first part of the instruction regarding the law of self-defense. But the quoted and attacked portions of the instructions are not all that the court said on the subject of the law of self-defense. If they were, there would be much plausibility in the criticisms of appellant.

The instruction concerning the right to protect one's home from intrusion was an isolated instruction, apparently not given in connection with the law of self-defense, but doubtless given in view of certain evidence introduced by defendant through Mrs. Crane, apparently intended to show that defendant had a right to visit her at the home of deceased, notwithstanding the objections or protests of deceased, even to the extent of clandestinely visiting her there at her room at late hours of the night. As it appears in the transcript, this instruction was not given in connection with the law of self-defense, but was separated from the instructions upon that subject by nine or ten folios of instructions on other subjects. After dealing with the usual phases of a trial for murder, the court, at the close of its instructions, took up the law of self-defense, and the entire instructions given by the court upon this subject were such as to fairly present the law to the jury and to fully protect the defendant in his rights in this regard. At the conclusion of its instructions upon the other phases of the law of homicide, the court, of its own motion, said: "In the present case, if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant fired the shot by which the deceased was slain, then they will consider the claim of the defendant that it was in necessary self-defense, and to repel a violent and dangerous attack which the deceased was then making, or was about to make upon him. The right of self-defense of a party violently assaulted by another to repel such attack, and fully protect himself, is a law of nature, it antedates all written enactments, and is fully recognized in the laws and legislation of all civilized people." Then follows the portion on the subject of self-defense above quoted, which, in turn, is followed by a full exposition of the right of the person attacked to act upon appearances.

Immediately following the instructions thus given by the court of its own motion upon the right of self-defense, the court, at the request of the defendant, instructed the jury as follows:

(1) "If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time of the fatal shot complained of here, the defendant was attacked by the deceased in a manner to excite the reasonable fear of a reasonable man, and did so excite the reasonable fear of the defendant herein, that he was in danger of great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, and that the defendant, while still under and by reason of such reasonable fears, shot and killed deceased, then such killing was not a crime."

(2) "It is a law of this state that, when a person not in fault is violently attacked by another, he is under no obligation to retreat, but may stand his ground and defend himself, even to the extent of taking the life of his adversary, if necessary. In such a case it is the duty of the one attacking to desist."

(3) "If you find from the evidence introduced in this case that the deceased came rushing out of his house with a loaded gun in his hand, and attempted to slay the defendant without any provocation on the part of the defendant, and that it was necessary to kill deceased in order to save his own life, then you are instructed that you must acquit the defendant."

(4) "You are also instructed that the fact that one is a trespasser upon the premises of another will not justify the other in taking life, and if the one trespassing is violently attacked, and is threatened with serious bodily injury, he may repel that attack by whatever force is necessary, even to the extent of taking his assailant's life."

In view of these very explicit and direct instructions given by the court upon the right of self-defense, it is impossible to believe that the jury did not fully understand that defendant had a right to defend himself against threatened serious bodily injury even to the taking of the life of his assailant, though defendant were himself a trespasser upon the premises of deceased.

While in the first part of its instruction on the right of self-defense the court committed the fault of using the word "aggressor" instead of "assailant," and the words "withdrawn from the contest" instead of "have endeavored to decline any further struggle," in other parts of the same instruction the proper words were used, and, as we have seen, explicit and direct instructions as to the right of self-defense predicated upon the precise claim of defendant as to the facts. The faults in the instructions are not such as to call for a reversal of the judgment. People v. Newcomer, 118 Cal. 263, 50 Pac. 405.

In addition to the point urged as to the giving of the instructions above discussed, appellant very briefly refers to the refusal of the court to give four instructions proposed by defendant. As to these offered instructions, it is sufficient to say that we have examined them, and so far as they embody correct principles of law, or were applicable to the case, they were fully covered by other instructions given.

No other errors have been called to our attention.

The judgment and order are affirmed

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J

(10 Cal. App. 540)

H. P. SMITH CO. v. SUTTICH. (Civ. 596.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 6, 1909.)

1. WAREHOUSEMEN (§ 27*)—ACTIONS AGAINST —RIGHT OF ACTION—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

Where defendant's warehouse was destroyed by plaintiff's negligence in overcrowding it in storing goods therein, defendant was at least entitled to recover the storage charges, even if she was not damaged by the destruction of the building under the circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Warehousemen, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1033*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FAVORABLE TO COMPLAINING PARTY.

Plaintiff cannot complain because the verdict for defendant is too small.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4061; Dec. Dig. § 1033.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by the H. P. Smith Company against Martha A. Suttich, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendant on her cross-complaint, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Barrows, for appellant. W. M. Gibson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was the owner of a warehouse built out over the water of the bay of San Francisco. Plaintiff under agreement with defendant had certain hay stored in said warehouse, and on December 10, 1906, during a storm, the warehouse was demolished, and the hay fell into the water. The plaintiff alleged that the accident was caused by defendant's negligence in allowing the piling and supports of the warehouse to become decayed and out of repair and in failing to provide proper protection from the wash of drift against it, and it prayed for damages in the sum of $3,500.

Defendant denied that the warehouse was unsafe or unfit in any respect for the storage of the hay. By way of cross-complaint it was alleged that the agreement between the parties was that only 250 tons should be stored in said warehouse, but in violation of said agreement plaintiff put therein 461 tons of hay, and that this over-crowding, in connection with the act of the plaintiff in leaving open the large doors of the warehouse, thereby permitting the high winds prevailing to enter and lift the roof from its supports, was the proximate cause of the accident. Defendant sought to recover $6,000 for the destruction of the warehouse and $250 for the storage agreed to be paid. The jury found for defendant in the sum of $230.50.

1. At the close of the trial plaintiff asked leave to amend the complaint by adding an allegation charging improper construction of the warehouse and negligence in not securely fastening the roof to the walls of the building. The purpose of this, as claimed by plaintiff, was to make the complaint conform to the evidence. The motion was denied. The power of the court to allow amendments that causes may be tried and determined upon their merits should undoubtedly be liberally exercised. Farmers' Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 396; Marr v. Rhodes, 131 Cal. 267, 63 Pac. 364. But there was no evidence in support of the proposed amendment, and hence it would have been idle for the court to allow it. Unless good cause be shown for an amendment, it certainly cannot be an abuse of discretion to disallow it. Hayden v. Hayden, 46 Cal. 332.

2. There is some substantial evidence from which the jury had a right to infer that plaintiff's employes carelessly left the door open, and that this circumstance contributed to the accident. Again, there was testimony that the warehouse was crowded beyond its capacity in violation of the warning and instruction of defendant. No one can say that in the absence of this condition, the warehouse would have been destroyed. Upon either theory there is sufficient warrant for a finding against plaintiff.

3. It is claimed by appellant that there is no evidence that defendant was damaged in the sum of $230.50 by the loss of the warehouse. It is true that defendant testified that "nearly all of the lumber and timbers from which the warehouse was built were saved," and there is no direct testimony as to the value of the salvage. However, it is shown that the warehouse was worth $8,000, and within a short time plaintiff had expended $600 in repairs. We agree with respondent that the jury had a right to conclude that such a building standing and in good repair was worth at least $230.50 more than the material that went into its construction.

But, since there was evidence that the destruction of the building was caused by the negligence of plaintiff, defendant was at least entitled to the storage which was more than the amount recovered, and plaintiff cannot complain because the verdict is too small.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(10 Cal. App. 542)

In re DAMON'S ESTATE.

DAMON v. McDOUGALD, City and County Treasurer. (Civ. 572.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 6, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 497*)—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 42*)—RIGHT OF REVIEW—PERSONS AGGRIEVED.

The court will not pass upon the question whether the inheritance tax law of March 20, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 341, c. 314) is unconstitutional because discriminating between the citizens of the state and those of other states, where it does not appear to which class appellant urging the objection belongs, since it cannot be determined that she is an aggrieved person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2954; Dec. Dig. § 497;* Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 39, 40; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Action by Amella S. Damon, executrix of James E. Damon, against John E. McDougald, City and County Treasurer. From an order directing the payment of an inheritance tax, the executrix appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Hartley F. Peart, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco directing the widow, sole devisee under the will of said James E. Damon, deceased, to pay $1,172, "inheritance tax," under the act of the Legislature approved March 20, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 341, c. 314).

Appellant's only contention seems to be that said law is repugnant to the Constitution of the state and especially to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The argument is based principally upon the theory that there is a discrimination between the citizens of this state and those of other states, but it would be a sufficient answer to say that it does not appear to which class appellant belongs, and hence, granting such discrimination, it cannot be determined that appellant is an aggrieved party. What was said in Estate of Johnson, 139 Cal. 534, 73 Pac. 425, 96 Am. St. Rep. 161, might well therefore be invoked: "A court will not decide a constitutional question unless such construction is absolutely necessary; and in the Mahoney Case, since the appellants were aliens and claimed no protective rights as citizens, no constitutional question was involved. It would have been sufficient in disposing of their appeal to have said, as was said by the federal court in the case last cited: 'When a nonresident of the state assails the constitutionality of a statute upon the ground that it denies to him the privilege granted to the citizens of this state, it will be time enough to consider the constitutional question suggested. Courts will not listen to those who are not aggrieved by an invalid law.' As the Supreme Court of the United States has said in Chicago Ry. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 400, 36 L. Ed. 176: 'But exercise of the power to declare the statute unconstitutional and void is the ultimate and supreme function of courts. It is legitimate only in the last resort and as a necessity in the determination of a real, earnest, and vital controversy between individuals.'"

But, again, appellant admits that "the validity of said law has been upheld by several decisions of the Supreme Court" and therefore she hardly expects "the court to go back of their own rulings." With less reason, of course, could she expect us to overrule those decisions.

All the questions, indeed, discussed by counsel have been settled adversely to appellant's contention in the following cases:

Estate of Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181; Estate of Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 54 Pac. 259, 58 Pac. 462, 45 L. R. A. 788, and Estate of Martin, 153 Cal. 225, 94 Pac. 1053. The order is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(155 Cal. 708)

CLAYBURGH v. AGRICULTURAL INS. CO.
OF WATERTOWN, N. Y.
(S. F. 4,862.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1909.)

INSURANCE (§ 324*) — FIRE INSURANCE —
"FALLEN BUILDING" CLAUSE.

The clause in a fire policy, "If a building or any part thereof fall," except as the result of fire, insurance shall cease, is properly interpreted by the instructions, taken as a whole, that the meaning of the language is that the building must have fallen in whole or part to such an extent that its integrity as a building was destroyed or substantially impaired; that insured could recover if the building was substantially in its entirety, and not materially impaired after the falling of parts shown to have fallen; and that the insured was not entitled to verdict unless the substantial integrity of the building was impaired to such an extent as to render it unsuitable for use as an entire building, or unless the falling of the parts that fell exposed the interior of the building or its contents to the inclemency of the weather, or rendered the building or its contents more easily subject to ignition by fire, and thereby materially impaired the building as a building.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 749; Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Simon Clayburgh against the Agricultural Insurance Company of Watertown, N. Y. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Goodfellow & Eells, T. C. Coogan, and H. B. M. Miller, for appellant. Naphitaly & Freidenrich, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to recover $6,000 on a policy of fire insurance covering a building in the city of San Francisco. Upon a trial before a jury, the plaintiff recovered a verdict for the amount claimed. The defendant appeals from the judgment entered upon the verdict, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. There was no denial of the fact that the insured building had on the 19th day of April, 1906, been totally destroyed by fire, and that by its destruction, plaintiff had suffered damage to an amount exceeding his insurance. The only defense was that on the 18th day of April, 1906, a part of the building had fallen as a result of the earthquake occurring on that day. The policy contained this provision: "If a building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance on such building or its contents shall immediately cease."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The subject of the insurance was a five-story brick building on the southerly line of Geary street, leased to a firm which occupied the whole of it as an art store. The defendant introduced in evidence a photograph of the building, taken on the morning of April 18th, from some point in a structure on the opposite side of the street. This photograph, taken after the occurrence of the earthquake, and before fire had attacked the building, showed that there had been some injury to plaintiff's building. The upper part of the walls had been shaken down to such an extent as to expose to sight the uprights supporting what appeared to be the roof of the building, and to allow a view across the top of the building between these supports. The testimony of witnesses was offered to show that the photograph fairly represented the condition of the building. On behalf of plaintiff, there was evidence to the effect that the flat surface over the building, shown on the photograph, was not, in reality, the roof, but was merely a tin deck, built some three or four feet above the roof, and that its sole purpose was to provide an air space over the fifth story, in which the tenants were conducting operations for which they required an even temperature. It was, as explained by one of the members of the firm occupying the premises, "a superstructure that has nothing to do with the building, but was simply put there at our suggestion by the architect when the building was built for us." This witness testified, further, that he had gone through the building after the earthquake, and had found the interior perfectly intact. No part of any wall or of the roof was broken from the fifth floor to the basement. Nothing had fallen except the cornice and a portion of the fire wall, which was located above the roof, to and beyond the tin deck. No part of the interior of the building was exposed to the elements, and the tenants "could have gone right on" with their business. The architect who had designed the building testified, as did the witness just referred to, that the construction above the fifth floor—i. e., the fire deck and the walls surrounding it—was not an essential part of the building.

The court gave to the jury the following instructions:

"(1) By the terms of the policy of insurance in this case it is provided that if the insured building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, the insurance thereon immediately ceases. As to what constitutes a falling of the building within the meaning of this clause, I charge you that the meaning of the language is that the building must have fallen in whole or part to such an extent that its integrity as a building was destroyed or substantially impaired.

"(2) If you find from the evidence that the building was substantially in its entirety, and not materially impaired after the falling of such parts thereof which the evidence shows to have fallen, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff.

"(3) Defendant is not entitled to a verdict in this case unless you find from the evidence that the substantial integrity of the building was impaired to such an extent as to render it unsuitable for use as an entire building, or unless the falling of such parts as you shall find did fall exposed the interior of the building or its contents to the inclemency of the weather or render the building or its contents more easily subject to ignition by fire, and thereby materially impairing the building as a building."

If these instructions correctly defined the clause of the policy relied on, it cannot be doubted that the jury was warranted by the evidence in finding that there had not been such a falling of any part of the building as to terminate the insurance. It was for the jury to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses, and to draw any reasonably permissible inferences from their testimony. The showing made by plaintiff, if accepted as true, furnished a sufficient basis for the conclusion that no part of the building proper had fallen, but that the only damage was to a false roof or superstructure, which did not form an essential or integral portion of the edifice.

We have no doubt that these instructions, taken as a whole, properly interpreted the clause upon which the defense was rested. The language employed in the policy is to be given a reasonable construction, in view of the purposes, as well of the entire contract, as of the particular condition under discussion. The general object of the policy is to indemnify the insured against loss or damage by fire. The company, agreeing to furnish this indemnity in return for a certain premium, seeks to limit its risk by various provisions. Generally speaking, their purpose is to avoid liability in the event of the occurrence of circumstances which would naturally tend to increase the hazard beyond that which was in the contemplation of the parties when the insurance was effected. The insurer seeks to guard itself against liability in the event that the condition of the insured property should so change that the risk upon such property in its altered condition would presumably not have been assumed for the premium paid. Cf. Goorberg v. Western Assur. Co., 150 Cal. 510, 515, 89 Pac. 130, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 119 Am. St. Rep. 246. One of these provisions is the "fallen building" clause. The reason for its insertion in a policy is to be found in the knowledge of the fact that a building which has fallen or has suffered the loss of so material a part as to afford a more ready means of access to flames is more likely to burn than one which is intact. The fall of a trivial or minute part of a building may, however, occur without increasing the hazard in the slightest degree. It is not to be supposed that the parties intended to contract that such fall should avoid the policy. Whether there has been a fall of a part of the building, within the meaning of the policy, will depend upon the extent and character of the portion fallen.

These views are, in substance, in accord with those announced in all the cases in which this clause has received consideration. In Nelson v. Traders' Ins. Co., 181 N. Y. 472, 74 N. E. 421, the court said: "The meaning of the clause in question, when reasonably interpreted, is that the insurer is excused from its obligation by either the fall of the building as a structure, or of such a substantial and important part thereof as impairs its usefulness as such, and leaves the remaining part of the building subject to an increased risk of fire." "The falling," it is said in Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Tompkins & Co., 30 Tex. Civ. App. 404, 71 S. W. 812, Id., 96 Tex. 187, 71 S. W. 814, "must be of some material or substantial part of the building." See, also, L. & L. F. I. Co. v. Crunk, 91 Tenn. 376, 23 S. W. 140.

The instructions given in this case fairly left to the determination of the jury the question of fact in issue; i. e., whether there had been a fall of a material or substantial part of the building. It is urged that the first instruction above quoted is virtually the same as that declared to be erroneous in Home, etc., Co. v. Tompkins, supra. The charge there was that the falling must be of "such an integral part of the building as a whole, as that the falling of the same would destroy the distinctive character of the structure." This was held to require the insurer to show a case in which "the structure could no longer be considered a building, but only débris or ruins." Here, however, the instruction went further. It included in its definition, not only the destruction, but the substantial impairment of the integrity of the building. Furthermore, the third instruction so limited and explained the expressions used in the earlier instructions that the charge, as a whole, could not have been understood as declaring the rule denounced in the Tompkins Case.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

155 Cal. 659

McCOLLOUGH v. HOME INS. CO. OF NEW YORK. (L. A. 2,244.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 3*)—SALE DISTINGUISHED FROM LEASE.

A contract recited receipt of $3 as a deposit to secure a described lot, stating that the deposit was accepted as rent for one week, and that the plaintiff was to pay the further sum of $1.50 as weekly rent for 97 weeks, and the further sum of $1.50 when the company issuing the contract would convey the lot to plaintiff, and that default in payment for four weeks would work forfeiture. Held, that the contract was of sale, and not lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 282*) — "UNCONDITIONAL AND SOLE OWNERSHIP" OF PROPERTY.

A vendee in possession under a contract not signed by him, but referring to an application to purchase signed by him, was within the rule that the holder of an equitable title is the "unconditional and sole owner" within the meaning of that condition in a policy of insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 601-635; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7154-7155.]

3. INSURANCE (§ 558*) — PROOF OF LOSS — WAIVER BY AGENT.

Where an insurance company had actual notice of loss 4 days after the fire, and insured had an interview with an adjuster within the 60 days allowed for proof, and the adjuster stated that, while sworn proofs ought to be made, it was not actually necessary, and that he would settle just the same, and the company did not deny liability until after the 60 days, there was a waiver of the requirement of sworn proofs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1382-1390, 1405; Dec. Dig. § 558.*]

4. INSURANCE (§ 561*) — PROOF OF LOSS — WAIVER.

An agreement signed by insured reciting that any action taken by the company in investigating the cause of fire and ascertaining the amount of loss should not waive any of the conditions of the policy did not apply to affirmative representations to the insured that he need not furnish sworn proofs of loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1406-1409; Dec. Dig. § 561.*]

5. INSURANCE (§ 376*)—WAIVER—POWER OF AGENT—PROVISION OF POLICY.

The clause of a policy providing that no officer, agent, or other representative of the company shall have power to waive any condition of the policy except such as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto has no reference to those stipulations which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proofs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 952-955; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by C. M. McCollough against the Home Insurance Company of New York. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Kemp & Collier, for appellant. C. W. Pendleton, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. On July 31, 1905, the defendant issued to plaintiff a policy of fire insurance in the sum of $3,000. Of this amount $2,000 was on a frame building, and $1,000 on household furniture and effects contained therein. The building and contents were destroyed by fire, and this action was brought on the policy. The plaintiff had judgment for $2,650, with interest and costs, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The appellant bases its position upon two clauses of the policy, one relating to the title of the insured, and the other to the furnishing by him of sworn proofs of loss within a certain time.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

1. The policy provided that it should "be void * * * if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership; or if the subject of insurance be a building on ground not owned by insured in fee simple." The court found, following the allegations of the complaint, that, before the policy was issued, the plaintiff fully stated and disclosed to the defendant and its agents the nature and character of his interest in said land—1. e., that he held the land under a contract of purchase, was paying for the same upon installments, and did not yet have a deed—and found, further, that at all times since the issuance of the policy the plaintiff had been the sole and exclusive owner of the building and the land, "except as aforesaid." These findings, in so far as they import either a compliance with the terms of the policy, or a waiver of a breach, are attacked as unsupported by the evidence.

The facts shown in connection with plaintiff's interest in the property were these: On April 22, 1904, the Golden State Realty Investment Company, a corporation, was the owner of the land, described as lots 62 and 63 in the Watts Junction Tract. On that day it issued to plaintiff two papers, similar in form, referring to lots 62 and 63, respectively. Each acknowledged the receipt from plaintiff of $3, "as a deposit to secure" the lot described, and went on to state that the deposit was accepted as rent of said property for one week, that plaintiff was to pay the further sum of $1.50 as weekly rent for 97 weeks, and that upon payment of said sums, and the further sum of $1.50, the Golden State Company would convey the property, free and clear of incumbrance, to plaintiff. The contracts contained a provision for forfeiture in the event of a default in payment for four weeks. At the date of the issuance of the policy, July 31, 1905, the plaintiff had made 56 weekly payments on each of the contracts. Subsequently the remaining payments were made and the property conveyed to plaintiff. The building on the land was erected by plaintiff, and was occupied by him.

The papers issued by the Golden State Company bore the designation "Lease Contract." Notwithstanding this, and the further fact that the weekly payments were described as "rent," there can be no doubt that the instruments were in fact not leases, but contracts of sale. Parke, etc., Co. v.

White River L. Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442; Parke, etc., Co. v. White River L. Co., 110 Cal. 658, 43 Pac. 202; Holi Mfg. Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353, 42 Pac. 435. The clause of the policy providing that it shall be void if the insured's interest is other than sole and unconditional ownership, or the subject be a building on ground not owned by the insured in fee simple, is designed to remove from him the temptation to profit by the willful destruction of property not entirely owned by him. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. 460, 12 Atl. 668, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686. "It therefore follows that the clause is in most cases held to refer to the character and quality of the title—to the actual and substantial ownership, rather than to the strictly legal title." 2 Cooley, Ins. 1369. An equitable title in the insured is a sufficient compliance with the condition in question. A vendee in possession of property under a valid contract of purchase which he is entitled to enforce specifically is the holder of such equitable title. Id. 1376. And the great weight of authority supports the proposition that such vendee is the "sole and unconditional owner" within the meaning of the policy, even though a portion of the purchase price may yet remain unpaid. Id.; Pennsylvania F. I. Co. v. Hughes, 108 Fed. 497, 47 C. C. A. 459; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr, 129 Fed. 723, 64 C. C. A. 251, 66 L. R. A. 569; Loventhal v. Insurance Co., 112 Ala. 108, 20 South. 419, 33 L. R. A. 258, 57 Am. St. Rep. 17; Dupreau v. Hib. Ins. Co., 76 Mich. 615, 43 N. W. 585, 5 L. R. A. 671; Pelton v. Westchester F. I. Co., 13 Hun, 23, affirmed 77 N. Y. 605; Imperial Ins. Co. v. Dunham, supra; Franklin F. I. Co. v. Crockett, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 725; Johannes v. Standard Fire Office, 70 Wis. 196, 35 N. W. 298, 5 Am. St. Rep. 159. This doctrine would not apply to the case of one in possession of land under a mere option, which does not bind him to make the payments or to complete the purchase. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Kerr, supra. Here, however, while the instruments executed by the Golden State Company were not signed by the plaintiff, they referred to and incorporated a prior application signed by him, and we think the contract and application, read together, did amount to an agreement on McCollough's part to purchase and pay for the property. Under the facts shown there was, therefore, no breach of the condition of ownership, and there is no occasion to consider whether the evidence supports the finding of a waiver of the supposed breach.

2. The policy contained the usual clause requiring the insured to furnish sworn proofs of loss within 60 days after the fire. This condition was not complied with, but the court found, following plaintiff's averment, that oral notice and proof were given by plaintiff within four days after the fire, and that the defendant then and there waived written notice and proof. There was evidence to the effect that within the 60 days allowed for proofs the plaintiff had an interview with one Layng, an adjuster for the company; that at this interview Layng and he went over the items of loss claimed in an effort to arrive at the value of the property destroyed; and that at this time Layng stated to plaintiff that the proof "ought to be sworn to, but it was not necessary. * * * He said it didn't make any difference; he would go ahead and settle just the same." The plaintiff testified that he failed to make formal proofs because of these statements. At various times thereafter McCollough and Layng had discussions regarding the amount of loss, but no denial of liability was made by the company until more than 60 days had elapsed from the time of the fire.

The court was fully justified in finding from this evidence that the company had waived the requirement of written and sworn proof of loss. 4 Cooley's Briefs on Ins. 3483, 3487, 3490, 3511, and cases cited; May on Ins. § 468; Williams v. Insurance Co., 54 Cal. 442, 448, 35 Am. Rep. 77; Carroll v. Insurance Co., 72 Cal. 297, 13 Pac. 863. The clause of the policy providing that no officer, agent, or other representative of the company shall have power to waive any condition of the policy except such as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto "has no reference to those stipulations which are to be performed after a loss has occurred, such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proofs." Wheaton v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 415, 428, 18 Pac. 758, 764, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216; Franklin F. I. Co. v. Ice Co., 36 Md. 102, 11 Am. Rep. 469; 4 Cooley, Ins. 3503, and cases cited. Furthermore, this provision itself may be waived by certain officers or agents (Carroll v. Girard F. I. Co., supra; Arnold v. Insurance Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 Pac. 182; Mackintosh v. Insurance Co., 150 Cal. 440, 89 Pac. 102, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234), or the company may be estopped from relying on it (Blake v. Exchange Mut. Ins. Co., 12 Gray [Mass.] 265).

The appellant relies upon a "nonwaiver agreement" signed by McCollough during the pendency of his negotiations with Layng. This paper provided that "any action taken by said party of the second part (the company) in investigating the cause of fire or investigating and ascertaining the amount of loss and damage * * * shall not waive or invalidate any of the conditions of the policy." This agreement has no bearing upon the question before us. It has no reference to affirmative representations calculated to lead the insured into the belief that written proofs would not be required. A statement that such proofs were not necessary is no part of action by the company "in investigating the cause of fire or ascertaining the amount of loss."

In view of what we have said, none of the other assignments of error are of sufficient importance to merit particular discussion.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

155 Cal. 675

VAN SLYKE v. ARROWHEAD RESERVOIR & POWER CO. (L. A. 2,252.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1900.)

1. DEEDS (§ 124*)—ESTATES CONVEYED—FEE SIMPLE—INTENTION OF GRANTOR.

A deed conveying "all that real property * * * described as follows: Being all of the land, * * *" etc., expresses an intention to grant the fee, or the entire estate, in whatever is described.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 346-351; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 138*)—CONSTRUCTION—"RESERVED"—"EXCEPTION."

The word "reserved" in a strict technical sense is not synonymous with "exception," but is applied to a clause in a deed which creates some right or privilege for the benefit of the grantor in the land granted, and withholds it from the operation of the grant so that the title to the thing passes to the grantee, and the right or privilege concerning it is the only thing retained by the grantor, while the term "exception" applies to something which constitutes a part of the thing described as granted and which would pass but for the excepting clause, and the title to the thing excepted remains in the grantor, but the difference between the terms is so slight that the technical meaning will give way to the manifest intent, even though the technical term to the contrary be used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 456; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2539-2542; vol. 8, p. 7656; vol. 7, pp. 6144-6146.]

3. DEEDS (§ 124*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATE CONVEYED—"RESERVATION."

A grantor conveyed all of a tract of land not included in a tract intended for a reservoir and dam to be built thereon. Subsequently the grantor conveyed to others all of the same tract that might be wanted by the grantee for a reservoir, the dam of which was to be built on the land, the reservoir site to include the quantity of land necessary therefor, together with all the reservations recited in the former deed. The first conveyance left in the grantor no property in the tract save the portion which had been excepted and reserved therein. The land was uninclosed, unused, and was of little value except for a reservoir, and the grantor had been negotiating for the sale of the reservoir site prior to making the first deed. If a reservoir had been established and had not occupied the entire site excepted from the former deed, the fringe of land around it would have been of little value to the grantor, and the reservoir would have been a permanent occupation of the land, and, if an easement therefor only had been granted, the servient estate would be practically worthless. The price paid was over six times the assessed value of the land. For 15 years after the conveyance the grantee held sole possession of the land, and paid taxes thereon, while the grantor exercised no dominion over it. Held, that in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1069, 1636, 1641-1647, prescribing rules for the construction of contracts, the term "reserving" as

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes used in the former deed was not used in its technical sense, and the word "reservations" in the subsequent deed was used in its popular sense to signify everything pertaining to the tract which the grantor had not parted with by the prior deed, and the subsequent deed conveyed a fee-simple estate therein to the grantee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 124.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6140-6144; vol. 8, p. 7787.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank E. Oster, Judge.

Action by W. E. Van Slyke against the Arrowhead Reservoir & Power Company. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Byron Waters, for appellant. Leonard & Surr, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to quiet title to a tract of land. Judgment was given in the court below in favor of the defendant, declaring it to be the owner of the land. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The decision in the case depends on the meaning and effect of a certain deed executed on June 2, 1891, by the plaintiff to the Arrowhead Reservoir Company. The defendant company is the successor in interest of the last-named company. In order to a proper understanding of the deed, it will be necessary to give a statement of some previous transactions and the conditions existing at the date of its execution as disclosed by the record. In 1889 the plaintiff was the owner of the entire east half of section 23, township 2 north, range 4 west, San Bernardino meridian, of which the land in controversy forms a part. The land is situated in the San Bernardino Mountains, at the narrows of a stream known as Huston creek, and it includes a flat known as Huston flat. In that year Koebig, a civil engineer, made a survey of said narrows and flat as a site for a dam and reservoir, at whose instance is not shown. He ran and marked, as the boundary of the proposed reservoir, a contour line around the flat above the proposed dam, at an elevation of 107 feet above the bed of the stream at the dam, inclosing about 100 acres of land. Some negotiations appear to have been pending between a promoter of the Arrowhead Reservoir Company and Van Slyke for the sale of this reservoir site to the said company. On May 1, 1890, Van Slyke by quitclaim deed conveyed to the Riverside Box & Tray Company a part of this half section of land. The material parts of the description in this deed were as follows: "All that certain land situated in the east half of section 23 (etc.) not included in that certain reservoir to be built by the raising and building of a dam at the Narrows of Huston creek in the northeast quarter of said section as surveyed by A. H. Koebig in the year 1889. Said reservoir and dam to include fifteen feet outside of the level surveyed for the high-water mark when said reservoir shall be full. Also the land required for said reservoir and dam, together with such land above the top of said dam as may be required for the purpose of obtaining ground, sand or gravel to be used in the building and maintaining of said dam, also land for ditches or conduits to convey the water of said reservoir from said dam and across said lands. Also land for ditches or conduits that may be deemed necessary to convey water into said reservoir. Also all surplus water of the east half of section 23 not used for the purpose of supplying one steam saw mill with water. Said reservoir is to be used for the purpose of storing water, and the party of the first part herein (Van Slyke) shall in no wise be liable to the party of the second part for any damages which they may sustain from the building of said dam or reservoir from the storage of water in same, or from any overflow or leakage from said reservoir. Also reserving all the timber on the west half of the northeast quarter of said section." As we understand this description, the land necessary for rights of way for ditches or conduits constituting appurtenances to the reservoir site and for sand and gravel to use in building the dam, and the water right also, were not included in the land intended to be conveyed.

The deed from Van Slyke to defendant's grantor, the Arrowhead Reservoir Company, which is the deed to be here construed, is dated June 2, 1891, and expresses a consideration of $8,500, which was actually paid to Van Slyke by the company as the price of the property transferred thereby. It purports to "grant" to said company "all that real property situated in the county of San Bernardino, state aforesaid, described as follows: Being all of the land in the east one-half of section twenty-three (23), township 2 north, range 4 west, San Bernardino Base and Meridian, that may be wanted by said party of the second part for the purpose of a reservoir, the dam of which is to be built on said land. Said reservoir site to include the quantity of land necessary therefor, and also a strip of land around the same fifteen feet above high-water mark, and to include all land in the above-described tract that may be covered with water by the erection of a dam at the Narrows of Huston creek, on said land, together with fifteen feet above high-water mark created or stored by reason of the construction of said dam upon said land. Also all the water rights owned by party of the first part that may be diverted or developed for use of filling the above mentioned reservoir save and excepting enough to supply a steam boiler for the saw mill, and domestic use for mill crew and teams. Also all rights-of-ways for ditches or conduits or flumes, or any other means for conveying water to said reservoir that may be necessary by subsequent surveys made by party of the second part across or through any other of the lands of party of the first part not included within said reservoir, together with all the reservations recited in certain deeds of date May 1, 1890, from party of the first part to the Riverside Box and Tray Factory." One of these deeds is the one first above mentioned.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

From and after the execution of this deed, down to the beginning of this action on August 2, 1906, Van Slyke performed no act of ownership, dominion, or possession upon this land. It was wild mountain land, uncultivated, uninclosed, and unoccupied by any person, except that the Arrowhead Reservoir Company and the defendant as its successor annually leased it, together with about 4,500 acres of similar land near by, to certain persons for a stock range, and the stock was allowed to run at will over the entire territory, including other lands not owned by the parties. The value of this land is not shown, except that the value as assessed for taxation was $1,400. The rentals for the entire range of 4,500 acres or more was usually $300 a year. Nothing has ever been done toward the erection of a dam or the establishment of a reservoir on the land, and no other survey of the premises has been made. Nothing further has been done to fix the location of the dam referred to in the deed to the Arrowhead Reservoir Company or the lines of the reservoir to be established. It is obvious from the granting clause of the deed to the Arrowhead Reservoir Company that the intention was to convey the entire estate in the land described, and not a mere easement or privilege to use it for a reservoir and dam. A declaration of intention to "grant all that real property * * * described as follows: Being all of the land," etc., cannot be understood otherwise than as an expression of intent to grant the fee, or the entire estate, in whatever is described. "A fee-simple title is presumed to be intended to pass by a grant of real property, unless it appears from the grant that a lesser estate was intended." Civ. Code, § 1105. The uncertainty, such as there may be, comes from the terms of the descriptive clause which does not give a definite boundary to the reservoir site mentioned. This clause refers especially to the previous conveyance to the Riverside Box & Tray Factory, and the closing statement in the descriptive clause operates to include in the description of the property granted all the property reserved in the former conveyance. The word "reserved" in a strict technical sense is not synonymous with "exception." The former term is applied to a clause in a deed which creates some right or privilege for the benefit of the grantor in the land described as granted, and withholds it from the operation of the grant, so that the title to the thing passes to the grantee, and the right or privilege concerning it is the only thing retained by the grantor. The latter term applies to something which constitutes a part of the thing described as granted and which would pass but for the excepting clause, the office of which is to exclude it from the thing described, and the title to the thing excepted remains in the grantor. The difference between the two terms is so slight and shadowy that in common parlance they are used interchangeably, "and the technical meaning will give way to the manifest intent, even though the technical term to the contrary be used." 13 Cyc. 674. For illustration, it is held that a clause in a deed retaining to the grantor the right to enter upon the land granted and cut and remove the timber growing thereon would be a reservation; whereas a clause retaining in the grantor the timber growing on the land described as granted is technically an exception. In the first case the title to the standing trees passes to the grantee; in the second it remains in the grantor. Sears v. Ackerman, 138 Cal. 586, 72 Pac. 171; Butler v. Gosling, 130 Cal. 422, 62 Pac. 596; Rich v. Zeilsdorff, 22 Wis. 522, 99 Am. Dec. 81; Knotts v. Hydrick, 12 Rich. Law (S. C.) 317; Howard v. Lincoln, 13 Me. 122; Goodwin v. Hubbard, 47 Me. 595; Martin v. Gilson, 37 Wis. 360. The so-called "reservation" of timber in the deed to the tray factory is therefore technically an exception of the same character as the exclusion of the reservoir site surveyed by Koebig. On the other hand, the right to the surplus water of the half section, and the right to the land necessary for sand and gravel for the use in building and maintaining the dam, which are described as among the things "not included" in the property granted to the tray factory, are perhaps technical reservations, rather than exceptions. All this shows that the grantor was not using the word "reserving" in its technical significance in the first deed in the clause reserving the timber, and it indicates that the word "reservations" in the last deed was there used in its popular and general sense to signify everything in or pertaining to the half section mentioned which he had not parted with by the prior conveyance.

The following rules of interpretation are particularly applicable to this deed: "The whole of a contract is to be taken together, so as to give effect to every part of it, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." Civ. Code, § 1641. "A grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee" with certain exceptions not here applicable. Civ. Code, § 1069. "A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intentions of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable and lawful." Civ. Code, § 1636. "A contract must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties." Civ. Code, § 1643. "The words of a contract are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, rather than according to their strict legal meaning; unless used by the parties in a technical sense." Civ. Code, § 1644. "A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates." Civ. Code, § 1647.

The circumstances under which the instrument appears to have been made strongly indicate an intention to convey all that Van Slyke possessed in the half section of land. Prior to the first deed he had been negotiating for the sale to the reservoir company of a certain part of it which was considered suitable for reservoir purposes. A survey of this site had been made and its boundaries definitely ascertained and marked on the ground. In the deed to the tray factory company this reservoir site was expressly excepted and reference was made to the survey thereof previously made by Koebig. This conveyance left in Van Slyke no property or rights in the half section, save the portion thereof which had been excepted and reserved in the deed to the tray company. The land was entirely uninclosed and unused, and was of little value except for reservoir purposes. If the reservoir had been established and had not in fact occupied the entire site as surveyed by Koebig, it is obvious that the fringe of land around the site would be of little value to Van Slyke, and would be a constant source of annoyance and dispute between him and his grantee if he had withheld it from the conveyance. If a reservoir had been established, it would have been a permanent occupation of the land, and, if an easement therefor only had been granted, the servient estate in the land would be practically worthless. There was little inducement to the grantor to grant less than a fee-simple estate, or to convey less than the entire property not included in the prior deed. In these circumstances, it is extremely improbable that the parties would have arranged for the sale of any interest in the reservoir site other than the absolute fee, or for the transfer of less than the entire site surveyed. This is further confirmed by the fact that the price paid was more than six times the value of the property as assessed for taxation. If further confirmation is necessary, it is found in the conduct of the parties immediately following the execution of the last deed. For 15 years thereafter the grantee held sole possession of the land, so far as it was occupied at all, and paid all the taxes thereon, while the grantor exercised no dominion whatever over the property, did not give it in to the assessor for taxation, and paid no taxes thereon. From all these circumstances, and in view of the rules of interpretation above stated, we are of the opinion that the deed to the Arrowhead Reservoir Company should be given effect as a conveyance of all the right, title, interest, and estate of Van Slyke in the half section of land described except what had been previously conveyed to the Riverside Box & Tray Company.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for us to consider the additional argument of the respondent to the effect that the conveyance to the reservoir company, taking the first clause in the description alone, was an instance of that class of conveyances wherein the property transferred is not definitely described, but its limits are to be ascertained by some subsequent act either of the grantor or of the grantee or by the joint act of both, whereby the boundaries are to be ascertained and determined. It may be that the deed could be upheld as a complete conveyance of all of the remaining estate in the half section upon the principles stated in the cases cited in support of this argument. See Hull v. Fuller, 4 Vt. 199; Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 123, 44 Atl. 398, 47 L. R. A. 226; Dohoney v. Womack, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 361, 19 S. W. 883, 20 S. W. 950; Nye v. Moody, 70 Tex. 434, 8 S. W. 606; Crocker v. Crocker, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 589; Armstrong v. Mudd, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 144, 50 Am. Dec. 545.

It also disposes of the divers contentions of the appellant wherein he claims that the estate granted is an estate upon condition and would not vest until the dam was built; that it was an attempt to create a perpetuity, and for that reason void; that there were no words of conveyance operating upon any definite quantity of land, because it was left to the grantee to take such as "may be wanted," and that an easement in gross only was conveyed, in which case it is claimed that the attempt to convey it to the defendant was an abandonment of the right. These contentions we hold to be entirely untenable.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

155 Cal. 620

GOODING v. CHUTES CO. (S. F. 4,990.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 14, 1909.

Rehearing Denied July 14, 1909.)

1. ANIMALS (§ 66½*) — VICIOUS DOMESTIC ANIMALS—DUTY OF OWNER.

It is the duty of one who owns or keeps domestic animals known to be vicious to guard them in such a manner as will absolutely prevent the occurrence of an injury to others through such vicious acts of the animals as they are naturally inclined to commit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. § 231; Dec. Dig. § 66½.*]

2. ANIMALS (§ 66½*) — VICIOUS DOMESTIC ANIMALS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO CARE.

The duty of protection against known vicious domestic animals is owing to the public generally, to strangers as well as those dealing with or standing in some relation to the owners, those only being excluded from its operation who are themselves in fault.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. § 231; Dec. Dig. § 66½.*]

3. ANIMALS (§ 70*)—VICIOUS DOMESTIC ANIMALS—BITE OF CAMEL.

A Chutes Company, as part of its place of amusement, kept a zoo, in charge of a general manager, and employes hired by the manager were under duty to clean the stall of the camel therein, and they knew that the camel was vicious. Another employe, not knowing and not being informed of the vicious character of the camel, on a change of shifts was in duty to clean the stall, and in doing so was injured by the bite of the camel. Held, that notice of his co-employes of the vicious character of the animal would be imputed to the Chutes Company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. § 230; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Addison Gooding against the Chutes Company for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Naphtaly F. Freidenrich and M. L. Schmidt, for appellant. Carl Westerfeld and R. D. Duke, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action for damages caused by the bite of a camel. The defendant was keeping animals for exhibition at a place called "The Chutes." The place in which the animals were on exhibition was commonly called the "Zoo." Among these animals was a camel. Plaintiff was employed by the defendant to look after, care for, and attend to the animals in the zoo, including the camel. Upon entering the camel's stall to clean it, the camel seized the plaintiff's leg with his teeth, lifted him from the ground and swung him about in the air, biting his leg so severely that the bones were crushed, rendering amputation necessary. For this injury the plaintiff brings this suit. The jury returned a verdict in his favor, and judgment was entered thereon. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The errors assigned are that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and that the court erred in giving certain instructions and in certain rulings upon the admission of evidence.

The answer admits that the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to look after, care for, and attend to the camel; that the plaintiff was injured; and that, at and prior to the time of the injury, the plaintiff did not know of the vicious disposition of the camel and had not been informed thereof by the defendant. There is evidence to the effect that the camel was of a vicious disposition, addicted to biting persons attending upon it, and that the defendant's superintendent knew of that disposition at the time he hired the plaintiff. There is therefore no foundation for the claim that the evidence does not sustain the verdict.

The "Chutes" had several departments, each presenting different performances or means for the amusement and entertainment of the public, all within one general inclosure. The zoo constituted one of these departments. The place was under the general charge of a general manager named Levy. The zoo was under the special supervision of a superintendent named Lawrence. Several men were employed about the zoo whose duty it was to sweep out the place daily, clean the cages and stalls every morning, and throughout the day when necessary, feed and otherwise care for the animals, watch the animals and visitors, and take care that the animals were not teased by the visitors and that the visitors were not injured by the animals. These men were divided into two shifts for two different parts of the work, one of which included the care of the camel and its stall and the other did not, and they were changed from one shift to the other every week. The plaintiff was one of the men employed in this work. He was not assigned to the shift which included the care of the camel, until the day he was injured, one week after he began the service. The contract of employment was made with Lawrence, the superintendent of the zoo. It does not appear from the evidence who directed him to go upon the shift to take care of the camel. He had at that time acquired by his own observation knowledge of the fact that when upon the new shift it was his duty to clean the camel's stall, and he entered the stall for that purpose without being specially directed to do so, and was immediately bitten as alleged. The evidence shows, without conflict, that two of these fellow employes of the plaintiff knew of the vicious disposition of the camel at the time plaintiff was hired. As to the knowledge thereof by Lawrence, the superintendent who hired him, the evidence was conflicting.

The court gave the following instruction: "(2) If you believe from the evidence that the care of the animals in defendant's zoo was intrusted to employes of the defendant, and that said employes were notified and knew that the camel in question had vicious propensities, the defendant had notice and knowledge of such vicious propensities of said camel."

In view of the facts above stated, the jury would naturally understand this instruction to refer to the subordinate employes aforesaid engaged about the zoo in the actual work above described. With respect to knowledge imputed to the owner of a domesticated animal of the fact that such animal is of vicious habits or disposition, the law is that, if knowledge of such fact is brought home to an agent or servant employed about the animal, and whose duty, in such agent or servant, requires him, if he knows of the vicious character of the animal, to act in respect thereof toward third persons, or toward the animal for the protection of third persons, in any matter involving a breach of such duty such knowledge of the servant is imputed to the master, although not imparted to him. Clowdis v. Fresno Flume Co., 118 Cal. 315, 50 Pac. 373, 62 Am. St. Rep. 238; McGarry v. N. Y. & H. R. Co. (Super. Ct.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 196, affirmed in Court of Appeals, 137 N. Y. 627, 33 N. E. 745; Brice v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 430, 15 N. E. 695, 2 Am. St. Rep. 454; Brown v. Green, 1 Pennewill (Del.) 535, 42 Atl. 991; Niland v. Geer, 46 App. Div. 194, 61 N. Y. Supp. 696; Keenan v. Gutta P. Mfg. Co., 46 Hun. 546; Corliss v. Smith, 53 Vt. 532; Harris v. Fisher, 115 N. C. 318, 20 S. E. 461, 44 Am. St. Rep. 452; Hammond v. Johnson, 38 Neb. 248, 56 N. W. 967; Applebee v. Percy, L. R. 9 C. P. 647; Lynch v. Kineth, 36 Wash. 371, 78 Pac. 923, 104 Am. St. Rep. 958.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It was a part of the duty of these employes, while occupied about the zoo, to know whether or not the animals, or any of them, were dangerous to persons about them, and to take care that no person within the inclosure should be injured by such animals. For that purpose, they each represented the Chutes Company, and were discharging that part of the duty of the Chutes Company toward persons allowed to enter the zoo. For a failure to discharge that duty by such employes, the principal would, of course, be responsible, and if one of these employes, knowing the vicious propensity of the camel, carelessly suffered a person to go near enough to the camel to be bitten by it, and such person was so bitten, the defendant would be liable for the damages thereby caused.

The defendant's claim that the above instruction is erroneous is sustainable only on the theory that the men engaged in the zoo in the actual work of caring for the animals were not charged with the duty of protecting any person against the attacks of animals, known to them to be vicious, except visitors coming there for entertainment, or other strangers, and that, consequently, their knowledge of such vicious character will not be imputed to the defendant in any matter involving danger to persons connected with the establishment. The rule cannot be thus limited. It is the duty of one who owns or keeps domestic animals known to be vicious to guard them "in such a manner as will absolutely prevent the occurrence of an injury to others through such vicious acts of the animals as they are naturally inclined to commit." 2 Cyc. 368. This language is used in the authority cited with respect to the duty of an owner of wild animals, which are presumed to be ferocious. The rule is the same, however, with regard to domesticated animals when they are in fact vicious, and their real nature is known to the owner or keeper thereof. Laverone v. Mangianti, 41 Cal. 139, 10 Am. Rep. 269; 2 Cyc. 369; 2 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 352. The duty of protection against such animals is owing to the public generally, to strangers as well as to those dealing with or standing in some relation to the owner, those only being excluded from its operation who are themselves in fault. Earhart v. Youngblood, 27 Pa. 331; Marble v. Ross, 124 Mass. 44; Laverone v. Mangianti, supra; Muller v. McKesson, 73 N. Y. 199, 29 Am. Rep. 123; May v. Burdett, 9 Ad. & El. (N. S.) 101. Upon the discovery of the vicious character of the camel, these men, as its keepers, were required to keep it in such a manner as to prevent it from injuring any and all persons lawfully within the inclosure, and to warn them of the danger, regardless of the purposes of their coming. This obligation rested on them as representatives of the defendant, and in performing it they were performing a duty which the defendant owed. In all such cases the knowledge of the servant is imputed to the master. The obligation was due from them, on behalf of the defendant, to the plaintiff when he entered the zoo as an employe, as much as to any other person allowed to enter. The fact that he then became a fellow servant is immaterial. The duty to warn the plaintiff was not at that time owing to him as a fellow servant; it was owing to him in common with all other persons in the same situation. In discharging that duty these employes would have represented their principal, the defendant, and would not have been acting as fellow servants of the plaintiff. It is correct, therefore, in contemplation of law, upon the admitted facts of this case, to say, as this instruction says, that if these employes knew that the camel had vicious propensities, then the defendant also had notice thereof.

Some rulings upon the admission of evidence are assigned as error, but they are of so insignificant a character that we do not think it necessary to discuss them. We find no substantial error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

10 Cal. App. 641

HARRIS v. MUNRO CO. (Civ. 586.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.)

May 14, 1909.)

JUDGMENT (§ 101*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—ACTION ON NOTES.

The complaint contained two counts, each on a note. The note sued on in the first count was past due, but the note sued on in the second was neither due when the complaint was filed nor when a default judgment was entered for the sum of the two notes. Held, that the judgment was erroneous, and not supported by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 168-170; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

Action by Isaiah Harris against the Munro Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. S. Spilman and L. T. Hatfield, for appellant. Lucius Solomons, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff took judgment against defendant by default upon a complaint containing two counts, each upon a promissory note. The note sued upon in the first count was past due, but the note sued upon in the second count was neither due when the complaint was filed nor when judgment was entered. The judgment was for the sum of the two notes, and is clearly erroneous, and not supported by the pleadings. The note sued on in the second cause of action appearing by its terms as set forth in the count not to have been due when the action was commenced, such count stated no cause of action. Harmon v. Ashmead, 60 Cal. 439. The first count does not support the judgment, as the judgment is for nearly twice the amount claimed under such count. The case of Hunt v. City of San Francisco, 11 Cal. 250, cited by respondent, differed from the case at bar, in that the default judgment in that case was for the amount claimed under each of several counts, only one of which was defective. The court said: "It will be observed that the money counts are each of them for the amount for which judgment was taken."

The judgment is reversed, and the court directed to enter judgment for the plaintiff upon the first count for the amount of the principal of the note set forth in such count, together with interest thereon from the date of said note till the entry of judgment at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, as provided in said note, and to dismiss said action as to the second count thereof, without prejudice to the right of plaintiff to bring a new action on the note set forth in said count.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 641

LUCAS v. REA et al. (Civ. 563.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 25, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court July 24, 1909.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 147*)—NOTICE OF LIEN—STATEMENT OF DEBT.

There is no material difference between a statement in a notice of a lien of the amount due without setting out credits and a statement of the whole amount of the debit side of the account and also of the credits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 253; Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ENFORCEMENT—EVIDENCE.

Where the notice of a lien for materials used in the construction of a building alleged an express agreement to pay a specified sum for the materials, which sum was actually the market value, barring a slight variance on account of an error in the account by the claimant, the failure to prove an agreement to pay the specified sum did not defeat the right to foreclose the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ENFORCEMENT—EVIDENCE.

A notice of a lien by a materialman for materials furnished for a building, which alleged that the contractor agreed to pay a specified sum due on the completion of the work, that the claimant was employed by the contractor to furnish materials, that there were no conditions attached to the contract and no time set for the payment thereof, except that the amount due claimant was to be paid as soon as the work was completed, was uncertain as to whether claimant relied on an express or implied contract, and his failure to prove an express contract did not defeat his right to enforce the lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

On petition for rehearing. Granted. Former opinion modified. Judgment and order affirmed.

For former opinion, see 101 Pac. 537.

BURNETT, J. A rehearing of this cause was granted principally to give further consideration to the question of variance between the evidence and the notice of lien as to the nature of the contract involved.

A portion of the former opinion we adopt as follows:

"The judgment in favor of plaintiff established and decreed the foreclosure of a lien for materials used in the construction of a residence belonging to defendant Rea, and which was mortgaged to the said Bank of Ukiah.

"(1) The complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The cases cited to the contrary by appellants are not in point. For instance, in Nason v. John, 1 Cal. App. 540, 82 Pac. 566, it is stated: 'The action is by a materialman against the owner (appellant) for the value of material furnished the contractor for the painting of the house of appellant. There is in the complaint no attempt to allege that at the time of filing the notice of lien or of bringing the action there was anything owing from the owner to the contractor, nor is any attempt made in the complaint to allege any fact, such as a premature payment by the owner to the contractor, or the like, that under section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure might be claimed to give the materialman a lien against the property of the owner for the value of his material.' It was rightly held in line with many authorities that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. Here, however, it does not appear from the complaint that the material was furnished to the contractor. On the contrary, the allegation is: 'That on or about the 6th day of July, 1906, R. R. Lucas and T. A. Lucas, comprising the firm of Lucas Bros., entered into an agreement with the defendant S. L. Rea wherein and whereby the said R. R. Lucas and T. A. Lucas agreed to furnish, \* \* \* and the defendant, pursuant to said contract, agreed to pay to the said Lucas Bros. for the said material so furnished as aforesaid the sum of \$730.70 upon the completion of said building.' Thus it is seen that the complaint shows a contract directly between the materialman and the owner, and it presents an action in assumpsit with additional appropriate averments for the establishment and foreclosure of a materialman's lien. The material was actually furnished, however, to the contractor, and under a contract with him, and not by virtue of any agreement between the Lucas Bros. and defendant Rea, the owner of the building. This appears from the evidence, and also from the notice of lien, which recites: 'That the name of the person by whom claimants were employed and to whom they furnished the material is A. S. Howell, the original contractor with S. L. Rea for the erection of said building, and said A. S. Howell agreed to pay said sum of seven hundred and ninety-nine and  $\frac{97}{100}$  dollars,' etc. Wherefore appellants make the further contention that there is a variance between the proof and the allegations of the complaint, and that the complaint was rendered ambiguous and uncertain by reason of said notice of lien which was attached to and made a part of said complaint. The evidence, though, shows further that the contract between the owner and the contractor was and is void because, being for more than \$1,000, it was not recorded until after the work was begun and the plans and specifications, which were made a part of the contract, were not recorded at all. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc.; Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 1111; Burnett v. Glas (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 856. Therefore the materials furnished as aforesaid are deemed to have been furnished at the personal instance of the owner and a lien can be maintained therefor. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc. The result is that by operation of law the contract of the Lucas Bros. with the contractor is considered a contract with the owner, and the Supreme Court has held that it may be so alleged, although not in accordance with the actual transaction.

"In Yancy v. Morton, supra, it is said: 'The complaint in this case is upon a contract for the value of goods sold at the special instance and request of defendant (the owner). Sections 1183 and 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure provide that when the contract between the parties, for any of the reasons therein enumerated, is void, materials shall be deemed to have been furnished at the special instance and request of the owner, and the building is subject to a lien for the same. In support of his complaint, plaintiff introduced the contract in evidence for the purpose of showing that it was void. The court found such to be the fact, and the evidence and findings were justified under the complaint. No substantial reason is suggested to us why the necessity existed for plaintiff to set out the contract and then allege its invalidity. Such matters were matters of evidence, and the completeness of the pleading did not demand it.' See, also, Lumber Co. v. Gottschalk, 81 Cal. 646, 22 Pac. 860; Reed v. Norton, 90 Cal. 598, 26 Pac. 767, 27 Pac. 426; McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 135, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622. In the McClain Case it is stated that 'Mrs. Hutton (the owner) was properly named as the person by whom the claimant was employed, * * * and there is no objection to the use of this form of statement.' It seems to me the better practice to allege the facts as they occur and leave the court to draw the conclusion that the property is subject to the lien, but it is settled that, where the original contract is void, plaintiff may pursue that course or aver a direct agreement with the owner. This is conceded by appellants in their closing brief, but it is insisted that the notice of lien renders the complaint subject to the special demurrer for uncertainty and ambiguity. An allegation that the contract was made with the owner is certainly inconsistent with a recital that it was made with the contractor; but, admitting that the special demurrer should have been sustained on that ground, it is clear that appellants have not been prejudiced by the error. At the beginning of the trial, an objection was made to the evidence on the ground of variance between it and the complaint and of the uncertainty growing out of the recitals of the notice of lien, but the objection was overruled, the court justifying its ruling 'on the theory the law makes the contract between the plaintiff and Rea.' The case was tried upon that theory. No doubt counsel for appellants upon the argument of the demurrer were informed of plaintiff's contention in that regard, and it would be inexcusable now to reverse the case and impose the additional cost of a new trial simply because of the said apparent uncertainty.

"(2) If controverted, the terms of the contract must be proved by the claimant substantially as set out in his notice of lien. Appellants complain of a variance inasmuch as while the notice states that the amount due over and above all set-offs is $799.97, and that Howell agreed to pay the same on completion and there was no other condition, the proof shows that the amount of the bill was not the sum stated either in the complaint or in the notice, and that there never was an agreed sum to be paid nor any agreement as to the time of payment."

It is true that the complaint alleges a demand for $780.70, but Mr. Lucas testified that this was the amount actually due. The testimony also reveals that a mistake of about $19 was made by claimants in their notice, and that they attempted to state therein the amount due after deducting the payments that had been made. But, as there is no evidence of fraud, it is unimportant that the complaint is for a small amount less than what is called for in the notice. Barber v. Reynolds, 44 Cal. 519; Malone v. Big Flat Gravel M. Co., 76 Cal. 578, 18 Pac. 772; Harmon v. S. F., etc., R. R. Co., 86 Cal. 617, 25 Pac. 124. Again, there is no material difference between a statement of the amount due without setting out the credits and a statement of the whole amount of the debit side of the account and also of the credits. Star Mill & Lumber Co. v. Porter, 4 Cal. App. 470, 88 Pac. 497.

On the first hearing, the second point discussed seemed fatal to the judgment in view of certain decisions of the Supreme Court cited in the former opinion. After further consideration, we have reached the conclusion that these decisions are not necessarily inconsistent with the said Star Mill & Lumber Co. Case, which is authority for the position of respondent herein. In that decision by the Second District Court of Appeal it is said: "The notice is, indeed, incorrect in stating as one of the terms of the contract that the claim was based on a quantum meruit, instead of upon a special promise to pay a fixed amount; and this doubtless as a matter of pleading would constitute at common law a material variance, though hardly under existing practice. Code Civ. Proc. § 469. But, as we have already said, the technical doctrine of variance has no application to a notice of lien, when all that is required is that the statement of the terms of the contract shall be substantially true. There are indeed many cases cited by the appellant, and other cases, which might be conceived to hold the contrary doctrine. Reed v. Norton, 99 Cal. 619, 34 Pac. 333; Palmer v. Lavigne, 104 Cal. 34, 37 Pac. 775; Santa Monica L. & M. Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 380, 51 Pac. 555; Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 283, 57 Pac. 1008. But these or most of them are distinguished from the present case, in that it did not appear that the fixed price stated was the market price. In the absence of this fact, the statement would be substantially false, and might mislead the owner to his prejudice. But, where the fact appears, no injury can result to the owner; nor can the misstatement be regarded as material." In the case at bar, conceding that the statement in the notice, "and said A. S. Howell agreed to pay said sum of seven hundred ninety-nine and <sup>97</sup>/<sub>100</sub> dollars so due upon completion of the work," sets forth an express agreement at the time the material was ordered, it is difficult to see how the appellants were injured, as the evidence shows that this was actually the market value, barring a slight variance on account of an error committed in the account by Mr. Lucas.

But, again, the said notice is at most simply uncertain as to whether claimants relied upon an express or an implied contract. In the endeavor to comply with the requirement of the statute to set out the "terms, time given, and conditions of his contract," this statement was made in said notice: "That the terms, time, and condition of the contract between claimants and said A. S. Howell are as follows: The claimants were employed on or about the 6th day of July, 1906, by said A. S. Howell, the original contractor for said building, to furnish lumber and building material to be used in the construction and erection of said building and its additions. That there were no conditions attached to said contract between these claimants and said A. S. Howell, and no time was set for the payment thereof, except that the amount due claimants was to be paid as soon as the work was completed and finished by them." The foregoing purports to contain all the terms of the contract, and therefore there is ground for the contention that the declaration in the previous portion of the notice as to the promise to pay was intended to affirm an express agreement to have been subsequently made, to wit, "upon completion of the work." There is, indeed, evidence of an account stated, although the agreement was reached after the completion of the work. The exact time, however, is manifestly immaterial if, as it seems quite probable, this was the promise to which claimants referred in their said notice. By construing the phrase "upon completion of the work" as fixing the time when the promise was made the said notice is rendered harmonious and consistent. At any rate, if there be such an uncertainty in this particular as to render the notice, if it were a complaint, subject to a special demurrer, in view of the circumstances already detailed it would be technical in the extreme to hold the defect fatal to the lien.

We have thus been led to follow what we conceive to be the just and reasonable rule laid down in the Porter Case, supra, which upon examination will be found substantially in harmony with the Supreme Court decisions.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 586

CURTIN v. DUNNE. (Civ. 599.)(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 14, 1909.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 935*) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.

Where, on a motion to set aside a default judgment, neither plaintiff nor the person who signed a stipulation in plaintiff's behalf extending the time for answering denied his authority to give the stipulation, the appellate court must presume, in reviewing an order setting aside the default, in favor of the implied finding of the lower court that the stipulation was authorized by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3785; Dec. Dig. § 935.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 957*) — REVIEW — DISCRETION OF COURT—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT.

To justify the reversal of an order setting aside a default judgment, abuse of the lower court's discretion must clearly appear.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3323; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 155*) — DEFAULT — SETTING ASIDE—NOTICE.

There is no merit in the contention that a notice was to set aside a default and the order as made to set aside the judgment, for the default is the foundation of the judgment, and, if it is set aside, the judgment falls with it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 306; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 224*)—OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—DEFAULT—SETTING ASIDE—NOTICE.

The objection that a notice was to set aside a default and the order as made to set aside the judgment is not available where no objection was made to the form of the notice on the hearing in the court below to set aside the default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1337; Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; El. M. Mogan, Judge.

D. A. Curtin had a default judgment against Mary E. Dunne, and, from an order setting the same aside, appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Boyer, for appellant. Jas. P. Sweeney, for respondent.

COOPER, C. J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment. It appears without conflict that the action was commenced by plaintiff in propria persona. The defendant in due time appeared by her attorney, and filed a demurrer to the complaint. Thereafter the plaintiff employed one Boyer as his attorney, who appeared in court on the argument of the demurrer, but no notice was given to the defendant of such employment other than the appearance of Boyer on the argument of the demurrer, and the service of notice by Boyer of the order overruling the demurrer. No substitution was made of Boyer as attorney of record in the place of the plaintiff who had acted as his own attorney in bringing the action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant was given time in which to answer. Before the time given for answering had expired, defendant's attorney prepared a written stipulation, of which the following is a copy: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed that the defendant Mary E. Dunne may have ten days from the date hereof within which to answer the complaint of plaintiff, or take such proceedings as she may be advised in said action. This stipulation need not be filed.—Dated May 29, 1908. [Signed] D. A. Curtin, Attorney for plaintiff, by H. J. Poswa." Before the time named in the stipulation had expired the attorney for the plaintiff went to the county clerk's office, and had the default of defendant entered, and also a judgment upon such default.

It is claimed by the plaintiff that Poswa had no authority to enter into the stipulation, and that it was made without the authority or consent of plaintiff, and that for this reason it was not binding upon him. The affidavit on the motion to open the default filed on behalf of defendant states that the stipulation was obtained from the plaintiff. The affidavit of plaintiff's attorney states that the stipulation was given by Poswa, who was a clerk in the employ of plaintiff, but that it was given without the authority or consent of either plaintiff or his attorney. It is a significant fact that there is not a word, by affidavit or otherwise, from the plaintiff or from Poswa in denial of the alleged authority to give the stipulation. We must therefore presume in favor of the implied finding of the court to the effect that the stipulation was authorized by plaintiff. If plaintiff was present when it was given, or if it was so authorized by plaintiff and the defendant acted upon it, we will not under the circumstances of this case pause to consider as to whether or not, as a purely legal proposition, Poswa had authority to bind plaintiff by the stipulation. It would have to be made clearly to appear that the court abused its discretion before we would be justified in annulling an order by the very terms of which a defendant is allowed to appear and answer upon the merits. If the plaintiff has a just cause, and the defense is without merit, he will not be injured. On the other hand, if the defendant has a meritorious defense, she ought not to be deprived of such defense except in a clear case of laches or other default on her part.

There is no merit in the contention that the notice was to set aside the default, and the order as made was to set aside the judgment. The default was the foundation of the judgment, and, if the default is set aside, the judgment falls with it. Not only this, but it does not appear that any objection was made to the form of the notice when the motion came on for hearing in the court below. The whole matter was before the court, and it granted the relief which appeared to be just and in furtherance of a hearing of the case upon the merits.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 580

HENDERSON v. COHEN et al. (Civ. 535.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 13, 1909.)

1. VENUE (§ 63*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—NOTICE OF MOTION.

Where it is sought to show that a party is not interested in an action, and is fraudulently joined as defendant to prevent its transfer to the proper place for trial, the alleged fraud must be distinctly specified in the notice of motion for change of venue before proof thereof may properly be heard.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

2. VENUE (§ 63*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—NOTICE OF MOTION—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

If a deposition, introduced by plaintiff at the hearing of a motion for change of venue, wherein it was sought to show that a party was fraudulently joined as defendant to prevent its transfer, conclusively showed that such defendant was not interested, plaintiff thereby waived any right to complain because the notice of the motion omitted to specify as ground for the change the improper joinder of such defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

3. VENUE (§ 70*)—PROCEEDINGS FOR CHANGE—EFFECT OF DEPOSITION—DEFENDANT JOINED TO PREVENT TRANSFER.

On a motion for change of venue, it was claimed that one of the defendants was not interested in the action, and was fraudulently joined to prevent its transfer, and a deposition of such defendant admitted that the account sued on was in the main correct, and that the balance due was approximately so, and had not been paid, and that he personally contracted most of the items, though only as agent of the other defendants, who filed an affidavit of merits. Held, that the deposition did not clearly disclose, and was not conclusive, that the defendant was not a necessary or proper party, and that under the circumstances it was proper for plaintiff to join him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1024*)—REVIEW—CONFLICTING AFFIDAVITS.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the affidavits as to the residence of a party affecting the right to a change of venue, the Supreme Court must abide by the finding of the court below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3836; Dec. Dig. § 1024.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by Orrin S. Henderson against A. H. Cohen and others. From an order denying a motion to change the place of trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James H. Creely, for appellants. A. H. Carpenter, for respondent.

HART, J. The court below made an order declining to grant the motion of the defendants for a change of the place of trial, and this appeal is taken by said defendants from said order.

The defendants appeared and demurred to the complaint specifically and generally, and at the same time filed an affidavit of merits and the demand required by section 396 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and gave notice of their intention to move for a change of the place of trial to the county of Alameda. The action was instituted for the purpose of recovering against the appellants judgment for the sum of $498.15, alleged to be originally due and owing the assignors of plaintiff for furnishing materials and for services rendered to the defendants "in repairing and building wagons, vehicles, and other personal property."

The grounds of the motion, as set forth in the notice, were the following: "That the county of San Joaquin, state of California, is not the proper county for the trial of said action, and that the county of Alameda, state of California, is the proper county for the trial of said action; that the defendants are not, and never have been, residents of said county of San Joaquin, but that they are now, and were at the time of the commencement of this action, and long prior thereto had been, residents of the county of Alameda, state of California." The affidavit of the defendant W. G. Cohen alleges that the defendants were, at the time of the commencement of the action, and long prior thereto had been, "and now are, residents of the county of Alameda; that affiant and the other defendants have fully and fairly stated all the facts of the case to J. H. Creely, the counsel and attorney of said defendants and affiant, and the said J. H. Creely, residing and having an office in the city of Oakland, state of California, and after such statement this affiant and the other defendants are advised by their attorney that they have a good and substantial defense upon the merits of the action, which this affiant and the other defendants verily believe to be true. * * * Affiant further alleges that W. F. King, who is named as a defendant herein under the name of W. H. King, is not a real or necessary party in interest herein, and is merely a nominal party," etc.

It has been held that where it is sought to show that a party is in no manner or degree interested in an action, and is fraudulently joined as a defendant therein for the purpose of preventing the transfer of the action to the proper place for the trial thereof, it is necessary that such alleged fraud should be distinctly specified in the notice of motion before proof addressed thereto may properly be heard. McKenzie v. Barling, 101 Cal. 462, 36 Pac. 8; McDonald v. California Timber Co., 151 Cal. 161, 90 Pac. 549. In the last-mentioned case Chief Justice Beatty says: "We doubt not that a motion based upon that ground is a proper proceeding, and one that ought, in a proper case, to be sustained, but we think that where a fraud of that character is the ground of the motion, it should be distinctly specified in the notice of motion, and, unless so specified, that the plaintiff cannot at the hearing of the motion be held bound to support by specific proofs the allegations of his complaint showing a cause of action against the resident defendant."

The notice of the motion, in the case at bar, it will be observed, does not specify, as one of the grounds upon which the motion would be made, the fact involved in the claim that King is not a real or necessary party to the action. But the respondent, having caused the deposition of King concerning the merits of the case to be taken, offered and had received in evidence said deposition at the hearing of the motion. King testified that from the month of May, 1906, up to within a short time before the commencement of this action, he was the superintendent of the farm and dairy owned by the other defendants and situated in San Joaquin county; that in that capacity he was authorized to receive, and did receive, all moneys which were paid in for dairy products and for the sale of stock, etc., and that he deposited said moneys in a bank for the Cohens in his own name as trustee; that he was authorized by the Cohens to pay from the fund so established all the expenses of the business, and for that purpose would draw on said fund through the medium of checks, to which he signed his name as trustee; that he had authority to cause to be made such repairs to the wagons and machinery used upon the farm and in connection with the dairy as were found necessary, and to purchase such articles as were requisite to properly carry on the business. He admitted authorizing the services and the purchase of most of the articles itemized in the account upon which this action was brought. Although it does not appear from the deposition that King expressly disclaimed being a proper party to the action, or that he had any real interest in the event of the litigation, the irresistible inference is that his connection with the transactions of which this action is the outgrowth was wholly through his capacity as agent or trustee of the other defendants. While it may scarcely be doubted that this deposition was introduced in evidence on this hearing mainly for the purpose of showing that King was a resident of San Joaquin county at the time this action was brought, it was nevertheless before the court in this proceeding for all the purposes it might properly subserve. If, therefore, it could be said that the deposition conclusively showed that King was not interested in any way in the action, and was consequently not a necessary or proper party thereto, we are of the opinion that we would be required to hold that, said deposition having been introduced in evidence on this hearing by the plaintiff, and thus the evidence from which such fact was made to appear being voluntarily furnished by the respondent himself, the latter had waived any right to complain because the notice had omitted to specify as a ground for the change the fact of the improper joinder of King as a party defendant.

But the deposition does not clearly disclose, nor, as far as it goes, is it conclusive upon the proposition, that King is not a necessary or a proper party to the action. King admits, as will be seen upon an examination of the deposition, that the account upon which the action is founded is, in the main, correct, and that the balance claimed to be due is approximately correct and has not been paid. Cohen, in his affidavit, alleges that he has a meritorious defense to the action. King personally contracted most of the items in the account, although he says only as the agent of the Cohens. How could plaintiff or his assignors have known in the first instance, and how can they tell now, in view of the declaration of the defendant Cohen that a good defense exists against the cause of action stated in the complaint, but that the Cohens may claim that they did not authorize the account declared upon to be contracted against them, and that King exceeded the scope of his authority in ordering the materials to be furnished and the services to be performed as for them, and was without authority, therefore, to have the items making up the account charged against them? It does not by any means clearly appear from King's deposition that he is not a proper party to the action, and, under the circumstances, we think the plaintiff not only acted properly in joining him but that it was the safest course for him to adopt.

The testimony upon the question as to the residence of King when the complaint in this action was filed is conflicting. King himself declared in his deposition, taken on the initiative of plaintiff, that he "resided" in, and was a "resident" of, San Joaquin county at the time of the commencement of the action, and had been such resident from May 20, 1906, up to a short time before the commencement of the action, June 16, 1908. But he contradicts this statement in an affidavit filed on behalf of the defendants in this proceeding, declaring that his residence is, and has always been, in Alameda county, that he is registered as a voter in said county, and that he and his family were only temporarily in San Joaquin county. L. T. Freitas deposes that he "knows that King is, and was at the time of the commencement of this action and for a long time prior thereto, a resident of the county of San Joaquin, state of California, and that he is and was not, during any of the time above mentioned, a resident of the county of Alameda." Freitas further states that King "acknowledged and stated to affiant that the cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint herein was just and should be paid, and that if affiant would take an assignment thereof he would pay it off in monthly payments." Orrin S. Henderson, plaintiff, states in an affidavit that King is, and was at the time of the institution of the action, a resident of San Joaquin county.

The evidence, it will thus be seen, upon the question of King's residence is conflicting in a marked degree, and it is therefore beyond the power of this court to disturb the ruling of the court below. McKenzie v. Barling, 101 Cal. 462, 36 Pac. 8. "In the consideration of an appeal from an order made upon affidavits, involving the decision of a question of fact, this court is bound by the same rule that controls it where oral testimony is presented for review. If there is any conflict in the affidavits, those in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true, and the facts stated therein must be considered established." Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 18, 91 Pac. 1001, and cases therein cited. Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that in cases of the class to which the one at bar belongs the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action; and, as the court below found upon affidavits presenting facts in which, as stated, there is a substantial conflict showing that King, one of the defendants, was a resident of the county of San Joaquin at the time that this action was brought, this court must abide by that finding.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

10 Cal. App. 519

PEOPLE v. WIELAND. (Cr. 117.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 5, 1909.)

1. BURGLARY (§ 41*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support a conviction of burglary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 696*)—EVIDENCE—REFUSAL TO STRIKE OUT.

In a prosecution for burglary, when the arresting officer was testifying in detail concerning the circumstances of the arrest and identification of accused, it was not error to refuse to strike out remarks as to the viciousness of a dog, which were merely incidental to the narrative, and harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 696.*]

3. BURGLARY (§ 36*)—PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.

It was not error to refuse to strike out testimony of the witness as to reasons given by accused when arrested for being in the neighborhood, and as to his appearance at that time; such facts being competent evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

4. BURGLARY (§ 38*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In a burglary case, where the stolen articles had been identified by the owner and were in evidence, a statement by the arresting officer as a witness narrating the circumstances of accused's arrest and identification that he had arrested accused for stealing, and that he "had the stuff on him, stealing from this house, which we have here and proven," was not incompetent; he meaning no more than that accused had on his person the articles in evidence, and that, therefore, he had arrested him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1043*)—APPEAL—RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION.

In a burglary case, an objection to evidence that, "Like to have the record show that all this line of examination is under objection. * * * We ask that all this testimony be stricken"—is insufficient to warrant the court of appeal in considering the specific exception that the evidence tended to establish a separate, independent offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2654, 2655; Dec. Dig. § 1043.*]

6. BURGLARY (§ 35*)—PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In a burglary case, testimony as to the finding, with the stolen property of a pipe which belonged to a house other than the one robbed, where accused was identified as a man seen standing outside the house on the night of the burglary, and as to the identity of the pipe, was but a part of the identity of accused, and was not incompetent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Jamison, Judge.

Julian Wieland was convicted of burglary, and appeals from the judgment, and an order granting a new trial. Affirmed.

Edward Judson Brown, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of burglary, and upon a verdict of guilty in the first degree was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for five years. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial, and assigns as grounds for a reversal of the judgment: (1) That the verdict is not supported by the evidence; and (2) the refusal of the trial court to strike out certain testimony of the arresting officer.

The evidence discloses that the complaining witness and his wife left their home on the afternoon of July 10, 1908, about 4 o'clock p. m., to remain away over night, and the servants of the household left the house between 6 and 7 p. m. and retired to adjacent houses on the same premises for the night. The next morning the screen of a window usually kept closed was found up and the window open, and there was evidence of the house having been entered; burned matches were strewn about the floor, two bureau drawers were open, and several articles of jewelry missing. The same night at about quarter to 8 o'clock a lady living at a house some four or five blocks from the house above mentioned heard a noise at her window, and, lifting the curtain, saw the defendant standing outside and asked him "what he wanted," but received no response. An officer was notified, and about half past 8 o'clock returned with the defendant, who was identified by this lady as the man who had stood near her window and was placed under arrest. Along the road that defendant was taken on his way to jail from the place of his identification were found at various places different pieces of the jewelry taken from the first house, and also a pipe which belonged at the house at which he was identified, and, when he was searched, there was discovered in his possession a pair of bracelets taken from the first house mentioned. His manner when arrested and when taken back to the second house for identification all tended to contradict his explanation of finding the bracelets after he had been taken into custody, and this statement itself bore about it such inherent evidence of improbability that it tended rather to incriminate than to exculpate him. The articles of jewelry were identified beyond question as property taken from the house charged in the information to have been burglarized, and the evidence leaves no possible doubt of the guilt of the defendant. His guilt does not rest upon evidence of guilty possession alone.

The statement asked to be stricken out was made by the arresting officer, who was narrating the circumstances of the arrest and identification in response to a question of the district attorney in the form of an invitation to "Go ahead." The matter was being stated much in detail, when the attorney for defendant said: "I wish to object to all that. It is not responsive to the question whatever." The witness then said: "Well, I arrested that man then for stealing. That is the whole subject. That man had the stuff on him, stealing from this house which we have here and proven." Counsel then moved that the remarks of the witness be stricken from the record and the witness cautioned, and was requested by the court to "put in your objection." Whereupon he moved that the remarks of the witness be stricken out as impertinent and not responsive to any question, and specified "the remarks regarding the viciousness of the dog," "and the appearance of the man," and what "the man said about the building lots and houses."

The statements of the witness as to the dog were merely incidental in the narrative and harmless, and the remarks as to the "lots and houses" were reasons given by the defendant for being in the neighborhood where he was found. This explanation with his appearance when arrested were competent evidence, and the court properly refused to strike out the testimony relating to them. The objection stated did not include the testimony as to "stealing" from the house, etc. The articles of jewelry were already identified by the owner and were in evidence before the jury, and the language used by the witness meant no more than that the defendant had on his person the articles before the jury, and therefore he took him into custody.

The testimony as to the finding of the pipe taken from the second house was not objected to, except as the objection interposed also included testimony as to the admissibility of which there was no question. In form it was: "Like to have the record show that all this line of examination is under objection," etc. "We ask that all this testimony be stricken out." Such an objection or motion in the record will not warrant this court on appeal in considering the specific exception that the evidence tended to establish a separate, independent offense. Aside from this, the identification of the pipe was but a part of the identification of the defendant, and the pipe was found along the road with the articles of jewelry taken from the other house.

There is nothing in the record to justify a reversal.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 564

OLDER v. SUPERIOR COURT et al.

(Civ. 622.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 10, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 31*)—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS —COMPELLING CONSIDERATION OF MOTION FOR CHANGE OF VENUE.

Where one charged with criminal libel files an application for a change of venue, and contends that, though Penal Code, § 1033, authorized a change of venue on defendant's application only on the ground that a fair trial cannot be had in the county, the provision of the Constitution making the venue of a prosecution against a newspaper for libel either in the county of the newspaper's office or of the residence of plaintiff, unless the place of trial is changed "for good cause," entitles defendant to a change of venue on the ground that it would be in the interest of justice, and because most of the witnesses would come from the county to which the change was sought, an alternative writ of mandamus will be issued requiring the trial judge to entertain and decide petitioner's motion upon the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 31*)—PROCEEDINGS—APPEAL —QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—AP-PLICATION FOR ALTERNATIVE WRIT.

On an application for an alternative writ of mandamus to compel respondent to entertain and decide defendant's motion for a change of venue in a prosecution for libel, on the ground that the Constitution entitles him to a change on the grounds alleged, the question for decision is not whether petitioner's construction of the Constitution is proper, but whether the question is debatable as to the trial court's duty to entertain the application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 64*) — PRESUMPTIONS — PERFORMANCE OF OFFICIAL DUTY.

It must be assumed that members of the bar at all times act in good faith toward the courts in the performance of their professional duties, in absence of a contrary showing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 84; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

4. COURTS (§ 207*) — JURISDICTION—AUTHORITY TO ISSUE MANDAMUS—DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEAL.

While Const. art. 6, § 4, authorizes District Courts of Appeal to issue writs of mandate, and does not prohibit their issuance out of the territorial jurisdiction of the court, as a matter of comity such writ should be applied for to the court of the district in which the cause for the writ arises, unless the special circumstances justify its issuance by the court of another district, but where it would be impracticable to present the application for an alternative writ of mandamus to the court of the district wherein the action arose, and petitioner's trial was set for the day after the application for the writ was made, the district court of one appellate district will issue the writ though the cause therefor arose in another district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 512, 516; Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

Application for mandamus by Fremont Older against the Superior Court and others. Alternative writ issued.

Hiram W. Johnson, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for an alternative writ of mandate, to compel the respondents to entertain and decide, upon the merits, a certain question involved in petitioner's motion for a change of the place of trial of a certain criminal cause, wherein the petitioner and one R. A. Crothers are the defendants, from the county of Kern to the city and county of San Francisco. Ordinarily this court does not feel called upon to file an opinion, giving its reasons for the issuance of a preliminary writ within its jurisdiction to cause to be issued, and ordinarily will not issue such writ where the cause out of which it grows originates in a county not within the territorial jurisdiction of the court. But, as the action out of which this application originates is pending in Kern county, which constitutes a part of the Second appellate district, and, as we recognize that there should exist between the several district appellate courts such degree of comity as should justify us, ordinarily, in refusing to entertain an application for a writ of any character affecting a cause of action or originating from any cause arising in another district, we think that, as we feel constrained, under the circumstances as presented, to order the issuance of the alternative writ here applied for, it is proper—in fact, it is due our Brothers of the Second district—to briefly state our reasons therefor.

The facts may thus be briefly stated: The petitioner and the said R. A. Crothers, managing editor and publisher, respectively, of the San Francisco Bulletin, an evening newspaper published in the city and county of San Francisco, were on the 25th day of May, 1908, informed against by the district attorney of Kern county for criminal libel, by publishing an alleged defamatory article concerning one William S. Tevis. Said petitioner and said Crothers, upon being arraigned upon said charge, each entered a plea of not guilty thereto. Thereafter, the Honorable Paul W. Bennett, judge of the superior court of Kern county, before whom said defendants were arraigned as aforesaid, requested the respondent, the Honorable C. W. Norton, a judge of the superior court of San Joaquin county, to preside at the trial of said defendants, and said Norton consented thereto. The trial of said defendants was duly fixed for the 11th day of May, 1909. On the 1st day of May, 1909, the petitioner filed with said superior court of Kern county, and served the same upon the district attorney of said county, a notice of motion for a change of the place of the trial of said actions, as before stated. On the 6th day of May, 1909, upon agreement of counsel, and for the purposes of convenience, said motion was presented and argued before the said respondent, the Honorable C. W. Norton, in the city of Stockton.

Among the grounds alleged for the change of venue in the notice was that for "good cause" other than that specified in section 1033 of the Penal Code; it being alleged that it would be in the interest of justice to order the change as asked for, and it being further alleged in this connection that there will probably be called to testify in behalf of the defendants in said actions approximately forty witnesses, all of whom either reside in the city of San Francisco or in places conveniently adjacent thereto. The respondents held that the right of the petitioner to ask for a change of the place of the trial of the action is restricted to the ground specified in said section 1033 of the Penal Code, which provides that such an action may be removed from the court in which it is pending on application of the defendant "on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county," and refused to pass upon the question of the convenience of witnesses or other "good cause" for the reason that the court was without jurisdiction to do so.

Counsel for petitioner contend that the provision of the Constitution enlarges the grounds upon which such a motion may be made in criminal libel actions; that said provision is self-executing, and invests the court with jurisdiction to entertain such motion upon the ground that it would be in the interest of justice to do so, for any good reason, other than that mentioned in section 1033 of the Penal Code—as, for instance, the convenience of witnesses, etc.—which might be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court. In other words, it is petitioner's contention, as we understand it, that, inasmuch as the Constitution provides that the venue in a criminal libel action is in either the county where the newspaper committing the alleged libel has its publication office or where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged libelous publication, by the use of the language in said provision, "unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause," the framers of the Constitution intended to authorize the change to be made for any sufficient reason, in addition to that declared in the Code section referred to, which might be satisfactorily exhibited to the court, and that the Code section cannot, of course, have the effect of restricting or limiting or qualifying any right in this behalf which the Constitution itself authorizes. It will be observed that the only question now presented to us by the petition is, not whether the petitioner's construction of the constitutional provision is sound, but whether the proposition is one which presents a debatable question as to the jurisdiction and duty of the respondents in the matter involved. In other words, we are not now called upon to pass upon or decide the proposition whether a peremptory writ should or should not be granted.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Counsel for petitioner declare, and we must assume that all members of the bar at all times act in good faith with the courts, that it would be inconvenient, and in fact impracticable, to present this application to the Second Appellate District Court; that they were limited in the time within which to prepare the elaborate petition which has been filed here and that the actual trial of the petitioner is set for the 11th day of May, 1909—one day from that on which this application is presented.

The Constitution (section 4, art. 6) confers upon the District Courts of Appeal the jurisdiction of issuing writs of mandate, and does not confine the issuance of such writs by such courts within their territorial jurisdiction. But, as a matter of comity, as we have declared, such writs should invariably be applied for to the court of the district in which the cause for the writ arises, unless there are shown, as there are here, special circumstances which justify the issuance of the writ by a court of another district.

An alternative writ of mandate will therefore be issued as prayed for.

155 Cal. 704

LYNCH v. McDONALD et al. (S. F. 4,889.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1909.
On Rehearing, July 17, 1909.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 179*)—CONSTRUCTION—PARTIES.

Where, in an action by an attorney against a corporation and an individual for services rendered under a contract, in form between the corporation and the individual on the one part and the attorney on the other, but signed by the individual only in his capacity as president of the corporation, it appeared that the attorney knew the individual's relation to the corporation and of the resolution authorizing him to act for the corporation, the attorney could not complain because the judgment was against the corporation only, though the individual deceived the attorney as to the net earnings of the property of the corporation, and though the individual owned nearly all the stock of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 459*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—PARTIES TO CONTRACTS.

Where a contract in form between a corporation and an individual on the one part and a third person on the other part was signed by the individual as president and as stockholder, the question whether he was bound personally must be determined by parol testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2110; Dec. Dig. § 459.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 179*)—CONSTRUCTION—PARTIES—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action by an attorney against a corporation and an individual for services under a contract in form between the corporation and the individual on the one part and the attorney on the other, but signed by the individual only as president of the corporation and as stockholder, the evidence showed that the attorney had been the confidential adviser of the individual, but did not show that the attorney had explained that a prior agreement was not binding on the individual personally, but that the new one would be, the court was justified in refusing to extend the new contract so as to bind the individual personally, because of the failure of the attorney to show good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Edward Lynch against M. Jasper McDonald and another. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward Lynch and Bertin A. Weyl, for appellant. Robbins & Breeze and Wm. H. Hamilton, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff and appellant sued on a certain written contract, and obtained judgment according to the prayer of his complaint against the defendant corporation. The superior court entered judgment dismissing the complaint as against M. Jasper McDonald individually, and this appeal is taken from that part of the judgment.

The contract upon which the action was based was drawn (as were other contracts put in evidence) by the plaintiff, who had been for a long time the attorney for the mining company and for McDonald. The contract recited the services of Lynch as attorney and mining expert, and provided for the payment to him for such services, from the sale of a group of mines at Amador City, owned by the Keystone Consolidated Mining Company, the sum of $20,000, and in case there should not be an early sale of said property, the said sum of $20,000 was to be paid from the monthly proceeds of the mine, not to exceed 10 per cent. of the net profit. The agreement also contained a provision for the payment of a salary to Lynch for legal and other services to be rendered. This contract was dated March 1, 1901. While in form it was between the corporation and McDonald on the one part and Lynch on the other, it was signed by McDonald only in his capacity as president of the corporation, by Anderson as secretary thereof, and by plaintiff. The court found: "That the provision of the contract set forth in the complaint, as follows: 'Said parties of the first part hereby employ the party of the second part to render all such services for three years from date hereof; and it is agreed that said Lynch shall be paid by the parties of the first part $150.00 per month for said services'—was continued in force by two certain agreements entered into and executed by and between said defendants and said plaintiff, dated February 12, 1904, and September 27, 1904, wherein and whereby reference was made to said contract dated March 1, 1901, copied in the complaint, and it was provided in each of said agreements, dated February 12, 1904, and September 27, 1904, that 'the agreement made March 1, 1901, between the said parties as are contracting hereby providing for payment to said Lynch of $150 per month shall remain in full force and effect until the provisions thereof are fully performed.'"

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellant contends that, inasmuch as McDonald owned nearly all of the capital stock of the corporation and dominated its policy, it was his "alter ego," that its acts were McDonald's acts, and that the judgment should therefore be against him personally, as well as against the Keystone Consolidated Mining Company. Plaintiff earnestly protests that the corporate name was merely a cloak, which McDonald should not be allowed to use to prevent plaintiff from securing a personal judgment against him, particularly in view of the court's finding that McDonald misrepresented to plaintiff the matter of profits from the mine, and in contemplation of the further fact that the agreements made after that of 1901 were signed by McDonald in his personal, as well as his presidential, capacity.

If this were an action by a stranger to the facts, who had been injured by ignorance of McDonald's holding of nearly all of the stock of the company, there might be some force in appellant's position, and some necessity for the application of the principle which he invokes; but appellant was not only an attorney at law, but was one who by years of association with McDonald and service for him and the company was thoroughly familiar with all the facts concerning the president's relation to the corporation. If he was content to act under a contract which respondent refused to sign except as an officer of the company, he cannot complain that McDonald, who was not a party signatory to the instrument, is not bound. True, McDonald, according to the findings, deceived Lynch with reference to the net earnings of the mines, but this deception had nothing to do with McDonald's relation to the corporation. Lynch knew all about McDonald's holdings, was cognizant of the resolution of the board of trustees authorizing the president to act for the corporation in practically all matters, and had advised respondent in all business affairs, including the effect of the various contracts prepared by Lynch and signed by him and one or both of these defendants.

The contract of September 27, 1904, is signed by McDonald as president of the company, and again as "stockholder." If we treat the signature as the personal sign manual of McDonald, and ignore the words "as stockholder," still we cannot say that by any method of construction the liability of the signer is extended to the debt of $20,000 mentioned in the instrument bearing date of March 1, 1901, because the promise of latest date is made with respect to the salary only. There was sufficient evidence to justify the court in the conclusion that by the use of the words "as stockholder" McDonald wished to show that he did not intend to be bound personally. That was a matter to be determined by parol testimony. S. P. Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., 118 Cal. 371, 50 Pac. 650. But whether or not ordinarily such a signature would amount to a personal assent to the terms of the agreement, there are other facts in evidence which would justify the lower court's decision. It was shown that Lynch was McDonald's confidential adviser, and it nowhere appears that upon presenting for signature any one of the various contracts following that of March 1, 1901, the attorney had explained that the former agreement was not binding upon McDonald, but that the new one would be. It was appellant's duty to show such good faith affirmatively. He failed to do so, and the trial court was justified in refusing to consider that the contracts following that of March 1, 1901, operated to extend the liability of the original contract to respondent McDonald. See 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 902; Felton v. Le Breton, 92 Cal. 469, 28 Pac. 490; Cox v. Delmas, 99 Cal. 104, 33 Pac. 836.

It follows that the judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. A rehearing of this cause is denied, but it is proper to say that, so far as the department opinion may seem to imply that Mr. Lynch failed in his professional duty to the defendant McDonald, such a conclusion is unwarranted. The findings of the court and the evidence in the case show that throughout the transactions between himself and the defendants he acted in perfect good faith.

(155 Cal. 727)

In re SUTRO'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,768.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 24, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1909.)

1. CHARITIES (§ 10*)—CHARITABLE TRUSTS—VALIDITY—PURPOSES.

Civ. Code, §§ 847, 857, limiting the purposes for which express trusts may be created to trusts to sell real property, and apply the proceeds in accordance with the instruments creating the trust, to mortgage or lease real property for the benefit of legatees, or to satisfy any charge thereon, and to receive the rents and profits of real property and pay them to the use of any person, or to accumulate the same for certain purposes, apply only to private, and not to trusts for charitable, uses, and at common law trusts to convey to charitable uses are valid, and, in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary, the common-law rule applies to them, under the provisions of Pol. Code, § 4468.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Charities, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. PERPETUITIES (§ 8*)—GIFTS TO CHARITIES.

Const. art. 20, § 9, declares that "no perpetuities shall be allowed except for eleemosynary purposes." A testator directed that certain lands should be held in trust by his executors for 10 years after his death, and then conveyed to a board of trustees provided for in the will, but the lands were not to be sold or disposed of by any one having the charge thereof during the life of the last survivor of testator's children, and at the death of the last survivor, or as soon thereafter as the board of trustees should deem for the best interest of the trust created, that the bulk of the real estate should be sold by the trustees as speedily as possible, and the funds realized should be managed by said board of trustees for such "charities, institutions of learning and science and for premiums to be set apart for distinguished scholarships and scientific discovery and inventions as shall be directed by my executors," and that the executors shall file a decision as to the specific purpose to which the funds were to be devoted within three years after testator's death, and in the event of their failure that the board of trustees should at once organize and determine to what purpose the funds shall be applied. The application of the funds was expressly prohibited "to any institution, or charity, or purpose which is in any degree sectarian in the management of which any priest, clergyman, minister, or rabbi, or other religious officer, shall have any voice or control." The testator also directed that on the death of the last surviving of his children, the property left in trust should vest in the trustees, and that the same might be sold and the proceeds applied to "the uses and purposes, charitable, educational and other, which are in this my will, provided and specified." Held, that the trust was invalid because it authorized the funds to be devoted to purposes other than charity, and left the question whether it should be so devoted entirely in the discretion of the executors or the trustees.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-66; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. PERPETUITIES (§ 8*)—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS — "ELEMOSYNARY" — "CHARITABLE."

The word "eleemosynary" as used in Const. art. 20, § 9, forbidding perpetuities except for eleemosynary purposes, is synonymous with "charitable."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1074-1088; vol. 8, p. 7600; vol. 3, pp. 2343, 2344.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Adolph Sutro, deceased. From a decree of partial distribution, appeals are taken. Affirmed.

See, also, 152 Cal. 249, 92 Pac. 486, 1027.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People. Morrison & Cope, Bradley & McKinstry, and J. C. McKinstry, for other appellants. Charles S. Wheeler and Garret W. McEnerney, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Adolph Sutro died in the city of San Francisco August 8, 1898, leaving a last will and testament, dated May 22, 1882. He left surviving him six children, and died the owner of a large amount of property. To his children he bequeathed the sum of $10,000 each, and the residue of his estate, specially excepting, however, from said residue a portion thereof, consisting of about 1,200 acres of land within the city and county of San Francisco known as a part of the Cliff House ranch and a part of the San Miguel Rancho, which the testator devoted to charitable uses under a trust for that purpose, which he assumed to create in his will, and which tracts were referred to in his will as numbered I and II.

The clauses of his will as to such trust, material to be considered here, are as follows: By paragraph XXV thereof the testator declared: "I will and direct that the title in fee of said parcels of land marked I and II last hereinbefore described and each thereof shall go in trust into the hands of my executors, to be by them preserved and managed for and during the period of ten (10) years after my death, and then by my executors to be conveyed in trust, to the board of trustees hereinafter provided for, but not to be sold or disposed of by any one having the charge or management thereof during the life of the last survivor of my children mentioned in this will, and at the death of said last survivor, or as soon thereafter as may be deemed, by the board of trustees hereinafter mentioned, for the best interest of the trust hereinafter created and appointed, I will and direct that the bulk of the whole of said parcels of real estate marked as aforesaid I and II shall be sold by said board of trustees, as speedily as possible, but in the manner they shall deem best, for realizing the largest amount, and the funds realized from such sales, shall be managed and applied by said board of trustees for such charities, institutions of learning and science and for premiums to be set apart for distinguished scholarships and scientific discovery and inventions as shall be directed by my executors."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

To provide for a more specific determination of the purposes to which the funds were to be devoted, the will further declared that a decision of the executors upon that subject should be filed in the county recorder's office within 3 years after his death, and that if the executors failed to give such direction, then the board of trustees provided in the will should at once organize, and within 12 months thereafter select the application to be made of the funds comprising the trust. To enable them to act more intelligently in selecting the purposes of the trust they were further directed to advertise in the newspapers of San Francisco, New York, and London, offering a prize of $1,500 for the best treatise upon the subject, $1,000 for the second best, and $500 for the third best. They were expressly prohibited from directing the application of any of the funds "to any institution, or charity, or purpose, which is in any degree sectarian or in the management of which any priest, clergyman, minister or rabbi, or other religious officer, shall have any voice or control." The final board of trustees appointed for the execution of this trust was to consist of 13 members, namely, the Governor of the state, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the presiding judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, the United States Circuit Judge for the District of California, the mayor of San Francisco, the president of the San Francisco chamber of commerce, the president of the board of regents of the California University, and their successors in office, and 6 other members to be chosen by the above-named officers, 3 from the leading bankers of San Francisco, and 3 from the male descendants of the testator or of his brothers bearing the name of Sutro. The property which was to be devoted to the trust thus to be ascertained comprised the bulk of the testator's estate, and it was further provided, in effect, that it should remain undisposed of until the death of the last survivor of his children, and that upon that event it should "vest in said board of trustees and their successors, in trust, that the same may be sold and the proceeds therefrom be applied to the uses and purposes, charitable, educational and other, which are, in this my will, provided and specified."

On October 1, 1898, Clara A. Sutro, Edgar E. Sutro, Kate Nussbaum, and Rosa V. Morbio, children of the testator, brought an action against Emma L. Merritt and W. H. R. Adamson, "as trustees under an instrument purporting to be the will of Adolph Sutro," and Emma L. Merritt, George W. Merritt, her husband, and Charles W. Sutro, individually, the said Emma L. Merritt and Charles W. Sutro and plaintiffs being the only children of said Adolph Sutro, deceased. The complaint alleged that the plaintiffs were the owners in fee of an undivided two-thirds interest in the real property in controversy; that the defendants Emma L. Merritt and Adamson claimed as trustees under the Sutro will, and as such trustees claimed an estate and interest in the property adverse to plaintiffs; that the other defendants Emma L. Merritt and Charles W. Sutro, individually, claimed the property adversely to the plaintiffs, but that all claimed without right as to said undivided two-thirds of said property. The prayer was that the claim of the defendants and all question as to the validity of any devise or trust under the aforesaid will be finally determined, and that it be adjudged that the defendants, as trustees or otherwise, had no right, title, or interest in the property. This action was begun and brought to trial and judgment before the will was admitted to probate. The defendants as trustees set up the provisions of the will in opposition to the complaint. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, declaring the plaintiffs owners in fee of a two-thirds interest in the property, and that the trust attempted to be created by the will of Adolph Sutro was void, because, as the conclusions of law declare, the fund "was not intended wholly for charitable purposes, but was intended for purposes partly charitable and partly other than charitable, and that the purposes for which it was intended are vague and uncertain, and cannot be made certain." No appeal was ever taken from this judgment, and it has become final. It was entered on June 19, 1899.

On May 23, 1903, the persons who were plaintiffs in that action filed a petition in the matter of the administration of the estate of Sutro, asking for partial distribution to them of the property of said estate, including therein the property devoted by the will to the trust therein attempted to be created. Upon the hearing of this petition the judgment in Sutro v. Merritt was set up as an adjudication of the matter, and the validity of the trust provisions of the will were again challenged. The court made its degree of distribution in accordance with the prayer of petitioners, and based the decision upon two grounds: First, that the judgment in the case of Sutro v. Merritt aforesaid was a conclusive adjudication of the title of the petitioners as heirs at law and of the invalidity of the trust; second, treating the question of the validity of the trust as not concluded, the court again declared that it was invalid. The appeals are taken from that portion of the decree of partial distribution disposing of the property which by the will is to be devoted to the purposes of the trust therein attempted to be created, and also from an order denying the appellants' motion for a new trial.

It is not contended that the trust in question comes within the rule laid down in the Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70, that a trust to convey is void. Sections 847 and 857 of the Civil Code, involved in that case, apply only to private trusts, and not to trusts for charitable uses. If the trust in question is a trust for charitable uses, it is not void because of the provisions of the aforesaid sections of the Civil Code. In Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457, it was declared that charitable perpetuities were lawful, notwithstanding the provisions of section 715 of the Civil Code relating to perpetuities in general. It was held that the last-named section did not apply to charities. This conclusion was based on the principle that the sections of the Civil Code first referred to, declaring what should constitute valid trusts as applied to real property, pertain to private trusts, and did not include trusts for charitable uses. At common law trusts to convey to charitable uses were valid; and, in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary, the common-law rule relative to them applies in this state. Pol. Code, § 4468; Estate of Hinckley, supra. It is conceded by the respondents that the principle of the Fair Case has no application to trusts to convey to charitable uses.

A large part of the argument has been devoted to a discussion of the proper construction of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and to the effect of the former judgment in the case of Sutro v. Merritt. It is claimed, on the one hand, that section 738 was not intended to permit of the determination, as between the heirs and devisees, of questions relating to the validity of the provisions of the will, or which would determine their rights, as between themselves, in advance of the final decree of distribution of the estate in the probate proceeding. On the other hand, it is contended that that section was intended for the very purpose of providing for such a determination. We do not find it necessary to enter into a discussion of these questions. We are of the opinion that, as an original question, the provisions of the will attempting to create a trust for the purposes therein declared were invalid, for the reasons stated by the superior court in its conclusions of law above quoted from the record in the case of Sutro v. Merritt.

It may be conceded, for the purposes of the case, that it would have been possible, under the scheme provided, to ascertain with certainty the precise purposes to which the trust funds were ultimately to be devoted. The elaborate plan for the determination of the specific purposes, if carried out, might have resulted in a clear and certain statement as to those purposes. The fatal objection to the validity of the trust is that it authorizes the funds to be devoted to purposes other than charitable, and that it leaves the question whether it is to be devoted to charitable purposes, or to other uses not charitable, entirely in the discretion of the executors, or, in case of their default, in the discretion of the board of trustees. The Constitution declares that "No perpetuities shall be allowed except for eleemosynary purposes." Article 20, § 9. The word "eleemosynary" in this passage is synonymous with "charitable," as the latter word is used and understood in treatises and decisions upon the subject of trusts.

The rule upon this subject was stated in the decision of this court in Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 509, in these words: "Where a bequest is made for charitable purposes, and also for purposes of an indefinite character, which are not charitable, the whole bequest will be void. If, for instance, a bequest is made for such charitable or other purposes as the trustees should think fit, the whole bequest will be void for uncertainty"—citing Tudor on Charitable Trusts, 223. This statement of the rule is well established by a long line of cases on the subject. In Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 475, 494, 48 Atl. 671, 678, the court says: "It is well settled that, in order to create a valid charitable trust in perpetuity, the language employed must require the fund to be expended for charitable purposes only, and it must not be left in the discretion of the trustees to spend the money for a charitable or noncharitable purpose. In other words, the devotion of the fund to charity must be clear and certain." In the case of In re Shattuck's Will, 193 N. Y. 446, 86 N. E. 455, decided by the New York Court of Appeals, the provision was that the trust funds were to be "paid over to religious, educational, or eleemosynary institutions" as the trustees should deem advisable. The court says: "The word 'educational' does not necessarily describe a public or charitable institution. * * * An 'institution' is an established or organized society or corporation. It may be private in its character, designed for profit to those composing the organization, or public and charitable in its purposes. An institution is a mere organism for the accomplishment of an object, and the existence of such organism cannot, in the nature of things, make such object definite. The use of the word 'institution' does not point to a public, as distinguished from a private, organization, and there is nothing whatever in the will, except in the words 'religious,' 'educational,' and 'eleemosynary,' that points in the slightest degree to a charitable use." And after holding that under the will the trustee could devote the proceeds of the trust fund to purposes which would be in whole or in part private and individual, and not public and charitable, the court says: "The possible devotion of the income of said trust in whole or in part to private use necessarily affects the entire gift, and requires that the same shall be held invalid." In Chamberlain v. Stearns, 111 Mass. 268, Gray, J., quotes from the opinion of Sir William Grant in James v. Allen, 3 Meriv. 17, the following in regard to a trust of this character: "If it might, consistently with the will, be applied to other than strictly charitable purposes, the trust is too indefinite for the court to execute." In Kendall v. Granger, 5 Beav. 300, the court say: "It is not a question whether the trustees may apply it [the fund] to a charitable purpose, but whether, by the words of the will, they are bound to do so. The decisions go to this further extent that they must have no option between a charitable and any other purpose." Quotations could be multiplied indefinitely announcing this doctrine. It is thus summarized in 2 Perry on Trusts, § 711: "There are other cases where legacies are given in trust for purposes that are clearly charitable, but these purposes are joined with words that authorize the trustees to expend the fund for general purposes which are not charitable. If the fund is not apportioned by the donor, the trustees may expend the whole for one purpose or another which is not charitable, and at the same time execute the exact power given them under the will. In such cases the courts cannot establish and administer the trust as charitable."

With respect to what purposes are deemed charitable the authorities show that those enumerated in the will of Adolph Sutro are not exclusively of that character. Mr. Perry approves the following general definition of a charitable trust given by Gray, J., in Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 556: "A charity, in the legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift to be applied, consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons, either by bringing their hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering, or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves for life, or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works, or otherwise lessening the burdens of government." This definition, as applied to charitable perpetuities, must be read with the opening phrase constantly in mind that the benefit is for "an indefinite number of persons," and not for any particular person or persons, and it must be for all persons falling within a described class, indefinite in number. The subject will be elucidated by a statement of the cases showing the subjects which have been held to be not charitable in character. The following described purposes have been so declared; the words in italics, where more than one descriptive term is used, being those which were held to vitiate the gift: "Charitable or public" (Blair v. Duncan, L. A. App. Cas. [1902] 37); "the religious, moral, and social welfare of the people" (Livesey v. Jones, 55 N. J. Eq. 204, 35 Atl. 1064); "the advancement of civilization generally" (Owens v. Mission- ary Society, 14 N. Y. 380, 409, 67 Am. Dec. 160); "undertaking of general utility" (Kendall v. Granger, 5 Beav. 300); "charitable or religious institutions or societies" (Grimond v. Grimond, L. R. App. Cas. [1905] 126); "charitable or philanthropic purposes" (In re Macduff, L. R. Ch. Div. [volume 2, 1896] p. 451); "the establishment of a school at Montrose for the education of children" (Attorney General v. Soule, 28 Mich. 153); "charitable or other purposes" (Ellis v. Selby, 7 Sim. 352, 362; 1 Myl. & Cr. 286, 298); "to such charitable or public uses or purposes, person or persons, as may be selected" (Vezev v. Jamson, 1 Sim. & Stu. 69); "benevolence and liberality" (Morice v. Durham, 9 Ves. 399; 10 Ves. 521); "benevolent, charitable, and religious institutions" (Norris v. Thomson, 19 N. J. Eq. 308); "charitable, religious, or other societies, institutions, persons, or objects, in connection with the Roman Catholic faith" (Minty v. Bourne, L. R. Ch. Div. [1909, vol. 1] 567); "such charitable or other institution as is most needed" (Taylor v. Keep, 2 Ill. App. 275). In Estate of Hinckley, supra, 58 Cal. page 511, a trust for "human beneficence and charity" was held valid on the ground that the use of the word "and" to join the words "beneficence" and "charity," in connection with the context, showed that the two words were used synonymously, and the maxim "noscitur a sociis" was applied. The different objects named in the Sutro will cannot be thus joined. They are not synonymous, and the sentence in which they occur is, in effect, disjunctive. It is to be noted that those of the cases just cited which hold that the phrase "religious or educational institutions" indicates a noncharitable use, and also the case of Shattuck's Will, to the same effect, do so on the ground that it would permit the fund to be devoted to existing institutions which, though religious or educational, might be maintained for private profit, and therefore not charitable. They are to be distinguished from other cases where a trust for the purpose of establishing institutions has been held valid because the context showed that none but charitable institutions were intended.

Coming now to the particular purposes authorized by this will, we find that they include "charities," "institutions of learning and science," and "premiums" to be set apart for "distinguished scholarships," for "scientific discovery," and for "inventions." The term "charities" would, of course, include charitable uses, and perhaps could not be construed to refer to any other. But institutions of learning and science may or may not be charitable, according as the institution is carried on for public benefit alone, or for private gain. Spence v. Widney (Cal.) 46 Pac. 466, in which a rehearing was granted, but not on this point; Atty. Gen. v. Hewer, 2 Vern. 387; Atty. Gen. v. Newcomb, 14 Ves. Jr. 1; Atty. Gen. v. Soule, supra. The will would allow the fund to go to institutions of learning and science already established, whether charitable or not. And while it may be true that the encouragement of scientific discovery and inventions might, in a very general way, tend to promote the benefit of mankind and the advance of civilization, yet, in view of the decisions above cited, it cannot be said that these purposes are in themselves necessarily charitable or eleemosynary, in the sense in which these words are used in the Constitution and in the authorities on the subject. Some kinds of scholarship have no direct relation to charity or the general welfare. Scientific discoveries might be of such a nature that they would be hurtful and evil in tendency and effect. Inventions are not necessarily useful. Both scientific discoveries and inventions may be of such a character as to inure entirely to the personal profit of the discoverer or inventor or of other persons interested or affected.

The other passages in the will itself, referring to these objects, demonstrate that the testator had in mind purposes other than charitable. The trustees are expressly forbidden to apply any of the fund to "any institution, or charity, or purpose" which should be in any degree sectarian. The final direction is that when, upon the death of his last surviving child, the absolute title to the property should vest in the ultimate trustees, it should be sold and the proceeds applied "to the uses and purposes, charitable, educational and other, which are, in this my will, provided and specified." These passages show that in his estimation the purposes specified were not exclusively charitable in character. There is nothing in other parts of the will to show that the "other" purposes referred to were intended to be charitable. Without violating the directions of the will the entire fund could be devoted to institutions of learning and science carried on for private gain, of which there are many, or to the encouragement of abstract scientific discoveries not tending to benefit mankind, or to reward inventions calculated to profit the inventor alone, or those to whom he should transfer his secret or patent. The trustees could apply a part to each of the different objects, or they could apply the whole of it to one of them to the exclusion of any other. These objects not being exclusively or necessarily charitable, it follows, under the rule stated, that the entire trust was invalid, and that the decree of distribution was correct, independent of the effect of the previous judgment in the case of Sutro v. Merritt.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the other questions so elaborately presented and discussed. The motion for new trial was properly denied on this ground.

The decree and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

SLOSS, J. I concur on the ground that the judgment in Sutro v. Merritt was valid and binding. Even if it did not control the action of the court in probate so as to require a distribution directly to the heirs, it had the effect of conclusively determining the title of the heirs as against the trustees and others claiming under the alleged trust. A distribution to the trustees would, by virtue of the prior judgment, have inured to the benefit of the heirs, and the probate court properly concluded that it might make final disposition of the rights of the parties by decreeing distribution to the heirs in the first instance.

Upon the validity of the trust, as an original question, I express no opinion.

155 Cal. 739

ERNEST v. McCAULEY et al. (L. A. 2,283.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 222*)—ADMISSIONS AGAINST INTEREST.

Where, in an action on a note given for the price of stock of a mining corporation, defendant claimed that the note was procured by fraud as to the value and character of the mines, and it appeared that he had visited the mines and examined them, his statement made after the last visit that he was satisfied with their character was competent as an admission against interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses are matters for the exclusive determination of the trial court where there is a substantial conflict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. W. Ernest against J. W. McCauley and others. From a judgment denying relief and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. M. Fall, for appellant. D. P. Hatch and Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendants to obtain a decree canceling a note for $3,937.70, executed by the plaintiff to defendant Johnson, and by him indorsed to the defendant bank before maturity, as collateral security for a note executed by Johnson to the bank for $3,750. The complaint also asked, in case it was determined that the cancellation could not be had as against the bank, that it be restrained from collecting from the plaintiff any greater sum than the amount due upon the note of Johnson to the bank, and that as to the residue the note be canceled. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The bank filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff and Johnson, asking judgment against the plaintiff upon the note executed by the plaintiff to Johnson, and against Johnson upon the note which he had executed to the bank. The court made separate findings and judgments, giving judgments in favor of the bank against the plaintiff for the amount of the note sought to be canceled, and against Johnson upon his note to the bank, for which the plaintiff's note was held as security. The judgment against Johnson was greater in amount than that against the plaintiff. Judgment was also given in favor of Johnson and McCauley against the plaintiff.

The complaint alleged that the note of plaintiff to Johnson, which was assigned by him to the bank, had been procured by misrepresentations and fraud concerning the value and character of certain mines in Shasta county. The note was given for the purchase price of 39,377 shares of stock in the company owning said mines. The court found that there was no misrepresentation, that the note was given for a valuable consideration, and that the bank was a purchaser for value before maturity and without notice of the nature of the consideration, or of any misrepresentations or fraud.

The plaintiff claims that the court erred in allowing testimony to prove that, after the execution and delivery of the note to Johnson, the plaintiff had visited the mines, and had fully examined them, and thereafter expressed himself as satisfied with their character and value. We do not perceive any error in this ruling. The plaintiff's statement, taken in connection with the fact that he had previously made several examinations of the mines, constituted an admission against his interest tending to show that the representations complained of were not false. The testimony showed that he had made one visit to the mines before executing the note, and had spent some four hours examining their character, and was then so well satisfied that their condition and value was as represented that he executed the note for the stock, and that a few weeks afterward he made another visit to the mines and spent several days there making a thorough examination, after which he expressed himself as satisfied with the bargain he had made. The testimony as to these acts and declarations by him was clearly admissible against him.

The only other error assigned is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings of the court. It is unnecessary to discuss this assignment of error at length. The case presents the familiar one of a conflict of the evidence. The plaintiff testified to the effect that the character of the mines was grossly misrepresented, and that he was prevented from making a proper examination by the artifices of Johnson and McCauley. There was other testimony to the contrary which, though not entirely conclusive, was sufficient to present a substantial conflict for the trial court to consider and determine. With respect to the First National Bank, there is no sufficient testimony from which the court could have held that it was a purchaser in bad faith. Under these circumstances, we cannot disturb the findings. The rule is too well settled to require the citation of authority to the effect that the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses are matters for the exclusive determination of the trial court in any case where there is a substantial conflict.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

155 Cal. 692

DUNDAS v. LANKERSHIM SCHOOL DIST. (L. A. 2,294.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 356*)—TIME—EFFECT OF DELAY—DISMISSAL.

Appeal from judgment not being taken within six months from entry thereof, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1, will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1926, 1927; Dec. Dig. § 356.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 49*)—ESTABLISHMENT—PRACTICAL LOCATION AND ACQUIESCENCE.

Where the point of beginning of land conveyed to defendant, described in the deed as a point in a certain line of a street a certain distance west and a certain distance south of a certain other point, was by the parties ascertained by a survey made for that purpose, and marked on the ground prior to the conveyance, and the northerly and southerly lines of the lot were then fixed by the parties with reference to said point, and marked on the ground by stakes at the corners of the lot, and all parties in interest, with knowledge of the location and extent of the land claimed and occupied by defendant under its deed, acquiesced in the location for the period for obtaining title by prescription, and every successor in interest of the owner of the property adjoining defendant's land on the south (owned at the time of the conveyance to defendant, by its grantor), including plaintiff, purchased with knowledge of the actual possession by defendant to the line claimed by it to constitute, and marked on the ground as constituting, its southerly boundary line, the point of beginning actually located and marked on the ground, and the line then located and marked on the ground as the southern boundary, must be accepted, the one as the point of beginning actually described in the deed and the other as the true southerly line, and defendant be held to hold to such line by virtue of its deed, regardless of the accuracy of such locations as shown by subsequent measurements.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 248; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hut-ton, Judge.

Action by George E. Dundas against the Lankershim School District. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Appeal from judgment dismissed. Order affirmed.

Kemp & Collier and John W. Kemp, for appellant. T. R. Archer, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to quiet title commenced November 5, 1906. The controversy is about a strip of land ranging from 46.34 feet on the easterly end to 42.87 feet on the westerly end, and about 420.64 feet long, being the southerly portion of a lot of land occupied and used for school purposes by defendant for over 16 years next preceding the commencement of the action. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The appeal from the judgment was taken more than 11 months after its entry. Not having been taken within six months from the entry of judgment, it must be dismissed. Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1. There remaining only an appeal from the order denying a motion for a new trial, we are not concerned with any question of the sufficiency of any pleading, or of the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment.

The principal claim on the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is that the finding that defendant is the owner of this land is not sustained by the evidence. It is undisputed that defendant acquired from the Lankershim Ranch, Land & Water Company, the original owner of all the land referred to in the deeds under which the parties claim, and from Miles Dodd, the immediate grantee of said company, a lot of land for school purposes, the northeasterly corner of which was on what was intended to be the southwesterly line of a street known as San Fernando avenue, the boundaries of which are as follows, viz.: Running from said point west 270.64 feet; thence south 300 feet; thence east parallel with the northerly line over 400 feet to the southwesterly line of San Fernando avenue; thence northwesterly along said line of said avenue to the point of beginning. The real controversy here is as to the location of the point on the southwesterly line of San Fernando avenue constituting the northeasterly corner of the lot. If it be at the place claimed by defendant, the northerly and southerly boundary lines of the school lot are as claimed by defendant and found by the court, thus including the strip in dispute. If it be at the place claimed by plaintiff, over 40 feet to the north of the place claimed by defendant, the southerly boundary line of defendant's lot would be thrown more than 49 feet to the north, and the strip in dispute would thus be excluded. Plaintiff is the owner of the land lying south of and adjoining the lot of defendant, having on March 21, 1906, acquired the title thereto of the Lankershim, etc., Company and Miles Dodd, through mesne conveyances.

The following facts are clearly established by the evidence: Defendant school district went into actual possession of the property claimed by it in 1888 or 1889, under a proposition from the Lankershim Company to the effect that, if it would use the same as a site for its schoolhouse and build thereon a schoolhouse to cost a specified sum of money, the company would give it the land. The ground to be so given was immediately upon the acceptance of the offer marked out on the ground by the company by stakes placed at the corners, in pursuance of a survey then made by the company's surveyor, assisted by Mr. W. H. Andrews, one of the then trustees of the school district. On this survey, the northeasterly corner of the lot was fixed at the point on San Fernando avenue claimed by the defendant to be the true corner, and a stake was there driven which was replaced two years later by an iron stake, which the trial court was warranted by the evidence in concluding is still in place. Defendant almost immediately proceeded to more clearly define and permanently mark on the ground the location of the northerly and southerly lines of the lot by planting rows of cypress and pine trees along the same, about one foot inside of each line, which trees have ever since continued in place. Mr. Andrews, the then owner of the property to the west, planted a row of gum trees about one foot west of the westerly line of the lot. Defendant immediately proceeded with the construction of its schoolhouse on this property, and the same was completed in 1889 or 1890. Ever since that time all of the land claimed by defendant has been openly and exclusively possessed and used by defendant for school purposes under claim of absolute ownership, a claim acquiesced in and not denied by any one until about the end of the year 1905. On June 3, 1891, soon after the completion of the schoolhouse, the Lankershim Company executed its conveyance to the defendant wherein the property was described as "beginning at a point in the southwesterly line of San Fernando avenue, which point is 370.64 feet west, and 642.26 feet south of the northeast corner of lot 160." On October 29, 1891, Miles Dodd, the successor of said company, executed to defendant his deed to a triangular piece of land lying between the easterly line of the land conveyed by the Lankershim Company and the southwesterly line of San Fernando avenue, and of which the point of beginning was the same as that of the lot conveyed by the Lankershim Company. This deed described said point of beginning in the same way as did the Lankershim Company deed. This point of beginning for the school lot had been previously described in the same way in a provision of the deed of the Lankershim Company to Miles Dodd executed November 20, 1890, whereby said company excepted from the operation of its conveyance to Dodd a lot of land 270.64 feet by 300 feet, describing it by metes and bounds, and as commencing at such point. The claim of plaintiff is based solely on a survey made in 1905 for the then owner of the land lying south of the school district's land, for the purpose of ascertaining the true southerly boundary of said school district land, on which survey the surveyor concluded that the point on the southwesterly line of San Fernando avenue which was 370.64 feet west and 642.26 feet south of the northeast corner of lot 160, as he considered the said northeast corner of said lot 160 to be, was over 40 feet to the north of the point that had up to that time been marked on the ground and accepted by all parties as the true location. Mr. Andrews was a predecessor in title of plaintiff of the property adjoining defendant's land on the south, owning such property from June 20, 1892, to December 16, 1901. During all this time he openly acknowledged that the southerly line of trees before referred to was the north line of his property, and pointed out to his purchaser, a Mr. Stiffler, the rows of trees as being the lines of the school property, his deed to Stiffler describing the land conveyed by reference to the lines of the property of the school district.

The finding as to defendant's ownership is amply sustained by this evidence. Indeed, we do not perceive how any other finding could have been made. The point of beginning of the land conveyed by the Lankershim Company to defendant, described in the deed as a point in the southwesterly line of San Fernando avenue, 370.64 feet west and 642.26 feet south of the northeast corner of lot 160, was by the parties ascertained by the survey made for that purpose and marked on the ground prior to the conveyance, and the northerly and southerly lines of the lot were then fixed by the parties with reference to said point and thereupon marked on the ground by stakes at the corners of the lot. The deed was clearly intended to convey the property so located and marked out on the ground. All parties in interest, with full knowledge of the exact location and extent of the land claimed and occupied by defendant under its deeds, acquiesced in this location for three times the period prescribed by the statute of limitations for obtaining title by prescription, and every successor in interest of Andrews, including this plaintiff, purchased with full knowledge of the actual possession by defendant to the line claimed by it to constitute, and marked on the ground as constituting, its southerly boundary line. Under these circumstances, defendant's claim of title is sustained by the rules discussed in Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 477, 480, 95 Pac. 888. Under those rules, the point of beginning actually located and marked on the ground must be accepted as the point of beginning actually described in the deeds, regardless of the accuracy of the actual location, as it may appear by subsequent measurements. The line at the same time located and marked on the ground as the southerly line of defendant's property, by measuring from said point of beginning, must likewise be accepted as the true line, regardless of the accuracy of such location as shown by subsequent measurements, and the defendant holds to such line by virtue of its title deeds. See, also, Lewis v. Ogram, 149 Cal. 505, 87 Pac. 60, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610, 117 Am. St. Rep. 151. These considerations render it unnecessary to consider other points made by defendant in support of the finding of ownership. Certain other findings attacked are immaterial in view of our conclusion that the finding as to ownership is fully sustained by the evidence.

Many rulings of the trial court in admitting evidence over the objection of plaintiff and in refusing to strike out evidence on the motion of plaintiff are assigned as errors. We have examined all of these assignments, and find in the rulings complained of no prejudicial error, and no matter calling for discussion here.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

155 Cal. 665

MACDONALD v. MACDONALD. (S. F. 4,333.) (Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1909.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 27*)—GROUNDS—"EXTREME CRUELTY."

Under Civ. Code, § 94, defining "extreme cruelty" justifying a divorce as the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering by one spouse on the other, the wrongful infliction of grievous mental suffering by one spouse on the other is "extreme cruelty," though no injury to the health of the spouse injured is caused thereby, and a single act of cruelty may be of such a nature, though it consists solely of unfounded charges, as not only to inflict the most grievous mental suffering, but also to render impossible the subsequent living together of husband and wife, justifying a divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-83; Dec. Dig. § 27.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2630-2634.]

2. DIVORCE (§ 27*)—GROUNDS—EXTREME CRUELTY—FALSE CHARGES.

A false charge in writing made by a wife against her husband that he is a drunkard, a lewd and dissolute character, unfit to be a member of any fraternal organization, or to associate with decent people, that he had admitted that, if it were not for his parents, he would adopt the method of living on the earnings of a prostitute, with whom he had consorted after his marriage, causing the husband grievous mental suffering, justifies a divorce.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-83; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 184*)—APPEAL—QUESTION OF FACT—CRUELTY.

Whether grievous mental suffering has been inflicted by one spouse on the other because of the making of false charges is a question of fact, depending on the circumstances of the particular case, keeping in view the intelligence, apparent refinement, and delicacy of sentiment of the complaining spouse, and the trial judge must be invested with a wide range of discretion, and his finding will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the evidence in support thereof is so slight as to indicate a want of ordinary good judgment and an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 572; Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 127*)—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

The main purpose of Civ. Code, § 130, providing that no divorce can be granted on the default of defendant or on the uncorroborated testimony of the parties, is to prevent collusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 405-407; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

5. DIVORCE (§ 127*)—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

In a suit by a husband for divorce on the ground of the wife's malicious charges of misconduct, the testimony of the husband that he sustained grievous mental suffering as a result thereof is sufficiently corroborated when the court may infer from the nature of the charges, the circumstances under which they were made, the publicity given them, that he sustained mental suffering, though it be assumed that Civ. Code, § 130, requires corroboration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 405-407; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

6. DIVORCE (§ 127*)—EXTREME CRUELTY—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

Civ. Code, § 130, providing that no divorce can be granted on the uncorroborated testimony of the parties, does not apply to a suit for divorce by the husband on the ground that his wife had maliciously charged him with being a drunkard, a lewd and dissolute character, unfit to associate with decent people, and a divorce may be granted on his testimony that he sustained grievous mental suffering in consequence of the charges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 405-407; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

7. DIVORCE (§§ 27, 116*)—GROUNDS—EXTREME CRUELTY—MALICIOUS CHARGES—EVIDENCE.

The mere fact that husband and wife were living separate and apart when false charges were maliciously made by the wife against the husband does not necessarily prevent them constituting extreme cruelty, and the fact that they were so living is relevant only in determining whether they inflicted grievous mental suffering.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. §§ 27, 116.*]

8. DIVORCE (§ 130*)—MISCONDUCT OF HUSBAND—EVIDENCE.

In an action for divorce by the husband on the ground of the wife making false charges against him, evidence held to justify a finding that the conduct of the husband did not preclude him from complaining of the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 130.*]

9. DIVORCE (§ 127*)—RESIDENCE—EVIDENCE—CORROBORATION.

The testimony of a husband suing for divorce that he had been a resident of the county for at least one year next preceding the commencement of the action, as required by Civ. Code, § 128, is sufficiently corroborated within section 130, providing that no divorce can be granted on the uncorroborated testimony of the parties, by the testimony of witnesses as to his reputation indicating that he had been a resident of the county for many years preceding the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 405-407; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by Alexander John MacDonald against Josephine MacDonald. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henley & Costello, for appellant. William A. Kelly, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant from an interlocutory decree in favor of plaintiff in an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty.

1. It is claimed that the complaint did not show cruelty warranting a divorce, and that a demurrer interposed for want of facts should have been sustained. The extreme cruelty alleged is the infliction of grievous mental suffering by an act of defendant done on or about the 11th day of March, 1903. In this behalf it was alleged substantially as follows: Plaintiff was a member in good standing of Hesperian Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West, a fraternal order. Defendant filed with such parlor an affidavit made and verified by her, in which she charged plaintiff "with being a drunkard, a constant habitue of saloons, a lewd and dissolute character, a person unfit to be a member of the Hesperian Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, or any other fraternal organization, and a person unfit to associate with decent and respectable people." She further charged that since the date of the marriage, December 3, 1902, plaintiff had not contributed to her support, had made no effort to procure work or provide means for her support, that she had supported him with means supplied by her father; that plaintiff had admitted to her that he had spent a night with a certain prostitute at a place known as Belden Place in San Francisco; that plaintiff had stated to her that he did not have to work to support her or himself, as said prostitute would support him at any time; and that he had stated to her that if it were not for his parents, he would have adopted this mode of livelihood long ago. Each and all of these charges and statements were false, unfounded, and malicious, and were made by defendant for the sole purpose of grieving plaintiff. Such charges became known to many persons in the community and to plaintiff's fellow members in said Hesperian Parlor and were communicated to plaintiff, and by reason thereof he suffered grievous mental pain and anguish, and was subjected to great shame. Defendant's point in this connection is solely that there is only a single act of cruelty alleged, and that the law does not permit a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty for any single act of violence or abuse. There are decisions of some other states that sustain this claim, but it certainly is not the law in this state. Our statute defines extreme cruelty as "the wrongful infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other by one party to the marriage." Section 94, Civ. Code. Ever since the decision in Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660, it has been the accepted law of this state that the wrongful infliction of grievous mental suffering by one party to the marriage upon the other constitutes extreme cruelty under this statute, even though no injury to the health of the party thus injured is caused thereby. It was said in that case, quoting from Carpenter v. Carpenter, 30 Kan. 743, 2 Pac. 144, 46 Am. Rep. 108: "It was formerly thought that to constitute extreme cruelty, such as would authorize the granting of a divorce, physical violence is necessary; but the modern and better considered cases have repudiated this doctrine as taking too low and sensual a view of the marriage relation, and it is now very generally held that any unjustifiable conduct on the part of either husband or wife, which so grievously wounds the feelings of the other, or so utterly destroys the peace of mind of the other, as to seriously impair the health * * * or such as utterly destroys the legitimate ends and objects of matrimony, constitutes extreme cruelty under the statutes." The court further said: "Section 94 of the Civil Code is in harmony with the law as thus stated, and under it the infliction of grievous mental suffering is extreme cruelty." In that case the cruelty alleged and for which a divorce was granted was the imputing to plaintiff by defendant, in the presence of others, the grossest immorality and personal impurity. See, also, Nelson on Divorce and Separation, § 276. It is manifest that a single act of cruelty may be of such a nature, even where that act consists solely of the making of unfounded charges and cruel imputations, as not only to inflict the most grievous mental suffering, but also to render impossible the subsequent living together of husband and wife upon any such terms as are essential to the accomplishment of the legitimate ends and objects of matrimony, if marriage is to be viewed "from a different standpoint than as a mere physical relation." Barnes v. Barnes, supra. A false charge deliberately and maliciously made in writing by a wife against her husband, for the sole purpose of lowering him in the estimation of his friends and associates and all decent people to the effect that he is a drunkard, a lewd and dissolute character, a person unfit to be a member of any fraternal organization, a person unfit to associate with decent and respectable people, a person who had admitted to her that, if it were not for his parents, he would long ago have adopted the method of living on the earnings of a prostitute, with whom, it was charged, he had admitted having consorted after his marriage, might well bring about such a result. If it does, it certainly measures up to the requirements of our statute. See, generally, Nelson on Divorce and Separation, §§ 277, 279. As we have seen, it was squarely alleged that the conduct of the defendant in this regard did cause him grievous mental pain and suffering. The demurrer was properly overruled.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. In her answer defendant expressly admitted the allegations of the complaint in regard to the making of the charges by her against plaintiff. She denied that they became known to many persons in the community or to his brother members of Hesperian Parlor, or that the charges were made for the sole purpose of grieving plaintiff, or that they were at all false or malicious, or that plaintiff was thereby or at all subjected to great shame or to grievous or any mental anguish or suffering. Upon all of these matters, the findings of the trial court were in favor of plaintiff and against defendant. It was alleged by specifications in the bill of exceptions that the evidence was insufficient to justify the conclusion evidenced by the findings that plaintiff suffered grievous or any mental pain or anguish by reason of the act of defendant, and also the conclusion that such charges were made for the sole purpose of grieving plaintiff, were made known to many persons in the community and to his brother members in Hesperian Parlor, and that they were false, unfounded, and malicious.

No claim is made in the briefs that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant the trial court in finding that the charges so made against plaintiff by defendant were false and unfounded in fact, and that they were made for the sole purpose of grieving plaintiff and subjecting him to shame and contempt, and, in view of the record before us, we do not see how any such claim could reasonably be made. The evidence to the effect that they were known to his fellow members in Hesperian Parlor is uncontradicted; in fact, the evidence shows that such charges were formally investigated by the members of the parlor, and that he was acquitted thereof.

It is strenuously urged that, in view of all the facts, the finding that by reason thereof the plaintiff was occasioned grievous mental suffering is not sufficiently supported by evidence. "Whether in any given case there has been inflicted this 'grievous mental suffering' is a mere question of fact, to be deduced from all the circumstances of each particular case, keeping always in view the intelligence, apparent refinement, and delicacy of sentiment of the complaining party, and no arbitrary rule as to what probative facts shall exist in order to justify a finding of the ultimate facts of its existence can be given. * * * A correct decision must depend—as most cases depend—upon the sound sense and judgment of juries and courts.” Barnes v. Barnes, supra. From the very nature of the question it results that in its determination the trial judge, who has the parties before him for observation in the light of the evidence, must be invested with a wide range of discretion. It is settled that the finding of the trial court on this question will not be disturbed on appeal unless the evidence in support thereof is so slight as to indicate a want of ordinary good judgment and an abuse of discretion by the trial court. Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 187, 52 Pac. 298; Avery v. Avery, 148 Cal. 239, 244, 82 Pac. 967. This certainly cannot be held to be the situation here when we consider the general nature of the charges made against plaintiff by his wife, the persons to whom such charges were communicated, the falsity of the charges and plaintiff’s knowledge of the making and circulation thereof. Defendant’s principal claim in this connection is that the evidence of plaintiff to the effect that he was occasioned grievous mental suffering by reason of the making of these charges by his wife was not corroborated by other testimony, and that corroboration thereof was required by section 130 of the Civil Code, which provides that no divorce can be granted upon the default of the defendant, “or upon the uncorroborated statement, admission or testimony of the parties.” The main purpose of this section is to prevent collusion between the parties. Andrews v. Andrews, supra; Avery v. Avery, supra. We are aware of no case in this state where it has been squarely held that to satisfy the requirements of this section, which has existed in its present form ever since 1873, it is essential that there should be any corroboration of the plaintiff’s testimony as to the mental suffering entailed upon him by reason of the acts of the defendant other than such corroboration as is afforded by the evidence showing the nature and circumstances of the acts, considered in the light of all the circumstances of the case, including the character, temperament, and disposition of the parties. We do not understand the case of Haley v. Haley, 67 Cal. 24, 7 Pac. 3, as holding this, although there are one or two expressions in the opinion tending to support the defendant’s contention. The principal difficulty in that case was that, in the view of this court, there was no corroboration of the evidence of plaintiff to the effect that the defendant had willfully and wrongfully made a false charge of adultery against her. With reference to the fact of grievous mental suffering, in view of the nature of such a question, we do not see how any other corroboration could ordinarily be had. Mental suffering is generally known only to the sufferer. “The common judgment of mankind recognizes the fact that there may be unfounded charges and cruel imputations which are not more easily borne than physical bruises, and the necessary effect of which is to cause great mental distress to the person against whom they are made.” Barnes v. Barnes, supra. We have already quoted from the case last cited to the effect that the answer to the question whether grievous mental suffering has been inflicted by the acts complained of is to be deduced from all the circumstances of each particular case. A court undoubtedly has the right to draw reasonable inferences from the nature of the false charges made, the circumstances under which they were made, the publicity given them, and the other circumstances of the case and the parties, as to the effect of the charges upon the mind of the party against whom they are made, and, if such reasonable inferences are in accord with the party’s own testimony as to his mental suffering, there is sufficient corroboration to satisfy the requirements of the law, if corroboration in such a matter be essential. The decision in Haley v. Haley (Cal.) 14 Pac. 92, a later controversy between the same parties as those in Haley v. Haley, 67 Cal. 24, 7 Pac. 3, decides against defendant the exact point made by her in this behalf. The fact that this case was not ordered reported in the official reports cannot be taken to indicate, as claimed by defendant, that this court disapproved the doctrine, announced therein. We are satisfied that the decision there given on this point was correct. The case of Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 Pac. 573, goes simply to the question of the sufficiency of a complaint, holding that “grievous bodily injury” or “grievous mental suffering” must be alleged.

3. Defendant suggests that it is well settled that in order to secure a divorce on the ground of cruelty, based upon words unaccompanied by violence, it is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that the charges were malicious and without justifiable or probable cause. As to this, it is sufficient to say that, assuming the law to be as stated, there was sufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court that they were so made in this case.

4. It is further claimed that an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty will not lie for false charges made by one party against another after they have separated and are living apart. In this case the parties were married on December 3, 1902, and lived together as husband and wife only until March 1, 1903. The charges were made on or about March 11, 1903. In Nelson on Divorce and Separation, at section 277, it is said that the fact that the parties are separated at the time the charges are made does not change the nature of the cruelty, for separation does not relieve the husband of the duty to protect his wife's reputation. In Smith v. Smith, 8 Or. 100, accusations of adultery were made while the parties were living separate and apart. The court, in reply to the contention of counsel that the evidence did not show sufficient ground for divorce, because the accusations were made after the parties had separated and ceased to live together as husband and wife, said: "We think this makes no difference, for neither a husband nor wife can claim a right to continue the marriage relation while falsely charging the other with unchastity." In Halley v. Haley (Cal.) 14 Pac. 92, the divorce was granted for extreme cruelty consisting of a false and scandalous charge made after the parties had separated. While there are one or two opinions from other states which contain expressions tending to give some support to defendant's claim in this behalf, we think the better doctrine is that the mere fact that the parties are living separate and apart when false charges are maliciously made by one spouse against the other does not necessarily prevent them constituting extreme cruelty, and is relevant only in the determination of the question whether they inflicted grievous mental suffering. This was practically held in Valensin v. Valensin, 73 Cal. 106, 14 Pac. 397, where the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Temple, said: "Whether the false and malicious charge made after the actual separation of the parties would be less apt to inflict grievous mental anguish for that reason was for the trial court to determine in view of all the facts."

5. It is alleged that the evidence shows plaintiff to have been so greatly at fault that the court should have denied him relief. The answer contained no allegation by way of recrimination, and it can hardly be claimed that the evidence was such as to compel the conclusion that plaintiff had been guilty of conduct constituting a cause of divorce in favor of the defendant. The evidence of plaintiff shows that the parties quarreled on the day of the separation, and that the plaintiff was angry and left defendant, telling her that she could go home, could go her way, and he would go his. The defendant attributes a little stronger language to plaintiff on this occasion, but it is denied by plaintiff, and, in view of the findings of the trial court, the version most favorable to plaintiff must be adopted here. It cannot be held, in view of the findings, that he believed that she would want, by reason of his absence, for any of the necessities of life. As a matter of fact, it appears that he himself was then without employment and without money, and that he had every reason to believe that her father, who had apparently been most liberal in the way of giving financial assistance during their married life, would furnish her all necessary aid and care. There is nothing to indicate that the father did not do so. The plaintiff further testified that he expected to make up with his wife and return to her until she made these charges against him. Upon the record before us, we cannot hold that the trial court was not warranted in concluding that his conduct was not such as to preclude him from complaining of the act of defendant, and that the making of these charges by defendant was wholly unjustified, and constituted extreme cruelty on her part. To hold otherwise would be, it appears to us, a usurpation of the functions of a trial judge.

6. It is urged finally that there was no satisfactory evidence that the plaintiff was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, in which the action was commenced, for three months next preceding the commencement of the action, or a resident of the state of California for one year next preceding such commencement. Section 128 of the Civil Code provides that a divorce must not be granted unless these conditions as to residence on the part of plaintiff exist. The evidence given by plaintiff in regard to this matter was plainly to the effect that he was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco for at least one year next preceding the commencement of the action, and it was not contradicted by any other evidence. The real point in this connection appears to be that plaintiff's evidence in this regard was not corroborated. If we assume that, under section 130, Civil Code, corroboration of the plaintiff's testimony on the question of residence was required, we think sufficient corroboration was to be found in the evidence of some of the many witnesses who testified as to his reputation for sobriety and industry and his personal habits. Their evidence strongly tended to strengthen and confirm the statements of plaintiff in regard to such residence, and indicated that he had been a resident of San Francisco for many years preceding the action. See Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 186, 52 Pac. 298; Avery v. Avery, 148 Cal. 239, 243, 82 Pac. 967. There was not an atom of evidence to indicate, as suggested by defendant, that plaintiff ever resided in Solano county prior to the commencement of this action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(155 Cal. 633)

GERMAN-AMERICAN SAVINGS BANK
v. GOLLMER et al. (L. A. 2,269.)(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1909.
On Rehearing, July 17, 1909.)1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—NATURE OF ESTATE—LEASEHOLD—ESTATE FOR YEARS.

Though an estate for years is declared by Civ. Code, § 765, to be only a chattel real and is governed generally by the rules applicable to personal property, it is nevertheless declared by section 761 to be an interest or estate in real property, and is therefore sufficient to sustain an action to quiet title against the adverse claims of the owner of the fee under section 738, Code Civ. Proc., providing that an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him to determine such adverse claims.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—LEASES—CONDITION AGAINST ASSIGNMENT—WAIVER—EFFECT.

Consent of a landlord to an assignment of the lease or a waiver of the condition against assignment while dispensing with that condition in the future, leaving the assignee free to again assign without consent, does not free the estate from other conditions prohibiting the carrying on of other classes of business than that for which the premises were rented, and prohibiting the subletting for such other classes of business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—LEASES—CONDITIONS.

Where conditions in a lease were continuing in their nature, such as covenants to pay rent at stated intervals, and to carry on only certain kinds of business in the demised premises, or against subletting without written consent, the consent to or waiver of a breach does not preclude the lessor from taking advantage of subsequent breaches.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—LEASES—MODIFICATION—ASSIGNMENT.

A covenant against assignment of a lease without the lessor's consent and a provision for re-entry in case of breach were not rescinded or affected by supplemental agreements extending the term providing they should inure to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns of the several parties, as there could be no "assign" of the lessee, except one who had become such by consent or waiver of the lessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE—LANDLORD'S CONSENT—ACCEPTANCE OF RENT—KNOWLEDGE.

In order that a landlord's acceptance of rent from an alleged assignee of the lease should operate as a consent to the assignment or of a waiver of a condition against assignment, the landlord must have had actual knowledge of the assignment; it being insufficient that he might on inquiry have discovered the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 76*)—ASSIGNMENT—CONSENT OF LANDLORD—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that a landlord had consented to an assignment of the lease by an acceptance of rent from the alleged assignee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the German-American Savings Bank against Catherine Gollmer and another to quiet defendants' alleged adverse claims to plaintiff's estate for years in certain demised property. Decree for complainant, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Sharp & Rech, for appellants. Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment for plaintiff in an action commenced September 7, 1907, by the alleged owner of a leasehold interest in the first or ground floor of a certain building in the city of Los Angeles, against the successors in interest in the demised premises of the lessor, one John Gollmer, to obtain a decree quieting alleged claims of defendants adverse to plaintiff's estate for years.

Plaintiff alleged in its complaint that it is "the successor in interest of the Union Bank of Savings" a corporation, as to said leasehold interest, but did not allege how it succeeded to said interest. The leasehold interest was described as one commencing on May 15, 1898, and ending May 15, 1918, subject only to the payment of a monthly rental of $250, and a covenant for the payment of certain taxes. Defendants by their answer denied these allegations. They further alleged the facts as to the creation of the leasehold interest, and the modification of the original lease by supplemental agreements, as the same were subsequently found by the trial court. It appears from these allegations and findings that by an indenture of lease dated September 24, 1897, John Gollmer, defendants' predecessor in title, demised and let the premises to the Union Bank of Savings, a corporation, for a term commencing May 15, 1898, and ending May 15, 1908, for $250 per month, covenanted to be paid by the lessee. It was stipulated therein that the premises were let for banking business purposes, and that no other business was to be conducted therein without the lessor's consent in writing, but that the lessee might sublet portions of the premises provided that, if any sublease be made for any class of business different from that for which subleases had theretofore been made, the consent in writing of the lessor must first be obtained. The lessee covenanted that it would pay the rent as agreed, "and not to assign this lease without the written consent of the said party of the first part" and at the expiration of the term to surrender the premises in as good state and condition as when received, reasonable use and wear thereof excepted. There was also a covenant for the payment of increased taxes. The other stipulations are immaterial here. On December 16, 1898, a supplemental agreement was made relative to certain improvements to be made by the lessee at its option. This, also, is immaterial. On April 30, 1901, a supplemental agreement was executed by the same parties whereby the lessee was given an option for the renewal of the lease on the same terms for five years from May 15, 1908, it being provided therein that such option must be exercised by notice in writing on or before May 15, 1907. On December 24, 1901, an option was given by said lessor to said lessee for a further period of five years from May 15, 1913, with the same proviso as to the time and manner in which the same must be exercised. Each of these optional agreements contained this provision: "This agreement shall inure to and as well bind the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the several parties hereto." It was further alleged in the answer and was found by the trial court that the lessee exercised its option right to renew said lease in manner and form as provided. It was also alleged that neither the lessor nor his successors ever consented to any assignment of the lease, but that said lessee had nevertheless between January 1, 1906, and November 13, 1907, assigned said lease to plaintiff, and that neither of the defendants ever obtained any notice or knowledge of the assignment until about November 13, 1907, whereupon they notified the lessee that they declared said lease forfeited by reason of said assignment, and demanded that possession of the demised premises be delivered to them. The court found that such assignment had been made on January 10, 1906, but that defendants had then and have ever since consented to the same and had waived the breach of the condition against assignment. It further found that defendants had notice of such assignment prior to February 1, 1906, and had up to November 1, 1907, received the stipulated rent from the assignee. By its decree the trial court adjudged that plaintiff was the owner of the leasehold interest described in the complaint, subject only to the payment of said rent and the covenant for the payment of increased taxes, and that such estate for years so owned by it was not subject to any condition, covenant, agreement, or obligation.

1. It is claimed that an action of this character on the part of the owner of a leasehold interest against the person owning the fee in the demised premises will not lie, and that the demurrer to the complaint should be sustained. The action is somewhat novel, but we see no good reason why it cannot be maintained under our statute. It is said that in view of Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 345, 45 Pac. 680, and subsequent cases, an estate for years is personal property, and therefore that an action to quiet title will not lie because it has been said by this court that "no action will lie in this state merely to quiet the title to personal property." Fudickar v. East Riverside, etc., Co., 109 Cal. 29, 38, 41 Pac. 1024, 1026. It is true that an estate for years is only a chattel real (Civ. Code, § 765), and governed generally by the rules applicable to personal property (Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., supra, 113 Cal. 352, 45 Pac. 680). But it is an interest or estate in real property, and is so expressly declared in section 761, Civ. Code. "An action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property, adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim." Section 738, Code Civ. Proc. It is settled by the decisions that the owner of any estate or interest in land of which the law takes cognizance, is entitled under this statute to have any claim adverse to his interest, such as it is, determined. Pierce v. Felter, 53 Cal. 18; Stoddart v. Burge, 53 Cal. 394, 399; Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 127, 130, 22 Pac. 398; Stephenson v. Deuel, 125 Cal. 663, 58 Pac. 258; McKinnie v. Shaffer, 74 Cal. 614, 616, 16 Pac. 509. In the case last cited the court said: "Whatever interest the plaintiff has may be quieted. If a title in fee, such interest may be quieted. If a less interest, the less interest may be likewise quieted." Nothing said in Fudickar v. East Riverside, etc., Co., supra, can be taken as repudiating this well-settled doctrine. In Pierce v. Felter, supra, the right of the owner of a leasehold interest to maintain such an action against parties who claimed some interest in the land, which claim was adverse to his rights as owner of the leasehold, was affirmed. There is no distinction material to the question we are discussing between such an action and the one before us. The defendants here claim to be the owners of the property free of any estate for years in plaintiff, and this claim is certainly adverse to plaintiff's alleged interest in the property. We are further of the opinion that the allegations as to hostile claims by defendants are sufficient as against demurrer. There was no error in overruling the demurrer.

2. Assuming for the moment that all the findings of fact made by the trial court are sufficiently sustained by the evidence, the judgment was nevertheless too broad in its terms, and is not entirely supported by the findings. As we have seen, it is decreed therein that plaintiff is the owner of the leasehold interest described, subject only to the payment of the stipulated rent and the covenant for increased taxes, and free from all other conditions, covenants, agreements and obligations imposed by the instruments constituting the lease. There were obligations imposed on the lessee by these instruments in addition to the obligation not to assign and those specified in the judgment, such as the provision that no business other than the banking business or some class of business for the carrying on of which a sublease had already been made, should be conducted on the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor. The only supposable theory upon which a judgment freeing the lessee from this and other obligations imposed by the lease could rest is the one suggested by plaintiff, viz., that the consent of or waiver by the lessor of the condition against assignment, not only dispensed with and put an end to that condition forever, leaving the assignee free to again assign without consent (Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, § 501; Chipman v. Emeric, 5 Cal. 49, 63 Am. Dec. 80; Randol v. Tatum, 98 Cal. 390, 33 Pac. 433; Murray v. Harway, 56 N. Y. 337, 343), but that it also freed the estate from such other covenants, and especially from those relating to the carrying on of other classes of business and subletting for such other classes of business. This theory cannot be sustained. The case cited by plaintiff to the effect that the covenant against subletting does not attach to the assignee of the lessee (Dougherty v. Mathews, 35 Mo. 520, 88 Am. Dec. 126) does not support its contention, but is simply to the effect that the condition against assignment is not effectual against one to whom the lease has been assigned with the lessor's consent. The assignee of a leasehold estate takes it subject to all the obligations imposed by the lease, except that, where there is a condition against assignment without consent (which is necessarily single in its nature), such condition is wholly discharged by the consent or waiver. Where the conditions are continuing in their nature, such as covenants for the payment of rent at stated intervals, or for the carrying on of only certain kinds of business in the demised premises, or against subletting without written consent, the consent to or waiver of a breach does not preclude the right of the lessor to proceed against the lessee for subsequent breaches. Jones v. Durrer, 96 Cal. 95, 30 Pac. 1027; Seaver v. Colburn, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 324; Taylor on Landlord & Tenant, § 501. No good reason can be assigned for a rule that the consent to or waiver of the breach of some particular condition or covenant in a lease is a consent to or waiver of other independent stipulations, and we find no such rule anywhere declared. It follows that, assuming the findings to be sustained by the evidence, the judgment should have gone no further than to decree the plaintiff to be the owner of the leasehold interest, subject to all the conditions, covenants, obligations, and stipulations contained in the lease, save and except the single condition against assignment. We have said this much as to the form of judgment only for the guidance of the parties in further proceedings in the case, as the judgment must be reversed for another reason.

3. As we have seen, the lease contained a covenant against assignment without the consent of lessor, with a provision for reentry in the event of a breach thereof. These provisions were in no way rescinded or affected by the provisions of the supplemental agreements. The provision in the latter agreements that "this agreement shall inure to and * * * bind the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the several parties" were not effectual to make any change in this regard. Consent of the lessor was still essential to any assignment which would be binding upon the lessor, and there could not be any "assign" of the lessee in whose favor the provision would operate, except one who had become such by consent or waiver of the lessor. Assuming that there was an assignment of the lease by the Union Bank of Savings to plaintiff, as was alleged in the answer and found by the court, we are satisfied that the findings to the effect that such assignment was with the consent of the defendants, and also the findings to the effect that said defendants had notice of such assignment and by their conduct waived all right to object thereto, are without sufficient support in the evidence.

The evidence is practically without conflict as to all material facts. On or about January 10, 1906, the Union Bank of Savings and plaintiff merged and consolidated their interests, since which time the business of both corporations has been conducted as one institution under the name of plaintiff and in the demised premises. The directors of the Union Bank of Savings were included in the enlarged list of directors of plaintiff, and Mr. Bartlett, the president of the Union Bank of Savings, has at all times since the consolidation been the president of plaintiff corporation. A general assignment of all the property of the Union Bank of Savings was given to plaintiff, which assignment was never recorded, and as to which no notice appears to have been given to anybody. No specific assignment of the lease was ever executed. The Union Bank of Savings apparently still maintains its corporate organization, and also maintains its office in the demised premises. No consent that the lease should be assigned was ever given or requested. No notice that there had been any assignment of the lease was ever given to either of the defendants by either the Union Bank of Savings or by plaintiff. To the contrary, both these corporations appear to have studiously endeavored to conceal the fact, if there was one. The written notice of the exercise of option given on April 20, 1907, over one year after the change, was primarily given by the Union Bank of Savings, as lessee, by its president and secretary, and was joined in by plaintiff with the statement that it so joined because "said lessee and the German-American Savings Bank, a California corporation, did on or about the 10th day of January, 1906, merge and consolidate their interests, since which time the business of both said corporations has been and now is being conducted as one institution, under the name of the German-American Savings Bank, and, for the purposes of so conducting the said business, is now and has been since the date of said consolidation occupying the premises described in said lease." There was no intimation of an assignment of the lease in this notice, or of the succession by plaintiff to any rights therein. Even in its complaint in this action filed September 7, 1907, plaintiff carefully refrained from specifically alleging any assignment, alleging simply that it "is the successor in interest of the Union Savings Bank." The notices to the public were all simply to the effect that there had been a consolidation, and that the business thereafter would be conducted under the name of plaintiff. There might be a consolidation of the banking business of these two corporations and occupancy of the demised premises by plaintiff without any assignment of the lease. Under the terms of the lease, the Union Bank of Savings had the right, without any consent of the lessor, to permit the occupancy of the demised premises for banking purposes by plaintiff. Everything that was shown to have come to the knowledge of defendants was entirely consistent with the theory that the occupancy of the demised premises by plaintiff was an occupancy under a mere license or sublease, and not under an assignment, and there is in the evidence no basis for any inference that either of the defendants had knowledge that there had been an assignment of the lease. The fact that from July 1, 1906, the monthly receipts for rent, at the request of some one in the office of the two corporations, were made in the name of the plaintiff, shows no such knowledge. This indicated to defendants no more than some arrangement between the corporations under which the plaintiff was to pay the rent, and was not notice of an assignment of the lease. Nor was the mere claim of this plaintiff asserted in its complaint in this action filed September 7, 1907, that it "is the successor in interest of the Union Bank of Savings" notice of the fact of any assignment.

The only ground urged for a conclusion that defendants have consented to an assignment of the lease, or waived a breach of the condition against assignment, is the fact that they have accepted rents accruing since the assignment. It is admitted that, to have this effect, the acceptance of the rent must have been with knowledge of the assignment. It is not enough that a party might upon inquiry have discovered the fact. There must be actual knowledge of the fact. And, unless the evidence is sufficient to warrant the inference that there was such knowledge, there is no consent or waiver. As was said in Murray v. Heinze, 17 Mont. 353, 42 Pac.

1057, 43 Pac. 714, a waiver is the relinquishment of a known right. The rule that such knowledge is essential to make the acceptance of rent a waiver is elementary, and has been applied by this court. See Taylor, Landlord & Tenant, § 497; Jones on Landlord & Tenant, § 497; Wood's Landlord & Tenant, § 320; Silva v. Campbell, 84 Cal. 420, 24 Pac. 316; McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384. As there is nothing to show that either of the defendants had any knowledge of any assignment of the lease at the time of the acceptance of rents, there could be no consent or waiver by reason of such acceptance.

We do not desire to be understood as intimating any opinion on the question whether the evidence is such as to compel the conclusion that there has been any assignment of the lease under the condition against assignment contained therein. For all the purposes of this appeal, we have assumed, as we are compelled to do in view of the unassailed finding of the court to that effect based upon an allegation of appellants' answer, that there was such an assignment.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing. There was in my opinion abundant evidence to sustain the findings that the defendants consented to the assignment of the lease, not in express terms, but by a course of conduct which warrants the inference of consent.

155 Cal. 723

In re HEBERLE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2368.) (Supreme Court of California. June 23, 1909.)

1. PERPETUITIES (§ 6*)—SUSPENSION OF POWER OF ALIENATION.

A will directed that the trustees therein appointed should, within a reasonable time, convert the remainder of the estate into cash and pay the same to the testator's sister, and, in case of her death, that the same should be divided equally among all her children, with one exception, share and share alike. A subsequent clause directed the trustees to convert the residue into cash within one year after the property was distributed to them, but if loss would ensue by conversion of the property into cash by that time, they should take such further time as may be reasonable, and provided that the trustees should administer the trust under the supervision of the court having jurisdiction of the administration of the estate. The death of the sister occurred prior to that of the testator. Held, that the disposition of the residue would not violate Civ. Code, § 715, suspending the power of alienation beyond the continuance of the lives of persons in being.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perpetuities, Cent. Dig. §§ 4-56; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 195*)—EXECUTION OF TRUST— SALE OF PROPERTY.

Where trustees appointed by will are directed to sell certain property, it is their duty to take sufficient time to avoid a sacrifice of the property in selling it, even without such a direction in the will, but the discretion of the trustees is not absolute, and the power of the court can be invoked at any time to prevent unreasonable delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 250; Dec. Dig. § 195.*]

3. WILLS (§ 555*)—DEATH OF LEGATEE BEFORE TESTATOR—LAPSE OF LEGACY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1343, declaring that the disposition of property in a will shall not fail in case of the death of the legatee before that of the testator, where the will shows an intention to substitute some other person in place of the original legatee, a legacy to testator's sister, with the provision that, in case of her death prior to receiving said legacy, it shall be divided equally among certain of her children, does not lapse on the death of the sister occurring prior to that of the testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1199-1202; Dec. Dig. § 555.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rivers, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George Heberle, deceased, Jacob Heberle appeals from a decree of distribution. Affirmed.

See, also, 153 Cal. 275, 95 Pac. 41.

Milton K. Young and F. R. Willis, for appellant. Lee, Scott & Chase, Murphy & Schmidt, Edward F. Wehrle, F. L. Valentine, William J. Danford, and W. G. Weyse, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from a decree of distribution. The deceased left surviving, as his heirs at law, the appellant, Jacob Heberle, who was his brother, the children of a deceased brother, Martin Heberle, and the children of a deceased sister, Anna Maria Heberle Mootz. He died testate, and the controversy causing this appeal arises over the construction of his will.

The will gave all of the estate to two trustees, with specific directions as to its disposition. After providing for the investment of $12,000, and the payment of the income thereof to Jacob Heberle, or to his use, during his life, and for its disposition after his death, and specifically disposing of a certain lot of land, the following clause appears: "Eighthly—That my said trustees shall, within a reasonable time after the distribution of said estate to them, convert all of the residue and remainder of my said estate into cash and pay the same to my said sister, Anna Maria Heberle Mootz, and in case of her death, prior to her receiving said residue, then that the same shall be divided equally among all of her children, except the said Eva Dickhof, share and share alike." A subsequent clause directed the trustees to convert the residue into cash "if they can do so within one year after the said property is distributed to them, * * * but in case of a low market or where loss might ensue by the conversion of said property into cash, then they may take such further time as may be reasonable—it being my intent and purpose that my said estate shall be made to bring a reasonable amount for distribution to my said sister or her children." It further provided that the trustees should administer the trust under the supervision of the court having jurisdiction of the administration of the estate. The estate was distributed to the trustees to be disposed of by them as provided in the will. Anna Maria Heberle Mootz died prior to the death of the testator. The trustees were directed to pay over the residue, when converted into money, to her children and grandchildren, except Eva Dickhof, the word "children" being construed to include grandchildren. The appellant claims that the trust, as to this residue, is void, and consequently that said property should have been distributed to the heirs at law.

It is urged that the disposition of the residue violates section 715 of the Civil Code forbidding the suspension of the power of alienation beyond the continuance of the lives of persons in being. Under no circumstances possible under the provisions of this will could there have been an unlawful suspension of the power of alienation. If Mrs. Mootz had survived the testator, and the will had been construed to give her a contingent estate in the residue, and to suspend her power to dispose of it until it became vested by payment to her, the deprivation would extend only until she had received it, or until by her death before that event the right had vested absolutely in the children designated as her successors, who would then immediately have power to alienate the same. In either case the period of suspension would not have reached beyond the termination of her life. If that interpretation were given to the will, there would be uncertainty, in case of her survival, as to the ultimate ownership of the residue, until the payment to her, or her death before payment, had made the ownership certain, but such uncertainty would continue only until one of these events occurred, which could not be later than her death. A suspension of the power of alienation during the life of a person in being at the testator's death, and no longer, is not unlawful.

The fact is that she died before the testator and, as she never became entitled to the residue, the right to it vested in the designated children immediately upon the death of the testator, with full power in them to make any disposition thereof they chose. Neither the requirement that it should be converted into money, nor the direction to the trustees, in case of a low market, to take a reasonable time to sell the property, nor the delays necessary for administration and conversion operated to suspend the power of the children to dispose of their right to the residue. Estate of Campbell, 149 Cal. 717, 87 Pac. 573; Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 Pac. 825; Toland v. Toland, 123 Cal. 143, 55 Pac. 681. It would have been the duty of the trustees, without such direction, to take the reasonable time that might be required to avoid a sacrifice of the property in selling it. The power of the court could be invoked at any time to prevent an unreasonable delay. The discretion of the trustees was not absolute.

There is no merit in the claim that the legacy lapsed by reason of the death of Mrs. Mootz before the testator died. The case falls within the provisions of section 1343 of the Civil Code, declaring that the disposition, in such a case, does not fail when the will shows an intention to substitute some other person in place of the original legatee who dies in the testator's lifetime.

The decree of distribution is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

(155 Cal. 612)

BOIN v. SPRECKELS SUGAR CO. (S. F. 4,977.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 11, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 10, 1909.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 157*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCEURE—STATEMENT OF GROUNDS—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where a bill of exceptions contained a request for a new trial and a copy of the notice of intention to move for a new trial specifying in full the grounds upon which the motion was based, and stating that the motion would be founded in part on the bill which had been settled by the court and was on file, the court would not be justified in refusing to determine the motion upon its merits because no oral reference was made to the bill, and no grounds orally pointed out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 536*)—REVIEW—NEW TRIAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 661, providing that the bill of exceptions used on the hearing of a motion for a new trial shall constitute a part of the record on appeal, a bill of exceptions settled and employed as the record of the proceedings upon which the motion was grounded may be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2402; Dec. Dig. § 536.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 933*)—PRESUMPTIONS—ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL.

Where a motion for a new trial was overruled, it will be presumed on appeal that the order was made upon its merits, though made upon expressed grounds, which, if correct, might have justified a dismissal rather than the overruling of the motion, since the order simply indicates the court's action, and not the showing upon which such action was based, and statements as to the showing made constitute no part of the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3772-3776; Dec. Dig. § 933.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 189*)—VICE PRINCIPAL.

The manager of a department of the master's business who prepared the place in which a servant was to work, and gave him the implements with which to accomplish his task, was a vice principal of the master.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 427-448; Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 288*)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—QUESTION FOR JURY.

A servant in a beet sugar factory was taken from his usual work in a pressroom, and, without any warning of danger involved, was temporarily put to work in another room, cleaning tubes in a mixing tank containing a caustic solution, which work he had never before done, and was injured by the solution. It appeared that he did not know of the caustic character of the solution, while the master did, and did not know that material which he had been using in the pressroom came from the tank. Held, that he could not be presumed to know the manner in which the tank was operated nor the purpose for which it was used, and did not as a matter of law assume the risks incident to the temporary employment, but whether he had knowledge of the special danger of working in the tank was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068-1088; Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 153*)—DUTY TO WARN SERVANT.

It was the master's duty to warn the servant of the dangers attending the work in the tank, and its failure to do so constituted negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 314-317; Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 158*)—FAILURE TO WARN SERVANT OF DANGERS—NEGLIGENCE.

The master having negligently failed to warn the servant of the danger attending his work because of the caustic properties of the solution, its liability would not be affected by the particular manner in which the solution caused the injury, provided the servant was exercising due care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 304; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 262*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ACTIONS—DEFENSES—PLEADING.

In an action by a servant for injuries, a defense that the injuries resulted from ordinary risks of employment must be specially pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 855-859; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an injury action by a servant, where the uncontradicted evidence tended to show that the employment was of a temporary character, a charge that if plaintiff was injured in defendant's employ and in the discharge of his duties, while exercising due care, by the caustic character of a substance upon which he was required by defendant to work in the course of his employment, and if the character of the substance was known to defendant, or could have been known by the exercise of due care, and defendant failed to caution plaintiff of such qualities, and they were not known to plaintiff, and defendant's neglect to warn was the proximate cause of the injury plaintiff should recover, was not erroneous because omitting the qualification that the danger from the caustic properties of the substance was not included in the ordinary risks of the employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ERROR CURED BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

Even if the instruction was erroneous in that respect, the error was cured by later charges giving the rules with reference to the assumption of usual risks of one's ordinary employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 705-718; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

11. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

The work being temporary, perilous, and outside of the ordinary occupation of plaintiff, so that it was defendant's duty to warn him, whether or not his ignorance was known to defendant, and the undisputed facts showing that plaintiff had no opportunity of learning of the character of the solution causing his injury before he went to work with it, the charge was not erroneous because omitting the element that defendant knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known, of plaintiff's alleged ignorance, especially where subsequent charges instructed fully on the subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Personal injury action by Manuel Boin against the Spreckels Sugar Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dougherty & Lacey, for appellant. F. P. Feliz and Thos. Renison, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff had been employed in defendant's beet sugar factory in Monterey county. He was assigned first to work in the pressroom where his duty was to shake out of the press some sort of material after it was formed into cakes or slabs. He testified that he did not know what the cakes contained, and that he did not handle them. No one told him, he said, that there was any danger in handling the substance which came from the press, and he testified that he knew absolutely nothing about the caustic properties of the material composing the cakes. After working at the press for about two weeks, plaintiff was ordered by Mr. Hennings, foreman of one of defendant's departments, to clear out the tubes of a mixing tank which had been used to mix syrup, water, and lime before the product of such mixture was pressed into cakes or slabs. He was not informed by Mr. Hennings, or by any of the defendant's agents, of any dangers incident to his new employment, and he did not know nor was he informed that he was working in a tank in which there was a caustic solution containing lime. He was annoyed while working in the tank by the sifting of lime from a bolter above his head, and was advised by Mr. Hennings to wear a handkerchief around his neck and cloths around his wrists. He was furnished with goggles and instructed to wear them. His particular work consisted in boring through the hardened substance which had accumulated within the tubes in the mixing tank, and thus cleaning the tubes so that they might be used again for their intended part in the process of mixing. There was some liquid in the tubes and at the bottom of the tank. After the plaintiff had been employed at this task for two or three days, and when he was about to pull the auger out of one of the tubes, after boring through the hardened substance, some of the liquid from the tube, impelled either by an explosion or by some other force, was blown or splashed into one of his eyes. As a result he lost the sight of the injured eye. Judgment for $5,000 damages was given in behalf of plaintiff. From this, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Appellant's first contention relates to the denial of its motion for new trial. When that motion came on for hearing in the superior court, all of the parties being present, the said motion was submitted without argument, and was taken under advisement by the court. Nearly a month later the court denied the motion, reciting in the order of denial that "no oral statement whatsoever was made to the court on the grounds or particular points upon which said motion should be or was based, and that the court's attention was not called to any instrument or document on file in said case as containing grounds upon which to base said motion, and that the only action taken by the attorneys for the defendant in said matter upon the hearing of said motion being to state to the court that the same was submitted without argument." The reasons expressed in the above quotation were given by the court as the only bases for the denial of the motion. Appellant's bill of exceptions contained a copy of the notice of intention to move for a new trial, and there was also a request for a new trial contained in the bill of exceptions itself. Under these circumstances, was the court justified in refusing to consider and determine the motion for a new trial upon its merits? An examination of the bill reveals the fact that it contains a very full statement and specification of the asserted insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and that it also directs the court's special attention to the alleged excessive award of damages. The grounds for the motion for new trial sufficiently appear in the bill of exceptions from the specifications therein contained to enable the court intelligently to pass upon the motion. It is true that no oral reference was made to the bill of exceptions, but it was on file and had been settled by the court and contained a copy of the notice of motion specifying in full the grounds upon which the motion was based and the statement that the motion would be founded, in part, on the settled bill. Section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the bill of exceptions "used on the hearing" shall constitute a part of the record on appeal, and it has been held in Nevada that "whenever a statement is prepared and settled it is 'used' within the meaning of the word in the statute." The statute of Nevada upon this subject is practically the same as our section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, in construing the section of the Nevada law, the Supreme Court of that state says: "When it speaks of the statement being used, it means employed as the record of the proceedings upon which the motion is grounded." State v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 17 Nev. 259, 30 Pac. 889. In that case the failure of the moving party to appear at the hearing was held not to be an abandonment of the motion for a new trial, and a similar rule was announced in Carder v. Baxter, 28 Cal. 99, and in Chabot v. Tucker, 39 Cal. 434. There is nothing in Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 100, 77 Pac. 762, at variance with the views here expressed. Indeed, that case supports them. While it is true that an oral motion was made in that case, said motion merely directed the court's attention to the bill of exceptions, the notice of motion, and other papers; and, while the notice of motion, not being a part of the record, could not be considered by this court in determining the grounds of the motion which was made in the court below, those grounds did appear with particularity in the bill of exceptions which was a part of the record, and this court was therefore fully apprised of all the grounds stated in the notice of intention. If, in that case, the motion had been submitted without argument, we see no reason why the grounds of appellant's motion, appearing fully in the record as they did, could not have been as fully considered by the trial court and reviewed by the Supreme Court as they were in view of the purely formal oral statement made by appellant's counsel upon submission of the motion without argument or presentation of points of law for the assistance of the court. While in this case the order denying the motion was made upon expressed grounds which, if correct, would have justified perhaps the dismissal rather than the overruling of the motion for a new trial, the fact remains that the motion was denied, and we must assume that the order was made upon its merits. "The order simply indicates the action of the court and not the showing upon which such action was based. Therefore statements or recitals in the order as to the showing made constitute no part of the order." Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 614, 80 Pac. 1076. The record being before us, we are in a position to pass upon the matters therein presented, and shall do so.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Respondent's attorneys have presented an elaborate argument, in which this court is urged to omit from consideration the question of the alleged insufficiency of the evidence upon the ground that the appeal from the judgment was not taken in time to permit such review. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed 57 days after the rendition of the judgment and 50 days after section 939 (St. 1907, p. 60, c. 42), of the Code of Civil Procedure had become effective as amended by substituting the word "entry" for the word "rendition." There is no saving clause in the amendment of 1907. Respondent's counsel contend that the former statute was repealed, and at the time of the filing of the notice of appeal there was no statute upon the subject applicable to this case; in other words, that appellant could only take advantage of the old section 939, Code Civ. Proc., by perfecting its appeal between the time of the rendition of judgment and the date upon which the new section 939, Code Civ. Proc., went into effect. It is conceded that this theory is in conflict with that announced in Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 157, 51 Pac. 48, and Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 234, 52 Pac. 491, but respondent regards those cases as opposed to the later decisions. In view of the conclusion we have reached, however, by following here the doctrine of those cases, it becomes unnecessary to pursue the matter further.

There is evidence which justified the conclusion that Mr. Hennings was a vice principal of the defendant corporation. Mr. Hennings had charge of that part of the factory known as the "Steffens Plant" or department. He gave orders to Mr. Clathworthy, plaintiff's immediate superior, and directed the latter to furnish men for work in the tanks. The manager of a department is a vice principal. Mr. Hennings prepared the place in which plaintiff was to work and gave him the implements with which to accomplish his task. In this he was clearly a vice principal representing the corporate defendant. Nixon v. Selby Smelting Co., 102 Cal. 463, 36 Pac. 803. The work being performed by plaintiff at the time of his injury was in its very nature of a temporary character, and was not done by him in the course of his usual and ordinary employment. He was taken from his place at the press by Mr. Hennings, and, as he testified, put at work in the tank without any warning with reference to the dangers involved. Defendant knew of the highly caustic character of the solution in the tank. Of this plaintiff testified he was ignorant, and he did not even know, he said, that the cakes handled by him at the press were composed of material taken from the mixing tank. The tank was in a different room from that in which plaintiff's usual work was done. He could not, therefore, be presumed to know the manner in which the mixing tank was operated nor the purpose for which it was used. He had never been in the tank until Mr. Hennings sent him there, as the tubes had never been clogged before. Under these circumstances, we cannot say that as matter of law he assumed the risks incident to his temporary occupation. Whether he did have knowledge of such special danger or not was a question of fact for the jury. Daubert v. Western Meat Co., 135 Cal. 144, 67 Pac. 133. It was clearly the duty of defendant to warn him of the dangers attending the work in the tank, and the failure to give him such admonition constituted negligence upon the part of the appellant.

Appellant invokes the rule announced in Bone v. Ophir Silver Min. Co., 149 Cal. 294, 86 Pac. 685, that, while a master must inform the servant of latent and extraneous dangers, this applies only to those perils of which the employer has, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have, knowledge. It is urged upon us with much force that, there never having been an explosion in the tank prior to the time of plaintiff's injury, defendant could not be charged with the duty of warning any one against such an explosion. This presupposes an explosion as the means whereby the mordant liquid was projected into Boin's eye, but there is a conflict of evidence upon this point. It really makes no difference what means operated to propel the solution into plaintiff's eye (provided of course, plaintiff was exercising due care and caution), if the defendant was negligent in failing to instruct its employé with reference to the caustic property of the liquid. It may be that the small quantity of lime sifting from the bolter above plaintiff's head became mixed with the liquid in one of the tubes and caused an explosion, or the liquid may have splashed because of the insertion of the auger into the tube or by reason of suction caused by the withdrawal of the hardened substance at the end of the tube. There are several ways in which the fluid may have been set in motion, but the negligence of defendant consisted in its failure to give such warning as would have permitted Boin to exercise the right of consenting or refusing to work in a tank containing a dangerous chemical compound. See Baxter v. Roberts, 44 Cal. 187, 13 Am. Rep. 160.

Certain instructions are attacked by appellant. Instruction numbered 13 is as follows: "If you believe from the preponderance of the evidence in this case that the sight of one of plaintiff's eyes was injured or destroyed on the 8th of October, 1905, while plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant and in the discharge of his duties under such employment, and while in the exercise of due care and caution on his part, and that the same was so injured or destroyed by any substance upon which plaintiff was required by the defendant, or those acting under its authority, to perform labor in the course of his said employment, and it further appears to your satisfaction that such injuries were caused by the caustic or corrosive qualities of such substance, if it had such qualities, and that such qualities were known to the defendant, or could have become known to it by the use and exercise of ordinary care, and that said defendant failed and neglected to warn or caution plaintiff of such qualities, and that the same were not known to the plaintiff or obvious to him, and that the neglect of the defendant to warn or caution plaintiff thereof was the proximate cause of such injuries, then I instruct you that you must render a verdict for the plaintiff."

Appellant's first criticism of this instruction calls attention to the omission of all reference to the danger of explosion. This has been answered, we think, by the discussion in a preceding paragraph. Supposed error in the instruction is next predicated upon the omission of the qualification that the danger from the caustic properties of the substance in the tank was not included in the ordinary risks of the employment. There was no defense based upon the claim that the injuries were due to ordinary risks of employment. Such defense should be specially pleaded. 13 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 914. Besides, all of the evidence on the subject tended to show that the employment was of a temporary character, and there was no contradiction of this point. If such qualification had been necessary, however, the jury was given in later instructions the rules with reference to the assumption of usual risks of one's ordinary employment.

The next criticism of this instruction is that it omits the element that defendant knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have known, of the plaintiff's alleged ignorance. Such proviso was unnecessary for several reasons: First, the work being temporary, perilous, and outside of the ordinary occupation of Boin, it was defendant's duty to warn him, whether or not his ignorance was known to defendant; second, the undisputed facts show that plaintiff had no opportunity of learning of the contents of the tank before entering it; and, third, conceding that the omission of this qualification was erroneous, the jurors were subsequently instructed fully on this subject. There are other criticisms of this instruction, but they are either without merit or are met by subsequent declarations, in the charge, of correct rules of law for the guidance of the jury.

There are numerous other specifications of alleged error in the charge to the jury and the court's refusal to give certain proposed instructions. We have carefully examined all these matters, and do not find any substantial error which would justify a reversal of this case.

It follows that the judgment and order should be sustained; and it is so ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

155 Cal. 626

IN RE PATTERSON'S ESTATE.

SMITH v. QUIGLEY et al. (S. F. 5,101.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1909.

Rehearing Denied July 14, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 233*)—DESTROYED WILL—RIGHT TO PROBATE.

Any substantial provision of a destroyed will, complete in itself and independent of other provisions, may, when proved, be admitted to probate, though the other provisions cannot be proved, if the validity and operation of the part proved are unaffected by those parts which cannot be proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 564; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

2. WILLS (§ 233*)—DESTROYED WILLS—RIGHT TO PROBATE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1339, declaring that no will shall be proved as a destroyed will, unless its provisions are clearly proved by at least two credible witnesses, does not change the rule that any substantial provision of a lost will, complete in itself, may, when proved, be admitted to probate, though the other provisions of the will cannot be proved, if unaffected thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 564; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

3. WILLS (§ 302*)—DESTROYED WILL—RIGHT TO PROBATE.

On an application to probate a will as a destroyed will, the question whether money was given as part of the residue, as testified by one attesting witness, and as such charged by statute with the debts and specific legacies, or whether it was given as a specific legacy, as testified by the other attesting witness, charged by the will with those burdens, while more a matter of form than substance, is nevertheless a question which materially affects the disposition of the personal estate, and the disposition of the personal estate cannot be held to be distinctly proved by two witnesses, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1339, declaring that no will shall be proved as a destroyed will unless its provisions are distinctly proved by at least two witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 709; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

4. WILLS (§ 170*)—REVOCATION.

Destruction, without intention to revoke, or by accident, does not operate to revoke a will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 441; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 191*)—RETROSPECTIVE LAWS—RULES OF EVIDENCE.

The Legislature has full power to alter the rules of evidence and the degree of proof, and make such rules applicable to pending cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 236*)—CONSTRUCTION.

Legislation, intended to alleviate the effect of a public calamity, and preserve rights that would otherwise be lost for want of evidence, should be liberally construed to promote the purpose for which designed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 317, 324, 325; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

7. WILLS (§ 232*)—DESTROYED WILLS—RIGHT TO PROBATE.

St. 1907, p. 122, c. 100, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 1339, declaring that no will shall be proved as a destroyed will unless in existence at testator's death or fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime, by also permitting a will to be proved as a destroyed will where destroyed by public calamity in testator's lifetime, without his knowledge, applies to the will of a person who died before its enactment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 232.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition by Fannie Smith for the probate of the will of Catherine Patterson, deceased, as a destroyed will. Opposition was made by Ella Quigley, administratrix, theretofore appointed, and J. C. O'Hare, and from an order refusing probate Fannie Smith appeals. Reversed.

Andrew Thorne and Bourdette & Bacon, for appellant. Heller, Powers & Ehrman, R. H. Lloyd, and Percy E. Towne, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to admit a will to probate as a destroyed will. Catherine Patterson executed a will in December, 1904. It was prepared for her by her attorney, George A. Connolly, and was duly attested by him and by one Mary McFaul. It was then given by the testatrix into the custody of Connolly for safe-keeping, and was by him kept in his office in the Parrott building in San Francisco until April 18, 1906, when it was destroyed by fire in the great conflagration in that city following the earthquake of that date. The testatrix died on December 27, 1906. She had not been informed that the will was destroyed, and, so far as appears, she died in ignorance of that fact. Letters of administration upon her estate were issued to Ella Quigley, a respondent herein, on January 24, 1907. On February 5, 1907, Fannie Smith, the appellant, filed a petition for the probate of the alleged will. Opposition was made thereto by said administratrix and also by J. C. O'Hare, a brother of the deceased. Upon the trial the court denied probate upon the ground that its provisions were not proven by two credible witnesses, and that it was not in existence at the time of the death of the testatrix, and had not been fraudulently destroyed in her lifetime. The questions presented are whether or not these two grounds are sustained by the evidence and by the law applicable to the case.

The estate of the testatrix consisted of three parcels of real estate, some $1,500 in money, deposited in bank, and some wearing apparel and household goods of the probable value of $300. The evidence shows that the entire estate was worth only $6,000. The deceased was the widow of James Patterson, and the property was derived from him as the widow's share of his community property. The testatrix had no children and left no family. Patterson, her deceased husband, had three children, who had been brought up by the testatrix, and whom she usually spoke of as her children, namely, Frank Patterson, George Patterson, and the appellant, Catherine Frances Smith, formerly Patterson, usually known as Fannie Smith.

1. The attorney who drew and attested the will testified that it devised the real estate in equal parts, one-third to Fanny Smith, one-third to Frank Patterson and one-third to the children of George Patterson; that it gave a legacy of $250 to Joseph P. McQuaid; that it gave all the residue, without describing it, to Bridget Quigley, sister of the testatrix; and that it contained a general provision that all her debts should be paid. Mary McFaul, the other attesting witness, testified that she was present while the will was being written in the presence of the testatrix, and that she heard it read by the attorney to the testatrix before its execution. Her account of the disposition of the real property is the same as that of Connolly. As to the personal property, she testified that the will declared that the testatrix possessed $1,500 on deposit in bank; that it gave a legacy of $250 to McQuaid, and provided that after the payment of debts and expenses the residue of the $1,500 should go to Bridget Quigley, and that nothing was said in the will about any other personal property. The respondents contend that Mary McFaul testified, in effect, that the entire $1,500 constituted a specific bequest to Bridget Quigley, subject to reduction only for its proportion of the debts and expenses of administration. We do not think it can be fairly construed as having that effect. Making due allowance for her ignorance of technical terms and forms, her testimony on this point, in effect, was that the McQuaid legacy and also the debts and expenses were to be paid out of the money in bank, the legacy to have preference therein.

When the provisions of law and the character of the estate are considered, the differences in the two accounts are substantial and important only with regard to the respective rights and interests of Bridget Quigley as legatee or heir and her brother, J. C. O'Hare, as an heir. For the payment of debts and general money legacies resort must be had, first, to property expressly appropriated by the will for that purpose; second, to property not disposed of by the will; and, third, to property devised or bequeathed as a residue. Civ. Code. §§ 1359, 1360. Substantially the same rule applies to expenses of administration. If not otherwise provided for, specific devises and legacies are ordinarily exempt therefrom, if there is a sufficient residue, or sufficient property undisposed of. Code Civ. Proc. § 1563. According to Connolly's account the burden of paying the legacy to McQuaid, together with the debts and expenses of administration, would, by the provisions of the law, fall upon the property given to Bridget Quigley, being the entire residue, including the clothing and household goods. According to McFaul, the specific legacy of the $1,500 to Bridget Quigley was charged with the payment of the debts, the expenses, and the McQuaid legacy and the clothing and household goods were not disposed of by the will. If her statement was correct, the legacy to Bridget Quigley would have to bear all these charges, and she, as an heir, would divide the household goods and clothing equally with O'Hare. If Connolly was right, her residuary bequest would have to bear the charges as in the other alternative, but she would get all the household goods and clothing. The only difference the respective alternatives would make to her and O'Hare would be that in the former case O'Hare would get nothing, while in the latter he would get one-half of the property not disposed of. The devises of the land to the descendants of James Patterson would remain unaffected in either case. If Mary McFaul was right, and the $1,500 proved insufficient to pay the charges upon it, the property undisposed of would be next resorted to, and the land devised to the Pattersons would be taken only as a last resort. If Connolly gave the true version, the entire residue would be first taken for the debts, expenses, and specific legacies, leaving the land to the devisees.

The contention of the respondent is that the lost or destroyed will cannot be admitted to probate at all, unless the whole of its provisions are clearly and distinctly proven by two credible witnesses; that if the two witnesses differ as to any provision of the will, the probate thereof must be refused, although the other dispositions would be entirely unaffected by the portion of the will concerning which the witnesses do not agree. The great weight of authority is contrary to this proposition. The prevailing rule, and clearly the most reasonable one, is that stated by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn in Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards, 1 Pro. Div. 144, 230. In that case the estate was very large. There were some small legacies, the particulars of which could not be ascertained, and some limitations, "remote, indeed, and unlikely to come into effect, but which still are undoubtedly omitted from the document for which probate" was granted. Justice Cockburn says: "We have the substantial dispositions brought to our minds, and it would not be right to enable any wrongdoer, or any accident which might happen to a will, and which would prevent the court which had to deal with it from being perfect master of its contents, to prevent the will from being carried into effect so far as the dispositions of the testator had become known. I think there could not be a more mischievous consequence; and, although it may be unfortunate that the will cannot be carried into execution to the full extent of the testamentary dispositions of the testator, I think that of the two evils or two inconveniences it is far better, where the court can see its way to the essentially substantial dispositions made in a will, that it should give effect to them, although possibly some of the intentions of the testator may not be carried into effect."

In Dickinson v. Stidolph, 11 Com. B. (N. S.) 357, the court says: "The apparent testamentary intentions of a testator are not to be disappointed merely because she made other dispositions of her property which are unknown by reason of the testamentary paper which contained them not being forthcoming." The will referred to two prior testamentary memoranda, declaring that both should remain in force, and one of them could not be found. In Steele v. Price, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72, several money legacies were not proven, and as to that money there was intestacy. The court said: "As the principal devises, those in which the testator took the deepest interest, and about which he showed the most solicitude, are sufficiently proved, the failure of proof as to the minor provisions of the will should not defeat the whole by preventing the admission to record of that which is proved, and especially as it does not appear that the establishment of the devises as proved, though it would greatly reduce the fund to be distributed, will affect the relative proportions which the heirs will receive." To the same effect see Offutt v. Offutt, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 163, 38 Am. Dec. 183; Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 355, 2 South. 110; Woodward v. Goulstone, 11 L. R. App. Div. 476; Jackson v. Jackson, 4 Mo. 211; Dickey v. Malech, 6 Mo. 184, 34 Am. Dec. 130; Burge v. Hamilton, 72 Ga. 568. It is also held that where the only part of a lost will that can be proven is a clause revoking a former will, such clause may be given effect for the purpose of showing a revocation. Wallis v. Wallis, 114 Mass. 510; Nelson v. McGiffert, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 164, 49 Am. Dec. 170; Stevens v. Hope, 52 Mich. 65, 17 N. W. 698; In re Cunningham, 38 Minn. 171, 36 N. W. 269, 8 Am. St. Rep. 650; Barksdale v. Hopkins, 23 Ga. 332; Laughton v. Atkins, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 548. Underhill sums up the authorities thus: "Any substantial provision of a lost will, which is complete in itself and independent of the others, may, when proved, be admitted to probate, though the other provisions cannot be proved, if the validity and operation of the part which is proved are not affected by those parts which cannot be proved. This view seems to be consistent with reason and common sense." 1 Underhill on Wills, § 278. See, also, Thornton on Lost Wills, § 111.

This rule is, of course, subject to the statutory provisions of the several states. Our statute on the subject declares that no will shall be proven as a lost or destroyed will unless "its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses." Code Civ. Proc. § 1339. This does not say that a part which is distinctly proven cannot be given effect if some other part not affecting it in any particular, cannot be satisfactorily established. It would be a rare case in which two witnesses, testifying from memory to the contents of a will, would agree about every detail as to the testamentary dispositions. If it were required that their testimony should coincide in every particular, however minute and unimportant, in order to establish a lost will, the possibility of proving such will would be extremely remote, except where a copy in writing had been preserved and could be produced. If that were the case, the practical effect of our statute would be the same as in those states where the production of a written copy or draft of the lost will is required. We cannot agree to the proposition that the Legislature could have intended such inconsequential results from this statute as would ensue if it were given the construction contended for. We think it was not intended to change the rule above stated.

In the present case, upon the proof made, the bulk of the estate is composed of the land given to the Patterson children as devisees. As to this disposition of the real property there is no discrepancy, and the provisions of the will are clearly and distinctly proven. With regard to the personal property, the question whether the money was given as part of the residue, and as such charged by statute with the debts and specific legacies, or whether it was given as a specific legacy, charged by the will with those burdens, while more a matter of form than substance, is nevertheless a question which materially affects the disposition of the personal estate. It is obvious that, in view of the decision of the court below, we must hold that the part of the will disposing of the personal estate was not clearly or distinctly proven by two witnesses, and it must be declared ineffective as to that property, except with respect to the legacy to Joseph P. McQuaid. Proof of that legacy was clear and distinct, and the testimony of the two witnesses regarding it was the same. Under the rule we have stated the proof was sufficient to authorize the admission to probate of that part of the will devising the real estate and bequeathing the $250 to McQuaid. The consequence is that as to the other personal property Catherine Patterson would be declared to have died intestate. The property undisposed of would be first liable for the debts, expenses of administration, and the McQuaid legacy, the residue, if any, going to the brother and sister as the heirs at law, while the real estate will go intact to the devisees, except in the event that some part of it is required for the payment of debts and expenses of administration.

2. The second question arising and presented is whether or not the amended section 1339 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to this will. At the time of the death of the testatrix that section read as follows: "No will shall be proved as a lost or destroyed will, unless the same is proved to have been in existence at the time of the death of the testator, or is shown to have been fraudulently destroyed in the lifetime of the testator, nor unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses." On March 6, 1907, after the filing of the written grounds of opposition to the probate of the will, and more than a year prior to the conclusion of the trial of the matter, the section was amended so as to read as follows: "No will shall be proved as a lost or destroyed will, unless the same is proved to have been in existence at the time of the death of the testator, or is shown to have been fraudulently or by public calamity destroyed in the lifetime of the testator, without his knowledge, nor unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses." St. 1907, p. 122, c. 100. The will was not in existence when the testatrix died, and it was not fraudulently destroyed in her lifetime. Consequently it could not be proven as a destroyed will, except by virtue of the amendment of 1907 aforesaid. If that amendment applies to wills of persons who died before it was enacted, it would permit the probate of the will in question. The evidence shows that the will was destroyed by public calamity in her lifetime, without her knowledge, but the court below deemed the fact immaterial, and made no finding to that effect; it being of the opinion that the amendment of 1907 did not apply.

The contention of the contestants is that, under the law as it existed at her death, the will was not merely incapable of proof because of lack of evidence, but that it was absolutely void and constructively nonexistent; that consequently the deceased died intestate; that the estate immediately thereupon vested in the heirs; and that the Legislature could not, by a subsequent law enlarging the classes of destroyed wills admissible to probate, take that estate from them. There can be no doubt of the rule that, if the estate once vested in the heirs, the Legislature had no power thereafter, by a subsequent law, to divest it. And it is a well-settled proposition that, where some essential ceremony in the manner of executing a will has been neglected, so that the will is not lawfully executed, and such essential requisite has been dispensed with by a law enacted after the death of the person attempting to make such will, the law cannot be applied thereto, and the person must be held to have died intestate. McCarty v. Hoffman, 23 Pa. 502; Alter's Appeal, 67 Pa. 344, 5 Am. Rep. 433; Giddings v. Turgeon, 58 Vt. 106, 4 Atl. 711. These cases rest upon the general rule that a will not executed in the prescribed manner is no will, and has no potential existence. One who dies leaving such a testamentary paper only dies intestate, and his property at once vests in his heirs. Estate of McCabe, 68 Cal. 519, 9 Pac. 554; Civ. Code, § 1384. The opinions in the cases above cited do not especially emphasize this proposition, but they are all manifestly based upon it as a postulate.

This rule does not apply to the present case. The will of Catherine Patterson was executed with all the formalities which the Code requires. From the time of its execution in December, 1904, until its destruction in April, 1906, it was in all respects a valid will, having a potential existence as such, and subject to be defeated only by the act of the testatrix wholly or partially revoking or altering it. After its destruction without her knowledge, and until she became aware thereof, we must assume that she still believed it had such existence, and that it would become effectual upon her death. She died in that belief. The essential question involved is: Had this will, after its destruction, a potential existence, subject to defeat only by reason of the impossibility of proof under the law then existing, or did such destruction make it absolutely void in the sense that it was thereafter no will at all? Our statute nowhere declares that such destruction during the lifetime of the testator destroys the status of a will as an executed instrument. The Civil Code provides that any person over the age of 18 years and of sound mind may dispose of all his estate by will, and directs the manner in which wills may be executed and revoked. Civ. Code, §§ 1270, 1276, 1277, 1289, 1292, 1304. The sections concerning the revocation of wills are elaborate and specific. It is expressly declared that a revocation can be made only in the manner and by the means prescribed in that chapter. Civ. Code, § 1292. Destruction, without intention to revoke or by accident, is not a prescribed method of revocation. Under the Code, therefore, such destruction does not operate to revoke a will. These provisions plainly imply that a will, once duly executed, has a recognized legal existence during the lifetime of the testator, if not revoked; that it merely remains in abeyance until his death, and then becomes an effective instrument.

This is in accordance with the rule at common law. "A will is regarded by the courts of England and the United States as a conveyance, and takes effect as a deed, upon proof of its execution, unless there is some statute requiring it to be probated." Castro v. Castro, 6 Cal. 161; Grimes v. Norris, 6 Cal. 625, 65 Am. Dec. 545; Tevis v. Pitcher, 10 Cal. 477; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 565, 2 Pac. 418; Adams v. Norris, 23 U. S. 363, 16 L. Ed. 539. In the cases above cited it was held that wills made by persons who died prior to the passage of the first probate act of this state were not required to be probated, and that they could be proven in the same manner as a deed or other instrument in writing, either by the production of the original, or, after proof of loss, by secondary evidence of its contents.

It has been held by this court that a will cannot be given in evidence as the foundation of a right or title, unless it has been duly probated. McDaniel v. Pattison, 98 Cal.

86, 27 Pac. 651, 32 Pac. 805; Castro v. Richardson, 18 Cal. 480. The amendment of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 72, c. 77) to section 738, Code Civ. Proc., makes an exception to this rule in suits brought under that section. Under our system the probate of the will is made a condition precedent to the introduction of evidence of its contents, in the subsequent settlement and distribution of the estate, and in any collateral matter, except in the cases provided in the amendment aforesaid to section 738. But although the probate of a will is generally necessary to its introduction in evidence, such will is not brought into legal existence by the judgment admitting it to probate. Such probate merely declares in a formal way the existence of facts which have previously occurred, and furnishes official evidence of those facts. In speaking of the title of the executor, under the common law, to the personal estate of the testator Mr. Williams says: "The probate is, however merely operative as the authenticated evidence, and not at all as the foundation, of the executor's title; for he derives all his interest from the will itself, and the property of the deceased vests in him from the moment of the testator's death." 1 Williams, Extrs. (7th Am. Ed.) 354, *243. A devise of lands at common law was considered, "not so much in the nature of a testament, as a conveyance by way of appointment of particular lands to a particular devisee." 1 Williams, Extrs. (7th Am. Ed.) 4. Under our Code the devisees and legatees take at the moment of the testator's death, and their title comes from the will itself, and not from the probate thereof. The probate procedure was established to furnish an exclusive mode for the settlement of all disputes concerning the executions of wills, and to provide conclusive evidence of their contents. It is remedial in its nature. It relates to the remedy, and is not the foundation of the rights of those claiming under the will. "Whatever belongs to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the state." Cooley, Const. Lim. 406, 409, 515.

The testatrix, Mrs. Patterson, had exercised her testamentary power by a duly executed will which would take effect upon her death, but which could not be admitted in evidence against the heirs until after it was probated. In her lifetime, but without her knowledge, it was destroyed in a public calamity. Because of its destruction in her lifetime the probate court, under the law as it existed at her death, could not allow it to be probated, because there could be no legal proof of it. After her death the Legislature removed this impediment by making wills destroyed in a public calamity provable. The heirs had no vested right to have this law forbidding the probate of such wills continued in force. Their right to the estate of the ancestor was given by statute and it was contingent upon the fact of there being no will in existence which could be proved. If a will had been duly executed, and had not been destroyed, but was filed for probate, and could not be probated because of lack of proof of its execution, the heirs would take the estate, and it would be deemed to vest in them at the death of the testatrix, although the right thereto could not be positively known until it was demonstrated by the failure of proof upon the trial of the petition for probate. The statute provides what evidence may be taken in proof of a will upon such a proceeding. Can there be a doubt that if a law were passed after the death of a testator, allowing evidence of execution previously forbidden as hearsay, such proof could not be accepted, and the will established, although but for that evidence the will would be defeated and the estate would go to the heirs? Or, in the case of a lost will, would it be questioned that a law making one witness sufficient would not apply to wills of persons who had died prior to the passage of such law? The Legislature has full power to alter the rules of evidence and the degree of proof, and make such rules applicable to pending cases. Cooley, Const. Lim. 409. It was competent, therefore, for the Legislature to dispense with the requirement that proof should be made that the will was in existence at the death of the testatrix.

It is a mistake to characterize the amendment of section 1339 as a retrospective law. It relates wholly to what shall be done upon the trial of the application for probate, the proof that must be furnished, and the facts which must be established. It applies only to trials which take place after its enactment. It can have no effect whatever upon previous trials or judgments. It is prospective only in its nature. It is remedial in its nature, and is designed to preserve the testamentary right. The public calamity referred to in the amendment is doubtless the great fire of San Francisco in which this will was burned, a calamity which has caused much legislation intended to alleviate its effect and preserve rights that would otherwise be lost for want of evidence. Such laws should be given a liberal construction to promote the purposes for which they are designed. We are of the opinion that section 1339 should apply to all cases subsequently tried, regardless of the time of the testator's death.

The order denying probate of the will is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

10 Cal. App. 576

MILLER & LUX, Incorporated, v. KATZ.
(Civ. 577.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 11, 1909.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 245*)—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS FOR DEBTS—PERSONS LIABLE—EFFECT OF DEATH OF STOCKHOLDER.

Under Civ. Code, § 322, providing that each stockholder of a corporation is personally liable for the same proportion of its debts as his stock bears to the total capital stock of the corporation, the estate of a deceased stockholder is liable for a proportionate share of a corporate indebtedness arising after the stockholder's death, although the executrix of the estate never had the actual possession of the stock, and never exercised any act of ownership over it, and did not know of its existence until after the creation of the indebtedness sued upon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 978; Dec. Dig. § 245.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 224*)—NECESSITY FOR PRESENTATION OF CLAIM—LIABILITY AS STOCKHOLDER.

The liability of a stockholder to pay such a proportion of the corporate debts as his share bears to the capital stock is a claim against the estate of a deceased stockholder, where the liability arises after the stockholder's death, which need not be presented for allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 438*)—ACTIONS—PARTIES—JOINDER OF HEIRS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1582, providing that "all actions founded upon contracts may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates," an action may be brought against an executrix without joining the heirs to enforce a liability for debts of a corporation in which testator held stock, as such liability is contractual.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1765, 1772, 1781; Dec. Dig. § 438; Parties, Cent. Dig. § 25.]

4. COURTS (§ 475*)—PROBATE COURTS—ACTIONS—JURISDICTION.

The superior court has jurisdiction of an action against an executrix to enforce a liability for corporate debts by virtue of the ownership of stock by the estate, although probate proceedings are pending.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 1232; Dec. Dig. § 475.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Miller & Lux, incorporated, against Virginia S. Katz, as executrix of the last will of Alfred F. Katz, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, for appellant.
Edward F. Treadwell, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action is brought against the executrix of the estate of a deceased person to enforce a stockholder's liability upon an indebtedness incurred by the corporation during the ownership by the estate of shares of stock in such corporation. Plaintiff obtained judgment, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The facts of the case are, briefly, that one Alfred Katz, the appellant's testator, at the time of his death in 1900, was the owner of one-fourth of the capital stock of Katz & Sons, a corporation. About five years thereafter, to wit, in April, 1906, and while the estate of Alfred Katz was still the owner of said shares of stock, the corporation Katz & Sons became indebted to the plaintiff to the amount of $15,309.99; and it is to recover one-fourth of this sum (the proportion for which the estate is alleged to be liable) that the action is brought. It is objected by the executrix that she never had the actual or physical possession of the stock, and never exercised any act of ownership over it, and did not even know of its existence until after the creation of the indebtedness sued upon herein. It is undisputed, however, that decedent owned the stock at the time of his death; and we think, under the provisions of section 322, Civ. Code, and upon general principles of law, it became the property of the estate, and that the estate is liable as a stockholder. In this jurisdiction the law has recognized estates as stockholders in several ways. Thus in the case of Market St. Ry. Co. v. Hellman, 109 Cal. 571, 590, 42 Pac. 225, 231, it is said that: "In case of the death of a stockholder, his administrator becomes, by operation of law, vested with the legal title to the stock, and is entitled to vote it at all elections without a transfer upon the stock book." In the case of Ashton v. Zeila Mining Co., 134 Cal. 408, 66 Pac. 494, the executors were permitted to recover dividends on stock not registered in their names, and the court there said: "Thereupon—as was ruled in the case cited—the executor was entitled to recover the stock, which was, in effect, to hold that the title of the executors, if not the complete legal title, was in its legal consequences equivalent to it."

The question, moreover, has several times been directly adjudicated. The case of Bailey v. Hollister, 26 N. Y. 115, was an action brought to recover from an executor out of the funds of the estate the individual liability imposed by the New York statute for a debt contracted while "the estate of the intestate was a stockholder." The court said: "It will be conceded that, when a stockholder in any corporation dies, his estate succeeds him in the title to, and the rights in, the stock he held. Of necessity it must take that title and those rights subject to any liability then existing upon them; and so long as the estate is, by operation of law, the holder of such stock, the estate must become responsible for any obligation accruing during that time which the law may impose upon any holder of the stock as such.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Such liability proceeds not from any new contract made by or on behalf of the estate, but is inherent in the property itself. To avoid it, the estate must part from the property, must cease to be the holder of the stock. Or, calling it a contract liability, it arises out of a contract made by the stockholder, and binding his personal representatives, as it bound him, as long as the relation of stockholder existed." To the same effect, see Matteson v. Dent, 176 U. S. 521, 20 Sup. Ct. 419, 44 L. Ed. 571; Manville v. Edgar, 8 Mo. App. 325; Gianella v. Bigelow, 96 Wis. 185, 71 N. W. 111; Cook on Corporations (5th Ed.) § 248; Wickham v. Hull (C. C.) 60 Fed. 326.

Appellant claims that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that it does not show that any claim for plaintiff's demand was ever presented to the executrix for allowance. This contention is untenable. The liability here arose after the testator's death, and therefore did not constitute a claim against the estate which was required to be presented for allowance. People v. Olvera, 43 Cal. 492; Hancock v. Whittemore, 50 Cal. 522; 18 Cyc. 462, 887. In the case of People v. Olvera, supra, it is said: "Whatever may be the rule when taxes are assessed during the lifetime of the decedent, * * * it is clear that taxes assessed against the property of an estate, pending administration, and while it is in the possession and under the management and control of an administrator, are not 'claims' against the estate which must be presented, supported by an affidavit, and allowed or rejected, under the provisions of sections 130 and 131 of the probate act. The undivided property of deceased persons may be listed to administrators, and the taxes assessed are charges upon the property, which should be paid as all necessary expenses in the care, management, and settlement of the estate are paid." In Hancock v. Whittemore, supra, it was said: "The assessment (for street improvements) was issued after the death of H. M. Whittemore. The tax thus assessed did not constitute a claim against the estate of H. M. Whittemore which was required to be presented for allowance." Eustace v. Jahns, 38 Cal. 3, supports the contention of defendant; but what is there said on this subject was unnecessary to the decision, and the case has never been cited or approved and is directly contrary to later decisions.

There is no force in the suggestion of appellant that this action cannot be maintained against the executrix without the presence of the heirs. We can see no more reason for joining the heirs in this action as parties defendant than there would be in an action on an ordinary claim arising before the death of the testator. In the absence of an affirmative claim by an heir or devisee, an action may be maintained against an executor in all cases where a liability is to be enforced against the estate. Section 1582, Code Civ. Proc., however, provides as follows: "Actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof, or to quiet title thereto, or to determine any adverse claim thereon, and all actions founded upon contracts, may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates." Hence, if the liability sued upon be one "founded upon contract" within the meaning of this section, then the suit could be maintained against the executrix without joining the heirs or devisees. That the liability in its nature is contractual is well established in this state. Dennis v. Superior Court, 91 Cal. 548, 27 Pac. 1031. Kennedy v. Cal. Sav. Bank, 97 Cal. 93, 31 Pac. 846, 33 Am. St. Rep. 163; Kirtley v. Holmes, 107 Fed. 1, 46 C. C. A. 102, 52 L. R. A. 738; Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 20 Sup. Ct. 477, 44 L. Ed. 587; 10 Cyc. 666.

There is no merit in the suggestion that the trial court lacked jurisdiction in this matter because of the pending of the probate proceedings (People v. Olvera, supra; Wickham v. Hull, supra); and the evidence is sufficient to sustain the decision of the trial court.

No other point discussed in the briefs calls for special mention.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 596

SKINNER v. KNICKREHM et al.
(Civ. 560.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 15, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court July 14, 1909.)

1. HIGHWAYS (§ 172*)—CARE REQUIRED IN USE OF HIGHWAY.

A traveler upon a public highway is not an insurer against accident, but is bound to exercise ordinary care in the management of his vehicle, so that others using the highway, may not suffer injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 459, 460; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

2. HIGHWAYS (§ 174*)—USE OF HIGHWAY—CARE AS TO CHILDREN.

The driver of a vehicle must exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to children incapable of appreciating and avoiding danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 459, 460; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 23*)—THINGS ATTRACTIVE
TO CHILDREN—WAGON ATTACHED TO HOUSE BEING MOVED THROUGH STREET.

A complaint averring that defendants attached a wagon to the rear of a house being moved through the streets, and left such wagon unguarded and unattended, and that by reason of its slow movement, and the absence of any frame or bed, it was attractive to children who might desire to ride thereon, and that plaintiff, an infant, wholly unable to appreciate the danger, was attracted to the wagon, and, being thereon, was thrown off and injured, sets forth a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 109*)—PLEADING—INCONSISTENT ALLEGATIONS.

An allegation that a wagon attached to the rear of a house being moved through the streets, and upon which a child climbed and was injured in being thrown therefrom, was left unguarded and unattended, is not inconsistent with an allegation that the vehicle was in defendant's charge, for personal property may be in the general charge of one, though he may not at the time be in immediate supervision thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 176; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

5. NEGLIGENCE (§ 134*)—THINGS ATTRACTIVE TO CHILDREN—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action for injury to a child who was thrown from a wagon upon which he had climbed attached to the rear of a house being moved through the streets, and alleged to be a thing attractive to children, held to warrant a finding that the wagon was unguarded and unattended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 267; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

6. INFANTS (§ 82*)—ACTIONS—GUARDIAN AD LITEM.

The authority of a guardian ad litem continues, though there was a change of parties owing to the award of a nonsuit as to the party against whom the guardian was authorized to bring the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 230; Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1053*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for injury to an infant, there was no prejudicial error in permitting his mother to testify that she was in a delicate condition at the time of the injury, and had no hired help, where it was expressly stated that such condition should not be considered as affecting the damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4182; Dec. Dig. § 1053.*]

8. PLEADING (§ 236*)—AMENDMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Leave to amend a pleading is addressed to the discretion of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 601; Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Action by Ervin Liell Skinner, an infant, by Warren S. Skinner, his guardian ad litem, against W. Knickrehm and the William Knickrehm Company. Plaintiff was nonsuited as to defendant W. Knickrehm, but recovered a judgment against the William Knickrehm Company, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Trusten P. Dyer (W. C. Batcheller, of counsel), for appellant. Morton, Pruitt & Goodrich, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal by defendant Wm. Knickrehm Company from a judgment and an order denying a new trial, the action being one by an infant on account of personal injuries.

It is averred in the complaint that defendants, who were engaged in moving a house through the streets of Los Angeles, attached to the rear of such house so being moved a wagon with heavy wheels, upon which was rested neither bed nor frame; that such house and the wagon so attached and under the charge of defendants were being moved through the streets very slowly, and that defendants left the wagon unguarded and unattended; that by reason of its slow movement, and on account of the absence of any frame or bed, such wagon became and was attractive to children who might desire to climb and ride thereon; that plaintiff, an infant of the age of four years, wholly unable to appreciate or guard or protect himself against dangerous appliances, was attracted to said wagon, and by the negligence of defendants invited to get upon the same and ride thereon, and being thereon was, by the negligence and carelessness of the defendants and their servants, and without any fault on his part, caused to be jolted or thrown off of said wagon and the wheels ran up and against his head and injured him. It is insisted that from these facts no obligation or duty of defendants toward plaintiff is shown to have been undischarged or unfulfilled, and therefore it follows that no negligence is made to appear. It may be conceded that one traveling upon a public highway, using ordinary care in the management and control of a vehicle under his charge, is not an insurer against accident, nor liable for damages even to children of immature years who, playing upon such public highway, shall be injured in an attempt to ride thereon, without acquiescence or invitation on the part of the party in charge of such vehicle. There rests, however, upon every one so using a public thoroughfare the duty of exercising ordinary care in the management and control of vehicles under his charge, to the end that others using such public places, exercising like care, or who, by reason of tender years, are unable to appreciate or guard against danger, may not suffer injury, from the operation of such vehicles, and it is the duty of the one so operating such a vehicle to at all times retain such control over the same as may be requisite in averting, if possible, injury even to those not exercising such care or unable to appreciate the danger connected therewith. The complaint avers facts which show defendants' omission of duty in the regard above stated, for it is admitted that the vehicle, unguarded and unattended, was being propelled through the streets by defendants. Nor is there anything inconsistent with such statement when used in connection with the allegation that the vehicle was in the charge of the defendants. Personal property may be in the general charge of one notwithstanding one may be at the time not in the immediate supervision of the same, and we perceive no inconsistency in the statement that property so in charge was permitted to be unattended and unguarded. "It has been held in numerous cases to be an act of negligence to leave unguarded and exposed to the observation of little children dangerous and attractive machinery which they would naturally be tempted to go about or upon, and against the danger of which action their immature judgment opposes no warning or defense." Cahill v. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 574, 96 Pac. 86. The allegation of the complaint that the child was too young and inexperienced to foresee the danger removes from consideration, in considering the complaint, any question of contributory negligence which would be suggested were a child so injured shown to be sufficiently mature to appreciate or understand the danger and in law be held by his acts to have contributed thereto.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is further contended by appellant that the allegations of the complaint in relation to defendants' negligence are not established by the proof. The evidence with relation to the unguarded and unattended character of the wagon was to a degree conflicting. There was, however, evidence of witnesses to the effect that none of defendants' employes nor any one connected with the operations of the housemoving were in such a position that they were able to see the wagon so attached, or the children playing thereon; that the driver of the wagon upon which the house was loaded, by reason of the intervening house, was unable to see the wagon or anything occurring in the rear of the house, and that only one other man was connected with the moving and that he was a long distance ahead of the driver attending to other duties; that these children were permitted to, or at least were not by any one forbidden to, play upon the wagon, and did so for a long space of time and while the house was being moved for a large portion of a block. We think the jury were warranted in finding that the wagon was, in fact, unguarded and unattended, and that the defendants did not exercise usual and ordinary care in its management and control. It is true that witnesses upon the part of defendants testified to having been around the wagon, to have driven the children therefrom, and to have used all reasonable precautions to avoid danger; but it was for the jury to determine from the evidence the facts presented to them, and by their verdict they seem to have accepted as true the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses.

Error is specified by reason of the admission of parol evidence as to the appointment of the guardian ad litem to bring the action; such appointment being alleged in the complaint and denied by the answer. The court in overruling the objection to the admission of such evidence said that the appointment was a matter of record, and no time would be taken up in its proof. While it is true, as appellant urges that the best evidence of such appointment and that which should have been introduced was the order appointing the guardian ad litem, yet such appointment in this state is held not to be a jurisdictional matter, and a failure of appointment does not render the judgment void. Notwithstanding this, it is said in Johnston v. S. P. Co., 150 Cal. 540, 89 Pac. 348, that when the attention of the court is called to the defect, and no steps taken to cure the same, a reversal of the judgment upon appeal is proper. This upon the theory that the judgment rendered would lack mutuality of obligation, in that there being no authority for the guardian ad litem to act the infant could refuse to abide by the judgment at any time before attaining majority. However, in the case just cited, and in Childs v. Lanterman, 103 Cal. 387, 37 Pac. 382, 42 Am. St. Rep. 121, the Supreme Court determined that, when facts were shown to exist which would preclude the infant from disaffirming the judgment, the same would not be reversed on account of a failure to have a guardian ad litem appointed. In this case it is conceded by respondent in his brief that as a matter of fact an order had been entered before the bringing of the action authorizing the guardian ad litem to bring an action against William Knickrehm alone on account of the injuries sustained. This being conceded, the right to bring the action on account of the injuries existed, and the fact that during the progress of the proceedings another party was brought in against whom a judgment was rendered would not be of consequence, even though the record discloses a nonsuit was awarded as against the individual originally named in the order. The cause of action was on account of the injury received, and for which the guardian ad litem was authorized to prosecute an action. The bringing in of a new party did not change the cause of action or destroy the right theretofore conferred upon the guardian ad litem under the order. "The only authority of the guardian to appear is by virtue of the appointment, and the appointment limits the effect of the appearance to the subject-matter of the suit." Waterman v. Lawrence, 19 Cal. 218, 79 Am. Dec. 212. The subject-matter of the suit, which was a cause of action on account of the injury, being embraced within the order, the authority of the guardian ad litem continues, even though there be a change in the parties connected with the subject-matter of the suit, and, the order having been made, the infant would be bound by the judgment; and the reasons given why a judgment should be reversed where no order in fact was made are therefore wanting.

We see no prejudicial error in the action of the court permitting the mother of the child to testify to the fact that she was in a delicate condition at the time of the injury and had no hired help. While the condition of the mother was in no sense material, it was expressly stated at the time the testimony was offered that such condition should not be considered as affecting the damages resulting from the accident, and we can see no prejudice resulting either from the admission of such evidence, or that in relation to the fact that no hired help was employed.

We are unable from the record to determine what amendment to the answer was, in fact, suggested, or how defendant could be prejudiced by a refusal to grant the request. In any event, it was a matter resting within the discretion of the court, and no reason is apparent why the judgment should be reversed on account of such ruling.

We see no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 590

HOOPER et al. v. YOUNG et al. (Civ. 580.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 15, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court July 14, 1909.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 5*)—DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRACT OF SALE.

M. desiring to purchase a tract of land, S. purchased the same and took a deed to himself, M. giving him a note for the amount paid, and S. agreeing to convey the land to M. on the payment of the amount and interest. Subsequently another note was given in place of the first one, and another contract similar to the first entered into. M. never paid the amount of his indebtedness, and the second note became outlawed. Held, that the rights of M. and his successors in interest were only those of a purchaser under a contract for the sale of land, and that the relations of M. and S. were not those of mortgagor and mortgagee, and the outlawing of the note and the transfer of the property by S. did not affect the relations of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 5; * Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 3.]

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 63*)—NATURE AND REQUISITES—HOSTILE CHARACTER OF POSSESSION—POSSESSION UNDER CONTRACT TO PURCHASE.

M. desired to purchase a tract of land, and the tract was bought by S., who took title in his own name, and contracted to transfer the property to M. on payment of a note given by M. for the purchase price. Held, that possession by M. of the property was not hostile to the rights of S. while he held the legal title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 86*)—REPUDIATION OF CONTRACT—ACTION IN EJECTMENT.

Where M., desiring to purchase a tract of land, agrees with S. that the latter shall buy the land and take the title and convey to M. on payment by M. of a note given for the purchase price, and M. never pays the note, but allows it to become outlawed, an action brought by M.'s successor in interest in ejectment on an adverse title is equivalent to an abandonment of the original contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Hall, Judge.

Action by C. A. Hooper and others against A. Young and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 140 Cal. 274, 74 Pac. 140, 98 Am. St. Rep. 56.

Titus & Creed and Drown, Leicester & Drown, for appellants. Haskell & Denny and C. S. Farquar, for respondents.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from an order granting defendants a new trial. The action is in ejectment for the recovery of a tract of land containing about 40 acres, situated in the city and county of San Francisco. The original plaintiffs were C. A. Hooper and T. M. Osmond, but, Osmond having died since the trial, the other plaintiffs were substituted. Defendant Young is simply a tenant of defendant Webber. This is the second appeal in this case. Upon the first appeal plaintiffs claimed title under a patent to one Wagner, which was held void, while defendants claimed title under a patent to one Weaver. Hooper v. Young, 140 Cal. 274, 74 Pac. 140, 98 Am. St. Rep. 56. The Weaver title on the 14th day of January, 1873, was vested in one J. W. Shanklin, who on that day conveyed, for the named consideration of $1,500, to Wm. B. Swain. This deed was duly recorded on the same day. Swain conveyed to Webber by gift of deed dated and duly recorded December 22, 1892. On the first trial plaintiffs also claimed that the deed from Shanklin to Swain was a mortgage to secure $700, loaned by Swain to Meeks, with which to in part purchase the property, and that as the debt had long since outlawed, defendants could claim nothing under such deed. The court did not pass upon this claim that the deed to Swain was a mortgage, but held "that as the admissions and presumptions in the case, even on plaintiff's theory that the deed to Swain was a mortgage, show that the defendant Webber, as successor to all the rights of Swain, is in possession of the premises as mortgagee, the finding of the court that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of said premises is not sustained, but is contrary to the evidence."

The controlling facts in the case are as follows: On January 14, 1873, J. W. Shanklin was seized in fee of the premises in suit, and one Meeks desired to purchase the same. Swain paid $700 to Shanklin, and took a deed for the premises. Whether the other $800 was paid by Meeks does not clearly appear. Swain took a promissory note from Meeks for the $700, and interest at 2 per cent. per month, and executed to Meeks an instrument whereby he agreed to convey the land to Meeks on the payment of the $700 and interest, in accordance with said note.

The note by its terms was due July 14, 1873. July 7, 1877, Meeks gave to Swain a new note for the principal and interest then due, amounting to $1,075.50, payable January 7, 1878. This note bore interest at 1¼ per cent. per month, compounded monthly. At the same time Swain executed to Meeks a new agreement to convey upon payment of $1,075.50 and interest, according to the terms of said note, and any outlay that Swain might make for the protection of the property. Nothing has ever been paid on either of said notes save interest on the first note to August, 1874. Meeks has received no deed from Swain or Webber. Plaintiffs deraign title from Meeks. The second note is long since outlawed; and appellant's contention seems to be that the deed from Shanklin to Swain was a mortgage given to secure the payment of the $700, and as this debt is long since outlawed neither Swain nor his grantee is entitled to hold the land. We think the case of Woodard v. Hennegan, 128 Cal. 293, 60 Pac. 769, effectually answers the claim of plaintiffs.

In Woodard v. Hennegan, Woodard advanced the purchase price of two parcels of land for Hennegan, and took conveyances from the vendors, and gave a bond to Hennegan for a deed. Hennegan repaid Woodard $3,000 of the purchase price, and at the time of the purchase took possession, and so continued in possession till suit was brought by Woodard's executrix to recover possession and to quiet title. Defendant set up title by adverse possession.

It was held that such a transaction was more than a mortgage; that in such a case the grantee holds a double relation to the actual purchaser, both as his trustee of the legal title, and as mortgagee for the money advanced for its purchase; that the rights of the grantee in such a case will be regarded the same as if the grantee of the legal title in trust as security had been the original owner of the legal title, and had made an executory contract of sale to the intending purchaser, retaining the title as security for the purchase money. Upon this point the court said: "We think Woodard possessed the same rights as would have been possessed by Lowe and Merkeley" (the original owners) "if they had made the agreement to convey to defendant. To allow him all the right that Lowe and Merkeley would have had cannot do defendant any injustice. After Woodard had, at defendant's request, furnished the money, and given defendant every opportunity to repay him, to deprive him or his representative of the same protection that would have been given to Lowe and Merkeley would be a gross injustice. It would be to allow the defendant, like the viper in the fable, to turn and sting the one who had been his friend. Therefore it will be assumed that plaintiff, as the legal representative of Woodard, possesses the same rights as if Woodard had been the owner of the land at the time the contract of sale was made with defendant. The legal title remained in Woodard. * * * The defendant having by his answer repudiated the contract, and having refused to pay the balance due, the plaintiff can maintain the present action to recover possession." Under the doctrine of the case just cited, the rights of Swain and his grantee Webber are the same as if Swain had owned the land, and had agreed to sell to Meeks, giving a bond to convey upon payment of the balance of the agreed price. It is difficult to see any plausible reason why Swain should not be entitled to the same protection he would receive if he had been the owner, and had made a contract to convey upon payment of the balance of the purchase price. The deed from Shanklin to Swain conveyed to Swain the entire legal title held by Shanklin. Of this title Swain and his grantee Webber have never been divested. The outlawing of the Meeks note did not divest Swain of his title or transfer such title to Meeks. Only on payment of the debt would Meeks or his grantees be entitled to a conveyance of such title. Under the rule laid down in Woodard v. Hennegan, supra, Swain, as a grantee, who had advanced the money for the purchase price, and given a bond to Meeks for a deed to be executed on repayment of such money, stood in the position of a vendor under a contract to convey upon payment of the purchase price. A vendee under a contract to sell does not obtain title by the outlawing of his contract to purchase, or of his promise to pay the purchase price.

We do not understand appellants to contend that plaintiffs have obtained any title by adverse possession. At any rate, there is nothing in the record to support any such theory. There was nothing in the contract between Swain and Meeks about possession. Whatever possession Meeks took, if any, it is certain that he was not holding adversely to Swain up to the execution of the second agreement and note in 1877; and there is no pretense in the evidence that plaintiffs or Meeks ever paid any taxes on the premises save for two years. The evidence upon the question of possession by the various lessees of the parties is only important upon the theory that Swain's rights are to be measured by those of a mortgagee only. They are not to be so measured, however. He had the rights of a vendor who had retained the legal title till payment of the purchase price. Plaintiffs, as the successors in interest of Meeks, have clearly repudiated the only contract under which Meeks might have any equities. This they did by bringing this action in ejectment, without offering to perform the conditions under which Meeks might originally have been entitled to a deed and the title, but setting up an adverse title under the Wagner patent. What was said upon this subject in Woodard v. Hennegan, supra, exactly covers this phase of this case. "The defendant having by his answer repudiated the contract, and having refused to pay the balance due, the plaintiff can maintain the present action to recover possession. 2 Warvelle on Vendors, 892; 1 Sugden on Vendors, 312; Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 567, 6 Am. Rep. 624; Thorne v. Hammond, 46 Cal. 531; Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 241. In the latter case it is said: 'When, therefore, the defendants, after they had obtained possession lawfully, substituted repudiation of the contract and refusal to comply with its terms, for performance or willingness to perform, they divested themselves by their wrongful act of the equitable estate which they acquired under the contract, and became trespassers or tenants at will, against whom their repudiated vendors could maintain ejectment. The vendors were remitted to their legal title, and in an action upon it the defendants could not invoke as a defense to it a contract of sale which they repudiated and refused to perform.' Woodard v. Hennegan, supra. As the rights of Swain (Webber's grantor) were those of a vendor, holding the legal title, the rights of Meeks were those of a vendee, entitled to a conveyance of the title on payment of the balance of the purchase price.

The only title or equity that plaintiffs have or now claim is as grantees of Meeks under his contract with Swain. This contract has not been performed on the part of Meeks or plaintiffs, but plaintiffs have repudiated its obligations. They have no equities that ought to prevail against the legal title.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 544

SILVA v. HAWN. (Civ. 531.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 7, 1909.)

1. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—ADVERSE CHARACTER OF POSSESSION.

In an action to restrain defendant from obstructing the flow of water in an irrigation ditch, and plaintiff's use thereof, evidence held to show that plaintiff's use of the ditch included all the elements of adverse possession, in that it was open, notorious, under claim of right, adverse to defendant, and with his knowledge and acquiescence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 8*)—PRESCRIPTION—KNOWLEDGE OF ADVERSE USER—IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE.

Though defendant did not have actual notice of plaintiff's open and adverse use of an irrigation ditch across defendant's land, if such use was sufficiently notorious to put defendant upon inquiry, it was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. EASEMENTS (§ 8*)—PRESCRIPTION—ELEMENTS—EXCLUSIVE USER.

It was not necessary, in order to make plaintiff's adverse use of an irrigation ditch across defendant's land exclusive, that all other persons were prevented from using the ditch, so long as plaintiff's use thereof was not disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

4. EASEMENTS (§ 7*)—PRESCRIPTION—PERIOD.

In order to claim the use of an irrigation ditch across defendant's land by adverse user, plaintiff's use thereof must have been continuous and uninterrupted for five years prior to the commencement of his action to enjoin the obstruction of his user.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. EASEMENTS (§ 7*)—PRESCRIPTION—CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION—"CONTINUOUS ADVERSE USER."

An adverse use of an irrigation ditch during the cropping season only constitutes a "continuous adverse user," as its nonuser when the water is not needed does not interfere with the continuity of use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

6. EASEMENTS (§ 5*)—PRESCRIPTION—NECESSITY OF PAYING TAXES.

Where an irrigation ditch across defendant's land which plaintiff claimed the use of by adverse user was not assessed apart from the land, or at all, payment of taxes by plaintiff was not necessary to establish adverse user.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

7. TAXATION (§ 66*)—PROPERTY TAXABLE—EASEMENT.

An easement need not be assessed apart from the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 151; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

8. EASEMENTS (§ 36*)—PRESCRIPTION—ACTIONS TO PROTECT RIGHTS—INJUNCTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a suit to enjoin interference with an irrigation ditch across defendant's land, which plaintiff claimed the right to use by adverse user, since an easement need not be assessed apart from the land, the burden was on defendant to show that the ditch was so assessed if he claimed that payment of taxes thereon by plaintiff was necessary to establish adverse user.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 89; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

9. EASEMENTS (§ 8*)—PRESCRIPTION—KNOWLEDGE AND ACQUIESCENCE—"ACQUIESCENCE."

In order to establish a right to use an irrigation ditch by prescription, the right must have been asserted with the knowledge and acquiescence of the landowner, but "acquiescence," which commonly means an affirmative permission or consent, in addition to knowledge of the hostile claim, need not be shown independently of knowledge; and, if the owner has knowledge thereof which the law imputed to him, and takes no steps to prevent the adverse claimant from his continuous enjoyment of the right, he is deemed to have acquiesced in such use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 23, 24; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 110-112.]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS DECIDED—QUESTIONS UNNECESSARY TO DECISION.

In an action to enjoin defendant from obstructing an irrigation ditch across defendant's land and land now owned by plaintiff, whether defendant, in constructing the ditch, is estopped to deny that it did not become appurtenant to plaintiff's land need not be determined on appeal, where plaintiff was held entitled to use the ditch by adverse possession.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3331, 3341; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Frank V. Silva against C. H. Hawn. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. D. Edwards and M. K. Harris, for appellant. Sutherland & Barbour, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to restrain defendant from obstructing the flow of water in an irrigating ditch, and plaintiff's use thereof, and to have the court decree that the said ditch is appurtenant to plaintiff's land. Plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant appeals on bill of exceptions.

Plaintiff is the owner of sections 17 and 20 in township 13 S., range 19 E., in Fresno county, and defendant is the owner of the N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 16 in said township. It will thus be seen that defendant's land lies northeast from plaintiff's land, and one-half mile from the east line of section 17. Adjoining section 16 on the north is section 9. Plaintiff claims an easement by prescriptive right over defendant's land, as appurtenant to plaintiff's land, for an irrigating ditch which receives its water from the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company at a point in section 9, thence crossing defendant's land and the intermediate land in section 16, running in a southwesterly direction to sections 17 and 20.

The court made the following findings: (1) That plaintiff has been the owner of sections 17 and 20 above described for more than 5 years last past. (2) That said land is irrigated from the canal of the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company on the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 9 (above mentioned) through and over the N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 16 (above mentioned). (3) That said ditch was constructed more than 10 years prior to the commencement of this action by a predecessor in title of plaintiff, for the purpose of irrigating the land now owned by plaintiff, and ever since its construction said ditch has been used by the plaintiff and his predecessor in title for the purpose of irrigating alfalfa, trees, and vines and other growth upon the said land. (4) "That such user of said ditch by plaintiff was open, notorious; was hostile to the title of the defendant and the predecessor in title of defendant; was under claim of right by the plaintiff, as an appurtenance to the said sections 17 and 20; and was continuous and uninterrupted for a period of more than 5 years prior to the commencement of this action, and immediately prior to the month of August, 1907." (5) That during the month of August, 1907, defendant was the owner and in possession of said N.  $\frac{1}{2}$  of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of said section 16, "and that while so the owner and in possession, and during said month of August, the defendant erected an obstruction in said ditch by reason of which obstruction water was prevented, for a period of one week, from passing through said ditch to the said sections 17 and 20," by reason whereof plaintiff "was deprived of all water necessary to irrigate certain alfalfa, trees, and vines then growing on said sections 17 and 20, and that the defendant (plaintiff?) was damaged thereby in the sum of one dollar." The court by its decree adjudged that said ditch is an appurtenance to said sections 17 and 20, and that plaintiff has the right to the uninterrupted flow of water from the said main canal of the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, through the same, and that defendant be forever enjoined from interfering therewith. Defendant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support findings 2, 3, 4, and 5, above stated. No question arises as to plaintiff's right to water. Defendant objects to his use of the ditch to get it. This case presents the not unfamiliar, and sometimes perplexing, difficulty of determining whether there is a substantial conflict in material portions of the testimony. We have examined the record with sufficient care to convince us that such conflict exists here. We are also satisfied that the findings have support in the evidence.

There was evidence tending to show that plaintiff went into possession as tenant of sections 17 and 20 in November, 1900, and continued to occupy the land as such tenant until October, 1902, when he became the purchaser of the land, and was at the commencement of the action its owner; that when he took possession the ditch in question was constructed, and was in use to bring water to the land for irrigation purposes thereon, and that he continued to so use it from year to year without obstruction until August, 1907, when defendant placed a dam in said ditch on his land in section 16, whereupon plaintiff brought this action. There is evidence that the ditch was originally constructed by the superintendent of the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company, and he so testified, from the main canal over the land now owned by defendant (the ownership then not appearing) and to the east line of sections 17 and 20, and that it was for the purpose of supplying water to those sections for irrigation. This was about the year 1893. This witness also testified that the ditch was used to carry water to these sections, and was so used continuously while he remained with the company, which was up to the year 1902. He testified: "I never followed the ditch through since it was built. Up to five years ago [the trial was in December, 1907], the flow of the water ditch was continuous so far as I know. I passed there every few days. That ditch always had its share. It has always demanded water." Witness Emery testified that he was ditch tender for the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company. He testified: "I am acquainted with this ditch. It was there before I went there 8 years ago. I go over it one or two times a week at the head. It has been running water for 8 years that I know of, off and on. Sometimes they would turn it off, for there ain't much irrigated in that ditch, and when they wanted it they would go and get the water. Previous to the 9th of last August [he was testifying in December] there was no obstruction in that ditch while I was on the ditch. That ditch irrigates part of section 16. There is a water right on that, and about all of 17 and 20, and then some south of there. The ditch must be close on to four miles. It forks in the center of 17, one running straight southwest, and the other turning the other way. I went there in 1904, I believe it was, and cleaned the ditch from one end to the other. I did this work for the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company." He testified on cross-examination that he was on defendant's land in section 16 in 1899 or 1900, and Clark, defendant's son-in-law, was there. He told witness "he would not allow any water turned on. He didn't say who he was there for. He said nobody should turn water through there." He was asked how this conversation came about, and answered: "Mr. Silva asked me for water, and I am supposed to turn the water on. Generally I turned the water out, and let it go. He told me this, and the water was still going along through just the same. I don't ask a man whether I can turn water through the ditch or not. I turn the water on at the head, and let it go itself. Clark turned it off; I turned it on again several times. That was 1899 or 1900. He said he didn't want any water to run through to Mr. Silva. I represented the water company."

Witness Murray testified that since December, 1903, he has been in possession of land in section 30, a mile south of plaintiff's land, and that water was then running in this ditch to plaintiff's land, and that witness built a ditch to his land connecting with the ditch in question in 1904, and has used this ditch continuously ever since to irrigate his land, and never had any difficulty in getting water from the ditch. He testified that in 1904 he was at the headgate several times, and no one was using the ditch above Silva's land, that he was on Silva's place in 1902, in July, and that "there was water on Silva's place at the time coming through the ditch, but didn't know whether it was being used for irrigation or not." Plaintiff testified that he irrigated alfalfa and grain, and every year after he took possession of the land, and in later years some trees and vines and grain. That his use of the ditch was open, notorious, under claim of right and with the knowledge of defendant and adversely to him we think may be inferred from the circumstances and facts appearing in the case.

It appeared that defendant was, some years before plaintiff took possession of sections 17 and 20, himself a tenant of this land under its then owner. His testimony was that he built the ditch throughout its entire length to this land for irrigating purposes, and so used it during his tenancy. That he did build that part running over sections 17 and 20 is not contradicted, but his testimony that he built from the main canal to this land was in conflict with Church's testimony, and the court accepted that of the latter witness. However, defendant afterwards, about the year 1899, took possession of the land in section 16 under lease, and by himself or by his son-in-law, Clark, remained in control up to 1904 or 1905, when Clark left the place, and defendant purchased the land in June, 1907. Defendant was absent from the county after 1900, but Clark had control of the land in section 16, and was defendant's agent. The ditch, as first constructed by Church, and extended over sections 17 and 20 by defendant, was never abandoned, and was in use by a tenant who succeeded defendant, and also when plaintiff took possession, and was by him thenceforward used for irrigating purposes. This fact is also much contested on which, as elsewhere, the evidence is in conflict. Bearing upon this point, defendant introduced witnesses to show that Clark, representing him, placed a dam in the ditch, on section 16, in the year 1902 or 1903, which completely obstructed the flow of water, and that if plaintiff got any water after that, it was only seepage water. But here again the evidence was in conflict, both as to there being a dam sufficient to materially interrupt the flow of water, and as to the quantity of water. It was not shown that seepage in the alleged dam would at all account for the water flowing through to plaintiff's land, and further south to other land; and plaintiff testified that there was no obstruction in the ditch such as claimed until in 1907, which gave rise to this suit.

There was evidence that plaintiff spoke to Clark about purchasing a right to use the ditch, which it is claimed was an admission by plaintiff of defendant's right, and that plaintiff was not claiming any right in himself. Plaintiff testified to this as follows: "I had that talk with Clark one time about 1903. I had that talk with Clark one time when I came up the ditch to take water down; and I asked him to write to Hawn, and see what Hawn would sell me an interest in the ditch for. Afterwards Clark reported that Hawn wanted $500. I told him I would not give him anything. * * * After he wrote and said he wanted $500, I told him I wouldn't give him anything. Just because Hawn used to claim the ditch I told him I did not want to have any trouble; I would buy a little interest if he owned it. * * * After I had this talk with Mr. Clark about paying for water in the ditch, I used it just as I did before." This episode by no means establishes a conclusive recognition of defendant's right on the part of plaintiff. It seems rather to have been an attempt by plaintiff to avoid trouble by purchasing his peace, which came to nothing, and tended to show that plaintiff rested upon his own right in the end.

The elements essential to the establishment of a prescriptive right will be briefly noticed. They are as claimed by appellant, and are well settled.

The user by plaintiff, during the irrigation season, was actual, open, notorious, and not clandestine. This appears clearly by the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses and the use was so open that defendant, or his agent, Clark, could not have failed to note the fact, and, if not, was such as to put him upon inquiry, which was enough. De Frieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653, 30 Pac. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151.

The element of hostility appears, not only from plaintiff's evidence, but from that of Clark, who testified for the defendant. The case of Strong v. Baldwin, 137 Cal. 438, 70 Pac. 288, relied on by appellant, is in many respects similar in its facts to those here, and is an instructive case. It differs in this: That the adverse claimant in that case paid to the owner of the land through which the ditch passed an annual rental for the privilege of using the ditch. The element of hostility was held to have been fully rebutted by this fact.

Plaintiff's claim of title was as his own, and exclusive of any other right. This requirement does not mean that all other persons were excluded from the use of the ditch, so long as plaintiff's right was not taken from him. Strong v. Baldwin, supra. Plaintiff claimed the right to use the ditch for irrigating his own land, and it is immaterial that others also had a right to use it.

It was also requisite that the use should be continuous and uninterrupted for 5 years prior to the commencement of the action. The evidence was that plaintiff used the water whenever he needed it for irrigating purposes, and among these uses was that of watering alfalfa, grain, trees, and vines. "The adverse user of an irrigating ditch through the lands of the owner only during the cropping season, the ditch not being needed at other times, constitutes a continuous adverse user, as the omission to use when not needed, does not break the continuity of use." Hesperia, etc., Co. v. Rogers, 83 Cal. 10, 23 Pac. 196, 17 Am. St. Rep. 209.

Nothing appeared in the case to show that the ditch was assessed for taxation separate from the land, or at all. It was not, therefore, necessary to show payment of taxes. Harvey v. Meyer, 117 Cal. 60, 48 Pac. 1014.

The law does not require an easement to be assessed, and the burden was on defendant to show that it had been assessed. Oneto v. Restano, 78 Cal. 374, 379, 20 Pac. 743.

The right must have been asserted under claim of title with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the land. Plaintiff's claim of right clearly appeared. Defendant's knowledge and acquiescence of plaintiff's claim may well have been inferred from the facts. This was a matter "for the court to determine as a fact in the light of the relations between the parties and of the surrounding circumstances." Franz v. Mendonca, 131 Cal. 205, 63 Pac. 361; Id., 146 Cal. 640, 80 Pac. 1078. I do not understand that the element of "acquiescence" is to be shown independently of knowledge, in the common acceptance of that term; i. e., that an affirmative permission or consent be given in addition to knowledge of the hostile claim of right. If the owner has the knowledge which the law requires shall be imputed to him, and takes no steps to prevent the adverse claimant from his continuous enjoyment of the right claimed by him, such owner will be deemed to have acquiesced in such use. This court had occasion in a recent case to consider the point, in which the rule was stated. It was there said: "No particular act, or series of acts, is necessary to be done in order that the possession may be notorious, but any visible act which clearly demonstrates an intention to claim ownership and possession will be sufficient to establish claim of adverse possession. Such claim may be made out by visible acts, without any assertions by word of mouth. When the use is not secret or clandestine, but open, visible, and notorious, the presumption of knowledge follows. The burden is in the first instance upon the plaintiff to prove his title by prescription. After showing the continuous occupancy and use of the water, as though he were the owner, for more than 5 years, he establishes a prima facie case. It then devolves upon the defendant to show that the use was permissive, or without the knowledge of the defendant." Gurnsey v. Antelope Creek, etc., Co., 6 Cal. App. 387, 92 Pac. 328.

We have thus taken up the several elements claimed by appellant to be requisite to a good prescriptive right. We think they are shown to have been sufficiently established by the evidence as found by the trial court.

The testimony of defendant was that he constructed the ditch at least over sections 17 and 20 to irrigate that land. He testified also that he built it along its entire length, and, if true, it is claimed by plaintiff (so far as defendant can now deny) that he did so presumably with the consent of intervening landowners. The court found that water has flowed continuously in the ditch since its construction. In this state of facts plaintiff now claims that "defendant cannot, without strengthening plaintiff's claim of adverse user, deny that in constructing this ditch he did so with the consent of the owners of the land traversed by the ditch; and, having as plaintiff's predecessor in title, constructed the ditch for the benefit of sections 17 and 20, he is estopped now, as between himself and the owner of that land, to contend that the ditch did not thereby become an appurtenance." We are not prepared to say that in this contention plaintiff is not correct. It is not necessary, however, to decide the question.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 553

COX v. HUGHES et al. (Civ. 585.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 7, 1909.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 13*)—FUTURE EARNINGS—EXISTING CONTRACTS.

An assignment of wages to be earned under an existing employment is valid, though the assignor is hired for no specified time and is removable at will, but a present employment will not support an assignment of earnings from a different and future employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 34*)—REVOCA-TION OF POWER OF ATTORNEY — POWER COUPLED WITH INTEREST.

A power of attorney authorizing another to assign future earnings from an existing employment which declared that the power was coupled with an interest and was irrevocable could not be revoked while the employment continued until the debt was discharged, but could be revoked as to earnings from a future employment, since the assignor himself then had no interest therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. EQUITY (§ 66*)—MAXIMS—ONE SEEKING EQUITY MUST DO EQUITY.

Plaintiff executed to defendant a power of attorney, coupled with an interest and irrevocable, authorizing defendant to assign future earnings from plaintiff's existing employment and from any future employment that he might procure until money which defendant advanced to plaintiff in good faith had been paid. Held that, though the power of attorney was invalid at law in so far as it attempted to assign earnings from a future employment, the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity will be applied, and plaintiff cannot enjoin the exercise of the power unless he pays defendant the money due him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 188-190; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

4. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 11*) — VALIDITY — PUBLIC POLICY — ASSIGNMENT OF FUTURE EARNINGS.

A contract by which future earnings from existing and future employments are assigned is not void as against public policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 19-23; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. CONTRACTS (§ 108*)—VALIDITY—CONTRARY TO PUBLIC POLICY.

Courts should declare contracts void as contravening public policy only when the question is free from doubt, and a contract, not wrong in itself, should not be held void on that ground unless the benefit to the public is substantial, and not merely theoretical or problematical.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 498; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Albert W. Cox against A. S. Hughes and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Berry & Brady, for appellants. Albert A. Rosenheim, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The complaint alleges that on or about the 2d day of January, 1906, plaintiff executed a certain written instrument, which is set forth in the complaint, and which is designated and in fact is a power of attorney. Therein the defendant A. S. Hughes was authorized, among other things, "to fill in, execute, or complete, any sale or assignment of wages or salary, claim, or demand now due or to become due me from any future employer, person, firm or corporation, to the extent of my indebtedness to the said Star Loan Company, which said sale or assignment may date from the time of my said new employment, in case I should engage my services to other than my present employer; to execute, alter, change, fill in or complete, any form as he may see fit, any contract, sale or assignment of wages, drafts, orders, bills of exchange, executed by me to, with, or for the Star Loan Company to which I am indebted, upon any person, firm or corporation, in whose service I now am or shall at any time be engaged for any amount that I shall at any time be indebted to the said Star Loan Company. * * * It being distinctly understood and agreed that this power of attorney shall be irrevocable, the same being coupled with an interest while I shall in any wise be and remain indebted to the Star Loan Company or its assigns, on any contract, and I hereby grant to my said attorney full power of substitution hereby ratifying for myself and representatives whatever my said attorney shall do by virtue of the powers and privileges granted by these presents."

It is further alleged: That at said time plaintiff signed a large number of blank instruments purporting to be assignments to defendant the Star Loan Company as well as powers of attorney; the instruments so signed being set out in the complaint. That defendant Hughes did on August 1, 1907, change, alter, and fill in one of the said assignments by inserting in the blanks therein the name of the employer, "Newman & Levinson, Sutter and Van Ness avenue, City," the term of employment, "the weeks ending August 3d, 10th, 17th, 24th, and 31st, 1907," and, in addition thereto, inserted and filled in "August 1st, 1907." The instrument so filled in is set out in full in the complaint. That on said January 2, 1906, plaintiff was in the employ of the Emporium and entered the employment of Newman & Levinson on the 5th day of October, 1906, where he was working at the time the defendant Hughes filled in the blank instrument and at the time the complaint was filed. That on the 15th day of August, 1907, plaintiff revoked the power of attorney and filed the revocation in the county recorder's office. That defendant Hughes refuses to recognize the revocation. Plaintiff therefore prays for an order restraining defendant Hughes from exercising any power under said power of attorney, directing that said instrument be canceled, and that the Star Loan Company be restrained from acting under any of the said assignments. Defendants demurred to the complaint, and their demurrer was overruled. They filed an answer in which they alleged that, at the time of the execution of said power of attorney from plaintiff to Hughes, the said plaintiff executed and delivered to defendant the Star Loan Company two promissory notes, one for $120, the other for $207. That thereafter he executed two other notes. That the aggregate amount due on those notes is $336 and interest, and that since the execution of said power of attorney plaintiff has been continuously indebted to the Star Loan Company on said notes. That defendant Hughes is and was at all times mentioned in the complaint the general manager of said company in the state of California, and that the power of attorney and assignments were given by plaintiff to secure the payment of the notes. Plaintiff demurred to this answer upon the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense. The demurrer was sustained, and judgment was entered for plaintiff as prayed for, from which judgment the appeal is taken.

The main points of controversy may be presented as follows: Respondent, in the first place, insists that we are dealing with a power of attorney which attempts to assign wages and salary to become due from any future employer by virtue of contracts of employment not in existence at the date of the execution of the alleged power of attorney, and that such an attempt is illegal and void as against public policy. Appellants admit that an assignment of wages to be earned in the future where there is no existing contract of employment is invalid because the assignor has no present interest, but they claim that there was an existing contract, and therefore that the possibility of obtaining such future earnings, though contingent and liable to be defeated, was coupled with an interest, and hence it was a vested right.

Among the cases cited by respondent in support of his contention, which may be taken as fairly illustrative of all, is Lehigh V. R. Co. v. Woodring, 116 Pa. 522, 9 Atl. 61, wherein it is said: "The attempt was to assign that which had no existence, either substantial or incipient. There was no foundation or contract on which an indebtedness might arise. It was the mere possibility of a subsequent acquisition of property. This is too vague and uncertain. It cannot be sustained as a valid assignment and transfer of property." The case was an action at law brought by the creditor to recover on the assignment; and, as the assignment did not transfer the mere possibility, it was rightly held that there was no sufficient basis for the suit. On the contrary, when there is an existing employment, the rule is as stated in 2 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1031: "An assignment of wages or salary to be earned under an existing employment made in good faith and for a valuable consideration is valid. It is immaterial in such a case that the assignor works from day to day, and is hired for no specified time, or that he works by the piece, and his wages per month vary, or that he is removable at any time." Indeed, we have the same principle enunciated in the provisions of the Civil Code. Section 1044 provides that "property of any kind may be transferred, except as otherwise provided by this article." And section 1045: "A mere possibility, not coupled with an interest, cannot be transferred." The chance that A. may be employed some time in the future by B., and thereby earn wages, is, of course, a mere possibility not coupled with an interest, and it does not possess the element of negotiability. But, if the employment already exists, the wages to be earned from such employment, although a mere possibility, is coupled with an interest in A., and therefore assignable under the Code and the authorities. The proposition is so obvious as to require no further exposition.

In the light of the foregoing, it is clear that at the time of the execution of the said power of attorney by plaintiff he had no assignable interest in the wages or salary that he might thereafter earn from his employment by Newman & Levinson. Appellants are entirely mistaken in their contention that an existing employment by the Emporium changes the rule as to Newman & Levinson. It is the wages or salary that may be earned from the existing employment that can be assigned for the reason stated. But an existing employment can be no support for the assignment of what may possibly be earned from some other employment. If plaintiff could not legally assign the wages to accrue from a possible employment by Newman & Levinson, it must follow that he could not authorize any one else to make such assignment. This will not be disputed. Hence, if we were only concerned with the question of the legal sufficiency on said January 2, 1906, of the assignment or of the power of attorney attempting to authorize said assignment of said wages, the conclusion would be irresistible that respondent's position must be upheld.

Some other questions, however, demand attention. The revocation of said power of attorney is said also by respondent to justify the court's conclusion. Herein is a sharp issue between the parties involving the power of revocation. It is agreed that as a general rule the principal may revoke the authority of his agent so far as it relates to things concerning which the agency has not been executed, but that an exception exists where, as provided in section 2356 of the Civil Code, the power of the agent is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency. As to the meaning of "a power coupled with an interest" Chief Justice Marshall has this to say in Hunt v. Rousmanier's Administrators, 21 U. S. 174, 5 L. Ed. 589: "A power coupled with an interest must be an interest in the thing itself. The power must be ingrafted on an estate in the thing. The power and interest are united in the same person. The interest or title in the thing being vested in the person who gives the power remains in him unless it be conveyed with the power and can pass out of him only by a regular act in his own name." In Norton v. Whitehead, 84 Cal. 270, 24 Pac. 156, 18 Am. St. Rep. 172, it is said: "The power of attorney also provides that it is irrevocable; and, although this is not conclusive, it nevertheless tends to prove that plaintiff had an interest in the subject-matter upon which it was to operate." Here the plaintiff declared the power to be coupled with an interest and irrevocable, and it was given as security for the payment of an indebtedness. The appellants had an interest in what was the subject-matter at the time of its execution, to wit, the wages to be earned from the existing employment. It is therefore clear that the power could not be revoked while that employment existed unless the debt were discharged. But, as we have already seen, plaintiff himself had no legal interest in the wages to be received from Newman & Levinson until the beginning of said employment. Prior to that time, therefore, he could not legally invest any one with an interest in said wages. Hence, up to the time of the second employment appellants' power of attorney, as far as the wages due from Newman & Levinson are concerned, was not coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency, and, in the absence of other circumstances, could be revoked. But, when the attempt was made to revoke it, the second employment had begun, and the agent had made an assignment while said employment was in existence. It may be that the door was thereby opened for the operation of the principle of ratification or estoppel, or of the application of section 2356, Civ. Code, that would preclude the attempted revocation from affecting the assignments already made, but we need not decide this minor phase of the question at issue as at any rate a comprehensive view of the nature of the original transaction and the character of the present action in the light of the principles of equity compels the conclusion, we think, that the judgment is erroneous.

The facts disclosed either expressly or by implication in the pleadings are that defendants advanced money to plaintiff upon the faith and assurance based upon a solemn promise in writing that defendants should be allowed to appropriate as they deemed advisable the future earnings of plaintiff until the debt was satisfied. Confiding in plaintiff's plighted honor, defendants advanced more money to respondent. We must assume that no advantage was taken of plaintiff, that there was no overreaching, no misrepresentation, no concealment, nothing unconscionable in the transaction; in other words, no infraction whatever of the principles of honesty and fair dealing. Indeed, it must have been a great accommodation to plaintiff for defendants to advance the money upon such uncertain security and without exacting excessive interest. After receiving the benefit of the confidence reposed in his fidelity, a court of equity will not aid plaintiff in the repudiation of his agreement, and will not unqualifiedly decree the cancellation of the written evidence of his moral obligation. Admitting the legal invalidity of the transaction to the extent that we have noted, and that defendants could not in an action at law recover the wages due from the Newman & Levinson employment, still, under the facts disclosed, plaintiff is entitled to no relief in this equitable action unless he is willing to pay defendants what is due. This follows from the familiar maxim of equity jurisprudence that he who seeks equity must do equity.

How does the matter appear in the light of the authorities? In Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1285, it is said: "Neither the English nor the American statutes allow the legal assignment of mere naked possibilities or expectations not coupled with an interest. The jurisdiction of equity continues to be exclusive over all other assignments of contingent, future, expectant interests and possibilities not embraced within this legislation"; and in section 1287: "And furthermore, possibilities not coupled with an interest—mere possibilities or expectancies—which are not embraced within these statutes are, according to the general course of decision, assignable in equity for a valuable consideration; and equity will enforce the assignment when the possibility or expectancy has changed into a vested interest or possession." Section 1288: "A particular instance of this doctrine is that which deals with the assignment of property to be acquired in the future. * * * A sale, assignment or mortgage, for a valuable consideration, of chattels or other personal property to be acquired at a future time, operates as an equitable assignment, and vests an equitable ownership of the chattels in the purchaser or mortgagee as soon as they are acquired by the vendor or mortgagor, without any further act on the part of either; and this ownership a court of equity will protect and maintain at the suit of the equitable assignee." It is further held that the doctrine of equitable assignment of property to be acquired in future is much broader than the jurisdiction to compel the specific performance of contracts. Section 1297 is also instructive as to the enforcement of certain contracts in equity.

Again, the same learned author interprets the maxim to which we have adverted to mean "that whatever be the nature of the controversy between two definite parties, and whatever be the nature of the remedy demanded, the court will not confer its equitable relief upon the party seeking its interposition and aid unless he has acknowledged and conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims and demands justly belonging to the adversary party, and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject-matter of the controversy." Section 385. Among the illustrations of the doctrine is the following: "Under statutes against usury, which make void all usurious debts and obligations, the debtor may maintain a suit in equity for the purpose of procuring the usurious bond or other security to be surrendered up and canceled; but this relief will only be granted upon the condition that the plaintiff does equity by repaying to his creditor the amount which was actually loaned upon the security." It is properly declared that the principle pervades the entire equity jurisprudence so far as it is concerned with the administration of equitable remedies. In Ency. of Law, supra, p. 1032, it is declared that "there can be no valid assignment of future wages where they constitute a mere possibility coupled with no interest. * * * But, speaking generally, it may be said that such assignments are valid in equity when the consideration is meritorious and no rights of third parties intervene." Judge Story states the rule in section 1040 of his work on Equity Jurisprudence as follows: "But courts of equity will support assignments not only of choses in action and of contingent interests and expectancies, but also of things which have no present actual or potential existence, but rest in mere possibility; not, indeed, as a present positive transfer operative in præsent, for that can only be of a thing in esse, but as a present contract—to take effect and attach as soon as the thing comes in esse." In Field v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 6 N. Y. 179, 57 Am. Dec. 435, it is held that "the assignment of money to be earned by performance of a contract for work and materials, although a mere possibility, cannot operate immediately, but it becomes operative in equity when the subject-matter becomes existent or due." In Edwards v. Peterson, 80 Me. 367, 14 Atl. 936, 6 Am. St. Rep. 207, it is held that an assignment of wages expected to be earned in the future in a specified employment, though not under an existing employment or contract, is valid in equity. The same principle is announced in the case of In re Garcelon, 104 Cal. 584, 38 Pac. 417, 32 L. R. A. 595, 42 Am. St. Rep. 134, where reference is made to sections 700 and 1045 of the Civil Code, and it is declared that: "These sections simply state the well-settled and well-understood rule of the common law upon the subject to which they relate. At common law a mere possibility, such as the expectancy of an heir, was not regarded as such an existing interest as to be the subject of a sale or capable of passing by assignment; but in equity the rule was different, and agreements for the sale or release of expectancies, if fairly made and for an adequate consideration, were enforced upon the death of the ancestor, and in our opinion it was not the intention of the Legislature in enacting the sections of the Code just referred to to make any change in the rule by which courts of equity were heretofore governed in dealing with this class of contracts." The only possible answer to the foregoing is that a contract to assign future wages or salary is against public policy, and therefore void. But this position cannot be maintained. There is a marked difference in the case of a public official for the reason that the assignment of his salary to be earned tends to impair the efficiency of the public service, and therefore it is generally held to be void in law and equity as being against public policy. In the case of Smith v. Atkins, 18 Vt. 461, it is said: "It is argued that such contracts are so much against public policy that they ought not to be supported, but we think they are rather beneficial and enable the poor man to obtain credit when he could not otherwise do it, and that without detriment to the creditors." In Mallin v. Wenham, 209 Ill. 258, 70 N. E. 566, 65 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 233, it is said: "We cannot see that there is anything intrinsically vicious in an assignment of wages. The assignor in such case simply draws upon his future prospects to supply present needs, which may be of the most urgent and pressing character. There is no law in this state to prevent a poor person from mortgaging or pledging any or every article of property he possesses, as security for his debts, and such a privilege may be of great value." A person has the same right to assign his wages as he has to mortgage his homestead or to mortgage personal property that is exempt from execution. If he does not choose to avail himself of the liberal exemptions which the statute provides, the courts cannot interfere in his behalf. It is universally held, as stated by Greenhood on Public Policy, that: "The power of the courts to declare a contract void for being in contravention of sound public policy is a very delicate and undefined power, and, like the power to declare a statute unconstitutional, should be exercised only in cases free from doubt." Before a court should declare a contract not malum in se opposed to sound public policy, it must be entirely satisfied that the public will be substantially benefited, and that such advantage is not merely theoretical or problematical.

Of course, if there was any element of fraud in the transaction by which defendants secured the power of attorney and assignments in controversy, the plaintiff should be permitted to amend his complaint and so allege, but, as the record shows, he has come into a court of equity relying upon his naked legal right without tendering or offering to pay what is justly due appellants, and not showing himself entitled to the generous aid of this comprehensive jurisdiction that looks to the morality and good faith of the transaction, and therefore we are satisfied the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint and sustaining the demurrer to the answer.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 637

KERN COUNTY BRICK & CONTRACT CO.
v. ENGLISH. (Civ. 619.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 24, 1909.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 217*)—ACTION AGAINST PARTNER—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the price of goods, evidence held to sustain a finding that the goods were sold to a firm consisting of defendant and another, and not to defendant individually.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

2. PARTNERSHIP (§ 219*)—ACTION AGAINST PARTNER—JUDGMENT AGAINST FIRM.

Where plaintiff elected to sue defendant as an individual for supplies furnished a firm of which defendant was a member, and objected to the filing of an amendment to the answer, pleading that the materials were sold to the firm, and not to defendant, plaintiff could not be compelled to take judgment against the firm on service on defendant as an individual.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 429-445; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County;
Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by the Kern County Brick & Contract Company against John P. English. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Rowen Irwin, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in defendant's favor and against plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial. The action was brought by plaintiff against defendant, English, to recover the price and value of certain brick and other building material alleged to have been sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant between December, 1903, and June, 1904. Defendant denied the sale and delivery to him of said material, or that he ever agreed to pay therefor the price named or any sum. Upon the trial of the action the court found the allegations of the complaint to be untrue and the allegations of the answer to be true. In addition to this, the court found that, at the time the goods mentioned in the complaint were sold and delivered, a partnership existed between the defendant and one Farnum, during the existence of which partnership said Farnum was the managing agent of the corporation plaintiff; that the materials set out in the complaint were furnished to such partnership through Farnum, the managing agent of plaintiff, and that, without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, Farnum had wrongfully caused the materials and supplies to be charged on the books of plaintiff to the defendant; that prior to the commencement of the action the partnership had paid to plaintiff the price and value of all goods received, other than the value of certain goods returned, and that there was no sum due from said partnership to plaintiff, and judgment was accordingly rendered in defendant's favor for costs.

Upon this appeal the only question presented by the briefs relates to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. The general finding that defendant, English, never individually purchased the materials mentioned in the complaint, received the same, nor promised to pay for the same, has ample support from the evidence. There is evidence in the record to the effect that, before the sale or delivery of any of the goods mentioned in the complaint, defendant, English, and Farnum engaged in the contracting business under an agreement through which Farnum was to furnish all the materials, and defendant, English, who was a brick mason, was to receive $6 a day for his labor, and that, if any profits remained after the materials and labor were paid for, the same should be equally divided; that Farnum, when he entered into this arrangement, was the general manager of plaintiff, and his arrangement and agreement with English was known to the president of plaintiff. It further appears that after this agreement was entered into Farnum, as such general manager, shipped from the yards of plaintiff the materials set out in the complaint to the various points where the partnership was engaged in work; that Farnum made the contracts for the work to be performed by the partnership, and collected practically all the money due on account of the materials so furnished, as well as for the labor performed, defendant, English, collecting an amount insufficient to pay for his labor. English never ordered any of the goods or materials which were used in the contracting work, nor had he any notice or knowledge of the fact that Farnum was using plaintiff's materials in the prosecution of the work until after the supplies had been delivered and used in the work. As a fact, Farnum caused the goods supplied by him under his agreement to be charged to defendant, English, upon plaintiff's books, but this was all without the knowledge or consent of defendant, English, who repudiated the same promptly upon information being brought home to him. If it were to be assumed that the court might in a proper case, of its own motion, direct that a member of a partnership not made a party to the action be brought in, and perhaps in some cases must do so, rather than that a mistrial may result (Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 620, 11 Pac. 456), this is not true of a case such as we have here under consideration. The plaintiff having elected to bring its action against English as an individual, and having objected to the filing of an amendment to the answer setting up that the materials were sold to the partnership, and not to English, cannot be compelled to take judgment against a partnership based upon the service of summons on English as an individual. It was entitled to and did litigate the issue presented as to whether English individually was indebted to it or not, and the court held that he was not. The finding that the debt was the debt of the partnership was but incidental to the finding that it was not the debt of English.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 619

STULL v. BENEDICT et al. (CHAPMAN, Intervener). (Civ. 511.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 19, 1909.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 45*)—GUARDIAN DE SON TORT—RIGHTS OF GUARDIAN.

The mother and natural guardian of a minor who had no general guardian loaned $2,400 of his money, taking a note therefor, together with a mortgage and note for $3,000 as collateral. Subsequently she pledged the two notes and the mortgage as collateral to secure $1,500 borrowed on her own account from a third person who obtained a judgment directing a delivery of the papers to the mother on her paying the $1,500 note within a specified time after notice of entry of judgment. No notice of entry of judgment was given. The $2,400 and $3,000 notes were subsequently assigned to the infant, who sued to foreclose the mortgage. Held, that a judgment foreclosing the mortgage and directing that the third person should receive $1,500 with interest from the proceeds of the sale, and that the residue should be paid to the infant, was proper as against the mother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 138*)—GUARDIAN DE SON TORT—RIGHTS OF GUARDIAN.

A guardian de son tort is not entitled as a matter of right to an accounting where the interests of the beneficiary are in the judgment of a court of equity better subserved by specific relief as to the particular fund or property over which authority has been assumed by the person acting as such guardian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by Gertrude Stull against Charles E. Benedict and another, in which Wm. Chapman intervenes. From a judgment for defendants and intervener, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Taft & Odell and Gertrude Stull, for appellant. C. Lantz, Earle & Creede, O. P. Widaman, J. L. Fleming, and R. A. Odell, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from judgment foreclosing a mortgage. Plaintiff being the mother and natural guardian of the defendant Schiedt, now Tracey, a minor, without a general guardian, held the sum of $2,400 belonging to said minor, which she, plaintiff, loaned to the defendant Holway, taking his promissory note for that amount and an assignment of the mortgage foreclosed in this action and the note secured thereby for the sum of $3,000, as collateral. She thereupon hypothecated both the $3,000 note and mortgage given to secure it and the $2,400 note to the intervener, Chapman, to secure the payment of $1,500 which she borrowed from him through his agent Lantz on her own account, and made and delivered a written assignment of the mortgage to Chapman. The interest on the $3,000 note being in default, Chapman brought an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county to foreclose the mortgage in accordance with the terms thereof. Plaintiff here (Gertrude Stull) intervened in that action, and judgment was entered therein directing Chapman to deliver up and surrender to the said Gertrude Stull all the papers held by him as security for the payment of said $1,500 note upon payment or tender of payment to him of said sum of $1,500; the judgment expressly reciting that it was made without prejudice to the right of said Stull to bring another action to foreclose said mortgage. Chapman appealed from that judgment to the Supreme Court, and, the cause being transferred to this court for hearing and determination, the judgment was modified so that it was provided therein that if the intervener, Stull, should fail to pay to Chapman within 10 days after notice of entry of judgment the said sum of $1,500, her complaint in intervention should be dismissed, and plaintiff have leave to proceed with the action to foreclose the mortgage against the original parties. The judgment as so modified was affirmed. No notice of entry of judgment was ever given by Chapman, and the plaintiff Stull (intervener in the other action) brings this action to foreclose the mortgage, and Chapman intervenes.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The court in this action found that since the former action was tried the Holway note of $2,400 and the $3,000 note held as collateral security have been assigned to said defendant Tracey, who is now the owner and holder thereof, and that she is entitled to foreclose the said mortgage, and that, upon the sale of the mortgaged premises, the intervener, Chapman, is entitled to receive the sum of $1,500, with interest thereon from the date of the judgment of this court on the former appeal, out of the proceeds of such sale, the residue thereof to be paid to the defendant Tracey. The purpose of the appeal taken by the plaintiff in propria persona, as stated in the page and a half brief filed by her (which is the only brief filed in the case), is that "the judgment may be modified to follow plaintiff's complaint and for the usual findings in foreclosure cases." The points made are, "first, intervener had no further cause against plaintiff and appellant" than the one on the $1,500 note; "second, the pleadings of defendant Tracey show her only right against plaintiff and appellant was one for accounting under a trust which in this action the court could not consider." The answer to the first point is that the judgment of intervener against the appellant is limited to the $1,500. To the second, that a guardian de son tort is not entitled as a matter of right to have an accounting if the interests of the beneficiary are in the judgment of a court of equity better subserved by specific relief in respect to the particular fund or property over which authority has been assumed by the person acting as the guardian without appointment by the court.

We find nothing in the record to warrant any modification of the judgment at the instance of plaintiff, the appellant. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, .

10 Cal. App. 623

STEWART v. BURBRIDGE et al. (Civ. 574.
(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 20, 1909. Rehearing Denied
June 18, 1909.)

TRIAL (§ 404*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIONS—NONPAYMENT.

A finding of the court that there was "due and owing" from defendants to plaintiff a certain sum was a sufficient finding of nonpayment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by C. P. Stewart against O. H. Burbridge and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 101 Pac. 419.

Oscar A. Trippet, Arthur M. Ellis, and Alfred Siemon, for appellants. Woodruff & McClure, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. The appeal in this case is from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. The only error urged is that in finding of fact 4, which reads as follows: "That the said plaintiff has prior to the beginning of said action demanded of and from said defendants, and each of them, his proportion of said \$5,000, to wit, \$1,666 $\frac{2}{3}$  as a commission for making said sale, but that said defendants, and each of them, having failed, neglected, and refused, and still fails, neglects and refuses to pay said plaintiff the said sum of \$1,666 $\frac{2}{3}$  or any part thereof, and there now remains due and owing from the said defendants to the said plaintiff the sum of \$1,666 $\frac{2}{3}$  over and above all counter charges and offsets"—the words "due and owing" state a conclusion of law, and not a finding of fact. That the finding as so worded does not dispose of the issue of nonpayment essential to a judgment, and therefore the judgment lacks this finding of fact necessary to its support.

It is a matter of some surprise that counsel should ask this court to reverse a judgment upon this ground alone on the record in this case and upon the authority of Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 239, 67 Pac. 772, and Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 502, 23 Pac. 50, 227. In the latter case the court says that the finding that a sum was "due and owing" implied that the sum remained "unpaid" and this was held to be a sufficient finding of nonpayment. In the former case, Beatty, C. J., writing the opinion, in considering the case of Ryan v. Holliday, 110 Cal. 337, 42 Pac. 892, in which an allegation in a pleading that "there is now due and owing" was held to be a mere conclusion of law, and fatally defective when attacked on appeal from a judgment by default without a demurrer to the pleading having been interposed, says: "My opinion is that we should recede, not from the doctrine of that case—that in a suit upon a promise to pay an allegation of nonpayment is essential—but from what I conceive to have been a misapplication of a sound rule of pleading to a case it did not fit. There was not in that case, any more than there is here, a total failure to allege nonpayment. It is true that the allegation was made in the form of a legal conclusion, in which the material fact was merely implied; but, in the absence of any demurrer, such faults of pleading are cured by the judgment." Penrose v. Winter is recognized as of full weight and authority in the respect above quoted in the later cases of Knox v.

Buckman Co., 139 Cal. 598, 73 Pac. 428, and Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 Pac. 182. No other point being urged, and the one discussed being without merit, the judgment should be affirmed.

The appeal from the order having heretofore been dismissed by this court, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

103 PACIFIC REPORTER

10 Cal. App. 614

ANDREWS v. WHEELER et al. (Civ. 520.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 24, 1908. On Rehearing, May 19, 1909.
Denied by Supreme Court July 17, 1909.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—SURVEYS—MARKS ON THE GROUND.

Marks on the ground constitute the survey, and courses and distances are only evidence thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—FIXING BOUNDARIES—MONUMENTS—COURSES AND DISTANCES.

Though under Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, monuments control distances, where there is an inconsistency between the two as given in a deed, yet where no monuments were set, or if set have disappeared, and their location cannot be established, resort may be had to courses and distances to fix corners and boundary lines.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 7*)—CORNERS—LOCATION.

Where the call in a deed was to a corner as shown by a designated map, without referring to any other map or survey, and there were no data connected with the designated map showing that the surveyor in making the survey set any monuments marking lines or corners, on the ground, the fact that the surveyor, when making the survey for the map, set monuments fixing corners and lines could be established by parol, but, where such monuments were not set, the corner and division lines must be established by the description on the face of the map; field notes not being shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE.

Where the call in a deed was merely to a corner as shown by designated map, evidence referring to stakes set by others in making surveys of adjoining lands was inadmissible, as it did not identify monuments set by the surveyor in making the survey for the map, and it could not establish the boundary lines contrary to those called for by courses and distances shown on the map.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—ELEMENTS—RELATIVE IMPORTANCE.

Where a map of two lots shows that one lot contains a specified number of acres, without otherwise describing it, and that the other lot is defined by distances, the latter in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, takes precedence in location in case of conflict, in the absence of a showing of priority as to title, or field notes or monuments of the survey.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 53*)—SURVEYS.

Where parties claim land according to a plat made by a surveyor from an actual survey on the ground, a survey not made on the ground is not entitled to consideration in determining the boundaries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 264; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

7. BOUNDARIES (§ 55*)—ESTABLISHMENT—SURVEYS.

Where by actual measurement over the surface of lots from boundaries as fixed by a surveyor, who made an actual survey on the ground, there is an excess in distance over that specified in the map and called for in deeds conveying the land according to the map, the excess in the absence of any marking on the ground of the division line between the lots must be apportioned thereto in proportion to their respective lengths.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

8. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 90*)—PAYMENT OF TAXES—EFFECT.

The fact that for five years one paid taxes on the premises described in his deed cannot be construed as a payment of taxes on lands other than those described therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 517-519; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

On Rehearing.*9. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—MONUMENTS.

Where a surveyor at the time of making an actual survey marks the division lines on the ground by monuments, the lines so established control the calls and distances indicated on the map of the surveyor, and in deeds conveying the land according to the map.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

10. BOUNDARIES (§ 35*)—EVIDENCE.

Where a map, made by a surveyor, who made an actual survey on the ground, gave distances from streets referred to on the map, and the streets were not at the time of the survey located or used as indicated by the map, and there was no evidence of ascertained monuments of the survey on which the map was predicated, the court could receive the best evidence obtainable, and might ascertain the location of such stakes as were commonly recognized, accepted, and used in lieu of the lost or destroyed original ones, and in the absence of more certain evidence, such stakes established the boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 153; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The mere fact that a surveyor, in testifying as to the result of the survey made by him, states his conclusion as to the effect of his survey is not alone sufficient to entitle the aggrieved party to a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4153; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 340*)—TIME FOR PROCEEDINGS—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 1, the court, on an appeal not taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment, cannot review the sufficiency of the evidence, but is confined to its competency and admissibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1888; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by Lewis W. Andrews against Fred F. Wheeler and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant. Bernard Potter and Frank James, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action to quiet title, the purpose thereof, in fact, being to establish the division line between division A of lot 6 in block 26 of the canal and reservoir lands of the city of Los Angeles, as designated upon a map thereof made by William Moore in 1870, which said land is owned by plaintiff, and a tract of land lying immediately north thereof and adjoining, part of which is owned by defendants, and designated upon said map as division A of lot 3 of said block 26. Said divisions of said lots 6 and 3 extend from the south line of First street to the north line of Sixth street in said city of Los Angeles. The land in controversy consists of a strip about 16 feet in width, as to which each party, one by his complaint and the other by cross-complaint, prays that his title thereto be quieted against the other. The trial court rendered judgment for defendants, from which plaintiff appeals upon a bill of exceptions. In 1870 William Moore made a plat of these lands, which plat, it is stipulated, is the official map of the canal and reservoir lands, under and in accordance with which both parties deraign their title from the city of Los Angeles. Appended to this map, which was received in evidence, is the following certificate: "I hereby certify this above to be a true and correct map of the lands of the L. A. Canal & Reservoir Company as surveyed and subdivided by me in accordance with the respective deeds and city ordinances. Los Angeles City, Dec. 3, 1870. William Moore, Surveyor."

Division A of said lot 6 is an irregular shaped tract, due to the fact that the western boundary line of the city intersects and extends across what otherwise would be the southwest corner thereof. The dimensions of this tract are indicated in figures upon said map. The length of the east boundary line thereof, extending from the north line of Sixth street to the division line between said lots 3 and 6, is designated as being 23.97 chains. These dimensions must be regarded as set out in the deed as though therein written. No length of the lines of division A of said lot 3 is indicated on the map, the only thing appearing thereon being the area, 17.50 acres, but the deed under which defendants deraign title calls for a distance of 18.72 chains from the northwest corner of said lot 3, which is conceded to be the south boundary line of First street, to the southwest corner of said lot; thence easterly at right angles (the location of which line is the one in controversy) 9.36 chains to the southeast corner thereof; thence 18.72 chains northerly to the south boundary line of First street. The east boundary line of division A of said lot 3 is in line with, and an extension of, the east boundary line of division A of said lot 6, and extends from the south boundary line of First street to the north boundary line of Sixth street. The total length of this line, as called for in the deeds under which the parties deraigned title, is 42.69 chains, or 2,817.54 feet, or 4.96 feet in excess of that called for in the deeds. Notwithstanding this fact, defendants contend that, by reason of the call in their deed being to the southwest corner of lot 3, they are not limited to the distance call of 18.72 chains; that said southwest corner, as they locate it, constitutes a monument marking the division line between the respective tracts of land, and to which their land extends, without regard to the fact that in thus establishing the division line it gives them more land than that called for by the dimensions given in their deed, and gives plaintiff correspondingly less.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The general rule that monuments control distances where there is an inconsistency between the two as given in a deed is too well settled to require the citation of authorities. Section 2077, Code Civ. Proc. "It has ever been held that the marks on the ground constitute the survey; that the courses and distances are only evidence of the survey." Hall v. Tanner, 4 Pa. 244, 45 Am. Dec. 686; Gordon v. Booker, 97 Cal. 586, 32 Pac. 593. If, however, no monuments were erected, or, if erected, have disappeared, and their location cannot be established, then resort may be had to courses and distances for the purpose of fixing the corners and boundary lines. Chadbourne v. Mason, 48 Me. 389; Bradford v. Hill, 2 N. C. 22, 1 Am. Dec. 546. The call in defendants' deed is not to a stake or monument, but to the southwest corner of lot 3, of the canal and reservoir lands of the city of Los Angeles, as shown by Moore's map thereof. No reference is made in the deed to any other map or survey. There is no data connected with Moore's map showing that he, in making his survey, set any stakes or erected any monuments, designating upon the ground any lines or corners. We must look to the record for parol evidence of the fact, if it be a fact, that he did, at the time of making the survey for this map, place a monument or stake upon the ground designating and fixing the southwest corner and division line in question, and, unless the fact is established that he did set such stake or monument, then such corner and division line must be established by the data or description appearing upon the face of the map; it not being shown there were any field notes of his survey. There is no evidence contained in the record that Moore established any monuments. Indeed it is not claimed that he erected any, and hence no effort made to identify the location of any claimed to have been lost or destroyed. Respondents in their brief contend that the survey of the tract in question was originally made on paper by Henry Hancock, and that no stakes were placed marking the corners or division lines, and that the actual survey was not made until long after the filing of this map, when different surveyors, attempting to lay the plat on the ground, found there were numerous inaccuracies and errors. They further argue that the division line as found by the court, and which is termed the "monumented line," was presumably established by Moore, who made the surveys of this property in the field, and that said line is indicated by certain stakes inferentially placed there by Moore.

A line of evidence was introduced, over plaintiff's objection, not tending to establish the fact that Moore in any way designated by stakes or monuments any lines or corners, but tending to show where, in the opinion of the witness, the line in question should be located. In so locating the line some of the witnesses had reference to, and were guided by, what was known as the Hancock chamber or theoretical survey made in 1850, in the making of which it is conceded that no lines were run nor monuments established. Mr. Metcalf, who at one time owned said lot 6, testifies that in 1877 there was an old monument, consisting of "a hole in the ground with some rocks piled around it," at the northeast corner of said lot, but does not claim or attempt to identify it as a monument established by Moore. Mr. Severance, who surveyed this lot for Metcalf in 1891, says that at the time, in gathering data for the purpose of establishing the north line of lot 6 (which is the line in dispute), he took the notes of a survey made by Pillsbury and Cleveland of the Diamond tract adjoining, and following this, together with notes of surveys made by the city engineer, he found a 4 by 4 redwood stake, which he judged to be at least 10 years old, which he assumes to have been a Hancock stake. He further states: "I did not entirely base my survey of this property from the lines of the Diamond street tract, but also based it in connection with the old, so-called Hancock corner." He was asked the question: "Where did you locate the north line of lot 6 with reference to the Hancock stake?" to which, over plaintiff's objection, he answered: "I located the line between the 6 by 6 post, at the so-called Hancock corner and the south line of the Diamond tract, as defined by a 3 by 3 stake at the center of Reno street, on the south boundary of Diamond street tract, and distances brought south from other subdivision stakes in the Diamond tract." The character of this evidence, as well as other testimony to which appellant specifically calls our attention, did not tend to identify monuments established by Moore, but clearly refers to stakes set by other parties in making surveys of adjoining lands. There appears to us no theory of the case under which the testimony in question would be admissible as establishing the division line contrary to that called for by the courses and distances shown on the Moore map.

The map, which by the stipulation in the record is made controlling in this matter, shows division A of lot 3 to contain 17.50 acres, and gives no other description of the tract. Subdivision A of lot 6, being defined on the map by distances—the east boundary line running from the line of Sixth street and the westerly line from the west line of the city, being given in chains—is entitled to precedence in location in case of conflict, because the kind of measurement indicated is one which the statute makes paramount to that given in connection with subdivision A of lot 3. Angles are paramount to surfaces, and lines are paramount to both. Section 2077, Code Civ. Proc. If the distance from First to Sixth street be not sufficient to give to the defendants their 17.50 acres, and to the plaintiff his tract as shown by the lines on the map, the former must give way to the latter, there being no priority shown in respect to the title derived from the city, and no field notes or monuments of the Moore survey.

Respondents contend that it appears from the evidence that the north line of Sixth street as it now exists is some 12 or 14 feet farther north than as shown by the Hancock theoretical survey. Stocker testifies that "the course of Sixth street varies from the course of the monumented line between Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Andrews, and the monumented line [found by the court to be the true line] is, on the true course as shown on the original map, theoretical survey." But the parties do not hold or claim under the theoretical survey, but according to a plat made by Moore from an actual survey upon the ground. There is no evidence, as disclosed by this record, which entitles the so-called Hancock survey to any weight in the consideration of the case. If by actual measurement over the surface of the said lots from First street to Sixth street, as the lines thereof were fixed by Moore, there is an excess in distance over that specified on the map or called for in the deeds, such excess, in the absence of any designation on the ground of the division line between said lots, should be apportioned thereto in proportion to their respective lengths. It appears to be admitted that the width of this lot is correctly stated in the deed to Wheeler, and, if the latter be given all that the map shows was contained in division A of lot 3, his southern line would be at practically the same distance from First street that is indicated by his deed, 1,235.52 feet. And if in fact the north line of Sixth street, which constitutes the south line of lot 6, was thereafter shifted north from the line as designated by Moore, then said lot 6 should be reduced in length by the width of the distance to which said line was in fact thrown north from the line thereof as established by Moore.

There is no merit in respondents' claim of title by adverse possession. The fact that for five years they paid the taxes on the premises described in the deed cannot be construed as a payment of taxes on lands other than those described therein.

The evidence is likewise insufficient to constitute an estoppel against plaintiff, even had it been pleaded as a defense, which it was not. McKeen v. Naughton, 88 Cal. 462, 26 Pac. 354; Etcheborne v. Auzeais et al., 45 Cal. 121.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

On Rehearing.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals upon bill of exceptions from a judgment in favor of defendants and cross-complainants. An opinion reversing the decision of the trial court was filed on October 24, 1908. Thereafter, upon petition of respondents, a rehearing was granted.

In form the action is one to quiet title. The controversy grows out of conflicting claims as to the true location of the division line between subdivision A, lot 6, in block 26, of the canal and reservoir lands of the city of Los Angeles, as designated upon a map thereof made by William Moore in 1870, recorded in Book 2, Miscellaneous Records, pp. 210, 211, which subdivision is owned by plaintiff, and a tract of land lying immediately north thereof and adjoining, designated on said map as division A, lot 3, of said block 26, all of which, so far as it affects this case, is owned by defendants. These divisions A of said lots 6 and 3 of block 26, as designated upon the Moore map, extend from the south line of First street to the north line of Sixth street in the city of Los Angeles, and the land in dispute consists of a strip about 16 feet in width, depending as to its ownership upon the ascertainment of the true location of the division line between said lots 6 and 3. Reference to the map discloses that division A of lot 3 is marked thereon as containing 17.50 acres, but the length of said lot extending north and south is not indicated. At the trial however, it was stipulated that defendants held their title to the tract of land by mesne conveyances from the city of Los Angeles, which described the same as having a length or depth of 18.72 chains, or 1,235.52 feet; the call in the deed being to the southwest corner of said lot 3 according to said map. It was also stipulated that plaintiff's title to division A of lot 6, block 26, as per said map, was derived from the city of Los Angeles by like mesne conveyance, which described the tract by lot and block as delineated upon said map. The length of this lot is indicated upon the map in figures as being 23.97 chains, equal to 1,582.02 feet. It thus appears that, taking the length of lot 3 as called for in defendants' deed and the length of lot 6 as indicated upon the map, and thus giving to each lot the full depth called for by such data, it makes a total distance between First and Sixth streets of 2,817.54 feet. The actual distance, however, between the south line of First street and the north line of Sixth street, as shown by the uncontradicted evidence, is 2,822.50 feet, or 4.96 feet, in excess of the total length called for by the deeds.

The contention of plaintiff is that the division line is as indicated upon said map, namely, 1,582.02 feet north of the north line of Sixth street, whereas defendants and cross-complainants contend that at the time of making the survey for said map Moore established the division line upon the ground some 16 feet or less south of that as shown by said map, and designated such line by setting stakes and erecting monuments thereon. The trial court sustained this contention, the effect of which was to increase the length or depth of lot 3 over that called for in defendants' deed, and to correspondingly reduce the depth of lot 6 as indicated upon the map.

Appellant concedes that, if Moore did in fact designate the division line between said tracts upon the ground, and marked the same by stakes and monuments, such line so established controls the calls and distances indicated upon the map and in the deeds. There are no field notes or other data connected with the map showing that Moore in making the survey set any stakes or erected any monuments designating upon the ground any lines or corners. There is not a scintilla of direct evidence, parol or documentary, in the record which tends to show that he set a stake or erected a monument for any purpose whatever. In effect, the evidence is as follows: That in 1887, some 17 years after the making of the survey, H. H. Metcalf, a former owner of lot 6, had the tract surveyed for the purpose of ascertaining the boundaries thereof, at which time he found an old monument, consisting of a hole in the ground with some rocks piled around it, at a point which, according to defendants' claim, constitutes the corner common to the southeast corner of lot 3 and the northeast corner of lot 6. Thos. W. Bulpin, a city surveyor, called on behalf of defendants, testified that in 1897 he made a survey for Occidental boulevard from First to Sixth street; that in making this survey it was necessary to tie to the adjoining property stakes, fences, or other indications, as he found them; that he found an old 4x4 stake with a mound of rocks around it, which he had known for nearly 10 years before in connection with previous surveys, and which he had considered an original Hancock stake, but there was no certainty of the matter; that he tied to this stake, merely presuming it to be the corner common to lots 3 and 6; that he assumed that this stake was at the northeast corner of division A of lot 6, but did not attempt to verify it as a fact. Edwin D. Severance, a surveyor, testified on behalf of defendants that he made a survey of lot 6 in 1890 or 1891, at which time he found an old redwood stake at a point called for as the northeast corner in the city engineer's field notes. He says: "It was a stake I should judge at least 10 years old at that time." He further says: "In making surveys here in the city the last 13 years I have had occasion to retrace a great many of those Hancock corners. There were a few of them left, and that was one of the last to go." There was other evidence of like character, and evidence tending to show that stakes were found on a line east and west from this 4x4 stake assumed to mark the northeast corner of lot 6. All of which tended in some degree to prove that some 17 years after Moore made his survey, certain unmarked stakes were found on the line 16 feet south of the division line called for in the map, conceding the streets delineated on the map to have been located at the time of the Moore survey at the same place they were when these witnesses made their respective surveys, and that the distances given on the map are to be accepted as conclusive.

There was evidence, however, that neither of the streets referred to on the map are now, or were at the times of the surveys made by the several witnesses who testified in relation thereto, located, opened, or used upon the same lines, or were even running upon the same course, as indicated by the map; so that there was no certain base from which even the measurements on the map could be used if the court had adopted them in making its findings. The uncertainty in locating the boundary line by reason of these conditions did not relieve the court from the duty of finding where it was located as a matter of fact. In the absence of any evidence of fixed or ascertained monuments of the survey upon which the map was predicated, it was proper for the court to receive the best evidence obtainable. In doing this it might inquire, and it would be important to ascertain, the location of such stakes and monuments as were commonly recognized, accepted, and used in lieu of the lost or destroyed original ones. In the absence of more certain evidence, these would be sufficient to support a finding. Orena v. Santa Barbara, 91 Cal. 621, 628, 28 Pac. 263.

In considering the admissibility of evidence of this character this case is to be distinguished from one in which an attempt is made to dispute or contradict a line or measurement having a fixed or definite and ascertained point from which to run, by a monument movable and uncertain in its character. Payne v. English, 79 Cal. 540, 546, 21 Pac. 952. Even in a case of the kind mentioned, it is competent to show the location of the monument (a street) made subsequent to the deed, the description in which is being construed by the court, and to show user and recognition of it thereafter with a view to determining its location. Payne v. English, 101 Cal. 10, 35 Pac. 348.

While it is true that the rule is that witnesses can testify only as to the existence and condition on the ground of what is called for in the writing, and it is improper to admit their opinions, speculations, or conjectures as to the location of the lines (Newell on Ejectment, p. 537), the mere fact that a surveyor, in testifying as to the result of a survey made by him, states his conclusion in respect to the effect of his survey is not alone sufficient to entitle the aggrieved party to a reversal of the judgment. Tognazzini v. Morganti, 84 Cal. 159, 163, 23 Pac. 1085. Neither will the giving of an opinion as to the matter in controversy, where the opinion is a conclusion from facts stated fully in the other part of the testimony, always result in the granting of a new trial. Costa v. Silva, 127 Cal. 351, 355, 59 Pac. 695. Nor will a new trial be granted where the answers to the questions under consideration constituted no more than a mere summary, in the form of a conclusion or opinion of the previous testimony of the witness, and could have added nothing to the effect thereof in the mind of the trial judge. Jersey Island Co. v. Whitney, 149 Cal. 269, 86 Pac. 691, 692.

Measured by the rule and exceptions as stated, we are unable to see how the questions addressed to the witnesses Fred F. Wheeler, H. V. Wheeler, and Edwin D. Severance, which were objected to on the ground that they called for the conclusions of the respective witnesses, were prejudicial, even if it be conceded they were erroneous.

The appeal not having been taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment (section 939, subd. 1, Code Civ. Proc.), the case is not before us on the sufficiency of the evidence, but on its competency and admissibility alone. We find no error in this regard justifying a reversal of the judgment. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 681

STIAVETTI v. UNSWORTH. (Civ. 666.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 27, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 799*)—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT—MOTION TO DISMISS APPEAL—RECORD.

The certificate required by Court Rule 6 (78 Pac. ix), providing that on motion to dismiss an appeal for failure to file the transcript there shall be presented a certificate of the clerk below, etc., is merely evidence of facts, and it is unnecessary to file or present it before the hearing of the motion, and a copy thereof need not be served on appellant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 799.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco.

Action by A. Stiaveti against G. G. Unsworth. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal granted.

F. W. Sawyer, for appellant. Devoto & Richardson, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal. No transcript on appeal from the judgment was served or filed within the 40 days prescribed by rule 2 (78 Pac. vii) of this court, and consequently the appeal must be dismissed, unless respondent, in making this motion, has himself failed to comply with the rules. Appellant contends that according to rule 6 (78 Pac. ix) of this court the certificate of the clerk of the trial court, required to be presented on the motion, is a moving paper, and that a copy of it should have been served upon the appellant with the notice of the motion. The point, however, has been decided contrary to appellant's contention in the case of Pio v. Aigeltinger, 97 Cal. 81, 83, 31 Pac. 895, and the rule is precisely the same now as it was when that case was decided. 64 Cal. 639 and 144 Cal. xliii, xlv, 78 Pac. ix. The court there held that the certificate was merely evidence of facts, and that it was unnecessary to file or present it before the hearing.

Upon the authority of that case we hold that the objection to the hearing of the motion is untenable; and that, as the transcript was not filed within the prescribed time, the motion to dismiss should be granted, and it is so ordered.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 714

MOORE v. GROFTHOLDT et al. (Civ. 628.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 28, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The findings of the trial court on conflicting evidence conclusively establish the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 37*)—RELINQUISHMENT OF RIGHTS TO DESERT LANDS—VALIDITY.

One in possession of desert land open to filing under the desert land act may surrender the possession to another, and file a relinquishment of his right to file thereon, and the latter taking possession may file thereon, and obtain a patent on complying with the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. COURTS (§ 121*)—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT INVOLVED—ACTIONS—REMEDIES.

A complaint, alleging a contract between the parties for the exchange of plaintiff's cattle for defendant's land, and averring that plaintiff surrendered the possession of the cattle to defendant, and loaned a specified sum to defendant, and that defendant failed to transfer the real estate or to repay the loan, and praying for a recovery of the cattle or the value thereof, and damages for their detention, and the amount of the loan, states a cause of action on contract, and defendant may have all the differences arising out of the transaction adjusted, so that the court has jurisdiction to settle all such differences regardless of the amount involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Edmund B. Moore against Nelson Groftholdt and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. P. Willard and James I. Shepherd, for appellant. Eshleman & Swing, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. In the action instituted by plaintiff against defendants the complaint filed set out a certain contract and agreement between plaintiff and defendants, under which it was claimed that defendants obtained possession of a certain band of cattle the ownership and right of possession to which was in plaintiff. It is alleged that under this agreement defendants undertook to transfer certain real property to plaintiff, in consideration of which plaintiff agreed to deliver the band of cattle mentioned, and to pay defendants $250 in addition; that plaintiff surrendered possession of the cattle under an agreement that the title thereto should remain in plaintiff until the transfer of said real estate; that at the same time plaintiff loaned to defendants $100. And it is averred that defendants failed to transfer said real estate, or to repay said $100 so loaned, upon demand. Judgment is accordingly sought for the recovery of the personal property; or, in case restitution cannot be had, that plaintiff have judgment for the value thereof, to wit, $450, and also $250 damages for the wrongful detention, and $100, the amount of the loan.

Defendants admit the contract set out in the complaint, but allege that they never agreed to transfer any real estate, or to do any act other than to refrain from exercising a preference right to enter and file on certain described real estate, and allege that they performed all the conditions of said contract on defendants' part to be performed; deny that they borrowed the sum of $100, or ever promised or agreed to deliver over the personal property, or to pay said $100. By way of further answer and counterclaim defendants set forth an agreement wherein defendants agreed to refrain from the exercise of a preference right to file on the tract of land described, in consideration of which the cattle were delivered, and the promise to pay $250 was made, and that the sum of $100 was part payment of the sum of $250; that the sum of $150 remains unpaid, which they have demanded, and allege that they performed all of the conditions upon their part to be performed. They pray judgment for the restitution of the property, or for $450, the value, judgment for $150, the amount unpaid on the contract, and $250 for the wrongful detention of the property. It also appears that plaintiff under the proceedings obtained possession of the cattle, and held such possession at the time of the trial of the action.

The court finds as a fact that the agreement between the parties was that defendants were to transfer all their right and interest, and all right and interest which they might subsequently acquire, to a certain piece of property to plaintiff; that they acquired a preference right to file upon such land, and refrained from exercising the preference right, which waiver was accepted by plaintiff as in performance of the agreement to transfer an interest in the property, and that upon the receipt whereof plaintiff paid the $100 and delivered the personal property; that there is unpaid $150, the balance of the $250 agreed to be paid; that at the commencement of the action defendants were the owners of the cattle, and that they were of the value of $450; that by reason of their taking and detention under the claim and delivery by plaintiff, defendants have been damaged in the sum of $100. And the court thereupon rendered a judgment in favor of defendants for the restitution of the property the subject of the claim and delivery, or, in case delivery cannot be had, judgment for $450, the value thereof, $100 as damages for the wrongful taking and detaining same, and for $150, the balance due upon the contract between the parties. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The appeal is taken under the alternative method, and the reporter's transcript of the testimony is on file in this court. From this it is seen the relinquishment of the right to file on the land mentioned in the pleadings and findings of the court was the relinquishment of a right by defendants to file upon certain desert land then in their possession, which they had undertaken to reclaim under Desert Land Act (Act March 3, 1877, c. 107, 19 Stat. 377 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1548]), and under which act they were entitled to make a filing; that plaintiff desired to file thereon, and that defendants formally executed a written relinquishment of their right and delivered the same to plaintiff, who caused the same to be filed with the register and receiver of the United States land office at Los Angeles. The court finds, and there is some evidence in its support, that the execution of such a relinquishment was intended and agreed by the parties to be the full consideration to be paid for the delivery of the cattle in controversy. The testimony was very conflicting, but it was for the trial court to determine the facts; and, as it found them, they must be regarded as established. We do not understand that there was anything in this agreement to relinquish the preference right of filing violative of any law of the United States, or rule of the land department, in connection with these desert land entries; that it is permissible for one in possession of desert land open to filing under the desert land act to surrender the possession to another, and file a relinquishment of any rights to file thereon, to the end that the parties so taking possession may themselves file upon said land, and, after compliance with the act of Congress, obtain a patent thereto.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The action as brought by plaintiff, while ostensibly one in the nature of claim and delivery, was nevertheless an action based upon a contract between the parties, and the relief asked for by plaintiff was concerning such contract, and the affirmative relief sought by defendants through their counterclaim depended upon the contract and transaction upon which the action was brought. Under the authority of Sullivan v. California Realty Co., 142 Cal. 206, 75 Pac. 767, we feel warranted in holding that, regardless of the amount involved in the counterclaim, the defendants were entitled to have all differences adjusted, and that jurisdiction attached in the trial court to make such appropriate findings and judgment as would effectually settle and adjust such differences. There is very little in the record by way of evidence tending to show the damages occasioned by the wrongful taking of the property by plaintiff, but, it being shown that among the cattle were a large number of milch cows, and that the use of such cows per week was a fixed sum, which fact, taken in connection with the lapse of time after such taking, is sufficient to sustain the finding of the court in relation to the $100 damages for the wrongful detention of the property. The value of the property is set out in all the pleadings by both parties, and it is conceded to be $450.

We see no error in the action of the court in awarding judgment in defendants' favor for the restitution of the property, or, if the same cannot be had, for $450, the value thereof, and $100 damages, together with an additional judgment for the amount found to be due and unpaid to defendants under the contract and as set out in the counterclaim.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 625

WILLIAMS et al. v. PRATT et al. (Civ. 591.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 20, 1909. On Rehearing, June 19, 1909; Denied by Supreme Court July 19, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 864*)—APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT—SCOPE OF REVIEW—MATERIAL ISSUES—FAILURE TO FIND.

Failure to find on a material issue may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1765-1767, 3456-3461; Dec. Dig. § 864.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 391*)—ISSUES—FINDING—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

A conflict of evidence does not deprive a party of the right to have a finding on a material issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 914; Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 397*)—FINDINGS—MATERIALITY—FAILURE TO FIND.

Where the right of an original owner of real estate to a surplus, on foreclosure of a trust deed, depended on whether an agreement to reconvey the property to her was in effect a mortgage, and whether she had, in fact, complied with its terms, the issue as to such compliance was material, and the court's failure to find thereon fatal error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 940-945; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 567*)—FORECLOSURE—PROCEEDS.

Claimant conveyed certain real estate to F. to raise money thereon, receiving from him an agreement to reconvey on her paying a specified sum, with monthly installments of interest, and declaring that, should claimant fail to make any payment of interest within 60 days, she should forfeit all her rights under such instrument. F. mortgaged the property by deed of trust, under which it was sold, leaving a surplus, which was also claimed by F.'s grantees. Held that, the property having been converted into money, and claimant not denying the rights of lien creditors to reimbursement out of the fund, her claim to the surplus was not destroyed by her alleged breach of the defeasance agreement, under the rule that, where a penalty or forfeiture is to secure the payment of a debt only, equity will relieve against the forfeiture by awarding compensation instead thereof, proportionate to the damages actually resulting from nonpayment according to the stipulations of the agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1632-1633; Dec. Dig. § 567.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 172*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTION BELOW—WAIVER.

Failure to raise an objection by motion for judgment on the pleadings or by demurrer is not a waiver, where the judgment rendered is directly opposed to the pleading and admission of the prevailing party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1070-1073; Dec. Dig. § 172.*]

On Rehearing.

6. MORTGAGES (§ 415*)—RIGHT TO FORECLOSE—DEFAULT IN INTEREST—SET-OFF OF CROSS-DEMAND AGAINST MORTGAGEE.

Where claimant was bound to make certain payments of interest to F. under a contract for reconveyance of real estate, conveyed as security for a debt, and F. owed claimant $180, which, if applied on her contract liability, would prevent a default, the two demands could be set off, and, so far as they equaled each other, would compensate each other, under Code Civ. Proc. § 440, declaring that, when cross-demands exist between persons under such circumstances that, if one had sued the other, a counterclaim could have been maintained, the two demands would be deemed compensated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1223; Dec. Dig. § 415.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by H. G. Williams and others against A. H. Pratt and others. From a decree for the distribution of a surplus on mortgage foreclosure proceedings, Anna Maria Raymond appeals. Reversed.

J. B. Richardson and W. H. H. Hart (Aylett R. Cotton, of counsel), for appellant. A. P. Leach, for respondents Williams and Dalziel. F. W. Sawyer, for respondents Pratt, Robinson, and Faw.

BURNETT, J. Three different actions were consolidated and tried together. In each of them was involved the question of the ownership of a fund of nearly $4,000, in the hands of plaintiffs as trustees under a trust deed of certain real property held by them as security for the payment of an indebtedness of $8,000 due to one Robert Dalziel, Sr.

On the 29th day of April, 1904, George E. Faw and his wife made to said Dalziel a promissory note for $8,000, payable one year after date, bearing interest at 8 per cent. per annum, payable monthly, containing a stipulation that, if the interest was not paid within two months after due, the principal and interest should forthwith become due at the option of the holder of the note. The note was secured by the trust deed aforesaid, and, by the terms of the latter, upon default of payment of principal or interest, the trustees, on demand of said Dalziel, were authorized to sell the property, after publishing a certain notice. Default was made in the payment of interest, and in accordance with the terms of said deed the property was sold, and after the payment of the expenses and of said indebtedness, a surplus of $3,786.60 remained. Faw and his wife disclaimed any interest in this surplus. They conveyed said real property, and assigned whatever interest they might have in said surplus to A. H. Pratt, and said Pratt conveyed one-half to J. T. Robinson, and the controversy is between Pratt and Robinson on the one hand, and said Anna Maria Raymond on the other. The latter's claim is based upon the contention that on the said 29th day of April, 1904, she was the owner and in possession of said real property, and that she informed said Faw that she desired to borrow $9,500. Thereupon he informed her that he could secure $8,000 of said fund from said Dalziel, provided he could secure him by a deed of trust, and that he (Faw) and A. H. Pratt would loan to her the further sum of $1,500, taking said property as security for said sums. Thereupon, relying upon the statements and representations of Faw, she borrowed from him and Pratt the $1,500, and as security therefor she executed and delivered to said Faw an instrument in the form of an ordinary deed. That the only purpose and consideration for said deed was to secure the payment of said indebtedness, and in pursuance of said purpose said Faw executed and delivered to said Anna Maria Raymond an instrument, intended as a defeasance, in the form of an agreement to sell and convey to said Raymond said property on the payment of $9,500 within one year from date, with interest at 8½ per cent. per annum, payable monthly, with a provision that "should the said party fail to comply with the terms thereof and fail to make any payment of interest for sixty days after the same shall become due, the said party of the first part shall be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said property and said party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto." It was further agreed therein that said Raymond "shall have immediate and continued possession of the premises heretofore described."

It is the contention of Pratt and Robinson that said deed from Raymond to Faw was an absolute conveyance, and not as security for the payment of any sum of money, and Pratt avers in his pleading that "the said Faw did make, execute, and deliver to the said plaintiff said instrument, and that the same was executed and delivered solely as a contract to sell to said plaintiff Anna Maria Raymond the said property under the terms, time given, and conditions as set forth therein, and that the same was not made as a defeasance, nor as a part of any security for the payment of any sum of money, or otherwise." He also claims to have been an innocent purchaser for value, without notice of any interest of said Raymond, except what is disclosed by the record. Robinson's claim admittedly depends upon the validity of that of Pratt. Therefore it is necessary to consider only the controversy between the latter and the said Anna Maria Raymond.

Among the points made by appellant is that the court failed to find upon certain material issues. One of these presented by appellant's cross-complaint is that she paid and tendered all the interest that was due under said agreement of purchase. Respondents contend that the question cannot be considered on appeal from the judgment, but must be reviewed, if at all, on an appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, under proper specifications, which are not shown by the record herein. But it has been held by the Supreme Court in various decisions that the error may be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, as well as from said order. Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 17; Kusel v. Kusel, 147 Cal. 52, 81 Pac. 297. In the latter decision it is stated: "It is well settled that, where the court fails to find upon a material issue, the judgment is unsupported, and will be reversed on appeal." It is also argued that these issues are immaterial because the findings actually made support the judgment, and therefore any additional findings could not affect the result. Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 124, 90 Pac. 521. But whatever may be true as to action 22,888, in which said Raymond was not a party, in the other two actions, in one of which she was plaintiff and in the other defendant and cross-complainant, the question of her compliance with the terms of the said purported agreement to purchase is obviously the foundation of her claim to the surplus. It is true that she claimed the transaction amounted to a mortgage, and the court found that Pratt was an innocent purchaser, without notice that the transaction amounted to anything more than what was shown by the record. The court also found expressly that it was not a mortgage, and that "on the same day [April 29, 1904] an agreement was executed between said Anna Maria Raymond and said George E. Faw, which agreement is correctly set forth in paragraph 3 of the complaint," which was acknowledged and recorded "before the execution by said George E. Faw to said A. H. Pratt of the deed hereinbefore referred to conveying said land to said Pratt." We have, therefore, the judgment in favor of Pratt resting upon the finding of a deed from the owner, who had, within the knowledge of Pratt and, as he avers, agreed to convey the land to appellant upon certain terms. In other words, without any finding of facts showing whether the claim of appellant has become extinguished or has ripened into the right to a conveyance, and, therefore, to the surplus, it appears that Pratt purchased this land subject to this equitable interest of Raymond. If she made the payments as provided in said agreement, it is clear that she is in equity the owner of the surplus, although she is mistaken in her contention that the transaction amounted to a mortgage. We think there can be no doubt, therefore, that the issue as to the payment by her was material, and should have been determined. If there had been no evidence of said payment, the omission to find thereon would be without prejudice, but there was testimony to the effect that appellant made the payments as required; and, although there was evidence to the contrary, we cannot say which the court would have followed. It will not be disputed that a conflict of evidence does not deprive a party of the right to have a finding upon a material issue.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Respondents further contend that a former judgment is a bar to appellant's claim. It appears that an action was brought by appellant against Faw and Pratt to recover the surplus in the hands of the trustees, but Faw disclaimed any interest, and recovered his costs, while a nonsuit was granted as to Pratt. Herein in reference to this judgment the court found that it was upon the merits as to Faw, but not as to Pratt, "but as to him the judgment in said action is not a bar to the action numbered 22,684 as aforesaid, brought by said Anna Maria Raymond against said Pratt and others." As this finding cannot be questioned by respondents, it answers their contention.

Another point made by appellant is that "upon the pleadings in this case, even if the relation of Faw and Mrs. Raymond was that of vendor and vendee, and if she had made default for more than 60 days in payment of interest, she would in equity be regarded as the owner of the real property at the time it was sold under the deed of trust, and entitled to the proceeds remaining after paying Dalziel and what continued due Faw and Pratt for the money paid to Dalziel and for interest." In support of the position, among the authorities cited is 1 Pom. Eq. (3d Ed.) § 433, wherein it is said: "Where a penalty or forfeiture is used merely to secure the payment of a debt, or the performance of some act, or the enjoyment of some right or benefit, equity, considering the payment or performance, or enjoyment, to be the real thing intended by the agreement, and the penalty or forfeiture to be only an accessory, will relieve against such penalty or forfeiture by awarding compensation instead thereof, proportionate to the damages actually resulting from the nonpayment, or nonperformance, according to the stipulations of the agreement. The test which determines whether equity will or will not interfere in such cases is the fact whether compensation can or cannot be adequately made for a breach of the obligation which is thus secured. If the penalty is to secure the mere payment of money, compensation can always be made, and a court of equity will relieve the debtor party upon his paying the principal and interest." Here there is no doubt compensation can be made, since the real estate has been converted into money; and, as the property was sold within the year in consequence of no fault of appellant, and as she does not question the right of respondents to be reimbursed for their outlay, including interest, the contention that, granting her failure to pay the interest as agreed, she is in equity entitled to the residue is at least entitled to serious consideration. However, respondents content themselves with the declaration that the court will not consider the point because it is the first time it has been raised; no motion having been made for a judgment upon the pleadings, and the question not having been presented by a demurrer in the court below. But, assuming the position of appellant to be well taken, it is not a case where the point is deemed to have been waived, as the judgment would be directly opposed to the pleading and admission of the prevailing party, and therefore not supported. Traverso v. Tate, 82 Cal. 170, 22 Pac. 1082. We are disinclined, though, to pass upon the point without further argument, but we are of the opinion that appellant should at least be reimbursed for the amount actually paid by her under said agreement with Faw.

As they may not arise again, we consider it unnecessary to consider other points made by appellant, some of which have received no attention from respondents in their brief.

Appellant declares that "it is rarely that so much treachery and iniquity appear in a case as in this, and it is evident that from the very beginning Faw and Pratt were scheming to thwart the appellant and Mrs. Roberts in their efforts to save the home." We cannot say, however, that the court below was not entirely justified in finding that Pratt acted in perfect good faith; but, for the reason stated, we think there should be a new trial.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Rehearing.

BURNETT, J. Respondents in their petition for rehearing invite our attention to several points that were not mentioned in their brief or suggested in the oral argument. These suggestions, however, have received careful attention, but they have not shaken our confidence in the correctness of our former conclusion.

As to the contention that a certain $180 could not be applied to the payment of the interest due, and therefore that appellant was in default according to her own showing, it is sufficient to refer to the testimony of Mrs. Roberts that "Mr. Faw said we would have an interest, interest in the $200, until that comes back to my sister-in-law, and until that is paid back, or if it is not paid back, it can go in the end to help pay up the difference that may be necessary to come from you, your sister-in-law." She afterwards testified that $20 of it were handed back to her by Mr. Faw, leaving a balance due from Faw of $180. Giving full credit to her testimony, then the situation is that appellant was required to make certain payments of interest to Faw in order to be entitled to a conveyance of the property. Faw owed her $180, which, if applied on said contract of sale, would prevent a default. It would certainly be a reproach to the law if one debt could not be set off against the other. Indeed, the two demands, as far as they equal each other, are deemed compensated. Section 440, Code Civ. Proc.; Freeman v. Seitz, 126 Cal. 293, 58 Pac. 690.

The petition is denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 612

RALPH ROGERS CO. v. WORKMAN,
Treasurer, et al. (Civ. 575.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 18, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 15, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 339*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — CONTRACTS — REQUISITES.

Though the provisions of Street Improvement Law (St. 1885, p. 149, c. 153) § 5, fixing the time within which a contract for street improvements shall be executed, is mandatory, the contract may be executed after the expiration of the time specified, if the delay is not caused by the fault of the contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 339*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — CONTRACTS — REQUISITES.

A contract for a street improvement, executed about three months after the expiration of the time specified in Street Improvement Law (St. 1885, p. 149, c. 153) § 5, but within the time allowed by the Governor's proclamation of April 19, 1906, by which that day and each day thereafter to June 2d were proclaimed legal holidays, and Act June 3, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 8, c. 5), extending the time for performing legal acts, is valid; the proclamation being sufficient to excuse the contractor's delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 339.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Ralph Rogers Company against W. H. Workman, Treasurer of the City of Los Angeles, and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lucius M. Fall, for appellant. E. T. Sherer (F. C. Valentine, of counsel), for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. This action was brought to enjoin the city treasurer from selling certain premises by reason of default in the payment of bonds theretofore issued on account of street improvements, and to quiet title to such premises.

It is stipulated that all of the proceedings leading up to the award of the contract for the work of the street improvement were regular and in conformity to the law; the only part of the proceedings questioned being as to the validity of the contract under which the work was done, and that infirmity is claimed to exist only by reason of the fact that the award of contract was first published April 13, 1906, and the contract was not entered into until July 13, 1906. Section 5 of the act under which the street improvement was ordered (St. 1885, p. 149, c. 153) provides that the owners of a majority of the frontage may, within 10 days after posting notice of award of the contract, elect to take said work and enter into a contract, etc. Should such owners fail to so elect, it is the duty of the street superintendent to enter into a contract with the original bidder, but if the original bidder fails or refuses for 15 days after the first publication of notice of award to enter into the contract, the city council shall readvertise, etc. The provisions of this section are said to be mandatory, notwithstanding, however, the contract may be signed after the expiration of the time specified, if it is shown that the delay is not caused by the fault of the contractor. Perine v. Forbush, 97 Cal. 308, 32 Pac. 226. It is conceded here that a long delay ensued, but it is stipulated that the Governor of the state proclaimed the 19th day of April, 1906, and each and every other day thereafter, up to and including June 2, 1906, legal holidays. An act of the Legislature, approved June 3, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 8, c. 5), provides that "any act or proceeding appointed, required, or limited by or in pursuance of law to be performed or taken on any day, or within any time in the month of June, 1906, prior to the last day of said month, may be performed or taken on any day not later than the tenth day of July, A. D. 1906, with the same effect as if it had been performed or taken on the day or within the time wherein such act or proceeding was so appointed, required, or limited to be performed." It will be thus seen that, assuming the power of the Governor to proclaim as special holidays the days named in the stipulation, under the act last mentioned the time for the owners of the property to enter into the contract did not expire until July 10, 1906. This being established, the street law gives to the original bidder five days within which to execute his contract after the expiration of the time allowed the owners within which to signify their election. Whatever may be said as to the legal effect of the proclamation referred to, the allegations of the cross-complaint of defendant Clark, under which the decree appealed from was rendered, setting up, as it did, the stipulated facts with reference to the proclaimed holidays, may be said to be statements of fact sufficient to excuse the delay upon the part of the contractor, and as allegations of fact showing that the delay was not occasioned by his fault or neglect. The delay, then, not being occasioned by the fault or neglect of the contractor, under the doctrine of the case above cited, the contract executed on the date set out in the cross-complaint was a valid one.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The judgment should therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

10 Cal. App. 609

STONE v. GRAY et al. (Civ. 596.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 17, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 14, 1909.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 118*)—ASSIGNMENT—AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to show that the vice president and cashier of the bank had authority to execute an assignment of a note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

2. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 18*) — INDEMNITY BOND.

Under Civ. Code, § 3137, providing that if the instrument be lost or destroyed, the holder shall give a bond, executed by himself and two sureties, to indemnify against any lawful claim thereon, a bond was sufficient whereby the principal and two sureties jointly and severally agreed to indemnify defendant against any lawful claim on a note sued on.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lost Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 18*) — INDEMNITY BOND.

In an action on a lost note the indemnity bond may be given by the holder, and it is not necessary that the original payee give bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lost Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by W. I. Stone against George F. Gray and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ames & Manning, for appellants. Cushing, Grant & Cushing, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,236.54. The complaint is in two counts. The first count charges upon a promissory note executed by defendants to plaintiff's assignor, Union Machine Company (a corporation), for the principal sum of $1,000, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum from its date January 28, 1906. Prior to the conflagration of April, 1906, the note had been transferred to, and left with, the Germania National Bank for collection only, for account of the Union Machine Company, and was destroyed by said conflagration while in possession of the bank. Plaintiff, over the objection and exception of defendant, put in evidence an assignment of said note from said bank to the Union Machine Company. This assignment was under the seal of the corporation bank, and was signed by the vice president and cashier. The objection to its introduction was that it was not shown that the officers signing on behalf of the bank had authority to assign the note. This objection was utterly without merit. The vice president of the bank testified, without objection, that he and the cashier had such authority; and the seal of the corporation was itself prima facie evidence that the officers executing the instrument were duly authorized, and the execution thereof the act of the corporation. 10 Cyc. 944; Bullen v. Milwaukee Trading Co., 109 Wis. 41, 85 N. W. 115; McCracken v. City and County of San Francisco, 16 Cal. 639; Gutzeit v. Pennie, 95 Cal. 598, 30 Pac. 836; Angell & Ames on Corp. § 224.

The only other point relates to the sufficiency of the indemnity bond offered by plaintiff, the holder of the note. This instrument was executed by plaintiff and two sureties, who were admitted to be financially good. The only objection to the bond is that it did not fix a penal sum. The principal and the two sureties in said bond jointly and severally agreed to indemnify defendants against any lawful claims upon said note. This fully complied with the statute, Section 3137, Civ. Code. Under this bond the parties executing it would be liable in any amount, and in this respect the bond was more favorable to the defendants than would have been a bond in which the liability could not exceed the amount fixed as the penal sum. The statute does not give the form of the bond. It simply provides that: "If the instrument be lost or destroyed, then that the holder give to him a bond, executed by himself and two sufficient sureties, to indemnify him against any lawful claim thereon." The bond in question fully met the requirements of the statute. It was given by the holder of the note, with two sufficient sureties. The objection that the original payee gave no bond is without merit. The statute does not require the original payee to give a bond unless he be the holder at the time of payment.

No other errors are claimed, and the findings are in no respect challenged.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 712

HOWSE v. NORWICH UNION FIRE INS. SOCIETY OF NORWICH AND LONDON, ENGLAND. (Civ. 626.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 28, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 27, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 799*)—DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO FILE TRANSCRIPT—PENDENCY OF PROCEEDINGS TO SETTLE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EVIDENCE.

As against a motion, supported by affidavits that no bill of exceptions had ever been filed, to dismiss appeal for noncompliance with Court of Appeal rule 2 (78 Pac. vii), requiring the transcript to be filed within 40 days after perfection of appeal, unless there is pending a proceeding for settlement of a bill of exceptions, appellant's affidavit, not that a bill of exceptions was ever left with the clerk or judge, as the law requires, but that on a certain day (before which its right to a settlement of bill of exceptions was lost, unless the bill was presented theretofore, or the right to settlement kept alive by consent) it served a notice of motion to restore to the records of the court its proposed bill of exceptions, and for a settlement thereof, and that the motion was denied, and an appeal taken from the denial, is not evidence of pendency of a proceeding for settlement of a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 799.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Louisa S. Howse against the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society of Norwich and London, England. From an adverse judgment, defendant appealed. Dismissed.

T. C. Van Ness, for appellant. Joseph Hutchinson, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal taken by defendant from a judgment against it. The notice of motion was served and filed December 18, 1908, and states that the motion will be made on the ground that no transcript on appeal has been filed in this court, though more than five months have elapsed since the perfecting of the appeal. Rule 2 (78 Pac. vii) of this court requires that such transcript be filed within 40 days after the perfecting of the appeal, unless there is pending a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions, or a statement which may be used in support of such appeal. Respondent served with his notice of this motion an affidavit of his attorney, showing that appellant, on June 15, 1908, served on him its proposed bill of exceptions, to which respondent proposed and served on appellant within 5 days thereafter amendments thereto, and "that more than six months have elapsed since said proposed amendments were served, as above, upon defendant's attorney, and defendant's attorney has not during all said period had said bill of exceptions, or any bill of exceptions, settled or allowed, or filed the same with the court or with the clerk of the court for settlement or allowance, or given plaintiff, or plaintiff's attorney of record, any notice of proceedings for the settlement of said or any bill of exceptions." Respondent also served a copy of the certificate of the clerk, showing, among other things, that no bill of exceptions had ever been filed or allowed.

The only attempt by appellant to meet the statement of fact that no bill of exceptions has ever been filed with the clerk or the court is contained in an affidavit presented at the hearing on this motion, which utterly fails to directly affirm that any bill of exceptions was ever left either with the clerk, or the judge of the court. It does allege that on the 9th day of January, 1909, defendant served and filed a notice of motion to restore to the records of said court its proposed bill of exceptions, and for a settlement thereof, and that said motion was subsequently denied, and an appeal taken from the order of denial. It may be said arguendo that this motion to restore to the records a bill of exceptions presupposes that there was in the records at some time a bill of exceptions. It, however, is certainly not a statement that such bill was ever left either with the clerk or the judge of the court, as the law requires. In the face of the evidence contained in the affidavit and certificate presented on behalf of respondent, to the effect that no bill has ever been filed, we do not think the evasive statement in the affidavit presented on behalf of appellant should be given any probative force to show the pendency of a proceeding for the settlement of any bill of exceptions. Unless the bill was presented before July, 1908, or the right to settlement kept alive by consent, the right to a settlement was lost before the notice of January 9, 1909, was given. See Moultrie v. Tarpio, 147 Cal. 376, 81 Pac. 1112.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The appeal is therefore dismissed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 648

LUCAS v. GOBBI et al. (Civ. 563.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 25, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court July 24, 1909.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 271*)—SUBCONTRACTORS — MATERIALMAN — VOID CONTRACT — AMOUNT DUE.

Where a materialman sued to enforce a lien on the theory that the building contract was void for want of record, an objection that the complaint was fatally defective for failure to allege that, at the time of filing notice of lien, any sum was due from the owner to the contractor was unsustainable; it being sufficient, under such circumstances, to allege that the material was furnished the owner through the contractor as his agent, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 499, 504-506; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—FORECLOSURE — VARIANCE.

Where a complaint to foreclose a materialman's lien alleged that the material was furnished to three persons named as the owners of the property, and the answer did not deny such allegation, while one of them testified that he was the owner as alleged in the claim of lien, until the building was completed, when he conveyed the property to his mother, and that he acted as his mother's agent throughout the entire transaction, the variance as to ownership was not fatal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 157*) — CLAIM OF LIEN—OWNER OF PROPERTY.

Since the statute requires a statement of the name of the owner, or reputed owner, of property in a claim for a mechanic's lien only in case the name is known, the validity of a materialman's lien is not affected by a mistake in the name of the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 268; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 157*) — MATERIALMAN'S LIEN—CLAIMS—AMOUNT.

A materialman's lien was not defeated because the notice of lien overstated the amount due by $50.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 270; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

5. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—MATERIALMAN'S LIEN—DWELLING.

Where complaint to foreclose a materialman's lien alleged that the material was furnished for the construction of a dwelling, it was not defeated by evidence that a small amount of the material was used in constructing a woodshed on the same lot; the woodshed being a part of the dwelling.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

6. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—COMPLAINT—NOTICE—VARIANCE.

A materialman's lien was not defeated because the evidence in support of an action to foreclose showed that there was no agreement to pay any definite amount, while the complaint and notice of lien alleged an express contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

7. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 132*)—NOTICE OF LIEN—FILING.

Since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, a mechanic's lien claimant is entitled to 90 days to file a notice of lien, in the absence of notice of the completion of the building a notice of lien filed December 28, 1906, on a building completed November 27th, but found by the court to have been completed on November 28th, was not premature; no notice of completion having been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 190-207; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

8. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 290*)—FORECLOSURE — FINDINGS—EVIDENCE.

Where a finding recited that a building was completed November 28, 1906, while the evidence showed it was completed November 27th, the discrepancy was immaterial in a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien; it not being attacked on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 593, 594; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

9. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 281*)—FORECLOSURE — EVIDENCE—FINDING.

In a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien, evidence held to sustain a finding that the original contract for the improvement exceeded $1,000.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

10. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 291*)—MATERIAL—EXCESS—SEGREGATION.

In a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien, the value of material capable of being segregated, not actually used in the building, may be deducted from the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 603; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

11. PARTNERSHIP (§ 213*) — ALLEGATIONS — SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint to foreclose a materialman's lien alleged "that on or about September 7, 1906, R. R. Lucas and T. A. Lucas, composing the firm of Lucas Bros.," entered into an agreement, etc., and the notice of lien, expressly made a part of the claim, recited that "R. R. Lucas and T. A. Lucas, copartners under the firm name and style of Lucas Bros.," claimed a lien. Held that, in the absence of special demurrer, the complaint sufficiently charged the existence of a partnership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 408; Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

12. PLEADING (§ 377*)—MATTERS TO BE PROVED—MATTERS NOT DENIED.

Where an allegation of a partnership in the complaint was not denied in the answer, proof thereof was not required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1228-1231; Dec. Dig. § 377.*]

13. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—MATERIAL-MAN'S LIEN—FORECLOSURE—DEFENSES.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien, there was no uncertainty as to who furnished the material, and it was shown that the materialmen had assigned their claim to plaintiff, whether plaintiff's assignors constituted a partnership or not as alleged was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

14. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 290*)—MATERIAL-MAN'S LIEN—FINDING.

Where no extra charge was made for labor in the delivery of material for which a materialman's lien was sought to be foreclosed, it was not material that the complaint alleged the amount to be due for "lumber and material," while the finding was that the amount due was for lumber and material including the labor performed in the delivery thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 591-598; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by R. R. Lucas against Leander Gobbi and others to foreclose a materialman's lien. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Ruddock, for appellants. J. W. Preston, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal from the judgment and an order denying the motion for a new trial in an action for the foreclosure of a "materialman's" lien.

1. The first point made by appellants is that the complaint is fatally defective, inasmuch as "there is no allegation that, at the time of filing the notice of lien, any sum was due from the owner to the contractor, nor any necessary fact giving the materialman a lien against the property of the owner." But the plaintiff proceeded upon the theory that the building contract was void, since, being for more than $1,000, it was not recorded. In such a case the material is deemed to have been furnished at the instance of the owner, and it is sufficient to allege that it was thus furnished through the contractor as the agent of said owner. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183; Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 560, 29 Pac. 1111.

2. A variance is claimed in several particulars. The claim of lien sets forth: "That the name of the owner and reputed owner of said building is Leander D. Gobbi." The complaint alleges that the material was furnished to Leander D. Gobbi, Mary Gobbi, and Catherine Gobbi, the owners of the property. In the answer there is no denial of the allegation of the complaint in reference to the ownership. The testimony of Leander, however, shows that he was the owner of the property until the building was completed, when it was conveyed to his mother. He also declared that he acted as his mother's agent throughout the entire transaction. Directly in point as to this discrepancy is the case of McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 138, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622, wherein it is said: "The claim of Harrison and that of Hubert each contains the statement 'that Charlotte A. Hutton and Fred Hutton are the names of the owners and reputed owners of said premises'; and it is objected that the latter has no interest, and that the claims are therefore invalid. The statute requires the statement of 'the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known.' 'If the names are not known, the claim is sufficient, if it is silent on the subject.' West Coast Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 89 Cal. 275, 22 Pac. 231. The claimant 'may not know the owner, and if he is ignorant of his name, he is not required to state it.' Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 183, 41 Pac. 873. Still less can the validity of the claim be affected by a mistake in attempting to carry out the requirements of the law."

The complaint is also for about $50 less than the amount alleged to be due in the notice of lien. But it is well settled that, in the absence of fraud, the claim will not be defeated because the claimant has included too much in his notice. Barber v. Reynolds, 44 Cal. 519; Malone v. Big Flat Gravel M. Co., 76 Cal. 578, 18 Pac. 772; Harmon v. S. F., etc., R. Co., 86 Cal. 617, 25 Pac. 124; Continental, etc., Ass'n v. Hutton, 144 Cal. 611, 78 Pac. 21.

Another objection is made that, while the complaint alleges that the material was furnished for the construction of a "dwelling," the evidence showed that another building on the same lot was included. This other building, however, which required a small amount of the material, was a woodshed, and justly held by the court to be a part of the "dwelling." It is within the rule laid down in McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 132, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622; O'Neill v. Taylor, 59 W. Va. 370, 53 S. E. 474, and McDermott v. Claas, 104 Mo. 14, 15 S. W. 995. The result of adopting the view of appellants in this regard, it may be remarked, would be simply to reduce by a small amount the sum found to be due.

The contention that the lien must fail because the evidence shows there was no agreement to pay any definite amount, while the complaint and notice of lien each sets forth an express contract, involves a similar situation to that found in Lucas v. Rea et al. (this day decided by this court), 102 Pac. 822, and also in Star Mill & Lumber Co. v. Porter, 4 Cal. App. 470, 88 Pac. 497, and for the reasons therein stated we are of the opinion that the point is not well taken.

3. The complaint seems to have been presented in time. The notice of lien was filed

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

December 28, 1906, and the complaint, March 27, 1907; being thus within the 90 days prescribed in section 1190, Code Civ. Proc. Likewise it cannot be said that the notice of lien was filed prematurely. It is true that the complaint is somewhat uncertain as to whether the building was completed before or after the filing of the notice of the lien, but the finding is that the building was actually completed on November 28, 30 days before said December 28th. The evidence shows that it was completed November 27th, but the finding is not attacked on this ground, and, besides, the discrepancy is immaterial (Santa Monica L. & M. Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 378, 51 Pac. 555), since no notice was given of the completion of the building, and therefore the claimant would be entitled to 90 days in which to file the notice of lien. Section 1187, Code Civ. Proc. The court probably should have sustained the demurrer to the complaint on the ground of uncertainty, but the time when the building was completed was peculiarly within the knowledge of defendants. Again the trial removed any uncertainty, and it is manifest that appellants were not prejudiced by the defective allegation. Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 Pac. 936; Irgang v. Ott (Cal. App.) 99 Pac. 528.

4. While there may be some conflict in the evidence as to whether the original contract was for more than $1,000, the finding to that effect is abundantly supported. For instance, Mr. Howell, the contractor, was asked this question: "Now what was your contract price for that dwelling house with Mr. Gobbi?" and his answer was: "Just as I stated, $1,050."

5. There is also evidence to uphold the findings that the material was all purchased to be used, and that, with the exception of a few items of the value of about $20, which were capable of being segregated, it was actually used in the building. To the extent of these items the court properly reduced the amount claimed by plaintiff.

6. Appellants complain that there was neither a sufficient allegation nor proof of a partnership. The complaint, though, alleges "that on or about the 7th day of September, A. D. 1906, R. R. Lucas and T. A. Lucas, composing the firm of Lucas Bros., entered into an agreement," etc., and in the notice of lien, which is expressly made a part of the complaint it is recited that "R. R. Lucas and T. A. Lucas, copartners, under the firm name and style of Lucas Bros., claim a lien." Thus it sufficiently appears, at least in the absence of a special demurrer, that the firm constituted a partnership; and, since it is not denied, it is deemed admitted by the answer. But, again, under the circumstances it is entirely immaterial whether plaintiff's assignors constituted a partnership or not.

Yancy v. Morton, 94 Cal. 560, 29 Pac. 1111. The most that could be said is that there is an uncertainty in this respect, but it is difficult to perceive how that could be urged as a defense, since there is no uncertainty as to who furnished the material, and it is clear that they made an assignment of their claim to plaintiff.

7. The claim of lien and the complaint allege the amount to be due for lumber and material, while the finding is "that the value of the lumber and building material furnished by said Lucas Bros. that was furnished for, and was actually used in, the construction of said building was and is the sum of $670.50, including the labor performed in the delivery thereof," but the reference to the "labor" is immaterial, and might be rejected as surplusage, since the evidence shows that no extra charge was made for the labor; in other words, that the price of the lumber included delivery.

8. There is nothing lacking in the evidence as to the amount due. The plaintiff testified definitely as to this, and no contrary showing was made by defendants.

The conclusion reached may work a hardship upon appellants, but it is the result of the want of precaution in not having their contract recorded, and not the fault of the law. We have examined all the assignments of error, but we find nothing to warrant a reversal, and the judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 602

Ex parte JUNQUA. (Cr. 95.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 15, 1909.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 81*)—POLICE POWER—NATURE.

The police power is inherent in the state, and its exercise by the state is essential to the health, peace, comfort, and welfare generally of the inhabitants thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 611*)—COUNTIES (§ 21½*)—POLICE POWER—NATURE.

The "police power" conferred on cities and counties, etc., by Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing any county or city, etc., to make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws, embraces the right to regulate any class of business, the unregulated operation of which may in the judgment of the appropriate local authority interfere with the rights of others, and the only limitation on the power is that regulations shall not conflict with general laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1344-1360; Dec. Dig. § 611; Counties, Dec. Dig. § 21½.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 63*)—DELEGATION OF POWER.

The right to delegate to a city the authority to determine what are nuisances, and to prevent the same, as is done by Sacramento City Charter, St. 1893, p. 552, c. 7, § 25, subd. 8, is within the legislative power of the state.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Cal. Rep. 102-105 P.—13

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-114; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 81*) — POLICE POWER.

General or local legislation enacted as an exercise of the police power will not be sustained, where it is oppressive or imposes unnecessary or unreasonably burdensome restrictions, and, where it appears either on its face or from competent extrinsic evidence that the regulation is unjustly oppressive or unreasonably burdensome, the courts will hold it void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 148; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 63*)—ORDINANCES—POLICE POWER.

The courts will examine more critically into county ordinances enforcing the police power to determine whether they do or do not represent the exercise of that power reasonably and without oppression than they will for a similar reason look into city ordinances designed to accomplish the same purpose; but the courts will not refuse to hear evidence to determine whether a city ordinance is unreasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 606*)—ORDINANCES—POLICE POWER.

Under Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing any city to make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws, and Sacramento City Charter, St. 1895, p. 552, c. 7, § 25, subd. 8, authorizing the city to determine what are nuisances and to prevent the same, an ordinance of the city, making it unlawful for any person to permit any soot to escape from the smoke stack of any furnace within the city in which crude oil is consumed as fuel, is not on its face unreasonable or oppressive, and does not on its face show that its enforcement will necessarily interfere with the right of property or other inalienable rights, and, in the absence of evidence showing that it is unreasonable, it is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1339; Dec. Dig. § 606.*]

Application for a writ of habeas corpus by Jules Junqua, convicted of violating an ordinance of the City of Sacramento. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Devine & Butler, for petitioner. R. Platanauer, City Atty., for respondent, City Trustees.

HART, J. On the 30th day of July, 1903, the petitioner was convicted of a misdemeanor in the violation of ordinance No. 839 of the city of Sacramento in the city justice's court of said city, and was committed to the custody of the chief of police in default of the payment of the fine imposed upon him by the court. He now claims that the ordinance, for the infringement of the provisions of which he is imprisoned, is invalid "for the reason that it is unreasonable and oppressive," and therefore repugnant to the Constitution of the state and to the federal Constitution. For this reason, he insists, he is entitled to be restored to his liberty through the writ of habeas corpus.

Section 1 of the ordinance under which the petitioner was tried and convicted declares that: "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to permit any soot to escape from the smokestack or from the chimney of any furnace within the city of Sacramento in which distillate or crude oil is consumed as fuel." And section 2 prescribes a penalty for the violation of the first section.

It is the claim of the petitioner that the ordinance is void upon its face because, under its terms, the mere fact that a person accused of the violation of its provisions may be shown to have permitted soot to escape from the smokestack or chimney of a furnace, maintained and operated by him, in which distillate or crude oil is consumed as a fuel, however small the quantity of the soot so emitted from such smokestack or chimney may be, is sufficient to sustain a conviction. The contention is, in other words, that the board of trustees of the city of Sacramento is not vested with the power to declare that a nuisance which is not a nuisance per se, and that the Legislature has no authority to delegate to or confer upon the governing body of a municipal corporation the right to exercise such power. This is the specific objection to the ordinance, and upon said objection it is urged with earnestness that the measure is upon its face repugnant to those guaranties of the state and federal Constitutions against interference with the personal liberty of the citizen, enjoyment of property and vested rights, and the taking of property without due process of law, etc. The petitioner has presented a large array of authorities which he asserts supports his contention. These we shall not undertake to review, for an examination of them will disclose that generally they are not opposed to the views which we shall here venture to offer in upholding the ordinance under attack.

That the police power is an inherent attribute of every state or commonwealth in the Union is a proposition which will readily be conceded. It is not only a power which inheres in the sovereignty of the states, but is a power the exercise of which by the states is indispensably essential to the health, peace, comfort, and welfare generally of the inhabitants thereof. In this state the people themselves, by their Constitution, have asserted this power, and have thus expressly conferred its exercise upon all counties, cities, towns, and townships within the state. Const. art. 11, § 11. Under this direct grant, any such county, city, town, etc., may make and enforce within its limits all such police, sanitary, and other regulations as may be deemed necessary for the health, comfort, and happiness of its inhabitants. The only limitation upon this power prescribed by the Constitution is that regulations so made shall not conflict with general laws. This power embraces the right to regulate any class of business, the operation of which, unless regulated, may, in the judgment of the appropriate local authority, interfere with the rights of others, for, as is said in Dobbins v. City of Los Angeles, 139 Cal. 179, 72 Pac. 970, 96 Am. St. Rep. 95, "all property is subject to the police power." In other words, the proposition cannot be maintained that the exercise of this power is confined to the regulation of only such interferences with the public welfare and comfort as come strictly within the common-law definition of a "nuisance." Dobbins v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The Legislature has expressly conferred upon the legislative authority of the city of Sacramento the power "to determine what are nuisances, and to prevent the same" (subdivision 8, § 25, Charter of City of Sacramento; St. 1893, p. 552, c. 7), and the right to so delegate such authority is within the legislative power of the state; but legislation, either local or general, which, when enacted under the pretext that it represents the exercise of the police power, is shown to be oppressive, thus imposing unnecessary or unreasonably burdensome conditions and restrictions upon and against that class upon which it is designed to directly operate, will not be sustained. And where it appears, either upon its face, or from competent evidence extrinsic to the measure itself, that such regulation is unjustly oppressive or unreasonably burdensome in the restrictions prescribed or the conditions it imposes, it will be held void as violative of the constitutional guaranties of the citizens, for the doctrine, once maintained by the courts, "that where an ordinance is reasonably within a proper consideration of and for the public health, safety and comfort, a court will not disturb the legislative act," upon the theory that the Legislature has investigated and found the facts of which it has predicated the measure, which constitutes a legislative judgment with reference thereto which is final and conclusive upon the courts, has been exploded, at least in this state. In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 Pac. 180. That is to say, that, while the courts will not, in the case of a regulation coming within the appropriate exercise of the police power, substitute their views for those of the Legislature, yet the determination of the Legislature as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to supervision by the courts. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385 et seq.; In re Smith, supra. In the last-mentioned case, the Supreme Court, whose expressions on the subject under discussion are through Mr. Justice Henshaw, says: "As has been said, there must always be left a large discretion in the legislative body, with the exercise of which the courts will not and have no desire to interfere. Nor will they in any event interfere except where the case be plain that needless oppression is worked and constitutional rights are invaded; but courts are not limited in their inquiry to those cases alone where such a situation is shown upon the reading of the statute. They will consider the circumstances in the light of existing conditions. * * * Owing to the peculiar conditions existing in cities, courts are not keen to question the wisdom of the legislative exercise of their police powers in these respects; but, as the same conditions do not exist in the country, county ordinances, passed in the exercise of the same power, may well be scanned with more critical eye. And as it must happen in the case of many of these ordinances that the unreasonableness and oppression is not apparent upon the face thereof, evidence in such cases will be admitted to show the existing conditions"—citing Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405; Oxanna v. Allen, 90 Ala. 468, 8 South. 79; People v. Armstrong, 73 Mich. 238, 41 N. W. 275, 2 L. R. A. 721, 16 Am. St. Rep. 578; Ex parte Patterson, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 256, 58 S. W. 1011, 51 L. R. A. 654; Cleveland, etc., Railway Co. v. Connersville, 147 Ind. 277, 46 N. E. 579, 37 L. R. A. 175, 62 Am. St. Rep. 418; Pieri v. Mayor, etc., of Shieldsboro, 42 Miss. 493; Town of Kosciusko v. Slomberg, 68 Miss. 469, 9 South. 297, 12 L. R. A. 528, 24 Am. St. Rep. 281; Corrigan v. Gage, 68 Mo. 541. See, also, Wheeler v. Plumas County, 149 Cal. 782, 87 Pac. 802, and Matter of McCoy (Cal. App.) 101 Pac. 419. The case of Corrigan v. Gage, supra, was an action to recover on a tax bill, under a municipal ordinance regulating the construction of sidewalks. The trial court refused to allow evidence showing the unreasonableness and oppressiveness of the requirements of said ordinance, and the Supreme Court of Missouri, reversing the cause for that ruling, said: "Speaking in general terms, the authorities of a city may be said to have a large discretion as to the necessity or expediency of the ordinances which they adopt. But their powers in this regard are by no means omnipotent; otherwise the citizens would be without remedy or redress."

It is manifest, from what we have said on this point, that we do not agree with counsel for the respondent that the Supreme Court, in Re Smith, supra, intended to draw a distinction between county and city ordinances by which the principle we have been discussing is made applicable to county to the exclusion of city ordinances. The court says in that case, and in the very nature of things it is essentially true, that there is a marked difference between conditions existing in the country portion of a county and those existing in a city, and that in cities much more drastic police regulations are ordinarily required than in those sections of the county which are sparsely populated, and that therefore the courts will examine more critically into county ordinances adopted to concrete and enforce the power of police to determine whether they do or do not represent the exercise of that power reasonably and without oppression than they will for a similar reason look into city ordinances designed to accomplish the same purpose. This does not mean, however, as we understand the decision, that the courts will refuse to hear evidence, if such hearing in a given case is deemed to be necessary to a solution of the question, in an inquiry prosecuted for the purpose of ascertaining and determining whether a city ordinance whose object is regulation, and which is apparently valid, is not in fact unreasonable and oppressive in its operation, and consequently violative of the constitutional rights of those whose business is thus sought to be regulated. In the first place, we can see no reason in principle for the distinction suggested by the respondent, and, in the second place, it is made very clearly to appear that the court in the Smith Case did not intend to make such distinction by the fact that the authorities cited in that case upon the point invariably deal with city ordinances; but, in the case at bar, we cannot say that there is anything apparent on the face of the ordinance which would indicate that the measure is unreasonable or oppressive, or that its enforcement would necessarily interfere in the slightest degree with the right of property or other inalienable rights of the petitioner. Or, as the Supreme Court says, in Dobbins v. City of Los Angeles, supra, dealing with an ordinance regulating the manufacture of gas and the effect thereof upon the inhabitants of the neighborhood in which the manufactory is situated, it cannot be said judicially that soot from distillate or crude oil used as fuel is not within the category of things which interfere with the public welfare and comfort and therefore beyond the reach of the police power.

Whether it is impracticable to so control as to prevent soot emanating from such oil, when used as fuel, from escaping from a chimney or smokestack, or the effect of the regulation, as enforced, will be to prevent the use altogether of such oil as fuel, we cannot say from the face of the ordinance itself; and it may be, so far as we can judicially know to the contrary, that an examination into the matter might disclose that such soot comes from a chimney or smokestack in such small quantities as that its emission therefrom does not have the deleterious effect which we must assume, from the fact of the passage of the ordinance, and in the absence of evidence showing the contrary, that the governing board of the city of Sacramento has determined that it has, after (presumptively) an investigation of the facts; or it might be shown—although, we admit, we very much doubt it—that such soot emitted from a chimney or a smokestack even in large quantities would not, in a perceptible degree, interfere with the public comfort and welfare. Such a showing would, most assuredly, under the authorities to which we have referred, be a good defense against the enforcement of the ordinance or entitle a party convicted and sentenced for the violation of its provisions to relief from such judgment in a proceeding of the nature of the one before us.

But, as has been said, the subject-matter of the ordinance before us is within the jurisdiction of the legislative authority of the city of Sacramento to regulate, in the exercise of its police power, by direct grant from the Constitution, as well as by express authority from the Legislature expressed in the charter of said city, and, as the ordinance, upon its face, is, apparently, unobjectionable for any reason here urged against its validity, and there being nothing presented here de hors the measure to disclose that the enforcement of its provisions in the case of the petitioner involves an invasion of his constitutional or fundamental rights, it follows that the judgment imposed against and upon the petitioner was within the jurisdiction of the court imposing it, and that therefore his restraint by the chief of police of the city of Sacramento is not unlawful.

The writ is, accordingly, discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 633

ROCKWELL v. ITALIAN-SWISS COLONY et al. (Civ. 593.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 21, 1909.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DILIGENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 4, authorizing the granting of new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence which could not have been discovered and produced by the moving party at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the court need not grant a new trial, unless the evidence could not have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 981*)—RULINGS ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

The action of the court, on a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, will not be reversed, except on a clear showing of an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3876; Dec. Dig. § 981.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 102*)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF SHOWING.

Where the evidence set forth in the affidavits on motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was of facts known to the moving party at the time of trial, except that at that time he did not remember them, and he claimed that he did not know, until the adverse party had testified, what evidence he would be required to meet, the overruling of the motion was proper, especially where the decision was not filed until more than three months after the time of the trial, during which time no offer of the evidence was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 210-214; Dec. Dig. § 102.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by L. A. Rockwell against the Italian-Swiss Colony, a corporation, and another. From an order denying a new trial for newly discovered evidence, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George B. Graham, for appellants. Everts & Ewing, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The only ground relied on for a new trial was that of newly discovered evidence, and appellant concedes that "there is no question before the court on this appeal other than the ruling of the court in denying defendants' motion for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence." The defendant A. C. Palladine is the superintendent of the Italian-Swiss colony, and entered into a written contract February 24, 1903, with plaintiff, in which plaintiff agreed to bore a well that would furnish 3,500 gallons of water per minute for defendant, for the sum of $550, or, in case it became necessary to bore a second well to get the water required, plaintiff was also to receive the cost of the pipe for the second well. It was expressly stipulated that Rockwell must furnish a supply of 3,500 gallons per minute before he should be entitled to any compensation. Plaintiff under the written contract sunk a well to a depth of 140 feet, when, in attempting to force down the casing, it collapsed, and the well was rendered useless. Plaintiff sunk a second well, defendant Palladine paying for the casing, to a depth of 175 feet. This well does not, and cannot, furnish 3,500 gallons of water per minute, but only about 1,250 gallons per minute. Defendant has used it ever since it was sunk. Palladine testified that: "I have used the well for irrigation purposes for the last three years, but the ditches on my place will not carry the water that the well pumps." Defendant has never paid anything for the wells, except to furnish the pipe for the second well, taking the position that as the wells do not, and cannot, furnish the stipulated 3,500 gallons of water per minute, nothing is owing under the written contract. Plaintiff brought his action upon a quantum meruit for boring the two wells, and recovered judgment for $487.52, which the evidence showed to be the usual and reasonable price for boring such a well 175 feet deep when the owner furnishes the pipe.

In support of his complaint plaintiff testified that upon the collapse of the first well at about 4:30 p. m. of a given day he left the premises where the well was sunk, but was soon overtaken by one Frank Enos Silva, who had been sent after him by Palladine. Palladine came up, and they entered into an oral agreement for the boring of a second well, by which Palladine agreed to furnish the pipe and to pay the usual price for boring the well. The effect of his evidence was that the original written contract was abandoned, and a new oral agreement entered into for the boring of a second well. He testified that Frank Enos Silva, Manuel Brown, and Tom Shields were present when this oral contract was made, and that the conversation occurred on the road near to the house of one Friezzel, and about one-half mile from the well. Frank Enos Silva testified and corroborated plaintiff. Manuel Brown was also examined as a witness. His evidence is set forth in full, but it is so nearly unintelligible that it throws no light on the issue. Tom Shields was not produced as a witness at the trial. Palladine testified and denied that he had the conversation relied on by plaintiff, and said that he did not see plaintiff after he left the premises until next morning, when he saw him at the railroad station, when plaintiff agreed that if he (Palladine) would advance the money for the pipe for a new well, he would go on with the contract. Defendants introduced other evidence, and the case was submitted for decision. The trial was held on the 14th day of March, 1906, and the findings and conclusions of law filed June 20, 1906.

Upon his motion for a new trial Palladine presented the affidavits of eight persons besides his own, one being that of Tom Shields, and several being of persons who were on the premises when the well collapsed. Some were employes of defendants, and all seem to have been known to him. The affidavits of several of these witnesses tended to prove that Palladine remained on the premises where the well was sunk after plaintiff left, and when he left he went to his home, on premises other than where the well was sunk, and was accompanied by several of the affiants until after he had passed the house of Friezzel and the point where plaintiff claimed to have made the new contract with defendant, and did not on that occasion meet and talk with plaintiff. It may be, and we think must be conceded, that the new evidence set forth in the affidavits is of such character as to raise a strong presumption that, if it had been produced at the trial, the decision of the court would have been against the contention of plaintiff. But the court is not required to grant a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, unless the evidence could not have been discovered and produced by the moving party at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 4. Due diligence must be shown, and the action of the trial court will not be reversed except upon a clear showing of an abuse of discretion in the ruling. O'Rourke v. Vennekohl, 104 Cal. 254, 37 Pac. 930; Oberlander v. Fixen Co., 129 Cal. 690, 62 Pac. 254; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169; Tibbet v. Sue, 125 Cal. 544, 58 Pac. 160; Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 Pac. 342; Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 668, 38 Pac. 511.

The evidence set forth in the affidavits which is of importance is of facts that ought to have been known to Palladine, and were known to him, at the time of the trial, except that at the time he may not have remembered them. The evidence related mainly to his whereabouts immediately after the collapse, and up to the time that he went to his own home, and the witnesses were all well known to him. His excuse is that he did not know until plaintiff testified what evidence he would be required to meet, and that at the trial it did not occur to him that he had been in the company of several persons, some of his own employés, on the afternoon in question, until after he had passed the Friezzel house on his way home. While he may not have known the exact facts upon which plaintiff relied until plaintiff gave his testimony, the complaint itself gave notice that plaintiff did not rely on performance of the written contract. Indeed, the cross-examination of Silva discloses that Palladine had reason to believe, long before the trial, that plaintiff expected to prove that a new agreement had been made. Under such circumstances defendant, by taking plaintiff's deposition, might have fully informed himself as to the particulars of plaintiff's claim. When plaintiff testified that Tom Shields was present when the new agreement was made, he should have taken steps to procure his testimony. In a similar case it was said: "That defendant did not know what the new witness would testify is no excuse. He had been notified by plaintiff's testimony that these witnesses knew the truth of the matters as to which plaintiff had testified, and would contradict him if his testimony was false." *Weinburg v. Somp*s (Cal.) 33 Pac. 341.

When plaintiff gave his testimony as to the conversation on the highway near Friezzel's defendant, if taken by surprise, should have asked for a continuance in order to procure the attendance of Shields, whom he knew, and of his employés and of the others, who knew that he did not meet plaintiff on the highway near Friezzel's home. Palladine knew what these witnesses knew, and his only excuse for not procuring their attendance is lapse of memory at the time of the trial as to his movements that afternoon. But the record before us shows that the trial occurred March 14, 1906, and the decision was not filed until June 20, 1906. At any time prior to the decision defendant might have moved for the setting aside of the submission, and leave to introduce newly discovered evidence. Just when he remembered the particulars as to his whereabouts, and whom he was with, on the afternoon and evening in question, does not appear, except that all of the affidavits save his own and one other were made during the month of May, 1906. Upon the record before us all this evidence might have been offered before the cause was decided.

Upon the whole case we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in denying defendants' motion for a new trial, for lack of diligence in discovering and producing the newly discovered evidence, and for this reason the order is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 669

PEOPLE v. LAPIQUE. (Cr. 110.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 25, 1909.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 122*)—INFORMATION—VARIANCE FROM COMMITMENT.

A commitment was indorsed on the back of a complaint filed before a magistrate, which complaint set out the same facts and circumstances in detail as were subsequently charged in the information. The commitment recited: "It appearing to me that the offense in the within deposition mentioned, to wit, obtaining money under false pretenses, has been committed," etc. Held that, the complaint being thus made a portion of the commitment, the commitment was sufficient under Pen. Code, § 872, prescribing a form of commitment; and hence the information charging obtaining money under false pretenses was not defective because the commitment charged that offense without showing the degree of the offense which by section 486 may be either a felony or a misdemeanor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 206*)—COMMITMENT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—DEPOSITION.

Pen. Code, § 872, prior to its amendment in 1905 provided that if it appeared from the examination of accused that a public offense had been committed, and there was sufficient cause to believe him guilty thereof, the magistrate must indorse on the deposition, an order for his commitment, etc. Held, that the word "deposition" was synonymous with "complaint," and was changed to "complaint" by the amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 411; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

3. JURY (§ 116*)—PANEL—CHALLENGE.

Part of a regularly drawn jury panel is not subject to the challenge for bias of the summoning officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 543; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

4. JURY (§ 150*)—IMPANELMENT—REGULARITY.

Where, in answer to an application of accused to examine into the regularity of the impaneling of the jury, the court, speaking from the record, declared that all of the sixty jurors originally drawn had been excused except those in attendance on the court, no attempt having been made by accused to change the record, the court's refusal of the application was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 639; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY—MISCONDUCT.

Where the court instructed the jury to disregard any and all statements made by the district attorney, the defendant in his own behalf or the court as to any conviction of accused for any other crime, or anything that bore on the subject, a statement of the district attorney conveying information that accused had been previously convicted, in answer to a statement of accused, was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

6. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 38*)—INFORMATION—VARIANCE.

False pretenses charged in the information were that defendant falsely represented that he was the agent of two individual owners of a lot, and was authorized by them to sell the lot and to sign their names to a contract of sale. The complaining witness testified that he paid the money to defendant because defendant told him the lot belonged to a bank, and that defendant had the right to sell the lot himself, and that witness would not have given the money to defendant if he had not told him that the "bank" owned the lot, and he had the right to sell it. On cross-examination complainant also stated that, before filing the complaint, he went to the bank to ascertain the ownership of the lot. Held, that the evidence constituted a fatal variance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

7. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 38*)—INFORMATION—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—PROOF.

Where the ownership of property involved in a prosecution for false pretenses constituted the false representations made to induce complainant to part with his money, and was not an element of the crime or a matter of description, the allegation of ownership could not be treated as surplusage because the property was otherwise sufficiently described, but must be proved as laid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Jamison, Judge.

John Lapique was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 98 Pac. 46, 256, 257, 868.

John Lapique, in pro. per. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses, and upon conviction was sentenced to 10 years in state's prison.

The errors upon which a reversal of the judgment is urged on this appeal are the following: (1) The denial by the trial court of defendant's motion to set aside the information; (2) the overruling of defendant's demurrer to the information; (3) the refusal of the trial court to permit the defendant to investigate the regularity of the drawing of the jury; (4) the denial of defendant's challenge to the panel; (5) the denial of defendant's motion to instruct the jury to acquit because of a variance in the false representations alleged and those proven; (6) the refusal of the court to give certain instructions requested by the defendant, and its failure to distinguish by indorsement the instructions given, refused, and modified; and (7) misconduct of the district attorney in making statements in the presence of the jury touching the former prosecutions of the defendant.

The error assigned in respect to the motion to set aside the information is that the district attorney did not file an information for the same offense for which the defendant was held by the committing magistrate. This is based upon the fact that the commitment designates the offense for which defendant was held as "obtaining money under false pretenses" without determining the degree of the offense which, by reason of the provisions of section 486, may or may not constitute a felony. People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 596, 76 Pac. 490; People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 219, 76 Pac. 1028; People v. Picetti, 124 Cal. 361, 57 Pac. 156; People v. Small, 1 Cal. App. 322, 82 Pac. 87. The contention in support of this view is that the same doctrine declared in relation to verdicts attempting to describe an offense, such as were considered in the cases of People v. Cummings, 117 Cal. 499, 49 Pac. 576, and People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 61, 67 Pac. 42, is applicable here. We cannot subscribe to this view. The commitment is indorsed upon the back of the complaint filed before the committing magistrate, and the complaint sets out the same facts, circumstances, and detail that appear in the charging part of the information. The commitment reads as follows: "It appearing to me that the offense in the within deposition mentioned, to wit: obtaining money under false pretenses, has been committed," etc. The complaint thus being made a portion of the commitment and so considered, the commitment is sufficient under section 872 of the Penal Code. Since the amendment of this section in 1905 the word "complaint" has been the proper word to use in this connection, instead of "deposition" but the latter was held to be the equivalent of "complaint" when the word "deposition" was used in the statute.

There is no merit in the demurrer to the information, and that pleading is good and sufficient against the attack made upon it.

Defendant challenged the panel of jurors in attendance at the trial upon specified grounds covering both section 1059 and section 1064 of the Penal Code. The record discloses that the jurors were a portion of a regularly drawn panel, and therefore a challenge under section 1064 will not lie, and the refusal of the court to permit any examination, with the view of showing prejudice toward the defendant, of the deputy sheriffs who summoned the jurors, was proper. In respect to the attempted examination into the regularity of the impanelment of the jury, which defendant contends the court refused to permit him to make, it appears that the record was before the court at the time, and that, speaking from the record, the court declared that all of the 60 jurors originally drawn had been excused by the court except those who were in attendance upon the court. We cannot presume the court misstated the record, and, if he stated it correctly, it answered all the inquiry made by the defendant. No attempt was made by him to have the record corrected, and he was in no way prejudiced by the action of the court in this respect. As a whole, the instructions given present the law fairly upon the subjects covered, and we see no prejudice to defendant's interest arising from either the giving or refusing to give or modification of any of the instructions presented by the record. The trial judge designated the instructions given and those refused. Those parts of instructions offered which were refused, and those parts which were given and the modifications which were made, appear from the record.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The matter presented under the head or ground specified in defendant's motion for a new trial is as follows: "That the verdict of the jury was arrived at solely by and upon the remarks and instructions of the court to the jury during argument of counsel to the effect that defendant had been previously convicted of two felonies." It rests upon a statement by the district attorney made at the conclusion of defendant's statement of his case to the jury before the evidence was taken. The defendant said to the jury: "Before I go any further, I wish to tell you one thing, to tell you my misfortune to be charged with crime before. You all know Ruef and his fight up there, but I was never convicted by anybody. I want to show the jury that I never was convicted of a crime. I have a right to show that." Thereupon the court said to the defendant, "Don't argue to the jury in connection with that," and the district attorney made the remark: "I presume what he wanted to say was he had been convicted twice, and then the cases were reversed by the Supreme Court, is that it?" To which the defendant replied: "I didn't want to say any such thing. I want to say the Supreme Court turned me loose. You told the reporters last night that yourself. You are trying to prejudice this jury—which is a lie. I will watch you very closely." On the following day the defendant put the district attorney upon the witness stand, and, upon being asked what his purpose was, said, "I want to show by his tricks that he came here and prejudiced the jury, that he charged me with two convictions of which I have never been guilty of," whereupon the court examined the record and stated he had not clearly heard the remarks made on the previous day, and instructed the jury to disregard any and all statements made by either the district attorney, the defendant, or the court in relation to any conviction of defendant of any other crime, or anything that bore upon the subject. It is apparent from this that, if the defendant's case was prejudiced by such a remark, it was the fault neither of the court nor the district attorney.

The record, we think, discloses a fatal variance between the allegation and proof. The false representations charged in the information were that the defendant represented that he was the agent of Mary and Richard Corcoran and authorized by them to sell and transfer a certain lot 8 of the Corcoran tract owned by them, and that he was authorized to sign their names to a certain written instrument which he exhibited to the complaining witness and which purported upon its face to be a contract of sale of said lot, and to which he signed the names of Mary and Richard Corcoran, with his own as their agent, in the presence of the complaining witness, and by reason of said pretended sale induced the complaining witness, Camgros, to pay him the sum of $100 on said contract. The evidence of the complaining witness is that he paid the $100 to defendant on April 19, 1907, because the defendant told him that the lot belonged to the Security Savings Bank, and that he (defendant) had the right to sell the lot himself. The witness testified: "I believed that and that's why I bought the lot. I gave him the money. * * * I believed what he told me about the lot, and that belief was what caused me to give him the money." The district attorney thereupon asked the witness whether or not he would have given the money to the defendant if the latter had not told him that the Security Savings Bank owned the lot and that he had a right to sell it, and the witness answered, "No." Again, on cross-examination the witness stated that, before filing the complaint, he went to the Security Savings Bank to find out about the ownership of the lot. These were the only representations, according to the complaining witness, made at the time of the transaction and the only ones upon which he (complaining witness) relied in parting with his money. Eight days later the defendant handed to the complaining witness a writing executed in the manner alleged in the information. This writing was substituted for the receipt given at the time of the payment of the $100, and bore the same date, April 19, 1907. The witness could not read and did not read the paper or know its contents, and no representations were made to him to the same or similar effect or purport as the contents thereof. There is no escape from the conclusion that the allegations of the information were not proven as alleged. If this variance be treated as one merely relating to a question of ownership, one of the subdivisions of the general rule that the evidence must correspond with the allegations in the pleading is that allegations of matters of essential description must be proved as laid. Taylor on Evidence, § 289. Ownership may or may not be an essential matter of description according to the offense charged and the circumstances of its commission. The general rule is that ownership must be proved as alleged because it identifies the offense, and hence, even where its allegation is unnecessary, it has been held that the rule should be applied in order that the charge may be distinguished from all others upon a plea of former conviction or acquittal. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 488b.

The matter of ownership, however, is not to be considered here as an element of the crime or a matter of description, but in respect to what representations were made to induce the complainant to part with his money. It is apparent, then, that the allegation of ownership cannot be treated as surplusage because the property is otherwise sufficiently described. Bishop, Statutory Crimes (3d Ed.) § 1120. The crime charged was to be established by the proof of the false representations alleged to have been made and of their falseness. The fraud must be accomplished by means of the false pretenses alleged to have been made use of for the purpose. They must be shown to be the cause which induced the owner to part with his money. People v. Jordan, 63 Cal. 10, 12, 4 Pac. 773, 56 Am. Rep. 73; People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173, 175, 19 Pac. 270; People v. Cadot, 138 Cal. 527, 71 Pac. 649. This was not done here.

On the ground of the variance thus shown, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 654

DRAKE v. RUSSIAN RIVER LAND CO.
(Civ. 512.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 25, 1909.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 248*)—ISSUES.

In a suit to quiet title, it is error for the court to go beyond the issues and to decree that plaintiff is not entitled to rights which defendant is not contesting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 434, 439, 440; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

2. DEEDS (§ 99*)—CONSTRUCTION.

The court, in arriving at the meaning of a deed, must consult the language in deeds linked together by express terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 262; Dec. Dig. § 99.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 16*) — UNNAVIGABLE STREAMS.

The common-law rule that the boundary of land bordering on an un navigable stream is along the center of the stream, unless there is something in the deed conveying the land to show a contrary intention, is the rule adopted by Civ. Code, § 830.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-117; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 16*) — UNNAVIGABLE STREAMS—"MONUMENT."

A deed describing land as running along an un navigable stream, or referring to the stream as the boundary, makes the stream a "monument."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-117; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4576.]

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 16*) — UNNAVIGABLE STREAMS—"MONUMENT."

A deed describing land as bounded on the bank or shore of an un navigable stream makes the bank or shore the "monument," and the line of low-water mark is the boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-117; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

6. BOUNDARIES (§ 16*) — UNNAVIGABLE STREAMS—"BORDER"—"BOUNDARY."

A deed described the lands as situated on the side of an un navigable stream and as bounded by the stream on three sides, and gave the particular subdivisions of the section. The grantee in the deed conveyed by deed which fixed the starting point in a subdivision of a section; thence east, a specified distance, to the side of the stream; thence down the stream with the meanderings thereof—being the property conveyed by the first deed. Held, that under Civ. Code, §§ 830, 1069, providing that, when land borders on un navigable water, the owner takes to the middle of the stream, and declaring that a grant must be interpreted in favor of the grantee, one claiming under the deeds took to the middle of the stream; the word "border" being synonymous with "boundary."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 108-117; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 851, 852.]

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 114*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held not to show that one acquired by adverse possession any title to an un navigable stream or bank included in a conveyance to another making the middle of the stream the boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—EXTENT OF SERVITUDE—STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, § 806, providing that the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, a use made by one of an un navigable stream and bank within the boundaries of the land of another taking to the center of the stream, which never became anything more than an easement to the extent of the use, does not entitle the former to use the stream or bank for purposes wholly different.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

9. EASEMENTS (§ 27*)—EXTINGUISHMENT.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 805, 811, providing that a servitude cannot be held by the owner of the servient tenement, and that the vesting of the right to the servitude and to the servient tenement in the same person extinguishes the servitude, the merger of estates extinguishes the servitude.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

10. BOUNDARIES (§ 37*)—WATER COURSES.

An owner of land bordering on an unnavigable stream made a survey thereof by driving stakes on the top of the bank of the stream. Subsequently he executed a deed describing the land as situated on the stream and as being bounded by the stream. A subsequent grantee took possession of the land and passed beyond the survey line and used the stream without objections for over 25 years. Held, that the grantee took to the center of the stream notwithstanding the survey.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; S. J. Denny, Judge.

Action by Emma Drake against the Russian River Land Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

S. K. Dougherty, for appellant. A. B. Ware and Thos. J. Butts, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to quiet title to certain land.

Plaintiff and defendant claim through the same source of title, to wit, Frances Korbel, Joseph Korbel, and Anton Korbel, who were the owners of the land in controversy on February 23, 1877. Plaintiff claims a tract of 114.51 acres of land lying in Sonoma county, partly in section 21 and partly in section 28, township 28 N., range 10 W., M. D. B. & M. The Russian river borders plaintiff's land on its north, east, and west sides, describing in shape a horseshoe; the arch of the bend pointing north. The defendant claims that portion of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 21, which includes the entire bed of Russian river; the top of the southeast bank being claimed as the southeast boundary of its land. The remaining land in that 40-acre tract concededly belongs to plaintiff. Plaintiff claims that the boundary line of her land is the center of the river, which is a nonnavigable stream. The controversy therefore involves the title to this strip of the river bed and the banks of the stream along plaintiff's boundary. The land claimed by plaintiff is described in her complaint as follows: "Commencing at a point 4.25 chains east of the southwest corner of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, township 8 N., range 10 W., M. D. B. & M.; thence east 41.05 chains to the south side of Russian river; thence down the said river, with the meanderings thereof, N.  $8\frac{3}{4}$  degrees E., 5.65 chains." Thence the courses and distances are given along the bank of the river following down the stream; the last call being: "Thence S., 5 degrees 15 minutes W., 12.52 chains, to the place of beginning, containing 114.51 acres." The court found that plaintiff is now, and for a long time prior to the commencement of the action was, the owner and in possession of the land described as follows—describing the land as in the complaint with the exception that the court omits the portions of the description indicated by italics hereinabove. It was also found that defendant has no right, estate, or title therein, and that "for a period of over 30 years the said plaintiff and her predecessors in interest have exclusively, openly, and notoriously and continuously and adversely occupied all that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land hereinabove described." The court then finds that defendant is the owner of the land particularly described in the answer which, as already stated, includes all the bed of Russian river lying in the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 21, and the banks to the meander line described in the complaint. A decree was accordingly entered in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment on bill of exceptions.

The findings are challenged as unsupported by the evidence, in this, that the findings limit plaintiff's ownership to the top of the bank of the river and do not find that she is the owner of any part of the bed of the river; also, in finding adverse ownership in plaintiff to the land described and not finding that it extends to the middle of the stream or includes any part of the river bed but excludes plaintiff from the whole thereof; also, that defendant is the owner of the land claimed by it which includes the entire river bed in the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 21, shown above, to the top of the banks. The effect of the decree is to deprive plaintiff not only of access to the river at any point in the 40-acre tract, in section 21, but it denies her right of access to the river wherever her land borders on the river. The entire river frontage of plaintiff's land is 85.27 chains, of which defendant's answer claims but 14.75 chains, leaving a frontage of 70.52 chains to which defendant makes no claim in its answer, but to which the decree adjudges that plaintiff has no right beyond the top of the river bank. Under any view that may be taken of the case, it was error to go beyond the issues and to decree plaintiff to be disentitled to rights which defendant is not now contesting. The decree suggests the Ancient Mariner:

"Water, water, everywhere,
Nor any drop to drink."

Plaintiff derails her title from the Korbels, whose deed to R. P. Kelley dated February 23, 1877, conveyed three different tracts, the first about 60 acres; being "all that part of the Pippen claim which is situated, lying and being on the south side of Russian river, and is the part east of the Russian river, of the north half of the northwest quarter of section 28, tp. 8 north, of range 10 west, M. D. M."; also "all that part of the land of the Pippen claim which is situate, lying and being on the south side of Russian river, and is the southeast part of the south half of the southwest quarter of section 21 (same T. and R.) containing about 40 acres"; also "that part of the land of the Blakely claim which is situate, lying and being on the south side of Russian river and bounded on the east by Russian river, and is the western fraction of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, T. 8 N., R. 10 W., M. D. M., containing about 5 acres more or less; and all these described parts of land forming one complex, being bounded and inclosed by the Russian river on the north, east and west side. All the above described property is situated in Sonoma county, California. [Signed] Frances Korbel. Anton Korbel. Joseph Korbel. Properly acknowledged and recorded in Liber 61 of Deeds, at page 3." Kelley conveyed this land to Andrew Jackson Hare, July 26, 1877, by the same description as in the Kelley deed. Hare conveyed the same land to Robert P. Kelley, September 28, 1877, by the same description as above given, and on the next day, September 29, 1877, Kelley conveyed to his wife, Celesta, the same land by the same description. November 2, 1877, Celesta conveyed this land by the same description to De Courcy Hodgkin; September, 12, 1878, Hodgkin conveyed to Charles F. Poff by same description; and on May 16, 1879, Poff conveyed to Robert P. Kelley by like description. On December 18, 1879, Kelley conveyed to John Taggart, Sr., by the description as given in the plaintiff's complaint, calling for 114.51 acres, "being the same property conveyed to the said R. P. Kelley by F. Korbel et al., by deed dated February 23, 1877." On October 7, 1881, Taggart conveyed to Richard Hutchinson by the same description given in the Kelley deed to Taggart, and by the same description Hutchinson conveyed to Richard S. Drake, October 1, 1887, who by like description conveyed the land to his wife, Emma, on June 14, 1897, the plaintiff in the action.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It was stipulated that February 23, 1877, when they conveyed to Kelley, the Korbels owned the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 21. Their deed to Kelley of that date conveyed a fraction of that 40 lying south of and bordering on the river. The title remained, as shown above, until 1904, when the Korbel Bros. were incorporated as F. Korbel & Bros., and on August 26, 1904, they conveyed to the corporation all their interest in the lands described as "part of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 21; being on the north side of Russian river, containing 20 acres, more or less, and extending to the bank south of Russian river, in T. 8 N., Range 10 West, M. D. M." Anton Korbel and Teresa Korbel, on October 31, 1904, also conveyed by grant, bargain, and sale to the Korbel corporation by same description as last above. On August 26, 1904, the Korbel corporation conveyed to L. C. Cnopius, and on October 14, 1904, Cnopius and wife conveyed to the Russian River Heights Land Company by description as in first deed to the Korbel corporation, and on April 7, 1906, this company conveyed by same description to defendant.

It will thus be seen that the Korbels did not by deed make any assertion of right to the entire river bed in the 40-acre tract involved in the controversy until 1904. We have, then, the question principally discussed: Do the conveyances, through which plaintiff claims, carry title to the center of the Russian river where the river is the boundary of plaintiff's land?

Section 830 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "Except where the grant under which the land is held indicates a different intent, the owner of the upland, when it borders on tide water, takes to ordinary high-water mark; when it borders upon a navigable lake or stream, where there is no tide, the owner takes to the edge of the lake or stream, at low-water mark; when it borders upon any other water, the owner takes to the middle of the lake or stream." In the present case the land borders upon a stream unnavigable, and unless the deeds, which we are now to examine, "indicate a different intent," the Code rule must prevail, and the grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee. Civ. Code, § 1069.

To arrive at the meaning of the grant in the particular drawn in question, we must consult the language used in the deed from the Korbels to Kelley, as well as that used in the deed from Kelley to Taggart and in the deed to plaintiff, for they are linked together by express terms. In the deed of the Korbels to Kelley the land in part is described as "situated, lying and being on the south side of Russian river and is the part east of the Russian river" (and describing the particular subdivision of the section); in part it is described as "lying and being on the south side of the Russian river" (and describing the subdivision of the section); "also, that part of the land * * * which is situate, lying and being on the south side of the Russian river, and bounded on the east by the Russian river" (and describing the subdivision of the section); "and all these described three parts of land forming one complex, being bounded and inclosed by the Russian river on the north, east and west side." This deed could not have expressed the intention of the grantors any better or more clearly if it had read "bordering on the Russian river" instead of "bounded and inclosed by the Russian river." The language of the deed, without question, means that the river is the border or boundary; the term "border" being synonymous with "boundary," as are the terms "bordered" and "bounded." Webster. It is not possible to say from this language that it "indicates a different intent," and unless this can be said the Civil Code declares that "the owner takes to the middle of the stream." The Code rule is also the common-law rule and has been adopted generally throughout the United States. 4 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 828. It is there said: "Where land borders on a stream which is nonnavigable in fact, the boundary line is to be taken as running along the center of the stream, unless there be something in the deed itself to show a contrary intention." Where in a deed the land is described as bounded on the bank or shore of a stream, the grantee does not take to the center; but the bank or shore is the monument and not the stream, and the line of low water will usually be the boundary (Id. p. 830); but where the stream itself is referred to as the boundary, or the line is described as "running along" a stream, then the stream is the monument, and the flum aquæ the boundary (Id. p. 831). Here the language is explicit and makes the river, not its banks, the boundary. This it seems to us too plain to require further comment. Furthermore, the rule which makes the bank the monument would still give the owner the right to go to the line of low water as her boundary. Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, supra. And even this right is taken from plaintiff by the decree.

Passing to the deed of Kelley to Taggart, we have there a deed showing apparently a survey of the land. Its starting point is 4.25 chains from the southwest corner of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28; "thence east 41.05 chains, to the north side of Russian river; and thence down said river [not along the bank], with the meanderings thereof, \* \* \* to the place of beginning, \* \* \* being the same property conveyed to the said F. P. Kelley by F. Korbel et al., by deed dated February 23, 1877, and recorded in Liber 61 of Deeds, page 3 of Sonoma County Records." Whether this language means the same as if it said to the south bank of the river, intending to make the bank and not the river itself the boundary, is not clear. Nor is it perhaps very clear that in saying, "thence down said river with the meanderings thereof," the grantor meant "thence down the bank of said river." We incline to think that the intention here shown is to make the river the boundary. However this may be, the deed itself makes clear the intention to be to convey "the same property conveyed to the said F. P. Kelley by F. Korbel et al., by deed dated February 23, 1877," thus removing all doubt of the grantor's intention and leaving the question to be answered by the deed to Kelley. Plaintiff takes to the middle of the stream unless the grant to her "indicates a different intent" (Civ. Code, § 830), and in ascertaining such intent "the grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee" (Civ. Code, § 1069). Our opinion is that by the grant plaintiff takes to the middle of the river.

It may be profitable to note some of the many cases in illustration of the meaning of "bounding on" or "running along" a stream where land is described. In Lowell v. Robinson, 16 Me. 357, 33 Am. Dec. 671, the deed begins the line of boundary at Meadow brook, "at a stake by the side of the river or millpond, thence by the said pond to the first mentioned bounds." The court said: "It is too well settled to admit of doubt that, when land is bounded upon a river or stream, the grantee will hold to the thread of the stream. * * * When the monument is stated to stand by the river or by the edge of the river, the same idea is communicated as if it had stated that the line of boundary commenced by the river or by the edge of the river, instead of at the monument thus standing, unless from other parts of the conveyance it should clearly appear that such was not the intention." See cases in note. In Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 451, 35 Am. Dec. 637, quoting from the opinion, Cowen, J., says: "The deed from the Curreys bounded Barnabas Wood by a stake and maple tree mentioned in the deed as standing on or near the east bank; the intermediate line running along the river as it winds and turns." Here, "thence down said river, with the meanderings thereof." "It is never thought that monuments mentioned in such a deed as occupying the bank of the river are meant by the parties to stand on the precise water line at its high or low mark. They are used rather to fix the termini of the line which is described as following the sinuosities of the stream, leaving the law to say, as the line happens to be above or below tide water, whether the one-half of the river shall be included with the islands which lie on the side of the channel nearest to the line described. * * * If the parties meant to exclude it, they should do so by express exception. Without adhering rigidly to such a construction, water gores would be multiplied by thousands along our inland streams, small and great, the intention of parties would be continually violated, and litigation become interminable." In Pike v. Monroe, 36 Me. 309, 58 Am. Dec. 751, the description began "at the south side of a large white oak on the bank, * * * and from thence down river," etc., and it was held that the line must be taken as along the river, and that the words do not indicate merely the general direction. In Cox v. Freedley, 33 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584, a lot was described by courses and distances and by streets and lanes. "Along the northeast side of Egypt street" and "along the southeast side of Race street" are two parts of the description. The measurements to these streets would terminate at their side respectively. Held, that upon abandonment of these streets the deed carried title to their middle. So held in Moody v. Palmer, 50 Cal. 31. The principle is applied in Hendricks v. Feather River Canal Co., 138 Cal. 423, 71 Pac. 496. See, also, cases cited in 2 Devlin on Deeds, § 1026a.

We are now to inquire what, if anything, has happened to affect plaintiff's rights as we have regarded them? It appears by the evidence that the Russian river is a stream from 300 to 400 feet wide between banks. It is subject, like other streams in the state, to floods when it is bank full and its bottom entirely covered by water of considerable depth. Where the river flows through the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 21, in the season of low water, the channel is along the north bank, and a sand and gravel bar has formed along the south bank, extending beyond the center of the river. In the year 1879 or 1880 the Korbels erected a chute or sluice in this channel about six or eight feet in width and built wings from the north bank and from the bar converging at the chute in which an undershot wheel was erected. This wheel was attached to a pump which raised water to supply the boiler of a steam sawmill located near the river bank on the Korbels' land and to furnish water at other buildings. This dam was a temporary affair and usually went out in high water and was replaced again as needed in the summer. The bottom and sides of this sluiceway generally withstood high water.

Witness Oliver Westcott, called by defendant, gives a description of the dam and wheel: "I reside in Guerneville in this county, and have lived in that vicinity about 42 years. I know the site of the old Korbels mill, the property now owned by the Russian River Land Company. I know the premises across the river occupied by Mrs. Drake and know the bar at the river there. I have seen a dam there, I could not state the exact date, but it must have been about 1880, something like that." (Anton Korbels testified that it was built in 1879 or 1880.) "To the best of my recollection it was there for four or five years." (Korbels testified: "We maintained it there six years, until we shut the mill down. That dam was 42 feet long, something like that across the river.") Westcott, resuming: "I was right at the wheel several times. I was right at the dam. The dam was just immediately above it. It must have been from 40 to 60 feet long. The wheel I think was about 8 feet, the diameter. I should judge it was 5 or 6 feet, the paddles of the wheel. Q. Was the river dam clear across there? A. No, it wasn't. Q. I mean clear across the water? A. It was dammed clear across the water. They had to raise the water some in order to run the wheel. * * * The dam was formed first, of course, and then there was a sluiceway made that was to confine the water to five feet. It came in on an angle, you know, to the wheel; and the bottom, if I recollect right, was boarded. There was a platform of boards from the water, under the water, and then they put in a wheel above, you see, above the wheel and the paddles. There was probably 12 or 14 paddles on it, and the water by rushing through this race and undercurrent, you know, would give it motion and give it power." Korbels testified that the river at this point is 300 or 400 feet wide from bank to bank. "Q. And you extended that (the dam) 40 feet to the edge of the water? A. That is the low water or the summer water, where we could put a dam in." Witness Butts (of counsel for defendant) testified that the dam was about 50 or 60 feet long. "It went to where the ground and the bar was high enough so it was higher than the dam. I should judge 20 or 30 feet, probably, from the lower edge of the bank. * * * This dam was there from 1880 to 1886." Mr. Butts was mistaken in his estimate of the distance of the dam from the south bank, for all witnesses agree that the river was 300 feet and more wide, and none of them make the dam more than 50 or 60 feet long, and the wheel was near the north bank. He also testified that the dam backed the water clear across the river some distance above; "but right at the bank the dam was narrow, and the bar was higher, so it didn't back it across right at the dam, but triangular across above." The east arm of the river carried the current to the north bank at the apex of the horseshoe bend, thus causing a long and wide bar to form on the south side of the river and extending well down towards the south line of the 40-acre tract in dispute. A little distance below the dam the current strikes the west bank of the river along the west arm of the horseshoe bend and is diverted across the stream to the southeast side, thus terminating the bar in question and forming a bar along the west side of the river with the water channel next to plaintiff's land.

The court found that plaintiff and her predecessors had been in adverse possession of the land south of the river for 30 years, and plaintiff testified that she has been in possession and living on the land for a period of 26 years (the trial was in 1907), and her son Charles, 25 years old at the trial, testified that he was born there. This was at the time the property was conveyed to Hutchinson and 6 years before the property was conveyed to plaintiff's husband. The mill was shut down and the dam was abandoned for use about 1886. There is evidence that plaintiff knew of this obstruction and its use while she lived on the place and, so far as appears, made no objection; but there is nothing in the record to show that prior to 1887 either she or her husband had any interest in the land or were in any position to object or consent to the obstruction. Furthermore, the evidence shows that the dam in no wise interfered with the use of the bar and the river bed by plaintiff or her predecessors or furnished cause for complaint. It was not until defendant asserted a claim to the top of the bank, under its deed executed in 1904, that her rights were called in question, and she then brought this action.

Plaintiff was called as a witness and was asked to state what use had been made of the river bed by her, along where this bar is situated, for the past 25 years. She testified: "When we had an alfalfa field in there, we had a fence so we could let our stock go down to the water at different places there, and, furthermore, we used it to go down on the bar to go across the river bed with a team when we wanted to go around there; and we hauled brush out there, even at the present time, we hauled brush on one side, and on the other side we are drying prunes. We go down to the river bed and go over where we dip prunes. * * * The bank on the north side is rocky, more rocky than it is on the south side, on the side where we planted willows along in order to keep the land from washing out, to hold the land." This testimony is not contradicted.

It seems to us that the evidence on this feature of the case wholly fails to establish any right in defendant to the river bed and the south banks to their top as held by the trial court. Whatever use was made of the river ceased in 1886 or 1887 and never became anything more than an easement to the extent of the use. It did not carry with it the fee of the land entitling the defendant to use the bar for purposes wholly different from the use for which the easement was acquired—conceding that it was acquired. Allen v. San Jose Land & W. Co., 92 Cal. 138, 28 Pac. 215, 15 L. R. A. 93. "The extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired." Civ. Code, § 806. "A servitude is extinguished: * * * (4) When the servitude was acquired by enjoyment, by disuse thereof by the owner of the servitude for the period prescribed for acquiring title by enjoyment." Civ. Code, § 811.

Furthermore, the land upon which it is claimed by defendant that the servitude was laid—the servient tenement—belonged to the Korbels at the time the servitude is alleged to have been created by them; but "a servitude cannot be held by the owner of the servient tenement" (Civ. Code, § 805), and the vesting of the right to the servitude and the right to the servient tenement in the same person extinguishes the servitude (Civ. Code, § 811), that is, the merger of estates extinguishes the servitude.

If, as we think is clear enough, defendant has failed to establish title to the bed of the river and the banks thereof, to which it makes claim, above the dam, still less supported is its claim below the dam. The utmost use to which the stream below the dam was put in connection with the dam was to carry off the water passing under the wheel in the dam, and nobody pretends that this interfered in the slightest degree with plaintiff's enjoyment of that part of the stream bed or the bar to which she claims title.

There was evidence that a logging car track was surveyed or run out over a portion of the bar below the dam over which Korbels testified they hauled logs for "about a couple of years." Mr. Butts testified that this track was located in 1881. It appeared that about six months after Taggart had conveyed to Hutchinson, which was October 7, 1881, Taggart made claim to the river bed, and the Korbels paid him $50 for the right of way for the car track referred to above. It is not apparent how Taggart by this action, to which Hutchinson was not a party and of which he is not shown to have had any knowledge, could bind Hutchinson. There is no evidence that it was used after 1882, and at most it was but a right of way which in no sense can be said to establish title to anything not conveyed which was "the right of way for a logging road over, across and upon the bar in Russian river situated in," etc. (giving the description of the land in sections 21 and 28). There is no evidence as to the exact location of this road. A diagram was used at the argument, but which was no part of the record, which shows this road to run along the bar on the west side or northerly side of the river in section 28 and crossing the channel to the bar on the south or easterly side in section 21, and thence running, below the dam, across the channel to the mill. It is some distance from the east bank at all points. In our view of the Taggart deed to Hutchinson, Taggart had no interest in the bed of the river when he assumed to convey this right of way. And, as there is no evidence that it was used as such longer than two years, no prescriptive right to it is shown. Besides, if it exists it would not deprive plaintiff of the use of the river bed subject to this right of way. We fail to find any significance in this feature of the case sufficient to support defendant's claim.

One other phase of the case remains to be noticed. Korbels testified that he made a survey of the land conveyed to Kelley before the deed was executed. Considerable importance is attached to this fact by defendant, which justifies some consideration of it. The purpose of the evidence, which went in under objection, was to show that the land afterwards conveyed extended only to the top of the bank, and not to the river at any point. His entire testimony in chief was as follows: "Q. State whether or not you ever was present when a survey was made of the south portion of that quarter section, being the lands occupied by Mrs. Drake. A. Yes, I was present. Arthur Cox was the surveyor, and there was about three or four men from the mill with me. I drove the stakes." He testified that this survey was a few days before the deed to Kelley of February 23, 1877. "Q. Now where did you survey that? Where did you commence? A. I believe we commenced on the section 28, I think so, if I remember right. Q. Where did you survey to? A. Well, we surveyed the whole land, what I sold at that time. We surveyed the south side of the river bank, on top of the river bank. On the south side, on the river bank, on the top of it. I drove the stakes, all around, so many chains one way and so many chains this way (showing)." He was asked on cross-examination why, if he made this survey, he did not make the deed to Kelley conform to it, but was unable to explain it. There is nothing in his testimony inconsistent with the operation of the Code rule to which we have referred. It does not appear that the field notes of this survey were used and found their way into the Taggart deed until after the land had been several times reconveyed by the description in the Kelley deed. It is quite likely the line was run along the bank, and altogether unlikely that the survey was made, or could have been made, in the center of the stream. Such a survey would have been idle, for the stakes would have quickly disappeared. This was in February, 1877, the season when in all probability the surveyor could not have followed the center of the stream if he had desired to do so. There is absolutely nothing in Korbel's testimony tending to "indicate a different intent" from that expressed in his deed to Kelley, that the three tracts of land "formed one complex, being bounded and inclosed by the Russian river on the north, east, and west side." Besides, the deed afterwards executed must be presumed to have expressed the intent of the grantor. Nor is it at all probable that Kelley and his successors in interest went into possession of that land with the understanding that they could not pass beyond the surveyed line mentioned by Korbel and found in the Taggart deed; could not even water their stock on the shores of that stream without committing a trespass. Certain it is that plaintiff had no such understanding for she and her husband exercised the right under a deed, which we hold by its terms gave the right, for over a quarter of a century without let or hindrance from any one.

We are clearly of the opinion that when the defendant corporation, in 1904, took its deed to the land in dispute, its grantor had no title thereto, and defendant acquired none.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 679

KERN VALLEY BANK v. KOEHN.
(Civ. 602.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 26, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—REVIEW—
PRESUMPTIONS.

It will be presumed that the trial court found every fact necessary to support its order that the evidence justified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3762-3771; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1008*)—REVIEW—
IMPLIED FINDINGS OF FACT.

An implied finding of fact in support of an order, so far as it passed on the weight of evidence or credibility of witnesses, will not be interfered with any more than would an express finding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1008.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Kern Valley Bank against Charles A. Koehn. From an order, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. P. Laird, Rowen Irwin, and E. L. Foster, for appellant. George E. Whitaker, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from an order refusing to dissolve an attachment.

Plaintiff sued defendant on a promissory note and attached certain property belonging to defendant. The affidavit for the attachment contained the usual clause negating the holding of any property by mortgage lien or pledge to secure the payment of the note. Defendant moved the court to dissolve the attachment on the ground that the promissory note sued on was secured by a lien and pledge of personal property made by defendant to plaintiff, and that such property was so held by plaintiff at the time such attachment was issued. In support of his motion defendant introduced his own affidavit to the effect that he had executed a bill of sale of an undivided one-half interest in a quartz mill of a value between $2,500 and $9,000 to secure the payment of the note, and a letter of the date March 23, 1903, signed "H. A. Blodget, President," and purporting to be from plaintiff, wherein it is stated that a bill of sale given by defendant to plaintiff, bearing date August 5, 1893, conveying an undivided one-half interest in a quartz mill (describing it), "was given to secure payment of a certain indebtedness now evidenced by a certain promissory note made by you to the said Kern Valley Bank for the sum of $5,320, bearing date October 2, 1900 [the date and amount of the note sued on]; and that the said Kern Valley Bank holds said property as collateral for the payment of said described note." Plaintiff filed a counter affidavit by its cashier to the effect that at no time mentioned in its complaint did the plaintiff hold any interest in the property mentioned in defendant's affidavit and does not now, and that plaintiff never received or accepted the same or held or holds the same or any portion thereof as security for the payment of the promissory note which is sued upon herein. It is also denied that any bill of sale of the property was ever made to the plaintiff.

The action was brought July 17, 1907, and the order denying the motion filed September 6, 1907. The theory upon which the appeal is presented by the appellant appears to be that we will consider the weight of the evidence in passing upon the ruling of the trial court on the motion. This we cannot do. The evidence is conflicting, and we must presume that the court found every fact necessary to support its order that the evidence would justify. So far as it passed upon the weight of the evidence of credibility of the witnesses, its findings are conclusive upon this court. An appellate court will not disturb the implied findings of fact made by a trial court in support of its order, any more than it will interfere with the express findings upon which a final judgment is predicated.

Order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 683

GOYTINO v. McALEER et al., City Board of Police Com'rs. (Civ. 671.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 27, 1909.)

1. LICENSES (§ 17*)—BILLIARD HALL—"USEFUL ENTERPRISE."

The business of conducting public billiard halls and poolrooms is not a "useful enterprise" within the rule that a municipality cannot say who shall exercise the right of engaging in a lawful business having no injurious tendency; and an ordinance authorizing the licensing of poolrooms is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-46; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. LICENSES (§ 20*)—POLICE POWER—REGULATION OF POOLROOMS—DISCRETION OF MUNICIPAL BOARDS.

A municipal board, authorized to make such regulations as to permits to run poolrooms as may be necessary for the maintenance of public order, etc., may, in the exercise of a legal discretion, deny an application for a permit to run a poolroom in a part of the city inhabited by a class of people which would render a poolroom a place of resort for objectionable persons, and disturb the public peace.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Application for a writ of mandate by J. P. Goytino against Owen McAleer and others, constituting the Board of Police Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, to compel the issuance of a poolroom license. From a judgment denying the application, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991.

Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant. W. B. Mathews, Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., and John W. Shenk, Asst. City Atty., for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from a judgment denying an application for a writ of mandate. The writ was asked to issue against the defendants, as the board of police commissioners of the city of Los Angeles, to compel them to issue to the plaintiff a permit authorizing the clerk and auditor of the city to issue to plaintiff a license to conduct a poolroom in that city, he having made an application therefor in accordance with the provisions of the ordinance of the city relating thereto. The answer alleges, and the trial court found, that the application was considered in open session of the board, and denied on the ground that the place named therein was located in a part of the city inhabited by a class of people which would render a poolroom, if established therein, a place of resort for disorderly and objectionable persons, and that a poolroom in said locality, being populated by cholos and other people of like or similar character, would, in the judgment of the board, tend to the disturbance of the public peace, and to render the preservation of order in said locality difficult. This same matter was before this court on an original application for a writ of mandate in civil case No. 326, a decision in which was filed December 31, 1906, and is reported in 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991; the writ being denied. As one of the reasons given for denying the writ, it was said that petitioner had a remedy by appeal from the judgment of the superior court, if the writ should be denied by that court, and the proceeding was, in accordance with the suggestion in the opinion, prosecuted to a judgment in the superior court, and is now before us on appeal. With the reasons stated in the opinion filed on the former application we are entirely satisfied, and think they fully answer all the questions here presented.

In the federal case cited by appellant (Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169), the distinction between ordinances which regulate "useful business enterprises" and those which are not to be so classified is expressly recognized, and the law of that case is made applicable only where a "useful" enterprise or business is under consideration. It is only where a business is lawful and has no injurious tendency that the governing body cannot say who shall and who shall not exercise the right itself. Los Angeles v. Hollywood, etc., 124 Cal. 344, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75. Public billiard halls and poolrooms have been distinctly classified by this court as among those which cannot lay claim to being within the rule applicable to "useful" enterprises, in two decisions filed since the former opinion in the controversy before us was filed (Ex parte Meyers, 7 Cal. App. 528, 94 Pac. 870; Ex parte Murphy [Cal. App.] 97 Pac. 199); and the views expressed in the latter case are approved by the Supreme Court in an application for writ of habeas corpus made to it in the same matter (Ex parte Murphy [Cal.] 100 Pac. 1134). Conceding that no arbitrary discretion can be exercised by the board of police commissioners in applying the ordinance in question, the reasons assigned by the answer for denying the application for a license were exactly such as should actuate a police department in denying a permit or license to keep a place of amusement which is liable to become the scene of disorderly conduct and disturbances of the peace. It cannot be urged that, though the ordinance be fair and lawful in its terms and provisions, it was so enforced as to work a discrimination against a part of the community, or some particular member or members thereof, for no lawful reason. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 240, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169.

We are of opinion that the writ was properly denied by the superior court, and its judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 567

HOOE v. O'CALLAGHAN (CAMPION, Intervener). (Civ. 554.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 10, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 132*)—RECORD TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

The public records being destroyed, it is impossible for the vendor to convey a good or perfect record title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 335*)—FORFEIT OF DEPOSIT.

The purchaser does not forfeit the deposit money, where the public records are destroyed, so that a good or perfect record title cannot be conveyed, though he gives the vendor no notice of the condition of the records, a thing which would be idle.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 335.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 58*)—DEFAULT IN CONTRACT.

The covenants of vendor and purchaser in a contract of sale being mutual and dependent, neither, without performance or offer to perform on his part, can put the other in default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Raleigh P. Hooe against Daniel O'Callaghan; E. J. Campion intervening. Judgment for intervener. From an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Costello & Costello, for appellant. Leon E. Prescott, for respondent. Edmund Taubsky, for Chas. F. O'Callaghan.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by Raleigh P. Hooe, as assignee of his wife, Etta Mae Hooe, against defendant, Daniel O'Callaghan, to recover $500 alleged to have been received by defendant from E. J. Campion, the intervener, for the use of Mrs. Hooe. At the conclusion of the introduction of evidence, the court, being of opinion that no issue or question of fact was presented for determination, instructed the jury to return a verdict for Campion, the intervener, and against the plaintiff and defendant. This was done, and in due time a judgment was accordingly entered. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The undisputed facts of the case are, briefly, as follows: On April 11, 1906, Etta Mae Hooe, through her agent, authorized in writing Daniel O'Callaghan, a real estate agent, to sell the real estate described in the complaint for the sum of $10,000 net. On April 14, 1906, O'Callaghan procured Campion, the intervener, to make an offer of $10,500 for the land, and to deposit with him $500 on account of the purchase price, with the understanding that Campion was to have 30 days to examine the title, and if the title was found defective, and could not be perfected within 60 days, the deposit was to be returned. On April 17th following, O'Callaghan informed Mrs. Hooe, through her agent, Raleigh P. Hooe, of said offer by Campion and of its terms, and she accepted it in writing, and agreed, upon receipt of $10,000, to convey the property to Campion with perfect title, free and clear of incumbrances. On the next day the greater part of the records in the office of the recorder of the city and county of San Francisco (where the property was situate) were destroyed by fire. The evidence further showed that O'Callaghan was employed as exclusive agent of the assignor of the plaintiff to sell her property, and that Campion was at all times ready, willing, and able to purchase said property upon the conveyance to him of the aforesaid title.

Upon these facts we are of opinion that plaintiff had no right to the $500 deposited, and that the action of the trial court in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of Campion was correct. It was impossible for Mrs. Hooe, by reason of the destruction of the public records, to convey to Campion a good or perfect record title to the property (Turner v. McDonald, 76 Cal. 180, 18 Pac. 262, 9 Am. St. Rep. 189; Goldstein v. Hensley, 4 Cal. App. 444, 88 Pac. 507; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 Pac. 249; Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 73 Pac. 851; Callhoon v. Belden, 3 Bush (Ky.) 674; 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 607; Title & Document R. Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199. In this last-mentioned case the court said: "The registration of titles has become so thoroughly imbedded in our system of dealing with lands that a title which cannot be traced and established by some form of public record is practically unmerchantable. * * * In this county the system of registration has become so completely established that the courts can take judicial notice of the fact that in the great majority of cases parties dealing in real estate rely for the proof of their titles upon the chain of title that will be disclosed by an examination of the records. * * * It is also a matter of common knowledge that in the city and county of San Francisco at least, if not in the counties, the disaster of April last worked so great a destruction of the public records as to make it impossible to trace any title with completeness and certainty." The case of Calhoon v. Belden, supra, is also particularly in point, for there the question of title arose, as here, from a destruction of the public records. The parties to that action entered into an agreement for an exchange of houses and lots, to be consummated in November, 1862. Before the arrival of that date (the parties having in the meantime mutually delivered possession of their respective houses and lots), the house obtained from Calhoon was destroyed by fire, and later, in July, 1863, Gen. John Morgan's Confederate army destroyed by fire the clerk's office of Marion county and all its records and archives. Thereafter Calhoon sought a specific execution of the contract, and Belden claimed a rescission. The court, in part, said: "If, in fact, Calhoon's title be perfect, Belden is not bound to accept his conveyance without such proof of it as will arm him with the recorded means of vindicating its validity in after times; and there is no such proof, or even allegation, in this case. He cannot therefore be entitled to a specific execution of the contract, but is equitably bound to take back the damaged lot, and restore to Belden that which was exchanged for it. As the contract implied that perfect titles were to be interchanged and guaranteed, a rescission is the inevitable consequence in equity."

In the case at bar it is contended by plaintiff that Campion forfeited the $500 deposited. There is no satisfactory evidence in the record to sustain this contention. On the contrary, the record shows that Campion was ready, willing, and able to pay the purchase price of the property upon the conveyance to him of good title. It is true that he gave Mrs. Hooe no notice of the condition of the record; but, as it was impossible for her to perform her part of the contract by conveying to him a perfect title, such notice was unnecessary, and the giving of it would have been an idle and useless act (Maupin on Merchantable Title, etc., §§ 87, 240), which the law does not require (Civ. Code, § 3532). She could not have maintained an action for the purchase price, and we think in this action she is not entitled to judgment for the amount of the deposit. In Maupin on Merchantable Title to Real Estate, at section 238, it is said: "It is frequently provided in contracts of sale that the purchaser shall forfeit his deposit if he fails to comply with his contract within a specified time. The vendor cannot insist upon this forfeiture if he be unable to perform the contract on his part for want of title. In such a case there is a complete failure of the consideration, and the vendor has no more right to keep the purchaser's money than he would to compel specific performance of the contract."

Finally, Mrs. Hooe not only did not have a record title to the property, but she made no tender of a deed thereto to Campion; and, as the covenants of this contract were mutual and dependent, it was necessary that she should have made such a tender before commencing this suit. When the covenants of a contract are mutual and dependent, neither party thereto can put the other in default without showing a performance or offer to perform on his part. Dennis v. Strassburger, 89 Cal. 583, 26 Pac. 1070; Maupin on Mer. Title, etc., § 88; 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 646.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

10 Cal. App. 675

CABRERA v. PAYNE et al. (Civ. 597.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 26, 1909. Rehearing Denied
June 22, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 128*)—CONTRACTS—RECORD TITLE.

The purchaser in a contract for the sale of realty, which gives him a specified time within which to examine the title and consummate the purchase, and which stipulates that if the title is defective the vendor shall have a specified time in which to perfect it, and if not perfected the deposit paid on the price shall be returned, is entitled to a perfect record title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 112*)—CONTRACTS—ABANDONMENT.

The purchaser in a contract for the sale of realty may rely on the improper condition of the record title to avoid the contract and recover the deposit, though he did not intend to take the property under any circumstances, where he did nothing which estopped him from insisting on a strict compliance with the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 199, 200; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 321*)—ACTIONS—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where a party to a contract has repudiated it or has put it out of his power to perform, or where the contract has been by an act of God or of the law rendered impossible of performance, a right of action accrues to the adverse party immediately.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1510; Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 334*)—CONTRACTS—REPUDIATION—EFFECT.

Where a vendor in a contract binding him to give a perfect record title tendered to the purchaser a deed, though the public record of the title had been destroyed by fire, under the pretext that the purchaser was compelled to accept a report on the title of a title insurance company, and stated to the purchaser that that was all that would be done under the contract, and nothing further was done, the vendor absolutely, repudiated the contract, and the purchaser could sue immediately for the deposit, though the vendor had a specified time in which to perfect the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 961; Dec. Dig. § 334.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 339*)—ACTION BY PURCHASER FOR DEPOSIT—TENDER OF PERFORMANCE—NECESSITY.

Where the vendor absolutely repudiated the contract of sale, the purchaser could recover the deposit paid, without tendering performance of the contract on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 997-999; Dec. Dig. 339.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by D. Cabrera against Clyde S. Payne and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Chas. S. Peery, for appellant. Marshall Nuckolls, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover $1,000, a deposit paid upon the purchase price of a certain piece of real property in San Francisco. Judgment was entered, denying plaintiff any relief, and in favor of the defendants for their costs, from which judgment, and from the order of the court denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Under the terms of the contract the purchaser was given 20 days from February 7, 1907, within which to examine the title to the property and consummate the purchase, and, if the title was found to be defective, the vendors were to have 90 days in which to perfect it, and, if not perfected within that time, the deposit was to be returned. Time was made of the essence of the contract. Within the 20 days allowed for the examination of title, plaintiff rejected it, both orally and in writing, upon the ground, among others: "That the records of the city and county of San Francisco do not show any valid title to said property in said Clyde Payne or Charlotte Payne, and that there is no public record of said property whatever in said city and county." The other written grounds of objection were subsequently waived. About a month later, and before the expiration of the 90 days given to the vendors to perfect title, the plaintiff commenced this action for the return of the deposit.

Under the contract the purchaser was entitled to a good or perfect record title. Bates v. Howard, 105 Cal. 173, 38 Pac. 715; Goldstein v. Hensley, 4 Cal. App. 444, 88 Pac.

507; Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 73 Pac. 851; Hoove v. O'Callaghan (Cal. App.) 103 Pac. 175; Title Document R. Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199; Calhoon v. Belden, 3 Bush (Ky.) 674. But as the public record of the title had been destroyed by the great fire in San Francisco in April, 1906, and could not be restored within 90 days, either under the "Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of the loss or destruction of public records," the so-called McEnerney act (St. Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 78), or otherwise, the plaintiff was entitled to the return of his deposit unless, as is claimed by defendants, he abandoned the contract, or has brought this action prematurely.

There is in the record testimony of a conversation between the plaintiff and the agent of the defendants, and also expressions in a letter from plaintiff's attorney to the defendants' agent, which lend color to the suggestion of the defendants that plaintiff would not have taken the land even if the title thereto had been perfect; but we do not think there is anything either in the letter or the conversation which can be construed as an abandonment or repudiation by plaintiff of the contract. It may be that plaintiff did not intend to take the property under any circumstances; but, even so, he had a right to rely on the imperfect condition of the record as an excuse for avoiding the contract, and, as we view the record, plaintiff did not mislead the defendants, or in fine do anything which could be held to estop him from insisting upon a strict compliance with the terms of the agreement.

Upon the question of whether or not the suit was prematurely commenced, it was brought before the expiration of the 90 days after objection to the title. If the defendants had repudiated the contract, or voluntarily put it out of their power to perform; or if the contract had been by the act of God or of the law rendered impossible of performance, a right of action would have accrued to plaintiff immediately, and without waiting for the day of performance fixed in the contract. Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125, 128, 41 Pac. 857; 29 Cyc. 927; Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 113, 24 Pac. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 213; 24 Am. Ency. of Law, 643; Poirier v. Gravel, 88 Cal. 79, 82, 25 Pac. 962; Norris v. Moody, 84 Cal. 143, 146, 24 Pac. 37; Scovell v. McMahon, 62 Conn. 378, 26 Atl. 479, 21 L. R. A. 58, 36 Am. St. Rep. 350. Here the contract was not impossible of performance within the ordinary legal meaning of that term, nor did the defendants do anything to disqualify or disable them from performing it; but the defendants, a few days after notice of objection to the title, under the pretext that plaintiff was compelled to accept the report on the title of a certain title insurance company, tendered plaintiff a grant, bargain, and sale deed of the land, and told him that this was all that would be done for him under the contract; and indeed nothing further was done, doubtless for the very simple reason that it was impossible, as we have seen, to inaugurate and complete the necessary proceedings for restoring the record of the title within the stipulated 90 days. The inability of the defendants to comply with the terms of their contract, together with their conduct just noted, worked the same effect, we think, as an absolute repudiation of their contract, and gave to the plaintiff the right to have his deposit returned to him immediately. Defendants not having returned it, and declining to do so, we think suit would lie for its recovery without waiting for the expiration of the 90 days allowed in the contract to perfect title.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Tender of performance by plaintiff of the conditions of the contract on his part was, of course, under the facts of this case, unnecessary. Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 337, 30 Pac. 542.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

155 Cal. 697

CRIM et al. v. UMBSEN. (S. F. 4,991.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 17, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 132*)—RECORD TITLE.

The record from which it may be determined whether the vendor has "title fairly deducible of record," to which the purchaser under his contract is entitled, is the entire record of the recorder's office; and, a large part of this being destroyed, the vendor does not give such title by obtaining and having recorded deeds constituting a chain from the United States.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 132*)—RECORD TITLE—GENERAL INDEX.

The preservation, at the time of the destruction of a large part of the records of the recorder's office, of the general index of the office, does not enable the vendor to give in accordance with his contract a title fairly deducible of record; it furnishing nothing more than clues to documents, at most constituting constructive notice of the existence thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 112*)—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—MOTIVE.

The purchaser being entitled to rescind because of the vendor's inability to give perfect title of record, it is immaterial whether his real motive for rescinding is based on depreciation in value of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 112*)—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—TITLE.

The purchaser's right to rescind, because of the vendor not having a title fairly deducible of record, is to be determined from the title at the time fixed for performance of the contract and delivery of conveyance, without regard to subsequent perfection of the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 199, 200; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by William H. Crim and another against Henry P. Umbesen. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Edward C. Harrison, for appellant Crim. Cushing, Grant & Cushing, for appellant Joost. Bishop & Hoefler, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This case furnishes one of the peculiar problems growing out of the great conflagration of April 18, 1906. On April 10th of that year plaintiffs (who are appellants here) entered into a written contract with defendant and respondent, for the sale to the latter of a tract of land in the city and county of San Francisco, for the sum of $150,000, of which amount $15,000 were paid at that time; the receipt thereof being evidenced by the contract. By the terms of this agreement 30 days were allowed the defendant for examination of the title. At the expiration of this period the balance of the purchase price was to be due and payable upon tender by appellants of a good and sufficient deed. If the title proved to be defective, 30 additional days were allowed the sellers to perfect it, and if, at the expiration of that term, the title should be incurably defective, then the deposit was to be returned. The contract also provided that, if the buyer should fail to consummate the purchase in accordance with the conditions of the instrument, the deposit was to be forfeited. At the time of the execution of the contract the vendors placed in the hands of the purchaser an abstract of title. This was destroyed in the great fire of the following week, and at the same time the greater part of the records of the county recorder's office, as well as most of the other public and official records of San Francisco, were burned. The general index in the county recorder's office was saved, however. This showed the date and character of and the names of the parties to all instruments that had been recorded there. Prior to the 9th day of May, 1906, the time for the examination of title was extended for a further period of 30 days by written memorandum subscribed by the vendors, and on June 7, 1906, defendant gave a written notice to plaintiffs alleging that their title was defective. The specification was as follows: "That there is no record whatever showing that you, or either of you, or any other person or persons, are the owners, or have any interest in said property, or any part thereof."

It is conceded that prior to June 11, 1906, there was no record title showing that the plaintiffs, or either of them, had any ownership of, or interest in, the property described in the contract; but on the last-mentioned date they placed of record in the county recorder's office of San Francisco a deed, purporting to convey the title of said property to themselves from certain grantors in whom the fee would rest according to the chain of title which they afterwards established of record. On July 6, 1906, appellants recorded certain conveyances and other instruments, some of which were originals and others certified copies. By these documents, originals of which had been of record prior to the fire, a chain of title was established, beginning with the patent issued by the government of the United States. Immediately after the recordation of these instruments plaintiffs exhibited to defendant the recorder's receipt therefor, and at the same time tendered him their deed of conveyance of the property, accompanied by a release of a certain lien of the Bank of California. Defendant refused to accept the proffered deed or to pay the balance of the purchase price, and on July 30, 1906, gave a written notice of rescission of the contract. Thereafter this action was brought. In the complaint the facts above set forth were alleged, and damages demanded in the sum of $34,915 for breach of contract. Defendant answered, denying plaintiffs' allegations of good title, and he also filed a cross-complaint setting up affirmatively a want of record title in plaintiffs, stating that his sole purpose in entering into the contract of purchase was that he might obtain a tract of land which, in the course of his business as a dealer in real estate, he might sell at a profit, either as a whole or in subdivisions, as speedily as possible; averring that for this purpose it was necessary that he should obtain a good marketable title, fairly deducible from the record; alleging the rescission of the contract; and praying for return of the $15,000 paid as a deposit on the purchase price of the land. Judgment was given for defendant on the main case and for the return of the deposit according to the prayer of the cross-complaint. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order of the superior court denying the motion of plaintiffs for a new trial. Respondent's theory, which the court below adopted, was that the chain of title offered by appellants is not the record contemplated by the terms of the contract, but that the record from which title should be fairly deducible is the entire record of the city and county, that this setting (the entire record) alone determines whether or not the "chain" is sufficient, and that the setting having been destroyed, there could be no title furnished by appellants in accordance with the terms of their contract of sale.

Appellants concede that the vendee should have a title "fairly deducible of record," but contend that, having furnished a chain of title leading from a recognized source, the government of the United States, they have fulfilled their part of the agreement, and that the burden is upon the vendee to point out defects in the title. They further assert that the preservation of the general index in the recorder's office furnishes the vendee with sufficient means of determining whether or not there is any outstanding title in opposition to their proffered chain of title, or any cloud upon it. In support of their first contention they cite Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 313, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123. In the case at bar, however, the vendee did point out a defect in their title which was admittedly good when made, as at that time they had no deed of record conveying or purporting to convey the title to them. They sought to remedy this defect, and doubtless did everything in their power to offer a perfect title; but, if their theory be correct, the burden of proof would have been as effectually shifted to the vendee if they had met his objection to the sufficiency of their title by merely filing a quitclaim deed from some one, releasing to them that person's interest in the property. This cannot be the correct rule of law, because "in every executory contract for the sale of land there is an implied condition that the title of the vendor is good, and that he will transfer to the vendee by his deed of conveyance a title unincumbered with defect." See Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 314, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123, and cases cited.

In relation to the preservation of the general index, it may be said that the mere mention (if any were therein contained) of persons and instruments having relation to the land here in litigation would furnish the intending purchaser with nothing more than clues to the documents, without apprising him of any substantial part of their contents. Such data as the index contained might constitute constructive notice of the existence of the recorded instruments relating to this property, but would not have any higher function.

That the destruction of the records in San Francisco by the great fire of April, 1906, made all titles for the time practically unmerchantable, cannot be doubted. The very purpose of the McEnerney act was the removal of this objection to titles in that city and county. In commenting upon that statute this court has used the following language: "The general purpose of the statute is plain. It was intended to provide a method whereby owners in possession of real estate in counties where the records are destroyed to such an extent as to make it impossible to trace a record title may secure a decree which shall furnish a publicly authenticated evidence of title. It is hardly necessary to point out that under the system of registration of land titles which has grown up in all of the states of this Union it is practically essential to the security of ownership in real property that there exist some method by which the title can be made clear of record. Without regard to the effect of duly recorded instruments as constructive notice (whether or not the record remains in actual existence), the registration of titles has become so thoroughly imbedded in our system of dealing with lands that a title which cannot be traced and established by some form of public record is practically unmerchantable. * * * It is also matter of common knowledge that in the city and county of San Francisco at least, if not in other counties, the disaster of April last worked so great a destruction of the public records as to make it impossible to trace any title with completeness or certainty. That some provision was necessary to enable the holders of real estate in this city to secure to themselves such evidence of title as would enable them not only to defend their possession, but to enjoy and exercise the equally important right of disposition, is clear." Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 305, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199.

We cannot consider the motives which prompted respondent to rescind the contract of sale. It was his right under that instrument to receive a perfect title of record at the time or within the time specified in the agreement. This the plaintiffs could not give him. He was entitled to rest upon the provisions of the contract, whether or not his real purpose was to avoid taking and paying for a tract of land that had depreciated in value. In determining his rights we must only consider the title as it existed at the time fixed for the performance of the contract and the delivery of the conveyance. Reynolds v. Borel, 86 Cal. 538, 25 Pac. 67; Turner v. McDonald, 76 Cal. 177, 18 Pac. 262, 9 Am. St. Rep. 189; Wilcox v. Lattin, 93 Cal. 594, 29 Pac. 226; Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 387, 73 Pac. 851; Calhoon v. Belden, 3 Bush (66 Ky.) 674. In Calhoon v. Belden, supra, the court considered a problem somewhat like that presented to us. The litigants had entered into an executory contract for the exchange of houses. Each had delivered possession to the other, and their agreement provided for conveyances of titles at a day certain. Before that date one of the houses burned, and subsequently the courthouse was destroyed by fire. The entire record of Calhoon's title was burned. Calhoon brought suit for specific performance, and Belden answering denied the sufficiency of the plaintiff's title and prayed for a rescission of their agreement. Belden was successful in the lower court, and the decree refusing to enforce specific performance and rescinding the contract according to Belden's prayer was sustained on appeal. The following significant language is used by the court: "If, in fact, Calhoon's title be perfect, Belden is not bound to accept his conveyance without such proof of it as will arm him with the recorded means of vindicating its validity in after times, and there is no such proof, or even allegations, in this case. He cannot therefore be entitled to a specific execution of the contract, but is equitably bound to take back the damaged lot and restore to Belden that which was exchanged for it. As the contract implied that perfect titles were to be interchanged and guaranteed, a rescission is the inevitable consequence in equity." See, also, Hooe v. O'Callaghan (Cal. App.) 103 Pac. 175; Cabrera v. Payne (Cal. App.) 103 Pac. 176.

In view of the conclusion which we have reached, it is unnecessary to examine respondent's assertion that the appellants' chain of title is deficient in itself.

As plaintiffs were not able to furnish to defendant, according to the terms of the agreement, a title "fairly deducible of record" because there was no complete record from which he could determine the nature and defensibility of the offered title, it follows that the judgment of the superior court denying plaintiffs' prayer and decreeing restoration of the deposit to defendant must be sustained, and it is so ordered. The order denying the motion for a new trial is also sustained.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

156 Cal. 776

MORRIS v. CLARKIN et al. (L. A. 2,083.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1909.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 10*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1006, providing that occupancy for any period confers title against all except the state and those having title by prescription, transfer, etc., actual possession for any period under claim of ownership is sufficient title to sue to quiet title as against a trespasser or one establishing no title in himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 12*)—TITLE OF PLAINTIFF—SUFFICIENCY.

A grantee in a deed of land inclosed it by a fence of two rails, nailed to posts set in the ground from 6 to 10 feet apart. Laths were nailed vertically to the rails. They were repeatedly torn off, and for some years they were replaced by the grantee. Held, that the grantee was in the actual possession under a claim of ownership, and could sue to quiet title against one not connecting himself with the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. E. Morris against Gladys M. Clarkin and others, in which defendant A.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

Lunnun appeared and filed answer. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. C. Millsap, for appellant. Hass, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Action to quiet title to lot 178 of the Wingerter tract, in the city of Los Angeles. The defendant Lunnun appeared and filed an answer denying all the material allegations of the complaint. On a trial before the court sitting without a jury, the defendant, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, moved for a nonsuit, which was granted. Judgment in favor of defendant was entered, and plaintiff appeals.

It was stipulated that in September, 1889, one Francis Morris was the owner of the property in controversy, and that he then conveyed it to the defendant Gladys M. Clarkin. In May, 1895, the plaintiff obtained a deed to the same property from Francis Morris. His effort at the trial was to show that he had, from and after the receipt of this deed, maintained adverse possession of the premises, coupled with payment of all taxes levied and assessed upon the land (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 323, 325) for such period of time as to vest the title in him. The form of possession relied on was that defined in subdivision 2 of section 323 and subdivision 1 of section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, viz., protection by a substantial inclosure. The respondents' contention, sustained by the court, was that the evidence failed to show that the land had, for a continuous period of five years prior to the commencement of the action, been "protected by substantial inclosure." The evidence regarding this matter was not as clear and satisfactory as might have been desired. The plaintiff showed that for some period of time he had inclosed the land by a fence, consisting of two horizontal 1x3 rails, nailed to posts set in the ground at distances of from 6 to 10 feet apart. Laths were nailed vertically to these rails. It is not questioned that, so long as the component parts of the fence remained in position, the fence constituted a "substantial inclosure." It appears, however, that the laths had repeatedly been torn off, and that, for some years, they had, from time to time, been replaced by plaintiff. Whether or not the evidence would have justified a finding that a substantial inclosure had been maintained by plaintiff during any consecutive period of five years (coincident with the payment of taxes by him) is a somewhat close question. It need not, however, be here determined.

The respondent Lunnun, the only party appearing in the court below in opposition to plaintiff, did not in any way connect himself with the title to the property. The stipulation of the parties shows a conveyance from the original owner to Gladys M. Clarkin, and leaves the ownership in her. So far as the evidence goes, Lunnun is an entire stranger to the title. Actual possession for any period, under claim of ownership, is sufficient evidence of title in plaintiff as against a trespasser or one who establishes no title in himself. McGovern v. Mowry, 91 Cal. 383, 27 Pac. 746; Civ. Code, § 1006. The evidence above recited is clearly sufficient to support a finding that, for some time at least, the plaintiff had been in actual possession of the premises. Knowles v. Crocker Estate Co., 149 Cal. 278, 86 Pac. 715; Lofstad v. Murasky, 152 Cal. 64, 91 Pac. 1008. Since the defendant Lunnun did not go forward and show any title in himself, he was not entitled to a nonsuit.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SOCIALIST PARTY et al. v. UHL et al.
(S. F. 5,285.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1909.)

1. STATUTES (§ 125*)—TITLE—SUBJECTS.

Act March 24, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), entitled "An act to provide for and regulate primary elections and providing the method whereby electors of political parties may express their choice at such primary elections for United States Senators," is not in violation of Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject, to be embraced in its title; the advisory vote for United States Senator being germane to the subject of a primary election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

2. UNITED STATES (§ 11*)—ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATOR.

There is no constitutional objection to St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405, authorizing a public expression of choice of candidates for United States Senator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see United States, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—"POLITICAL PARTIES"—"ORGANIZATIONS OF ELECTORS."

Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, provides that the Legislature may enact laws as to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties, and shall enact laws, providing for the direct nomination of candidates for public office by electors, political parties, or organizations of electors without conventions, at elections to be known as "primary elections," etc. Held, that "political parties" as so used was intended to embrace those which had participated in a struggle at the polls for political ascendancy, and political "organizations of electors" was intended to include new parties which had not participated in prior elections, organized to advance some principle or measure of public policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5444, 5445; vol. 8, p. 7757.]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

4. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—PRIMARIES—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, authorizing the Legislature to enact laws for the direct nomination of candidates at primaries, by electors, political parties, or organizations of electors, and also authorizing the Legislature to determine the tests and conditions on which such classes, or either of them, may participate in such primary election, was sufficiently complied with, in so far as nomination by electors and organizations of electors was concerned, by the enactment of Act March 24, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), providing, in addition to direct primaries, for political parties for nominations by electors or bodies of electors by petition, as authorized by Pol. Code, § 1188.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

5. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—DIRECT PRIMARIES—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, authorizing the Legislature to provide for direct primaries, does not require the Legislature to adopt a universal mode whereby all the classes of electors mentioned therein may participate in primary elections, but authorizes the Legislature to provide reasonable and different tests and conditions for participation by the different classes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

6. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—DIRECT PRIMARIES—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS IN NONUNIFORMITY.

Under Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that general laws shall not be binding upon municipalities as to strictly municipal affairs, Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, providing for direct primary elections, did not require the passage of an act applicable to municipal elections in cities operating under special charter, and hence Primary Election Law March 24, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), was not invalid because section 2 expressly declared that it should not apply to the nomination of officers to be voted for at municipal elections in cities having a charter providing a nomination system.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

7. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS—“MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS.”

The election of municipal officers is strictly a municipal affair, within Const. art. 11, § 6, providing that general laws shall not be applicable to municipalities as to matters which are strictly “municipal affairs.”

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4619; vol. 8, p. 7726.]

8. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—STATUTES—VALIDITY—FEES OF CANDIDATES.

Under Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, authorizing the enactment of a primary election law, and providing that the Legislature shall determine the tests and conditions on which electors, political parties, or organizations of electors may participate, neither the whole of Primary Election Law March 12, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), nor the part thereof requiring the payment of certain fees by candidates on the filing of nomination papers and affidavits of candidacy, was invalid as a violation of Const. art. 1, § 24, declaring that no property qualification to vote or hold office shall ever be required of any person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

9. ELECTIONS (§ 120*)—PRIMARY ELECTION LAW—VALIDITY.

Const. Amend. 1908, art. 2, § 2½, authorizing the Legislature to determine the tests and conditions on which participation in primary elections may be had, either by electors as voters, or by electors as candidates, authorized the Legislature to provide, by Primary Election Law March 24, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405), that when nomination papers of a candidate were filed, they should be accompanied by an affidavit of affiliation, such provision not being in violation of Const. art. 22, § 3, prescribing the form of oath to be taken by one before entering on the duties of an office, and which declares that no other authority, declaration or test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust; such provision being applicable only to persons appointed or elected to office, and not to candidates for election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

In Bank. Original application by the Socialist Party (a political party) and by Henry Hagelstein, as chairman of the county committee representing such party in the city and county of San Francisco, for a writ of mandate against George Uhl and others constituting the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco, and J. H. Zemansky, registrar of voters in such city and county. Writ denied.

Austin Lewis (R. M. Royce, of counsel), for petitioners. Thomas V. Cator, Hugh McIsaac, and Percy V. Long, City and County Atty., for respondents. F. P. Deering and Frank J. Sullivan, amici curiæ.

LORIGAN, J. This is an original application by the petitioners for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondents—the election commissioners and the registrar of voters of the city and county of San Francisco—to receive petitions and hold a primary election under the so-called primary law of 1901 (St. 1901, p. 606, c. 198), as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 650, c. 345), the provisions of which are found in the Political Code, embraced in sections 1357 to 1375, inclusive. The petition contains all the necessary averments showing that the Socialist Party is a legal political entity, entitled, under the terms of the primary law referred to, to participate in any primary election to be held under that law, and to have a writ of mandate issued as prayed for by it if the said primary law is still in force.

It is further averred that the Socialist Party desires to file with said board of election commissioners its petition, pursuant to the provision (Pol. Code, § 1361) of said primary law, declaring its intention to hold a local political convention for said city and county, for the purpose of making nominations of members of said party as candidates for public offices of said city and county, to be voted for at the election to be held therein on November 3, 1909. It is further averred that it is the duty of said election commissioners, pursuant to the provisions of said primary law, to hold a primary election in said city and county on the second Tuesday in August, A. D. 1909, in which said Socialist Party is entitled to participate for the purpose of electing delegates to a nominating convention of said party for said city and county; that the board of election commissioners refuses to take any steps or make any preparations for the holding of a primary election on said second Tuesday of August, A. D. 1909, under said act of 1901 as amended, but, on the contrary, asserts that it does not intend to hold a primary election on said second Tuesday in August, but on the third Tuesday of said month, under the provisions of an act of the Legislature approved March 24, A. D. 1909, entitled "An act to provide for and regulate primary elections and providing the method whereby electors of political parties may express their choice at such primary elections for United States Senators." St. 1909, p. 691, c. 405.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In the petition for the writ it is contended by the petitioners that the act of March 24, 1909, under which the respondents are proceeding to conduct said primary election, is null and void, as contravening various sections of the Constitution of this state which are set forth in the petition, that the act of 1901 as amended is still in force and effect, and that it is the duty of the respondents to proceed under the terms of that act and hold a primary election on the second Tuesday of August, 1909, and to make the necessary preparations for that purpose. The respondents have demurred to the petition, and the matter is submitted for final decision upon the demurrer. The whole purpose of this proceeding is to test the validity of the primary election act of March 24, 1909.

In 1890 an amendment to the Constitution of the state was adopted (article 2, § 2½) as follows: "The Legislature shall have the power to enact laws relative to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties at elections held and designated as primary elections * * *" It was under this constitutional provision that the primary law of 1901, as amended in 1907, was enacted, and it applied, as the constitutional provision directed, solely to the election of delegates to the conventions of political parties at primary elections. In 1908 this constitutional amendment was replaced by the existing section 2½ of article 2 thereof, which provides, among other things, that: "The Legislature shall have the power to enact laws relative to the election of delegates to conventions of political parties; and the Legislature shall enact laws providing for the direct nomination of candidates for public office, by electors, political parties, or organizations of electors without conventions at elections to be known and designated as primary elections; also to determine the tests and conditions upon which electors, political parties, or organizations of electors may participate in any such primary election. It shall also be lawful for the Legislature to prescribe that any such primary elections shall be mandatory and obligatory; * * * provided, however, that until the Legislature shall enact a direct primary election law under the provisions of this section the present primary election law shall remain in force and effect." It was subsequent to this last amendment to the Constitution that the act of March 24, 1909, was passed, and it purports to have been adopted in harmony with the mandate of that constitutional amendment. Various objections are urged against the validity of the act, and we shall refer to the particular provisions thereof as we consider the special grounds upon which they are assailed.

It is insisted, first, that the entire act is void because it violates section 24, art. 4, of the Constitution, which provides that "every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be embraced in its title." The act is entitled "An act to provide for and regulate primary elections and providing the method whereby electors of political parties may express their choice at such primary elections for United States Senator." The particular points made are that the provision in the title of the act relative to the expression of a choice by the electors for a candidate for United States Senator is a different subject-matter from nominating candidates for public office provided for in the title of the act referring to the regulating of primary elections, and that the constitutional provision itself provides a distinct and complete subject for legislation, and is limited to the making provision for the election of delegates to the conventions, and providing for the direct nomination at primaries of candidates for public office; that a United States Senator is not a candidate for public office in the sense that the words are used in the constitutional provision, nor is an advisory vote to advise the Legislature as to such choice a direct nomination of candidates for public office. We cannot agree with counsel on these points. As far as the provision of the act with reference to an advisory vote relative to United States Senators is concerned, we think that the matter of such advisory vote is germane to the subject of a primary election. It is so held in State v. Blaisdell (N. D.) 118 N. W. 141, 146. The case of State v. Nichols, 508, 97 Pac. 728, 730, seems to be to the same effect. The subject being germane so as not to fall within the inhibition of the Constitution relating to different subjects in the title of the act, there is nothing in the point that the constitutional provision relative to providing for a primary election excludes the right of the Legislature to provide, in a primary act, for the expression of a choice for United States Senator by the voters at a primary election. Of course it is conceded that the matter of selecting a United States Senator lies with the Legislature as an elective body, and that such selection cannot be made at a primary election. What is provided for in the act on this subject is, however, the giving of an opportunity to voters of the parties participating in the primary to express their choice for a candidate for United States Senator. The act as a primary act is distinct and complete as providing for direct nominations, with the added feature relative to an advisory vote relative to United States Senators. There is nothing in the Constitution—either amendment 2½ of article 2, or any other provision—which prohibits the Legislature from providing at a primary for an expression of a choice as to a candidate for United States Senator. It is within the general legislative power to do so, and that it has provided for this advisory vote at a primary election is for the purpose of convenience and to save expense, and that the expression of such choice might be made by the voters of the respective political parties at the same time, and under the same political machinery, as is used at the general primary. Because conducted at the same time, and under the same election machinery, it is not strictly a part of the primary election contemplated by amendment 2½, art. 2, of the Constitution. It is something in addition to it, and, as said in the Blaisdell Case, what is sought by the provision is “merely the consummation of an incomplete party nomination,” an expression of a choice by the voters as to a candidate for United States Senator to be elected by the Legislature. What the effect may be of these provisions relative to such choice by the electors—whether at all binding upon the Legislature—is a matter of no present concern. We are only considering whether a provision for such advisory vote, expressed in the title of the act, is germane to the subject of a primary election, also expressed therein, and whether legislation in connection with primary laws granting such right of expression of a choice is prohibited by the constitutional provision particularly under consideration, or any other, and we are satisfied that the subject of the title giving the right to express such choice is germane to the subject of a primary election, and that the legislation upon the subject embraced in the act in question is violative of no constitutional provision.

Now as to the objections which are urged against certain provisions of the act which, it is claimed, render the entire act void.

Section 5 thereof provides that the name of a candidate shall not go on the official ballot at the primary election unless nomination papers in his behalf are filed. These nomination papers must be signed and verified by qualified electors, and must contain, among other things, a statement of the political party with which such qualified electors affiliate, and a further declaration on their part that they intend to support the candidate named by them. These nomination papers, to the number of a designated percentage of the voters of the party of a candidate—the percentage depending upon whether he is a candidate for a state, congressional district, county, city, or city and county, office—must be signed by such voters, and, with the nomination affidavit of the candidate, filed, before such candidate is entitled to a place on the primary ballot. It is further provided that the basis of such percentage in each case—that is as to the nomination of candidates by voters of his party—shall be the vote of the party for its candidates at the last preceding presidential election. But any other political organization which, at such presidential, or last state election, was represented on the official ballot by either regular party candidates or individual nominees only, who had received 3 per cent. of the total vote at such presidential or state election in the state, or a political subdivision thereof, in which the candidate seeks the nomination, may have a separate primary election ticket as a political party. It is also provided that “nothing herein shall be construed as prohibiting the independent nomination of candidates to be voted for at any general election by ‘electors’ or ‘bodies of electors’ as provided by section 1188 of the Political Code. * * *” The section of the Political Code referred to allows the nomination of candidates for public office by petition signed by electors equal in number to 3 per cent. of the entire vote cast at the last preceding election in the state, district, or political subdivision for which the nomination is to be made, and further authorizes the designation by the signers of the petition of a committee to represent said signers collectively as a political party by any name which may be selected and adopted by them. These are practically all the provisions in the act with reference to the nomination of candidates.

It is insisted by the petitioner that, as the only method provided for the nomination of candidates in the act is one for their nomination by “political parties” alone, the Legislature has failed to carry out the mandate of the Constitution which requires that provision shall be made in any legislation with reference to a primary election for the nomination of candidates by “electors,” “organizations of electors,” as well as political parties; that the act is incomplete legislation on a subject where full legislation is constitutionally required, and hence the act is void; that the provisions of the act saving to electors, or bodies of electors, the right to nominate candidates to be elected to public office by petition as provided in section 1188 of the Political Code is a different mode of nomination than the constitutional mode of direct nomination at a primary, and which, it is insisted by petitioner, the constitutional mandate requires shall be accorded to all classes that are mentioned in the constitutional provision. These objections to the validity of the act appear to present an abstract question as far as the record before us discloses. The petitioner is a political party whose right to participate in a primary is conceded, and there are no "electors," or "organizations of electors," who are complaining as to the constitutionality of the law. This, however, does not prevent the particular attack on the act from being made, nor relieve us from the necessity of disposing of it.

Not much stress is laid upon the alleged failure of the Legislature to provide for the participation in primaries of "electors" as distinct from "political parties" or "organizations of electors." The main argument is addressed to the difference in meaning between "political parties" and "organizations of electors." Ordinarily there would seem to be no distinction in meaning between these terms. They would appear to be synonymous. It is claimed, however, by petitioner that there is this distinction, namely, that "political parties" are those which theretofore had participated in a struggle at the polls for political ascendancy, and that "organizations of electors" are those who have not, new parties organized to advance some principle or measure of public policy, but which have not participated in any election, and that it is such new parties to which the term "organizations of electors" applies, and whose right to participate in primaries must, in any act relating to a primary law, be provided for. We are not prepared to say that this definition is not correct, but, conceding it to be true, we do not perceive anything in the constitutional provision which makes it the imperative duty of the Legislature to provide any other mode for participation in a primary than such as it has done. In reading the constitutional amendment it will be noted that, while it provides enactment by the Legislature for the direct nomination of candidates at primaries by "electors," "political parties," or "organizations of electors," it is equally provided that the Legislature may determine the tests and conditions upon which such classes, or either of them, may participate in such primary election. Under this latter clause of the Constitution we think it was left to the Legislature to provide any reasonable tests or conditions under which participation by any of the classes mentioned in the primary law should be had, and that the fixing of conditions, under which practically only political parties which had candidates for presidential electors at the last preceding presidential election, or political organizations which, having no such candidates, yet were represented by candidates on the official ballot at said presidential election or last preceding state election and received a certain vote, should be entitled to participate, together with the provision of the act with reference to section 1188 of the Political Code, was a sufficient compliance with the constitutional requirement. That the Legislature was authorized to fix some tests and conditions is clear. In doing so it had a right to take into consideration the political situation of the state, disclosed by the existence of political parties and political organizations with which, at the last presidential or state election, the great majority of the voters of the state had allied themselves. The existence of these political parties and political organizations it could take notice of, and legislate intelligently concerning, and the particular provisions of the act apply to such political parties and organizations.

On the other hand, "organizations of electors" as meaning something different from political parties is an indefinite term. Such organizations may as well mean an association together of a few electors—two, four, or six—as a large number. At best it is but an indefinite subject of legislation, and one which may present difficulties to a Legislature in the way of determining either what shall be considered organizations of electors, or to provide for participation when defined. There is nothing in the constitutional provision which requires the Legislature to adopt a universal mode whereby all the classes mentioned may participate. Under the power to provide tests and conditions it may prescribe different tests as to different classes; its power being limited, however, to providing tests and conditions which are reasonable and not arbitrary. As far as political parties and political organizations are concerned, it has provided these tests and conditions, and established a mode whereby they may participate, against which no objection upon the ground of unreasonableness can be urged. As to that class the legislation is complete.

On the other hand it has not, as it is claimed by petitioner, failed to establish a mode whereby classes other than political organizations may participate. It has saved to them the provisions of section 1188 of the Political Code. Under the terms of that section any electors, whether formed into an organization or not, may petition to have the names of any candidates they desire to nominate placed upon the official ballot to be voted for at the ensuing election, and may take any party designation they may choose to adopt which does not conflict with that of any party organization; and, if at the election their candidates, or the party which they represent, receive the requisite vote, such party may at the succeeding primary be entitled to participate therein. With this provision in their behalf they are entitled to nominate candidates in any event, and to participate in the primary elections if they receive the required vote to bring them within the conditions of the general primary law. Of course it is contended that this mode of nominating under section 1188 of the Political Code is not granting a right to participate in the present primary. True, but it does give them an opportunity to participate in future primaries. It provides a test and condition under which electors or organizations of electors may acquire the status of a political party, and may go into a primary with the same rights as any other party. It is no valid objection that this mode does not provide for present participation in primaries. It provides, however, how participation may be had—the conditions under which it may be availed of—and as they secure the right when the tests or conditions are met, we think the rights which are conferred by the amendment on electors or organizations of electors are secured. It is true petitioner presents strong reasons why the constitutional amendment should be interpreted so as to hold that the Legislature is required to make direct provision for the present right of participation in a primary by all classes mentioned in the constitutional provision. It is, however, a universal principle to be applied to the construction of statutes that such a construction shall be given as will sustain the law; and, notwithstanding the contention of the petitioner to the contrary, we are of the opinion that the Legislature may adopt any reasonable tests or conditions, and provide any mode, which in effect secures the rights of all such classes, and that, by the provision in the act with reference to section 1188, it has done so.

It is provided by section 2 of the act here in question that its provisions as to primary elections shall not apply “to the nomination of officers of municipalities whose charters provide a system of nominating candidates for such offices.” It is claimed that this exception from the operation of the act of chartered municipalities renders the act void; it being insisted that the act in question is not general, but is special and local, because it exempts municipalities operating under charter from the application of its provisions. There are various municipalities in this state having charters which provide for the nomination of municipal officers by methods distinct from each other and different from the mode laid down under the primary law under discussion. They have systems of their own for the nomination of municipal officers. The city and county of San Francisco under its charter provides that its elections for municipal officers shall be held under the general laws of the state governing elections, and hence the primary law applies to it as a general law.

It is contended by petitioner that under the constitutional mandate it is required that the primary law shall apply to all elections, including elections for municipal officers. If this were true, there would be merit in the claim of petitioner because the act, in so far as it attempts to exempt chartered municipalities, would result in the failure on the part of the Legislature to execute the provisions of the Constitution by making the law applicable to all elections; that instead of providing a general law, one special in its character has been enacted. But we do not think the position of petitioner tenable. While the act exempts chartered municipalities from its operation, it is not thereby rendered special or local. The constitutional provision under which the primary law was enacted does not in terms require the passage of an act which would apply to all elections. It is obvious from its terms that the law which the Legislature was called upon to enact was a law applying to general elections, elections that were conducted on party lines, and that the Legislature was not required to pass a law applying to municipalities which might or might not happen to be conducted on such lines, and whose candidates might, and generally do, represent purely municipal policies or local issues. There is nothing in the constitutional provision making any primary law enacted thereunder applicable in charter elections. The law enacted under the constitutional provision stands, as far as municipalities are concerned, the same as any other general law which, under the Constitution (section 6, art. 11), is not binding upon a municipality as to matters which are strictly municipal affairs. That the election of municipal officers is strictly a municipal affair goes without question. It is held in People v. Hill, 125 Cal. 16, 57 Pac. 669, that city charters prevail over the general law as far as regulating the method in which a charter election shall be conducted. If section 2½ referred to charter elections as being within the scope of any legislation required to be enacted under it, there would be no room for discussion of this point. All the constitutional provision requires, however, is the passage of a general law relating to primary elections. As far as municipal elections are concerned, being municipal affairs, it cannot control them. Under these views the exemption of municipalities did not render the act unconstitutional for want of general application to all elections.

The act provides for the payment of certain fees by candidates on filing with the proper officer their nomination papers and affidavits of candidacy. These fees apply to all nominees—state, district, county, and municipal—and range from $50 to be paid by a candidate for state office to $10 to be paid by county, legislative, or municipal officers, where the selection of candidates for municipal office is held under the primary law. It is insisted that this provision with reference to the imposition of fees renders the act void, as such imposition is in conflict with article 1, § 24, of the Constitution, which prescribes that no property qualification shall ever be required of any person to vote or hold office. If this position of petitioner were sound, however, it would not have the effect of invalidating the entire act. This provision could be declared unconstitutional without affecting the general scheme of the primary law, as it is not such an essential part of the law that if it were eliminated the rest of the act could not stand. But we are satisfied that the weight of authority is against the position of petitioner. The constitutional provision under which the primary law was passed gives the Legislature the right to fix the conditions upon which participation in a primary election may be had. Under this grant of power it has the right to determine what are reasonable regulations under which the right to participate in the primary may be exercised. It is not claimed that the fees are unreasonable, but the right to exact them at all is questioned.

It is provided in the act that these fees are to be paid into the county or municipal treasury when they are paid by county or municipal candidates, and when paid by candidates for state or district nominations are to be apportioned and paid by the state treasurer to the county treasurer of the counties in which such candidates are to be voted for. The validity of this provision requiring the payment of fees is sustainable under the constitutional amendment, as being within the power of the Legislature to provide reasonable conditions for the exercise of the rights granted by the primary law. As said by one court to which this question was presented: "The right to exact a reasonable fee for the privilege of running for office may be sustained, on the principle that fees in actions and proceeding in courts, and for filing and recording papers, are sustainable, namely, that those who seek the benefit of a particular proceeding provided by law may be compelled to reimburse the state for a portion of the costs the state incurs in maintaining the instrumentality to carry into effect the particular proceeding. In other words, the state asks the candidate for office under a particular law to reimburse it for a part of the expense it incurs in carrying that law into effect. This clearly the state may lawfully do." State v. Nichols, 50 Wash. 508, 97 Pac. 728, 730. Aside from this, such a provision is a reasonable restriction, and provides an orderly and systematic method by which the people may select their candidates for public office. The exaction of a fee tends to prevent an indiscriminate scramble for office, where it is fixed at an amount that will impose no hardship upon any person for whom there should be any desire to vote as a nominee for any office, and yet enough to prevent the wholesale filing of petitions for nominations of any one, regardless of whether or not he is a desirable candidate. It is but a reasonable means adopted by the Legislature to regulate primary elections for the selection of candidates for public office. And the constitutional provision that no property qualification shall be required of any person to vote or hold office is not violated by such provision as to the payment of a fee, but is a reasonable regulation prescribed by the Legislature on the wise assumption that any candidate who is of sufficient worth to stand before the people as a candidate for public office, and whose candidacy calls for the payment of the fee required by the act, will be at no difficulty to pay the required amount. State v. Scott, 99 Minn. 145, 108 N. W. 829. See, also, Montgomery v. Shlef, 118 Ky. 766, 82 S. W. 389.

There are, it is true, cases that hold to the contrary view: People v. Election Com'rs, 221 Ill. 9, 21, 77 N. E. 321; State v. Drexel, 74 Neb. 776, 105 N. W. 174, 179; Johnson v. Grand Forks County, 16 N. D. 363, 113 N. W. 1071. But as pointed out in State v. Scott, supra, the provisions of the act involved in State v. Drexel and People v. Commissioners, supra, called for, in the first of these cases, the payment of a fee based on the emoluments of the office to which the candidate aspires, and, in the second case, the fee was made to correspond with the importance of the office from the standpoint of dignity and influence, as well as from the standpoint of emolument. In both these cases it was held that the fees imposed were arbitrary and unreasonable, bore no relation to the service rendered, and made the ability of a person to pay the test of his qualifications. While these cases held that the provisions of the act respecting fees were arbitrary and unreasonable, still it was recognized in both of them that some reasonable regulation might be adopted by the Legislature to control a primary election for the selection of candidates for office, and within the view of the cases cited by us as sustaining the imposition of a fee, it is apparent that the charge as made in the act of our Legislature in question was a reasonable regulation upon the subject. The other case cited by petitioner—Johnson v. Grand Forks County, supra—while grounded to a large extent upon State v. Drexel and People v. Commissioners, supra, is based also on considerations independent of those set forth in those cases, and sustains the position of petitioner. This, at best, presents a conflict of authority, but with a preponderance in favor of the validity of the imposition of a fee, and in our judgment the conclusions reached in the cases we have cited, and which sustain the imposition of such fees as a reasonable regulation, are the most satisfactory.

The act provides that when the nomination papers of a candidate are filed, they shall be accompanied by an affidavit of such candidate, declaring, among other things, the name of his party and that of the office for which he desires to be a candidate, that he affiliated with said party at the last preceding general election, and either that he did not vote thereat, or voted for a majority of the candidates of said party at said next preceding general election, and intends to so vote at the ensuing election. It is insisted that this provision requiring such an oath is violative of section 3, art. 20, of the Constitution, which prescribes the form of oath to be taken by one before entering upon the duties of an office, and which declare that "no other oath, declaration or test shall be required as a qualification for any office or public trust." But this section has nothing to do with any oath which may be required to be taken by a candidate at a primary election. It only applies to persons who have been appointed or elected to office, and are about to assume a discharge of the duties thereof.

The power is vested in the Legislature, under section 2½ of article 2, to determine the tests and conditions upon which participation in a primary election may be had, either by electors as voters thereat, or by electors as candidates thereunder. The right is thus conferred to prescribe any reasonable test, and it is the duty of the Legislature to prescribe one. Such a test is provided for in section 1366a of the Political Code as to electors, wherein it is provided that an elector when registering shall declare the name of the political party with which he intends to affiliate at the ensuing primary election. And it further provides that he shall not be entitled to vote unless he states, at the time of registration, the name of the political party with which he intends to affiliate, nor shall he be permitted to vote on behalf of any party other than the party designated in his registration. Schostag v. Cator, 151 Cal. 600, 91 Pac. 502.

The right and duty of the Legislature to prescribe a test for electors voting at a primary cannot be questioned, nor do we perceive any reasonable grounds for questioning the validity of a test as to candidates. The obvious purpose of a primary law is to preserve the integrity of parties. The necessity for maintaining the integrity of such parties is recognized in the constitutional provision with reference to primary elections. The right which once exclusively vested in a political party to supply its own tests as to the rights of one to participate in its primary elections has been modified under the constitutional provisions empowering the Legislature also to prescribe tests, and it is the duty of the Legislature, when legislating upon the subject of primaries, to so legislate as to maintain the integrity of parties, and the integrity of any political party, and the success and furtherance of its principles and policies is best attained through legislation which will permit participation in its affairs by those only who are devoted to its principles and policies. It is manifestly proper for the Legislature to permit only those to participate with a party at a primary election who are in sympathy with the aims of the party, those who are committed to its principles and in sympathy with, and loyal to, its tenets. In order to effect this end it is just as desirable to prescribe a test whereby the right of a person to become a candidate of a party at a primary election shall be determined as it is to furnish a test by which an elector shall be permitted to vote for a party candidate at such election. All these matters tend to sustain party integrity, which is one of the chief aims of a primary election law. If the indiscriminate right to vote with any party at a primary were given to electors, whether they were in accord with the principles of the party or not, it would soon tend to destroy all party organization. So to permit persons to become indiscriminately the candidates of any or all parties at a primary election would tend to have the same effect. A political party is an organization of electors believing in certain principles concerning governmental affairs, and urging the adoption and execution of those principles through the election of their respective candidates at the polls. The existence of such parties, the dominant party and the parties in opposition to it, lies at the foundation of our government, and it is not expressing it too strongly to say that such parties are essential to its very existence. The design of the primary law is not to destroy political parties, but, while carefully preserving their integrity, to work out reforms in their methods of administration. Such being the purpose of the law, it is not only proper to prescribe such a test, but the absence of such a test would tend to work the absolute disintegration and destruction of all parties, except for the saving power within the party itself of prescribing its own tests and regulations. The power of a political party to prescribe such a test for any of its members seeking preferment at its hands may not be doubted; and, if the party can prescribe such a test, so also can the Legislature. Thus the Legislature, in the interest of party integrity, not only wisely, but as a duty, sought by test requirements to confine the right of electors to vote for candidates of a party to those who had registered as affiliating with the party, and likewise confined the right of a person to have his name printed upon the official ballot, as a candidate for nomination by a party at such primary election, to one who in his affidavit declared that he affiliated with such party at the last preceding general election, and who voted, if he voted at all, for a majority of the candidates of the party at such election, and intends to so vote at the ensuing election. Under the test provided in this act a person can have his name printed on the official ballot only as a candidate at a primary of the party with which he affiliated at the last general election. Likewise under the act an elector can only vote for persons to be candidates of the party with which he has registered that he affiliates. These provisions deny the indiscriminate right of a person to become a candidate upon the official ballot of all parties, or of any other party than the party with which he is affiliated, as it denies also the indiscriminate right of an elector to vote for persons as the candidates of any other party than the one he has declared his affiliation with. Both of these tests appear to us to be reasonable ones, and such as under the constitutional provision relating to primary elections the Legislature was authorized to provide.

The act further provides that a candidate defeated at a primary election shall be ineligible for nomination to the same office at the same election. It is insisted that this provision is void. The determination of this question may be properly reserved to a case when it arises. It is sufficient here to say that if this provision be void, this fact would not operate to invalidate the remainder of the law.

These are the only points which we deem need particular discussion. Other attacks made upon the validity of the act, while considered, we do not discuss, as they are not deemed of sufficient importance to warrant it.

The petition for the writ is denied.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur in the judgment and generally, except in one regard, in the views expressed by Justice LORIGAN. I am unable to assent to his conclusion that the provision relative to the filing of an affidavit, by any person designated by electors of a party for nomination, as a condition precedent to the printing of his name as a candidate on the primary ballot, in which affidavit he must state substantially that he is a member of the party for whose nomination he is designated, etc., is a valid provision. Its effect is, of course, to prevent the printing on the ballot of the name of any person as a candidate for the nomination of a political party unless he is a member of the party, and has otherwise complied with the requirements of the provision.

It appears plain to me that the provision in the Constitution giving the Legislature the power to prescribe the tests and conditions upon which political parties, organizations of electors, and electors may participate in a primary election was not intended to warrant a restriction in any degree of the right of the members of a party to nominate for any particular office any one whom they desire, who has the legal qualifications for the office, regardless of his political affiliations. The tests and conditions referred to in this provision are the tests and conditions upon which political organizations may have nominations made at the primary, and the tests and conditions upon which electors may participate, both in the selection of candidates for nomination by their party to be voted for at the primary, and in voting as members of a party at the primary itself, and have no reference to the persons who may be selected for nomination. It has always been recognized that a political party has the absolute right to nominate any one for office whom it sees fit to select, regardless of his political affiliations, provided he has the proper legal qualifications for the office, and that each of two or more parties may nominate the same man as a candidate for the same office, and, as has been said by this court, "if any confusion of political principles should thereby result, that is a matter wholly for the political parties themselves, and not at all for either the Legislature or the courts." Murphy v. Curry, 137 Cal. 479, 70 Pac. 461, 59 L. R. A. 97. The object of our constitutional provision relating to a direct primary law is simply to enable the members of a party to directly name the nominees thereof, instead of selecting them by the convention method—to empower them to do directly the thing they have been heretofore required to do through delegates or representatives elected by them. Their freedom of choice as to the candidates to be selected must be the same in the one case as in the other. No such control over parties as would enable the Legislature to preclude a political party from nominating any person it desires to nominate who is legally eligible to the office, could have been contemplated. Whosoever was eligible for nomination to any office by a party under the convention method must be eligible under any direct primary law that may be enacted by the Legislature.

The act before us does not even purport to make one ineligible for nomination by one political party simply because he is a member of another party. It purports to do no more than prevent the printing of his name on the official ballot as a candidate for nomination. Under the express terms of the act any member of a party may write in the blank space contained on his ballot the name of any person as his choice for the nomination; and, if a person whose name is not printed on the ballot receives in this way a plurality of the votes cast by members of the party, he is the nominee of the party, regardless of his previous or present political affiliations, and regardless of the fact that he may also be the nominee of another party for the same office. The objection to the legislative act in this regard is practically the same as the objection held to be good in Eaton v. Brown, 96 Cal. 375, 31 Pac. 250, 17 L. R. A. 697, 31 Am. St. Rep. 225. The provision of the act under discussion "destroys the just and equal and uniform operation which in an election law, of all others, is demanded, no less by the express terms of our fundamental law than by the genius and spirit of our institutions." Under it, although members of a party to the extent in number prescribed by the act for the selection of a candidate for nomination desire to place before the electors of that party as a candidate for nomination thereby one who is not a member of the party, or did not affiliate with it at the last election, etc., they may not do so upon the same terms and with the same opportunity for the consideration of his candidacy by the electors of the party generally as are afforded the aggregations of members of that party which select as candidates for nomination persons who are members of the party, and who can or will make the prescribed affidavit. We know, as a matter of fact, that the disadvantages that would result from the failure to have the name of such candidate printed on the ballot, while other names are printed thereon, are of such a nature as to practically preclude, in most instances, any fair consideration and expression as to his candidacy on the part of the electors of the party generally. The provision is thus clearly a substantial discrimination against such members of a party as desire to select for a nomination for any office one who is not a member of the party although under the very terms of the act he is eligible, and in favor of such members of the party as desire to award the nomination to some member of the party. Whatever may be our views as to which is the better policy for a political party to pursue in such a case, the question is one solely for the members of that party to settle, and not for the Legislature or the courts. The discrimination is not warranted by any principle or rule of which I am aware, and operates to destroy the equal and uniform operation of the law which the Constitution demands. The views expressed in Murphy v. Curry, supra, and Eaton v. Brown, supra, fully sustain this conclusion. It is very clear that the invalidity of this provision should not be held to invalidate the whole act, of which it is a very minor and unessential part.

What I have said does not, in my opinion, affect the conclusion reached in the opinion of Justice LORIGAN as to the validity of the provision for the payment of a reasonable fee on the filing of the certificate of nomination. The conclusion that such a charge may be made by the state, if reasonable in amount, appears to be fully supported by principle and authority.

155 Cal. 712

PERKINS et ux. v. SUNSET TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO. (S. F. 4,962.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 21, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 21, 1909.)

1. JURY (§ 97*)—COMPETENCY—BIAS.

Mere acquaintance of the jurors with a litigant does not imply bias by them in his favor any more than it raises a presumption of prejudice against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 431-437; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

2. JURY (§ 70*)—SPECIAL VENIRE—SELECTION.
There was no impropriety in a refusal to draw a jury from citizens whose names appeared on the supervisors' list, rather than from talesmen summoned on a special venire; it not appearing that the sheriff was in any way disqualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 528*)—EXPERT EVIDENCE—PERSONAL INJURY.

A question asked a physician in an action for injury through falling into a hole, dug by defendant telephone company, as to whether or not, in the witness' opinion, one falling into the hole could receive injuries sufficient to cause plaintiff's present condition, was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2336; Dec. Dig. § 528.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 553*)—EXPERT WITNESSES—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS.

A hypothetical question need not necessarily contain a synopsis of all of the circumstances in evidence, but the examiner may choose a portion of the facts shown by the testimony, and where there was evidence, in an action for personal injuries, that plaintiff had received a blow on the side of the head, a question asked an expert medical witness whether or not plaintiff's condition could have been produced by a blow on the side of the head was proper as one preliminary to a more minute inquiry regarding the subject under investigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2369-2374; Dec. Dig. § 553.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 528*)—EXPERT EVIDENCE—PERSONAL INJURIES.

Questions asked a medical expert, in an action for personal injuries, whether one who is suffering from hemiplegia, caused by injuries to either side of the brain, sometimes has a recurrence of the comatose condition, and whether, from witness' experience as a practicing physician, he would or would not be surprised if plaintiff had another stroke of any kind, were proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2337; Dec. Dig. § 528.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for personal injuries a medical expert witness was asked what in his opinion was the usual percentage that survived the third stroke of paralysis, and answered that there are comparatively few that survive on account of the weakness of the arteries. Held that even if the question was improper, the answer was so indefinite that no injury resulted to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4143; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

7. RELEASE (§ 56*)—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—EVIDENCE.

In an action to set aside a release given in settlement of a claim for personal injuries, evidence regarding plaintiff's mental condition both before and after the time of the release was competent on the issue as to her soundness of mind at the time she executed the release.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action by wife for personal injuries, it appeared that plaintiff's husband had relinquished to her all his interest in the community property and in the cause of action for damages, and he was permitted to testify in reference thereto, error in permitting a witness to testify to a conversation with the husband, in which he disclaimed an interest in the money to be recovered from defendant, saying that it was plaintiff's property if she received it, was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161-4170; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

9. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINIONS—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

Under the rule that ownership of property is a fact to which a witness may testify, plaintiff wife, in an action for personal injuries, was properly permitted to state that the damages which she expected to recover were hers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff was asked by her counsel whether she was a religious lady, and answered, "I hope I am." Held that, while the question was immaterial, error in permitting it was not prejudicial as causing the jury to put more confidence in plaintiff's sworn statements because of the fact that she was religious.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

11. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 51*)—CONTRACTS—PROPERTY.

A husband and wife may enter into a contract regarding their property, whereby one may release to the other all interest, both present and in expectancy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

12. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 39*)—CONTRACTS BETWEEN—EVIDENCE.

The courts will resort to circumstantial evidence furnished by the general conduct of the spouses with reference to their property in determining the existence or nonexistence of a contract between them where the exact terms of the alleged agreement have escaped the memory of one or both of the parties thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

13. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 24*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—CAUSE OF ACTION.

A claim for personal injuries growing out of a tort is not assignable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-46; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

14. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 266*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—CONVEYANCE BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Where a husband and wife mutually agreed that all community property on hand, or to be thereafter acquired, should be the separate property of the wife, and thereafter, on the wife receiving personal injuries, the husband relinquished to her all his interest in the cause of action for damages, the agreement was sufficient to transmute community property into separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 926; Dec. Dig. § 266.*]

15. RELEASE (§ 57*)—MENTAL CAPACITY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to set aside a release of a claim for personal injuries, evidence held to support a finding that plaintiff was of unsound mind on the day it was executed, though not entirely without understanding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Dec. Dig. § 57.*]

16. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

In an action for personal injuries to plaintiff, who was about 57 years old, a physician testified that plaintiff's right side was at one time completely paralyzed, but at the time of the trial she could use her right foot a little, that she was blind in her right eye, that the sight of her left eye was impaired, and that her spine was so curved that it caused the ribs to contract the chest. Other physicians added some details as to hemorrhage from the lungs and stomach, and testified to plaintiff's good health prior to the accident. Held, that a verdict for $25,000 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 372-385; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

17. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 806*)—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS—PERSONAL INJURIES—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Mere abstraction or lack of attention to the condition of a sidewalk by a pedestrian passing over it cannot be assigned as contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1678, 1682; Dec. Dig. § 806.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by J. F. Perkins and another against the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas, and Weldon & Held, for appellant. John W. Preston, Arthur J. Thatcher, and Casper Ornbaun, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Elizabeth M. Perkins, one of the plaintiffs, who is the wife of the plaintiff J. F. Perkins, was injured by falling into a hole which had been dug by the servants of appellant for the reception of a telephone pole in a street in the city of Ukiah. She and her husband brought suit against the defendant corporation for damages and for the rescission of a certain contract of release which they had made with the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company. The judgment was in favor of plaintiffs upon both issues. The agreement was thereby declared void and was ordered canceled upon restoration to the defendant of the consideration. Damages in the sum of $25,000 were awarded plaintiffs. This is an appeal from the judgment and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The questions with reference to the alleged release were, upon appellant's motion, determined by the court, and the verdict for damages was rendered by a jury.

Appellant's first assignment of error relates to the selection of jurors from a special venire, instead of from the list prepared according to statute by the board of supervisors. Our attention is called to the fact that seven of the jurors who tried the case resided at or near Ukiah, where plaintiffs lived, and all but one member of the jury knew Perkins and his wife. This acquaintance, appellant contends, was of such nature that the jurors must have given unconsciously more weight to the testimony of plaintiffs than to that of other witnesses. This, it is asserted, compelled the defendant corporation to submit its cause to an unfair jury. There is no merit in this contention. Mere acquaintance of the jurors with a litigant does not imply bias by them in his favor any more than it raises a presumption of prejudice against him. Nor is there any impropriety in the court's refusal to draw a jury from the citizens whose names appeared on the supervisors' list, rather than from talesmen summoned on a special venire. People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 359, 75 Pac. 1093. It was not here suggested that the sheriff was in any way disqualified.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Cal. Rep. 102-105 P.—15

Appellant directs this court's attention to a number of alleged errors in the admission of evidence. These we will consider in detail. Dr. Bond was asked this question, to which the following answer was given: "State whether or not, in your opinion, Doctor, you think that a person falling into a hole could receive injuries sufficient to cause her present condition?" Answer: "I think it could." The objection to this question was that it "called for a conclusion in a matter of expert testimony." While the interrogatory was exceedingly broad, and the question omitted specification of the size of the hole, the manner of the fall, the weight of the individual, and like details, there was no objection made to the question on the ground that it was not sufficiently specific, or that it did not contain enough details to make it a fair hypothetical question in view of the evidence in the case. It is too well established to require extended argument that an expert surgeon may state generally the sort of agency, means, or instrument which may have produced a given injury; as, for example, whether or not a wound was inflicted by a blunt or a cutting instrument, or whether or not an ascertained lesion was a gunshot wound. The above question was within this rule. See State v. Seymour, 94 Iowa, 699, 63 N. W. 661; Batten v. State, 80 Ind. 394; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 Pac. 75.

Two of the physicians were asked if the condition of Mrs. Perkins could have been produced by a blow on the side of the head. Objection was made to such inquiries on the ground that they were "mere speculation and mere probability" or "too speculative." These objections were properly overruled. No line of inquiry is more thoroughly within the scope of a legitimate examination of an expert surgeon than that relating to the probable cause of a physical injury. No objection was made to the form of the question nor to its general character. While it is true that a hypothetical question, where allowable at all, must conform to the testimony (Rowe v. Such, 134 Cal. 576, 66 Pac. 862, 67 Pac. 760), it is also the rule in California that such question need not necessarily contain a synopsis of all of the circumstances in evidence. The examiner may choose a portion of the facts shown by the testimony as a basis of his hypothetical inquiry. People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 567, 48 Pac. 711. There was evidence that Mrs. Perkins had received a blow on the side of the head, and this question was at least proper as one preliminary to a more minute inquiry regarding the subject under investigation. The following questions were propounded to Dr. Stout: "A person who is suffering from hemiplegia, caused by a clot on the brain, or injuries to the right side of the brain, or either side of the brain, sometimes have a recurrence of the comatose condition, do they not?" "From your knowledge and experience as a practicing physician, would you, or not, be surprised should Mrs. Perkins have another stroke of any kind?" To each question the objection was made that it was "immaterial and speculative." Dr. Bond was asked and gave the following answer to this question: "Well, in your opinion, according to medical authority and according to your own wide experience and observation, what is the usual per cent. that survive the third stroke in this country?" Answer: "I think there are comparatively few that survive on account of the weakness of the arteries." The only objection to this query was: "There was no evidence of a third stroke in this case." Counsel did not even interpose the time-honored objection that the question was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The evident purpose of plaintiff in asking these questions was to determine the extent and probable result of Mrs. Perkins' injuries. It was held by this court in Martin v. S. P. Co., 130 Cal. 287, 62 Pac. 515, that the character of the injuries sustained, as well as their probable duration and the professional care required for their alleviation, were proper subjects for the opinion of experts. The questions asked of Dr. Stout were clearly within the principle announced in that case. While the question put to Dr. Bond would, if standing alone, be considered erroneous perhaps, we cannot see how appellant could have been injured by it. The doctor had testified without objection that after the second attack of paralysis a patient was more apt to die, but that he could not give the percentage of persons who survived a second seizure. He was then asked regarding the percentage of those who recover after a third stroke. In view of the range of the previous questions to which no objection was made, this last inquiry was but natural, though perhaps not entirely proper. At any rate, his answer was so indefinite that no injury could have been wrought as against this defendant.

Mrs. Randall, an intimate acquaintance of Mrs. Perkins, gave her opinion regarding the latter's mental condition at the time of the signing of the release mentioned in the pleadings. She described the plight of Mrs.

Perkins after the accident and before the date upon which the release was signed. It is not clear whether or not her testimony had reference also to a period subsequent to the execution of that instrument. It makes no difference whether or not her description of her friend's illness included some matters occurring after the release was signed, because it is proper in such an action as this to receive evidence with regard to a person's mental condition both before and after the time of the act involved in the investigation. Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 516, 35 Am. Rep. 83; People v. March, 6 Cal. 547; People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 556, 89 Pac. 124. It is true, as appellant's counsel state, that "the only issue in this branch of the case was the soundness of mind of Mrs. Perkins at the time she executed the release on the 8th day of February, 1906"; but one way to determine that question was to consider evidence of her mental condition before and after that date.

Witness Randall was permitted, over appellant's objection, to testify to a conversation with Mr. Perkins in which the latter disclaimed any interest in the money to be derived from the telephone company, saying that "it was her property if she received it"; and Mrs. Perkins was allowed to state while on the witness stand that the amount of damages which she expected to be paid by the telephone company was hers. We think that the objection to the question asked of Mrs. Randall should have been sustained, and the motion to strike out the answer should have been granted; but, in view of the fact that Mr. Perkins was permitted to testify with reference to this matter, the error was not vital if respondents' theory of the case is correct, and that question we will presently examine. While the answer of Mrs. Perkins that the claim against the company was her property was in a sense an expression of opinion, there is authority for the introduction of such evidence and sustaining such a question as the one propounded to her by her counsel. As a general rule, ownership of property is a fact to which a witness may testify. Bunting v. Salz (Cal.) 22 Pac. 1133; Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 598, 79 Pac. 272; Hardison v. Davis, 131 Cal. 638, 63 Pac. 1005.

Elizabeth M. Perkins was asked by her counsel, "Are you a religious lady?" Objection that the question was immaterial was overruled, and the witness answered, "I hope I am." The objection should have been sustained; but we fail to see how appellant could have been injured by the erroneous ruling. We cannot share the apprehension of appellant's counsel that her reply must have caused the jurors to put more confidence in her sworn statements because of the suggestion that she was a religious lady. Her answer was not positive; but, even if it had been, and had she proclaimed her piety, we cannot see how her mere profession of religious belief could have created an improper influence upon the minds of the jurors. Nearly all civilized people have some sort of religion, and the discovery by a jury that a witness possesses such belief would not, we think, so far differentiate that individual from the rest of mankind as to give his or her statements peculiarly solemn weight with the jurors. Cases might arise in which evidence that a witness belonged to some certain religious sect might either increase or diminish the credit of the witness with some juror or jurors; but we fail to see how the mere possession of convictions regarding religion could operate to create improper bias in the minds of jurors.

The court found, among other things: That for more than 10 years there had been an agreement between J. F. Perkins and his wife, whereby it was mutually consented that all community property on hand or to be acquired by either should be and become the sole and separate property of Elizabeth M. Perkins; that said agreement was still in force and had been in effect since it was made; that Mr. Perkins had deeded all of the realty of the community to his wife in 1902; that she had thereafter collected and retained all the rents, issues, and profits therefrom; that in 1903 he had by bill of sale transferred to her all title to a part of the personal property of the community; and that after the injury to Mrs. Perkins, and prior to the execution of the agreement of February 8, 1906, with the telephone company, J. F. Perkins had relinquished to his coplaintiff all his interest in the cause of action for damages. Appellant attacks these findings on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support them; but they set forth substantially the facts deducible from the testimony of plaintiffs themselves and of other witnesses. Appellant calls attention to the fact that there is no evidence of an assignment by the husband of his interest in the cause of action, and then cites authorities to the effect that a cause of action for tort is not assignable. Undoubtedly appellant is correct in its position that such cause of action generally cannot be assigned; but the point is not here involved. The findings are not that there was an assignment, but that, long before the cause of action arose, Mr. Perkins relinquished his interest in the community property, and that his act, after the injury to his wife, was one of relinquishment and not of assignment. Respondents contend that: First, the cause of action was the separate property of the wife when it arose; and, second, that in any event the agreement between the two spouses was sufficient to transmute the community property into separate property.

Under our law there can be no doubt that a husband and wife may enter into a contract with respect to their property whereby one may release to the other all interest, both present and in expectancy. Crum v. Sawyer,

132 Ill. 443, 24 N. E. 956; In re Davis, 106 Cal. 453, 39 Pac. 756; Von Glahn v. Brennar, 81 Cal. 264, 22 Pac. 596; Wren v. Wren, 100 Cal. 279, 34 Pac. 775, 38 Am. St. Rep. 287; Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 598, 79 Pac. 272. In the case last cited the following language is used: "There can be no doubt that the husband may make a gift of the community property to the wife, and that the effect of such gift will be to transmute it into her separate estate. The provision in section 172 of the Civil Code that he cannot make a gift of community property unless the wife, in writing, consent thereto, is a provision for her benefit and protection, and it has no application to the case of a gift by the husband directly to the wife. And so, also, he may, under sections 158 and 159 of the Civil Code, contract with her by an agreement that her personal earnings shall be her separate property, and this may apply to future as well as past earnings, and the effect of such an agreement will be to convert such earnings from the status of community property to that of separate property of the wife." It will be seen, by an examination of the authorities cited above, that the utmost freedom of contract exists in California between husband and wife, and that the courts will resort to circumstantial evidence furnished by the general conduct of the spouses with reference to their property in determining the existence or nonexistence of a contract where the exact terms of the alleged agreement have escaped the memory of one or both of the parties to it. In the case at bar there was both positive evidence, and also testimony as to facts and circumstances, tending to show that the contract, whereby the husband remitted to his wife all his interest in that which would ordinarily have been the community property, was, and had been, in existence for a long period of years. The findings upon that subject were supported by the evidence. According to the view we take of the matter, it is not necessary to determine whether or not a husband may assign to his wife his interest in an action not arising out of a wrong to his own person. It is a rule universally recognized that one who is injured personally may not assign a claim growing out of such tort; but there is some authority to the effect that almost every other kind of property is assignable. Rued v. Cooper, 109 Cal. 693, 34 Pac. 98. However, the court found here, not an assignment, but a relinquishment, of all the husband's claim to the community property. If such remission as to further accretions before the cause of action would operate as a transmutation of the property into the wife's separate estate, we see no reason why the same result could not be attained by the same means after the cause of action came into existence. It was therefore proper for the court to find with reference to the agreement which the plaintiffs made after the accident and before February 8, 1906.

The finding that Elizabeth M. Perkins was of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, on February 8, 1906, is attacked by appellant on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence; but we think that the finding, which seems to have been made in view of the provisions of section 39 of the Civil Code, is supported by the evidence of experts and of laymen. Dr. Stout testified that Mrs. Perkins was in a stuporous and comatose condition and was without sufficient mental capacity to transact ordinary business when he saw her on the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 9th days of February, 1906. Dr. Dickinson, whose observation of the patient covered a time both before and after the 8th of February, and who saw her on that day near the time when her signature was appended to the document which defendant offered as a release, testified that, while she answered questions rationally, she did so only by the words "yes" or "no." He said that it was difficult to secure answers from her at all, and in his opinion she was not in a condition to transact business upon that day. Mrs. Randall gave her opinion that Mrs. Perkins was not of sound mind on February 8th, and related the fact that the patient mistook her for a Mrs. Stickney. She also said that Mrs. Perkins was in a stupor on that day. Mrs. McCallum and Mrs. Scott both gave similar testimony. The evidence adduced from these witnesses, as well as from her son and her husband, sufficiently supports the finding upon the mental condition of Mrs. Perkins.

Appellant attacks the verdict as excessive, and it therefore becomes necessary to examine the evidence upon that point. Dr. Bond testified that Mrs. Perkins' right side was at one time completely paralyzed, but that at the time of the trial she could use her right foot a little. He stated that she was blind in her right eye, and that her spine was so curved that it caused the ribs to contract the chest. He also said that the sight of her left eye was impaired. Dr. Dickinson's description was much the same, except that he added some details as to hemorrhage from the lungs and stomach. He also told of the lady's good health prior to the accident. Dr. Stout's account of the physical condition of Mrs. Perkins was similar to those of his professional brothers. Mrs. Perkins was 57 years of age at the time of the trial. In the prevailing opinion in Reeve v. Colusa Gas & Elec. Co., 152 Cal. 110, 92 Pac. 94, we find the following: "It is impossible adequately to describe the suffering and misery—past, present, and future—inflicted upon the plaintiff as a consequence of the injury. The verdict is large, the amount of damage was a question for the jury, subject to the supervision and correction of the trial court, and, having been passed by the latter without disapproval, it is not for us to say, under the circumstances, that it is excessive." We think this language is thoroughly applicable to the case at bar, and we cannot say, as matter of law, that the verdict rendered was excessive.

Appellant's counsel criticise as erroneous one of the instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence. After reciting the averment in the answer that the injury was due to the contributory negligence of Mrs. Perkins, the instruction continues as follows: "I further instruct you that whether the signs, signals, warnings, barriers, lights, and obstructions, if any, were sufficient under the conditions to make the said plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence, is a question of fact for you to determine from the evidence; and it is also a question of fact for you to determine from the evidence whether or not there was at the time of the accident any sign, signal, light, warning, barrier, barricade, or obstruction to protect the public from falling into and being precipitated into the said excavation." Appellant calls attention to the omission from this instruction of the element of respondent's possible carelessness and abstraction, and complains that the jury must have inferred that, as matter of law, it was appellant's duty to maintain at the excavation some sign, signal, or light. Mere abstraction or lack of attention to the condition of the sidewalk by a pedestrian passing over it cannot be assigned as contributory negligence. Even intoxication does not constitute contributory negligence in such case, for, as Mr. Justice Heydenfeldt once wittily observed: "A drunken man is as much entitled to a safe street as a sober one, and much more in need of it." Robinson v. Pioche, 5 Cal. 461. Nor can this instruction be construed as one in which the jury must conclude that barriers, etc., must be maintained by one who leaves an excavation in a public street. In a prior instruction the jurors had been told that it was the duty of defendant to "place proper guards or barriers or lights" around any excavation or obstruction left by it, and in both prior and subsequent instructions the matter of contributory negligence was sufficiently explained to the jury.

It is conceded by respondent that ordinarily a mistake of fact concerning the extent of an injury is not sufficient to avoid a release fully, fairly, and understandingly executed; but here we are called upon to consider a finding that Perkins, a man enfeebled in mind and body, was ignorant of the character, nature, and extent of the injuries to his wife. The finding may be fairly interpreted as referring to the injuries as they existed at the time of the execution of the release, and not to their extent as developed at a later period. In that view of the finding, the rule with reference to a "speculative contract or transaction," as stated in Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 339, 23 Pac. 16, 16 Am. St. Rep. 137, would have no just application, especially when we consider the enfeebled condition of the mind of J. F. Perkins as found by the court.

The judgment and order from which defendant appeals are sustained.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

156 Cal. 113

GRAHAM v. GILLETT, Governor, et al.
(S. F. 5,294.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 23*)—STATUS OF PETITIONER.

The status of one, as a person merely desirous of bidding for public bonds offered for sale under the act under which they were issued, is not such as to entitle him to invoke a writ of mandate to have them signed by certain officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-58; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 3*)—OTHER SUFFICIENT REMEDY.

Petition of one desirous to bid for public bonds, offered for sale under the act under which they were issued, for writ of mandate requiring certain officers to sign them will be denied, not merely because petitioner has not a sufficient status, but because any successful bidder will be entitled to bonds properly executed, so that, if the bonds tendered are not so executed as to make them valid, he may compel issuance of others which are sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

In Bank. Application of E. C. Graham for writ of mandate to Hon. James N. Gillett, Governor, and others. Writ denied.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman, for petitioner.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is a petition for an alternative writ of mandate to the Governor, Controller, and Treasurer of the State, requiring them to execute certain bonds offered for sale, in pursuance of an act approved March 20, 1903, and known as the "San Francisco Seawall Act." St. 1903, p. 247, c. 211. By the provisions of the act the treasurer was directed to prepare 2,000 bonds for $1,000 each. They were all to bear date January 2, 1905, and were to be sold from time to time as the needs of the fund required. They were to be executed in behalf of the state by the Governor, Controller, and Treasurer, but it is not clear from the terms of the law whether they were to be signed by those who were incumbents of said offices at the date which the bonds were required to bear, or by those who might be in office at the time they were offered for sale. They were in fact signed by Governor Pardee and the Controller and Treasurer who were in office January 2, 1905, and in that form 500 bonds are now offered for sale. The petitioner is desirous of bidding, and in that character alone seeks to compel the present Governor, Controller, and Treasurer to sign 500 bonds, to be issued in place of those already signed by their predecessors.

The writ of mandate is denied for two reasons: First, because the petitioner has not at present a status which entitles him to invoke the remedy; and, second, because he, or any other successful bidder at the sale, will be entitled to bonds properly executed, and if the bonds tendered are not so executed, as to make them valid securities, he may then compel the issuance of others which are sufficient in every respect.

155 Cal. 742

SCHWARTZ v. PANAMA R. CO.
(L. A. 2,256.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 180*)—CONNECTING CARRIERS—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Defendant, a carrier operating a line of vessels between New York and Colon, and a line of railroad from Colon to Panama, contracted with plaintiff to transport certain articles from New York to Colon to be there delivered to a connecting carrier. The contract provided that, if they were delivered to any other carrier for transportation to the ultimate destination, the carrier selected should be the agent of the owner, and that the liability of each carrier should be terminated by proper delivery to the succeeding carrier; that the bill of lading was signed for the different carriers severally; that only the carrier in whose actual custody the goods were at the time of any loss, damage, or delay should be responsible therefor; and that the receipt of any carrier for the goods should be prima facie evidence of the condition in which he received them. The contract named a through rate, not to be prepaid, but of which each carrier was to collect his portion from the succeeding carrier, the full amount to be collected by the terminal carrier from the consignee. The contract did not provide who should be the carriers beyond the end of defendant's route, and it selected the carrier to continue the transportation. The contract was made prior to the enactment of the Hepburn act, making the initial carrier of goods for transportation from one state to another liable for transportation to their destination. Held, that defendant was only bound to deliver at the end of its route to some other competent carrier for transportation, and that thereupon its liability ceased, as under Civ. Code, § 2201, if a common carrier accepts freight for a place beyond its usual route, he must, unless he stipulates otherwise, deliver to some other carrier and his responsibility thereupon ceases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 815-828; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 80*)—PRESUMPTIONS—LAWS OF OTHER STATES.

Where there is no evidence in an action against an initial carrier for loss of goods as to what the law of the state is relative to a connecting carrier's liability in the place where the shipment originated, it will be presumed it is the same as it is in this state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 173*)—CONNECTING CARRIERS—SPECIAL CONTRACTS FOR TRANSPORTATION.

A carrier may so contract to carry to some point beyond the end of its route as to be liable for delivery at such point, and, when he has so contracted, all connecting lines are his agents, for whose default he is responsible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 760-763, 781-784; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 36*)—ADMISSION—EFFECT.

A contract for transportation of freight from New York to Colon specified Colon as the point to which the initial carrier was to transport them. In an action against such carrier for the loss of the articles, the answer admitted that it was to transport them to Panama; the latter place being connected with the former by a line of railroad under the management of defendant. Held, that the admission in the answer did not necessitate the disregarding of the terminus named in the contract, as the answer simply admitted that, by reason of its ownership and operation of the railroad, it was liable for the transportation of the goods beyond the point designated in the contract, and as far as the end of the railroad route.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-86; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Jacob Schwartz against the Panama Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Aylett R. Cotton (Anderson & Anderson, of counsel), for appellant. Goldberg & Meily, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for the failure of defendant to comply with the terms of an alleged contract of carriage.

The material facts established by undenied allegations of the complaint, or evidence as to which there was no conflict, were as follows: Defendant is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business as a common carrier for hire of goods, wares, and merchandise under and by virtue of the laws of the state of New York. It owns and operates a line of steam vessels sailing between the port of New York and the port of Colon in the republic of Panama, and also a line of steam railroad connecting with its line of steamers at Colon, and thence extending across the Isthmus of Panama to the port of Panama, where its route as a common carrier terminates. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company, a corporation, is a common carrier of goods, operating a line of steam vessels from Panama to San Francisco, Cal. and the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, a corporation, is a common carrier of goods, operating a line of steam vessels from San Francisco to the ports adjacent to Los Angeles, Cal. In April, 1905, plaintiff, at the port of New York, delivered to defendant for carriage certain machinery for the manufacture of soda water and carbonated waters, of which he was the owner. This machinery was then contained in 10 packages, each bearing upon it in plain and visible manner the initials and address of plaintiff as consignee at Los Angeles, Cal. Defendant accepted the same for carriage, giving to plaintiff a bill of lading therefor. The provisions thereof material here are as follows:

"Panama Railroad Co.

"Panama Railroad S. S. Line.

"R. L. Walker, Traffic Manager, 24 State Street, New York.

"Marks and Numbers.

"a|d—J.S.

"Freight from New York to Los Angeles, Cal.

"3,164 lbs. at $180.

"New York, ———, 190—. No. ———.

"Received by the Panama Railroad Company of L. Furtenberg, under the contract hereinafter contained, the property mentioned below, marked and numbered as per margin, in apparent good order and condition (contents and value unknown), viz:

"3 stands

"3 fountains

"3 coolers

"1 Box of parts

—
"10 pkgs.

"One cooler rim broken.

"Consigned to Jacob Schwartz at Los Angeles, to be transported by steamship Seguranca appointed to sail Apr. 17, 1905, or by any other or succeeding steamer or vessel, whether belonging to said company or any other owner, to the port of Colon, and there, * * * if destined beyond, to be there delivered to connecting carrier and so on by one connecting carrier to another, until they reach the station or port nearest to the ultimate destination. If their ultimate destination be beyond the point for which rates are named, as per margin, they may by the connecting carrier nearest to such ultimate destination, be delivered to any other carrier, to be transported to such ultimate point; and the carrier so selected shall be regarded exclusively as the agent of the owner or consignee. * * *

"Every carrier is liable to the preceding carrier for all accrued charges; and in the event of loss of the property after transfer from one carrier to another, the carrier having the property in charge when the loss occurs shall have a lien on the remaining property, if any, for all such advances.

"It is mutually agreed that the liability of each carrier, as to goods destined beyond its own route, shall be terminated by proper delivery of them to the next succeeding carrier. This bill of lading is signed for the different carriers who may be engaged in the transportation, severally, not jointly, and each of them is to be bound by and have the benefit of all the conditions thereof as if signed by it, the shipper, owner and consignee. * * *

Certain conditions were printed on the back of this contract. Among them was one exempting such carrier from any liability for certain kinds of articles unless their nature and value are expressed, and for any loss or damage "arising from * * * fire from any cause, on land or on water." Another provision was "in case of loss, detriment or damage to the goods, or delay in the transmission thereof, imposing any liability hereunder, the carrier in whose actual custody they were at the time of such loss, damage, detriment or delay, shall alone be responsible therefor. The receipt of any carrier for the goods shall be prima facie evidence of the condition in which he received them, in a suit against any other common carrier." There was no provision in the contract as to who should be the carriers beyond the end of defendant's route, and the defendant was left free to select such carriers. The charges for freight were not prepaid, but were to be collected from the consignee by the final carrier at the point of destination. One of these packages, containing parts of the machinery indispensable to the operation of the whole, was carried by defendant to Panama, and there delivered by it to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for further carriage. It was then carried by the latter to San Francisco, where it was delivered to the Pacific Coast Steamship Company for further carriage. It was by the last-named company shipped and loaded on its steam vessel "State of California" then lying at a wharf in San Francisco. While so situated, the contents of said package, through the fault, negligence, and wrong of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, were so damaged and destroyed by fire occurring in the hold of said vessel that they were rendered wholly worthless, incapable of use, and of no value whatever. The remaining nine packages were carried with due diligence by defendant to Panama, and there delivered by it to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on May 8, 1905, in good order and condition. One of these packages has never reached its destination. The remaining eight packages were never tendered to plaintiff until December 8, 1905, on which date the Pacific Coast Steamship Company did tender them to plaintiff at Los Angeles, but at such time the contents thereof were "rusted, broken, damaged, and destroyed, and were incapable of use and of no value whatever, and the plaintiff declined to receive the same." Upon these facts, it is clear that whatever default there was in relation to the contract of carriage occurred after the delivery of the packages by defendant at the end of its route to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and was primarily the default of either the latter company or that of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company.

It is conceded that under what is known as the American rule (as distinguished from the English rule), which prevails in most of our states, the mere acceptance of freight by a common carrier for a place beyond his route imposes on him, "unless he stipulates otherwise," only the obligation to deliver it at the end of his route in that direction to some other competent carrier carrying to the place of address, or connected with those who thus carry, and his liability as a carrier ceases upon making such delivery. This is the rule embodied in section 2201 of our Civil Code. See Palmer v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 187, 35 Pac. 630. It is also the rule declared by the decisions in the state of New York, the state in which the shipment was made. See Condict v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 54 N. Y. 500; Jennings v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 127 N. Y. 438, 28 N. E. 394. There was no evidence as to what the statutory provisions of that state in relation to carriers are, and we must therefore assume that the law of New York was the same as our own. Palmer v. Atchison, etc., Co., supra, 101 Cal. 195, 35 Pac. 630; Cavallaro v. Texas, etc., Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 348, 357, 42 Pac. 918, 52 Am. St. Rep. 94. We are speaking of the situation as it existed prior to the taking effect of the act of Congress, known as the Hepburn act (June 29, 1906, c. 3591, 34 Stat. 584 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 892]), which provides that the initial carrier receiving goods for transportation from a point in one state to a point in another state shall be liable for transportation to the point of destination. The shipment here was made prior to the taking effect of this act. Plaintiff's theory, as shown by the allegations of his complaint, which was sustained by the findings of the trial court, is that defendant did "stipulate otherwise"—that by special contract it undertook to deliver the goods at Los Angeles, and that the connecting carriers between Panama and Los Angeles were its agents in the performance of said contract for whose negligence it was responsible. It is everywhere recognized that the carrier may so contract to carry to some point beyond the end of his route as to be liable for delivery at such point, and that, when he has so contracted, all connecting lines are his agents, for whose default he is responsible. 1 Hutchinson's Carriers, §§ 226, 240; Pereira v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 66 Cal. 92, 4 Pac. 988; Colfax, etc., Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 118 Cal. 648, 50 Pac. 775, 40 L. R. A. 78; German Fruit Co. v. California, etc., Co., 133 Cal. 426, 65 Pac. 948. The question here presented is whether defendant did so contract with reference to the shipment made by plaintiff. If any such obligation on the part of defendant existed, it existed solely by reason of the fact that it had assumed it by positive agreement. See 1 Hutchinson's Carriers, §§ 231, 232; Myrick v. Michigan Central R. R. Co., 107 U. S. 102, 1 Sup. Ct. 425, 27 L. Ed. 325.

We are unable to find in the contract in the case at bar the assumption by defendant of any obligation other than the obligation of transporting the goods to the end of its route, and there delivering them to some other competent carrier carrying to the place of address or connecting with those who thus carried. So far as the terms of the contract relate to this matter, they are perfectly clear and certain, and susceptible of no other construction. Their effect was, as stated by Judge Lurton in an opinion concurred in by Judges Taft and Clark in Cincinnati, etc., Co. v. Fairbanks Co., 90 Fed. 467, 33 C. C. A. 611, where a very similar contract was under consideration, "that the initial carrier undertook, for itself and its connecting lines in the route, 'severally and not jointly,' that each would carry safely to the point of junction with the next succeeding carrier, and then deliver to it, and that each should be liable exclusively for any loss while in its custody." It is true that in that case the various connecting routes were specified, but this appears to have been considered material only in view of the fact that the blank in the receipt in which the name of the place to which the goods were to be transported by the initial carrier had not been filled in, thus leaving such point unnamed, and giving some basis for the claim that the initial carrier was to transport to the only other place expressly designated, viz., the place to which the goods were consigned. In the contract at bar the port of Colon was expressly named as the point to which the defendant was to transport the goods. It is urged that these words "port of Colon" must be disregarded and the contract of shipment construed as if they had not been written and the space left blank, for the reason that the terminus of defendant's route was, in fact, Panama, and defendant's answer admits a contract to transport to the terminus of its route at Panama; in other words, to carry the goods across the isthmus from Colon to Panama. There is no force in this contention. The answer of the defendant admits no more than that, by reason of its ownership and operation of the railroad across the isthmus, it was liable in the matter of the carrying of the goods beyond the point designated in the contract and as far as Panama, the end of the railroad and its route. But, whatever the liability of the defendant by reason of the fact that the railroad across the isthmus was a part of its operated route, the port of Colon was designated by the contract as the point to which it would transport the goods, and at which it would deliver them to a connecting carrier, and this designation cannot be disregarded.

There is absolutely nothing to indicate any intention to assume any obligation beyond the carrying to the end of its route other than the obligation to deliver to a connecting carrier, and the assumption of any additional obligation is expressly repudiated by clear and unambiguous language. The words following the undertaking that the goods shall be delivered to connecting carrier, viz., "and so on by one connecting carrier to another, until they reach the station or port nearest to the ultimate destination," can mean no more, in the light of the other provisions of the contract, and especially in the light of the provision that the contract "is signed for the different carriers who may be engaged in the transportation, severally, not jointly," etc., than that the defendant was undertaking for itself and its connecting lines, "severally, not jointly," that each would perform its part of the contract, and stipulating that each should have the benefit of all the conditions thereof. The provision to the effect that, if the ultimate destination be beyond the point for which rates are named, they may by the connecting carrier nearest such ultimate destination be delivered to any other carrier to be transported to such ultimate point, which carrier "so selected shall be regarded exclusively as the agent of the owner or consignee," was simply a provision for the protection of the ultimate connecting carrier relating to the disposition of the property at the end of the route covered by the contract, the route for which rates were named, and as to which the carriers to be engaged in the transportation had severally contracted, each for his own portion thereof. We do not see that this provision aids in the determination of the question under consideration. A similar provision was contained in the bill of lading in Cincinnati, etc., Co. v. Fairbanks Co., supra. Nor was it important that the contract contained elaborate and detailed stipulations as to the rights, duties, and liabilities of connecting carriers, the contract being executed by defendant not only for itself, but also for and on behalf of such connecting carriers. The naming of a through freight rate which was not to be prepaid, but of which each carrier was to collect his portion from the next succeeding carrier, and the whole amount of which to be collected by the ultimate carrier from the consignee at the end of the route, has very little significance. None of the elements suggested is necessarily inconsistent with the theory that the defendant was not assuming any responsibility beyond the end of its route (see Moore on Carriers, § 475), and when considered in connection with the explicit provisions that "it is mutually agreed that the liability of each carrier, as to goods delivered beyond its own route shall be terminated by proper delivery of them to the next succeeding carrier" and "in case of loss, detriment or damage to the goods, or delay in the transmission thereof, imposing any liability hereunder, the carrier in whose actual custody they were at the time of such loss, damage, detriment or delay, shall alone be responsible therefor," and the further provision that "this bill of lading is signed for the different carriers who may be engaged in the transportation, severally, not jointly," all of which constitute parts of the contract equally with the provision relied on by plaintiff, are entirely consistent with such theory. The contract was undoubtedly, as claimed by plaintiff, a through contract, but, so far as it applied beyond the end of defendant's route, it was a contract clearly and unequivocally entered into by defendant solely on behalf of the connecting carriers who might be engaged in the transportation, and not for itself. It must, therefore, be held that there was no stipulation on the part of defendant to deliver the goods at Los Angeles or to be responsible therefor beyond the terminus of its line, and that its liability as to the goods ceased upon its delivery thereof to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

The California cases in which contracts for carriage have been held to be through contracts, imposing on the initial carrier the obligation of carrying through to destination, are all clearly distinguishable from the case at bar. We have examined the various cases cited by learned counsel for plaintiff, and find nothing therein to lead us to doubt the correctness of our conclusion. The question is simply one as to the proper construction of a written contract, the meaning and intent of which appear to us to be entirely clear.

From what we have said it follows that the findings of the trial court as to the undertaking and default of the defendant are not sustained by the evidence.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

155 Cal. 752

SMITH v. MATHEWS. (S. F. 5,008.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 24, 1909.)

1. STATUTES (§ 48*)—CONSTRUCTION—HARMONY WITH CONSTITUTION.

Where possible, statutes must be construed in a sense which will harmonize them with the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. STATUTES (§§ 159, 161*)—REPEAL BY IMPLICATION.

In the absence of an express repeal, an existing statute is not abrogated by the enactment of a new one, unless the provisions of the later act are so inconsistent with the former that the two cannot have a concurrent operation, or unless the later act so fully covers the whole subject-matter of the prior act as to afford conclusive evidence that it was intended to supersede it entirely.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 229, 231, 235-237; Dec. Dig. §§ 159, 161.*]

3. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 29*)—COMPENSATION.

Act March 18, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 354, c. 282), providing a uniform system of county and township governments, by section 1 amended the Political Code by incorporating all the provisions of the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 452, c. 277), with its amendments as revised and amended by the new act. Section 2 declared that the provisions of the act, so far as substantially the same as existing statutes, must be construed as continuations thereof, and that nothing in the act shall be deemed to affect the term of office of any person holding office under such statutes. Section 3 provides that the act shall take effect immediately. By Pol. Code, § 4243, subd. 15, as so amended, constables of townships having a population of 500 in counties of the fourteenth class are allowed, in addition to certain fees, a salary of $50 a month. Before the enactment of the act, constables in such townships were allowed certain fees, but no salary, under Act March 21, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 670, c. 1011), amending the county government act of 1897. Held, that in view of Const. art 11, § 9, providing that the compensation of a county, town, etc., officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office, and the fact that the act of 1907 in numerous sections raises the salaries of such officers, as well as alters them in other instances, without disclosing whether the result is an increase or reduction, the act was not intended to go into immediate effect, but to apply only to officers to be elected for subsequent terms, and the county government act of 1897, as amended by Act March 21, 1905, continued to govern the compensation of constables elected before the enactment of the act of 1907, in townships of 500 inhabitants in counties of the fourteenth class.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sheriffs and Constables, Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Mandamus by A. J. Smith against C. W. Mathews. From a judgment awarding a peremptory writ, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Robert Duncan, for appellant. J. W. Preston, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandamus and presents only a question of statutory construction. In the year 1907 the petitioner was constable of Little Lake township, in Mendocino county; his term of office having commenced in January of that year, and at a time when the compensation for his official services was regulated by section 1 of an act approved March 21, 1905, relating to the compensation of county officers in counties of the fourteenth class. St. 1905, p. 670, c. 1011. By that act he was allowed certain fees, but no salary.

On the 18th of March, 1907, the Governor approved an act entitled "An act to repeal title 2 of part 4 of the Political Code, and to add a new title 2 of part 4 of said Code in place thereof, relating to the establishment of a uniform system of county and township governments." St. 1907, p. 354, c. 282. This act consisted of three sections, as follows:

"Section 1. Title 2 of part 4 of the Political Code is hereby repealed and a new title 2 of part 4 of said Code is hereby added to read as follows:" What follows covers more than 200 pages of the volume of statutes, and consists of a re-enactment of the old title of the Political Code, with additions and amendments in sections numbered consecutively from section 4000 to section 4325, in which are incorporated all of the provisions of the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 452, c. 277), with its various amendments, as revised and amended by the new act. From this brief description it will be seen that the object of the Legislature was to systematize and codify the various provisions relating to county and township government theretofore contained in the Political Code and the county government act, by making them a part of the Political Code under the title: "The Government of Counties." The second and third sections of the act read as follows:

"Sec. 2. The provisions of this act, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes, must be construed as continuations thereof and not as new enactments; and nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to shorten or extend the term of office or employment of any person holding office or employment under the provisions of such statutes.

"Sec. 3. This act shall take effect immediately."

By subdivision 15 of section 4243 of the Political Code as so amended constables of townships having a population of 500 or more in counties of the fourteenth class are allowed, in addition to certain fees, a fixed salary of $50 per month. In the month of June, 1907, the plaintiff demanded of the defendant, who was auditor of Mendocino county, a county of the fourteenth class, a warrant for $50, claimed as salary for the previous month. His demand was refused, upon the ground that the amendment to the statute increased the compensation of his office and therefore could not be given effect as to him, during the term to which he had been elected prior to its passage, without a violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution, which provides that: "The compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer, shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office," etc. There could not, of course, be any answer to this objection of the auditor, if his construction of the statute was correct; but the plaintiff, contending that it could not be construed as increasing his compensation, commenced this proceeding to enforce compliance with his demand, and in the superior court was awarded a peremptory writ commanding the defendant to issue the warrant. In the District Court of Appeal this judgment was reversed upon the ground that the superior court had erred in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to the answer of the defendant, in which he justified his refusal to issue the warrant, upon the ground that the effect of subdivision 15 of section 4243 of the codifying act would be to increase the plaintiff's compensation after his election. It seems to have been assumed by both parties to the controversy that, by the terms of the act, and especially the concluding section, providing that it should take effect immediately, there was plainly manifested an intention on the part of the Legislature that said subdivision should regulate the compensation of the constables then in office in Mendocino county, and the principal question argued by counsel and considered by the court was whether, assuming such to have been the intention of the Legislature, it was competent for the court to defeat that intention by holding the act in abeyance as to the defendant, upon proof that its effect would be to increase the compensation provided for his office at the date of his election. The superior court had held that no evidence aliunde could be received for the purpose of invalidating an act of the Legislature, and upon the conceded construction of the act in question had ordered the peremptory writ. The District Court of Appeal, holding that such evidence was competent and material, and, in effect, that the amended act would remain in abeyance as to any particular incumbent of the office of constable until the end of his term, whenever it was made to appear that its practical effect would be to increase his compensation, reversed the judgment of the superior court. Subsequently, upon petition of plaintiff, and of a number of other county and township officers similarly situated with reference to numerous amendments contained in the codifying act affecting other classes of counties, the cause was transferred to this court for hearing and decision, and here again it was submitted upon an argument mainly confined to the question decided by the District Court of Appeal, and resting largely upon the same tacit assumption that the Legislature had plainly declared its intention that all the new provisions of the codifying act relating to official compensation should apply to those then in office, so far, at least, as they did not appear on their face to effect an increase of the compensation allowed by the law previously in force. Upon this assumption we affirmed the judgment of the superior court, holding, in accordance with the doctrine of Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 Pac. 1089, 14 L. R. A. 459, 25 Am. St. Rep. 230, that the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature is always a pure question of law, and that when the right to enact a law depends upon the existence of a fact the passage of the act implies, and the conclusive presumption is, that the Governor and the Legislature have performed their duty, and ascertained the existence of the fact before enacting or approving the law—a decision which the courts have no right to question or review.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Before this judgment of affirmance became final, it was set aside, and a second rehearing ordered for the purpose of considering a question presented for the first time in a new petition filed by the appellant, in which he contended that upon a proper construction of the codifying act it could not be held that the Legislature intended that the amendment contained in section 4243, or any similar changes of the county government law appearing in other sections of the act should apply to the then incumbents of the several offices affected. In support of this position, he calls attention to the fact that the codifying act contains no express repeal of the county government act of 1897, by which, as subsequently amended from time to time, the compensation of every county and township officer in the state was regulated prior to the approval of the codifying act, and he contends that there is no repeal by implication of any of those provisions. His position, in short, is that, until new terms of office begin, both acts are in force and in harmonious operation, the county government act of 1897, with its amendments, for the purpose of regulating the compensation of all officers who were elected prior to March 18, 1907, and the codifying act for the purpose of regulating the compensation of their successors. This, as he points out, is necessarily true as to all direct increases of compensation appearing upon a comparison of the express provisions of the two acts, for it has been the settled doctrine of this court ever since the decision in Dougherty v. Austin, 94 Cal. 601, 28 Pac. 834, 29 Pac. 1092, 16 L. R. A. 161, that in such cases the incumbent cannot claim the increased compensation, but continues to receive that which was provided by the law in force at the date of his election, which as to him continues in force (unless expressly repealed) to the end of his term, notwithstanding the fact that the amended law is also in force in most cases for more than 18 months before the end of his term for the purpose of fixing the compensation of his successor in a new term. This results from the fact that the Legislature meets in biennial session on the first Monday of January, the same day upon which all two-year terms of county officers begin and end. Any law it passes increasing the compensation of a county officer will generally be in effect before July with or without an urgency clause, but must remain in abeyance more than 18 months, during which time the compensation of the incumbent is governed by the old law. As said by this court in reference to the statute increasing the salaries of the justices: "Though an existing statute, it is not in force because there is no subject upon which it can constitutionally operate. It remains in abeyance, and must so remain until the beginning of the next ensuing regular term of the office of justice of the Supreme Court." Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 73, 82 Pac. 676.

There is nothing therefore novel or startling in the proposition now advanced by the appellant. The Constitution (article 11, § 9) clearly implies that there must be a law in force, fixing the compensation of every county and township officer at the date of his election, and it imperatively forbids any increase of that compensation by a law subsequently enacted. It permits, however, an increase of compensation to the person to be elected to the ensuing term, and, if such increase is provided, it must be by a law which for that limited purpose takes effect long before the expiration of the current term; the old law remaining in the meantime in full effect as to the incumbent. In such a case the operation of the amended law is postponed, not because it is unconstitutional, but because the courts, construing it in the light of the Constitution, hold that such was the intention of the Legislature. It is, in other words, construed as all laws must be, when possible, in a sense which harmonizes it with the Constitution and gives it harmonious effect.

If this were a case of increase of compensation appearing from a comparison of the codifying act with the law previously in force, there could be no doubt that the rights of the plaintiff would be governed exclusively by the old law; but since it does not appear that the new act gives an increased compensation, and since the Legislature has declared that it shall take effect immediately, it is argued that we are bound to presume that the object and effect of the provision in question was to reduce plaintiff's compensation, in which case it would, of course, be free from objection on constitutional grounds. In opposition to this view, appellant calls attention to the fact that, in numerous sections of the new law, salaries of various officers in several classes of counties are plainly and unequivocally raised, and, since it cannot be held that the Legislature intended those parts of the act to be operative on the incumbents of current terms, there is no reason for holding it to be operative upon those officers whose compensation is altered without disclosing whether the result is an increase or reduction of compensation.

This view is, in my opinion, well sustained by the argument of appellant. Since the clause putting the statute into immediate effect clearly does not mean all that it says, it becomes a question of construction how much its real meaning falls short of its literal import. If it was not intended to put in immediate operation provisions raising salaries, upon what ground are we to hold that it was intended to have immediate operation in those instances where it changes the compensation attached to an office without disclosing whether the change effects an increase or reduction, and where, as far as the court can see, it is as likely to be an increase as a reduction? If in one case the old law continues to operate, why not in the other?

These questions it appears to me are answered by the settled rule regarding repeals by implication. Such repeals are not favored. In the absence of an express repeal, an existing statute is not held to be abrogated by the enactment of a new one, unless the provisions of the later act are so inconsistent with the former that the two cannot have a concurrent operation, or unless the later act so fully covers the whole subject-matter of the prior as to afford conclusive evidence that it was intended to supersede it entirely. Here there is no such inconsistency between the codifying act and the county government act of 1897 that they cannot have a concurrent operation as to compensation of county officers in every instance in which they differ, and the fact that in numerous instances of increase of salary they must have a concurrent operation proves that the later act was not intended to supersede in all particulars the pre-existing law.

As to the clause putting the codifying act in immediate effect, it is really a false quantity so far as concerns the main question here involved. If it had not been inserted, the act would have gone into effect 60 days after its approval, and would have presented the same question as to plaintiff's right to salary for June, 1907, and succeeding months, as is here presented in regard to the salary claimed for the month of May. If by reason of the urgency clause it repealed by implication the county government act of 1907, on the 18th of March, 1907, it would have equally repealed it without that clause on the 17th of May, 1907. In truth, the addition of the urgency clause is amply accounted for by the fact that the codifying act revised the whole scheme of county government, including not only the general fee bill, but numerous other matters of grave importance, entirely distinct from official salaries and compensation, by inserting amendments which, if beneficial, it was important to put into immediate effect, and this could be done, as it was done by the urgency clause, without affecting one way or the other the provisions relating to compensation of county and township officers. Considering, then, that the urgency clause in this statute has no necessary reference to any of the provisions altering the compensation of county and township officers, that there are many of those provisions to which it cannot apply, that it has, on the other hand, a full and beneficial operation upon numerous amendments to the Political Code relating to other and wholly independent matters, which may well be deemed to have been regarded as urgent, and for these reasons disregarding it as immaterial in the present discussion, the question which we have to decide is the proper construction of an act which, without repealing the county government act, merely amends it by increasing the salaries of certain officers, and by changing the compensation of other officers from fees to salary, or from salary to fees, in such a manner as to leave the courts no means of determining whether these amendments will operate an increase or reduction of compensation. The true construction of such an act, in my opinion, is to treat all its provisions alike, and, knowing that such of them as increase salaries could have been intended to apply only to officers elected subsequent to the amendment, to conclude, in the absence of express and specific declaration to the contrary, that other amendments which may or may not have the effect of increasing compensation were likewise intended to operate only in favor of or against officers to be thereafter elected. By giving this construction to the present act, and making a precedent for the construction of all future acts of the same character, we insure the efficiency of the constitutional inhibition against increase of compensation to official incumbents without injustice to the plaintiff, or to any person now or hereafter found in the same situation. If the codifying act increases his compensation, it does so by violating the Constitution. If his compensation is thereby reduced, he profits by a construction which holds it inoperative as to him.

The judgment of the superior court is reversed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

SHAW, J. I concur. The point upon which the case is now decided is that the provisions of the act of 1907, in so far as they operate to increase the compensation of officers for terms running at the time the act took effect, are not to be given a retroactive operation; that is, that those provisions do not apply to the compensation for the then existing terms, and that in those cases where the act makes a change in the mode of measuring the compensation, from fees to salaries, and where, consequently, it cannot be ascertained in advance that there is no increase, it is to be presumed, from this uncertainty and the absence of an express statement otherwise, that the Legislature intended thereby to provide only for officers to be elected for subsequent terms. This point was fully argued upon the last hearing before this court, but previously it had been only incidentally suggested. Upon further reflection I am satisfied that this is the better rule to apply, and that it is not contrary to the principles of statutory construction.

A retrospective law "is one which operates upon matters which occurred, or rights and obligations which existed before the time of enactment." A fundamental rule for the construction of statutes is "that they will be considered to have a prospective operation only, unless a legislative intention to the contrary is expressed or necessarily to be implied from the language used or the particular circumstances, especially where to construe the act as retrospective in its operation would render it obnoxious to some constitutional provision." 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 692, 693. The act of 1907 is a part of the Political Code. "No part of it is retroactive, unless expressly so declared." Pol. Code, § 3. The act declares that it shall take effect immediately; but this does not necessarily mean that it shall operate retroactively.

The Constitution forbids a legislative increase in the compensation of any county or township officer during his term of office. Article 11, § 9. This prohibition, in effect, and with regard to legislation on the subject, makes the entire term of an office, with the concurrent right of the incumbent to compensation, a matter which occurs and a right which exists as soon as the term begins, and which are thereafter, in that aspect, past transactions. Any legislation affecting the compensation of such officer is to be deemed as operating upon an existing right, and the Legislature will not be presumed to have attempted to change the compensation during the term, unless it expressly so declares. If such intent does not appear, the law will be construed as intended to apply only to officers elected for subsequent terms. This construction is just both to the officer and to the public. If it intends to reduce the compensation of officers in any class of counties, during the pending terms, as it may constitutionally do, the Legislature can say in plain words that the change applies to present incumbents. If it changes from fees to salaries, as it may if it finds that the salary allowed will not increase the compensation, it can declare that there is no increase, and that it is to apply immediately to the present incumbents. Perhaps the fact of no increase would be inferred from the declaration that it should apply to present incumbents; but, where neither statement appears, it is to be inferred that an increase was contemplated and that it was intended to apply prospectively only.

This rule is always followed where the new law shows on its face that there is an increase. In such cases, an increase to incumbents being forbidden and beyond the power of the Legislature, the logical result of any other rule, where the law takes effect during a term, would be that the new law would be unconstitutional and void, and, if so, it might be doubtful if it could ever take effect. It has been said that an unconstitutional law is "as inoperative as though it had never been passed." Norton v. Shelby

Co., 118 U. S. 442, 6 Sup. Ct. 1125, 30 L. Ed. 178; Commissioners v. Kansas City, etc., Co., 5 Kan. App. 43, 47 Pac. 326. But these laws are not held void. Notwithstanding the fact that they have become laws in force, they are construed to be intended only for prospective operation, and hence not void, but only in abeyance until the conditions occur to which they can apply with effect. In the meantime they are not effective, even as an implied repeal of the old law. The old law stands and controls the right to compensation until the time arrives at which, by the Constitution, the new law is permitted to supersede it, and the implied repeal then takes place. The same reasons exist, and the same rule may well be applied, where the increase is not apparent on the face of the two statutes, or from facts of which courts take judicial notice, and there is nothing which declares or implies that the Legislature had determined that there was no increase and intended the change of method to apply to incumbents.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.

HAWKINS v. WARE, County Auditor.
(Civ. 506.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Dec. 4, 1908.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Mandamus by A. B. Hawkins against Will-ett Ware, Auditor of Santa Cruz County. Judgment for defendant, and petitioner appeals. Reversed, with directions to overrule demurrer.

Wyckoff & Gardner, for appellant. Benj. K. Knight, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition of appellant for a writ of mandate, whereupon judgment was entered for respondent. This appeal is from the judgment.

The question for determination is as to whether or not the petitioner, who is alleged to be a justice of the peace of Watsonville township in the county of Santa Cruz, was for the times and periods stated in the petition entitled to a salary of $75 per month as such justice of the peace, under the provisions of an act to amend section 170 of the county government act of April 1, 1897, approved March 19, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 227, c. 197). The act provides (section 14, p. 228) that in townships of the first class justices of the peace shall receive $75 per month. The petition shows that Watsonville township is a township of the first class, and that the defendant is county auditor of Santa Cruz county. If the facts stated in the petition are true, the appellant is entitled to the writ as prayed for. The act is not unconstitutional. Smith v. Matthews (Cal.; Nov. 20, 1908).<sup>1</sup>

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court directed to overrule the demurrer.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

155 Cal. 762

DAGGETT v. SOUTHWEST PACKING CO.
et al. (L. A. 2,297.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 80*)—FOREIGN LAWS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where laws of foreign states are not shown, the presumption is that they are the same as those of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 261*)—STOCK SUBSCRIPTIONS.

While, where a solvent corporation finds it necessary to call in an additional amount of its subscribed capital stock, and the subscription agreements do not state when or on what conditions it is to be paid, the statutes must be followed, and a call is necessary to the enforcement of a cause of action by the corporation on such subscriptions, this rule has no application to a proceeding in equity by a judgment creditor to subject unpaid subscriptions due to the satisfaction of the judgment, and he may pursue his remedy without first attempting to induce the corporation to enforce assessments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1071; Dec. Dig. § 261.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by C. B. Daggett against the Southwest Packing Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Cassius Carter, for appellant. Stearns & Sweet and H. E. Doolittle, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action by a judgment creditor of the corporation defendant, against the corporation and a number of its stockholders, in the nature of a creditor's bill to compel the payment and application upon the plaintiff's judgment of so much of the amounts due from the stockholders to the corporation upon unpaid subscriptions to stock as may be necessary to satisfy the judgment and costs. Demurrers of the defendants to the complaint were sustained, the plaintiff refused to amend, and judgment was then given dismissing the action. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The only point presented upon the argument is that the complaint does not aver that there has been any call or assessment upon the alleged unpaid subscriptions for stock, nor that there has been any request or demand upon the directors of the corporation to make such call or assessment. It is claimed by the respondents, and it is said that it was held by the court below, that such call or assessment, or a demand therefor upon the directors and a refusal by them, is a necessary condition precedent to the right of a judgment creditor to maintain an action of this character, and that the complaint is not sufficient unless it shows that this condition has been complied with. We do not so understand the law. Where a solvent corporation finds it necessary in the course of its business to call in an additional amount of its subscribed capital stock, and the subscription agreements do not state when, in what amounts, and upon what conditions it is to be paid, the statute being the measure of the corporate rights in that regard, it is no doubt true that the statute must be followed, and that a call is a necessary condition to the existence of a cause of action by the corporation to recover upon such subscriptions. But this rule has no application to a proceeding in equity by a judgment creditor to subject the unpaid subscriptions due to the corporation to the satisfaction of the judgment. The rule applicable to such cases is thus stated in a note to the case of Thompson v. Reno Savings Bank, 19 Nev. 103, 7 Pac. 68, 3 Am. St. Rep. 811: "While it is essential to the recovery by the corporation itself against the stockholders upon their contracts of subscription that the money should be due and payable, either because the contracts themselves have definitely fixed the times of payment, or because calls had been made by the governing body of the corporation, no such condition is imposed upon the creditors with regard to their right to proceed in equity against the stockholders. No previous call need be shown by the creditors, nor need they show that they have endeavored to induce the corporation to make a call as a prerequisite to a suit in equity to compel stockholders to pay their unpaid subscriptions."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

<sup>1</sup> Rehearing granted. For opinion on rehearing, see 103 Pac. 199.

In 2 Morawetz on Corp. § 821, it is said that, while it is true that subscriptions to stock are usually understood to be payable only when calls therefor are made by the corporate authorities, and that, "until this assessment or call has been made, the corporation cannot compel them to pay," nevertheless the rule is that "conditions of this character do not enter into the equitable obligation assumed by the shareholder towards creditors to contribute the company's capital as a fund for their security. In equity, therefore, the shareholders of an insolvent corporation are held to be unconditionally liable to its creditors to contribute the amount of capital stock subscribed by them, although their subscriptions were conditional, as between themselves and the company, upon a regular call or assessment by the board of directors." The right of a creditor to maintain an action of this character is settled in this state by the decision in Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 589, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158. See, also, Potter v. Dear, 95 Cal. 579, 30 Pac. 777; Welch v. Sargent, 127 Cal. 84, 59 Pac. 319; Walter v. Merced, 126 Cal. 586, 59 Pac. 136. The following decisions sustain the doctrine of the note in the American State Reports and of Morawetz; Marsh v. Burroughs, 1 Woods 468, Fed. Cas. No. 9,112; Holmes v. Sherwood (C. C.) 16 Fed. 725, 3 McCrary, 409; Crawford v. Rohrer, 59 Md. 599; Thompson v. Reno Savings Bank, 19 Nev. 171, 7 Pac. 870, 3 Am. St. Rep. 881, s. c. 19 Nev. 242, 9 Pac. 121, 3 Am. St. Rep. 883; Sanger v. Upton, 91 U. S. 60, 23 L. Ed. 220; Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 214, 25 L. Ed. 885. The fact that the Southwest Packing Company is an Arizona corporation is immaterial. The laws of Arizona on the subject are not shown, and the presumption is that they are not different from those of this state.

It is said that the court below in giving its decision relied upon the discussion of this subject by Justice Smith of the District Court of Appeal of the Second District in the case of Turner v. Fidelity Loan Concern, 2 Cal. App. 136, 83 Pac. 62, 70. So far as that case refers to this subject, it was not a decision of the court. Allen, J., concurred in the opinion. Presiding Justice Gray concurred specially, and withheld his approval from the portion here referred to. In denying a petition for a rehearing in this court in that case this court took occasion to say that the portions of the opinion of Justice Smith which are here relied on did not constitute the law of the case. Two justices of that court cannot render a judgment. In so far as that opinion appears to sanction the doctrine that an action of this character cannot be maintained until after a demand has been made upon the directors that they should levy an assessment, and the refusal by them to do so, it must be disregarded.

It may be observed further, however, that in all such cases, even if we concede that an assessment or call of some character is a proceeding which the stockholders may insist upon, the only effect of this concession would be that the court in equity, after it had obtained jurisdiction of the defendants, would have authority to make whatever call the law should require in that behalf, and it could thereupon order the respective stockholders to pay into court such amount as it should find necessary to satisfy the demands of the complainants. This order would be a sufficient call to satisfy all that is required by the law in this particular.

The decision in Union Savings Bank v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 702, 79 Pac. 441, to the effect that a cause of action does not arise upon a stock subscription liability until after a call has been made, and that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until there has been such call, has no application to the case. That was an action by the corporation itself to recover upon a call or assessment, and it was the statutory rights of the corporation which were under consideration, not the rights of creditors in a suit in equity to subject the assets of the corporation to their claim by way of a creditor's bill. This applies to the other cases cited by the respondents to the same effect as the Leiter Case. They do not in any respect affect the doctrine that a creditor may pursue his remedy in a court of equity without first attempting to induce the corporation to issue and enforce assessments.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

(156 Cal. 13)

FANCHER v. FANCHER et al. (Sac. 1,516.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 456*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

The court, in construing a will, must ascertain the intention of testator from his language, and the words used must be given their natural significance, unless it appears that they were used with some other meaning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 974; Dec. Dig. § 456.*]

2. WILLS (§ 466*)—CONSTRUCTION—MEANING OF WORDS—"MONUMENT."

A testator, who sets apart a specified sum from his estate for funeral expenses and proper interment of his remains and a suitable monument to his memory, and requests that his remains be buried on a designated ranch, does not authorize the executors to use a part of the fund for the erection of a free library as a memorial; the word "monument" being used in its natural sense as meaning a shaft, or any structure placed over a tomb or at a grave, and not in its applied sense as meaning a reminder taking any form.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 983; Dec. Dig. § 466.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4576.]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 109*)—CONSTRUCTION—POWERS OF EXECUTORS.

A testator, who sets apart a specified sum for funeral expenses and proper interment of his remains and a suitable monument to his memory, etc., gives to the executors discretion in the selection of the monument, its form and style, with reference to the amount set apart for the purpose, and the full amount of the fund, or such part as the executors deem fit, may be expended in the erection of a monument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 435-447; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Jonathan W. Fancher, Jr., against Lee R. Fancher and another, executors of George H. Fancher, deceased. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Ben Berry, for appellant. J. K. Law, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This cause was formerly heard and decided in department. A rehearing having been granted, and the cause having been heard by the court in bank, the department opinion is hereby reaffirmed and adopted. That opinion is as follows:

"The complaint charged that the executors, as trustees of a fund under the will of the deceased, purposed to make an improper use of the fund, and prayed the court to restrain them from so doing, and to direct the proper distribution of the moneys of the trust. The controversy grew out of the following undisputed facts: George Hicks Fancher died testate, leaving an estate of the value of about $500,000. Clauses 14 and 15 of his will are as follows: 'I set apart from my estate for my funeral expenses and proper interment of my remains and a suitable monument to my memory twenty-five thousand dollars. It is my request to have my remains buried on my Bear creek ranch in township seven south, range fifteen east, Mount Diablo meridian.' The body of the deceased was buried upon his ranch as requested. The executors proposed to expend the sum of about $2,000 in the erection of a granite monument at his tomb, and to use the remainder of the fund, about $20,000, in the construction of a building in the city of Merced, which building was to be dedicated to the purposes of a public library. Upon a tablet appropriately placed in said building was to be inscribed 'George H. Fancher Memorial Free Library.' The trial court held that the devotion of the funds to this purpose was within the purview of the trust created by the will, and gave judgment accordingly.

"Appellant contends that the will discloses that the testator's intent was that the monument to his memory should take the form of a memorial shaft, column, or similar structure marking the grave of the deceased, and that the devotion of any of the funds to the purpose of a library building, or for the erection of any other memorial building, was a use wholly beside the testator's intent. In this, as in all other matters pertaining to the construction of a will, the testator's intent is to be derived from his language, and the words employed are to be given their natural significance, unless it be made to appear that they were employed with some other meaning. Looking to the terms of this will, the testator desired that his remains should be buried upon his ranch, and his request that this should be done has been complied with. He left the fund of $25,000 to be used by his executors for funeral expenses for the proper interment of his remains, and for a suitable monument to his memory. There is nothing in this language to indicate that the testator used the word 'monument' in any other than its natural and specific meaning, which is that of 'a pillar, statue, shaft, or any structure placed over a tomb or at a grave.' Standard Dic. In its applied sense a monument, being 'a reminder' may take any form. Napoleon's battles are a monument to his memory. Horace by his poetry 'built himself a monument more enduring than brass,' and Sir Christopher Wren in his oft-quoted epitaph, 'Si Monumentum Requiritur, Circumspice,' declares St.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Paul's cathedral to be his monument. Yet, as suggested by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island in Re Ogden, 25 R. I. 373, 55 Atl. 933, if one were to say that he had seen Napoleon's or Horace's or Wren's monument, the mind would call up some memorial shaft or column, and not the victories of one, the poetry of another, or the cathedral of which the third was the architect. So it is said in Society of Cincinnati, 154 Pa. 621, 26 Atl. 647, a monument may take the shape of a memorial hall or other building, but that is not the general sense of the word, and will not be presumed to be its meaning.

"In Re Ogden, supra, the testator left to the town of North Providence $5,000 'to erect a monument to the memory of the soldiers and sailors who fell or died in the late war, enlisting from this part of the town, and my desire is that the monument be erected at the junction of Olney and Fruit Hill avenues in said town, on a triangular piece of land thereat located.' It was proposed there to use the money for the erection of a memorial building. The court held that such a structure was not permissible; that it was not within the natural meaning of the bequest, and involved a strained and forced construction of the language, saying: 'To ascertain the written expression a court does not look so much to the etymological scope of a word as to its common meaning and particular use. The word 'monument' in common usage, when it relates to a memorial for the dead, means a shaft, column, or some structure more imposing than a mere gravestone. If it were said that a monument had been erected to the memory of one who had died, the natural and immediate conception would be that which we have just stated. * * * It may be said that the names and services of soldiers can be as well preserved on the walls of a building as on the sides of a monument. This is true, but would one naturally think that a building was intended by a provision for a monument?' In the case at bar there is nothing to indicate that the testator used the word in any applied or figurative sense, and there is much to indicate that he did not. The juxtaposition of the phrase, the devotion of the single sum of money to the threefold purposes of paying funeral expenses, of proper interment of his remains, and of erecting a suitable monument to his memory, indicate that the monument which he contemplated was one to mark the site of his tomb. He did not design that it should take the form of a charity to be named after him. A public hall, library, hospital, may all be memorials, and a memorial may be a monument, but, saying in a figurative sense, the converse is not true. By a monument is not understood a memorial building. 'Suitable' as here used gives play to discretion upon the part of the executors in the selection of the monument, its form and style, with reference to the amount of money set apart for the purpose. Appeal of Bainbridge, 97 Pa. 482. In thus deciding as we do that a memorial building is without the purview of the testator's bequest, it is not intended that this discretion so vested in the executors is in any other way limited. The full amount of the fund devoted to the purpose, or such part as they deem fit, may be expended in the erection of a monument to the memory of the deceased. It is held merely that the erection of a public building is not within the intent of the testator as expressed in his will."

For the aforesaid reasons, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter its judgment in accordance with the foregoing.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

155 Cal. 373

PEOPLE ex rel. CHAPMAN v. SACRAMENTO DRAINAGE DIST. et al.

(Sac. 1,634.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 24*)—POWERS OF LEGISLATURE—TAX ON SPECIFIC LANDS IN PROPORTION TO BENEFITS OF WORK DONE.

The Legislature has the undoubted power, in a proper case, to impose a burden in the nature of a tax on specific lands in proportion to the estimated special benefits which they will receive from work done, though to sustain such a law it must appear that the character of the work is such that its performance confers some general benefit on the public, as well as private benefit on the landowner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

2. DRAINS (§ 68*)—RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS—IMPROVEMENTS JUSTIFYING TAX ON SPECIFIC PROPERTY.

The improvements contemplated in the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District for the purpose of reclaiming swamp and overflowed lands throughout certain counties, are of such a character as to confer a general benefit on the public, as well as private benefit on the landowners, so as to justify a tax on specific lands in proportion to the estimated special benefits received from the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. DRAINS (§ 5*)—RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS—POWER OF STATE—EXTENT OF POWER OF STATE.

So complete is the power of the state over swamp and overflowed lands that its power to provide for reclamation is not limited to those lands the title to which was acquired under the Arkansas act, but exists as to all such lands in the state, even if title was derived from a Spanish or Mexican grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 90*)—DRAINAGE DISTRICTS—CHARACTER AS MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—CREATION BY SPECIAL LAWS—"CORPORATION ORGANIZED FOR MUNICIPAL PURPOSES."

The "Sacramento Drainage District," created by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands throughout certain counties, is not a "corporation organized for municipal purposes" within Const. art. 11, § 6, which forbids the creation of such corporations by special laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 100; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1622, 1623.]

5. STATUTES (§ 71*)—UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION OF GENERAL LAWS.

The act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands throughout certain counties, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring laws of a general nature to have a uniform operation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 74; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

6. STATUTES (§ 76*)—SPECIAL LAWS—NECESSITY.

Nor does such act, though a special act, violate Const. art. 4, § 25, forbidding special laws where a general law can be made applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 78; Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 45*)—SPECIAL LAWS—NECESSITY—DETERMINATION BY LEGISLATURE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

There must be a clear showing on the face of a law itself that a special act is not required before a court will interfere with the determination of the Legislature as to its necessity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 42; Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 58*)—CONDEMNATION FOR NOVELTY OF LEGISLATION.

The fact that legislation is novel demands that it be scrutinized with special care, but does not dictate its condemnation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

9. NAVIGABLE WATERS (§ 12*)—IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS—ASSESSMENT OF ADJACENT LAND FOR BENEFITS.

Though it is usual for the state to pay the expense of improving the channels of navigable rivers, it may impose an assessment on adjacent lands specially benefited, as is done by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

10. STATUTES (§ 60*)—DETERMINATION OF VALIDITY—QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

The power to legislate, and not the propriety of legislation, is the only question for determination in considering the validity of a statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

11. STATUTES (§ 126*)—EXPRESSION IN TITLE OF SUBJECT OF ACT—CONSIDERATION OF QUESTION IN QUO WARRANTO.

Where inquiry is made in quo warranto brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 803, as to the validity of an act depending on whether it embraces a subject not contained in its title, and the legitimate subject-matter of investigation is the usurpation of an office or franchise, it is only in the event that the unexpressed provision, or provisions, may be essential to the law itself, that it becomes material to consider the question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 195; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

12. STATUTES (§ 105*)—SUBJECTS AND TITLES OF ACTS—PURPOSE OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRICTIONS.

The purpose of Const. art. 4, § 24, declaring that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, was not to hamper legislation, but to check and prevent deception therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 117, 118; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

13. STATUTES (§ 123*)—SUBJECTS AND TITLE OF ACT RELATING TO DRAINAGE.

The act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), entitled "An act to create a drainage district to be called 'Sacramento Drainage District,' to promote drainage therein; to provide for the election and appointment of officers of said drainage district; defining the powers, duties and compensations of such officers and providing for the creation, division and management of reclamation, swamp land, levee, drainage and protection districts within said Sacramento Drainage District, and providing for levying and collecting assessments upon the lands within said drainage district," is broad enough to disclose that its general purpose is to provide a scheme for the betterment of the lands lying within the described area, and the subject-matter of the benefits which might accrue to the land in the event of the rectification and deepening of river channels was subordinate, germane to, and within the general purpose of the title, and did not call for express mention therein, and hence the act does not violate Const. art. 4, § 24, because the title does not expressly mention such subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 180; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

14. STATUTES (§ 125*)—SUBJECTS AND TITLE OF ACT RELATING TO DRAINAGE.

The creation of the board of river control is not only within the purpose, but within the very title, of the act, and the powers conferred on the officers are in legitimate aid of its general purpose, and as to these subjects there is no violation of such section of the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 189; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

15. STATUTES (§ 64*)—ACT CREATING DRAINAGE DISTRICT—VALIDITY AS AFFECTED BY CONFERRING EXCESSIVE POWER ON OFFICERS.

If the power conferred on the officers as to some specific matter by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District, is excessive, it would not tend to destroy the law as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 61; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

16. DRAINS (§ 16*)—POWER OF LEGISLATURE OVER DRAINAGE DISTRICTS.

The Legislature, with due regard to vested rights, has power to abolish drainage districts and create a board of commissioners to manage future works of reclamation, and that it did less than this by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District, by conferring on such a board supervisory control of districts, while continuing their existence, is but an exercise by it of its plenary power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

17. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*)—ACT CREATING DRAINAGE DISTRICT—PRESUMPTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Where the Legislature has itself spoken in the creation of a drainage district, such as the Sacramento Drainage District, by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), and where its determination may be deemed to depend on a question of fact, it is conclusively presumed that it took evidence, and the decision which it reached is not subject to review by the courts, which will confine themselves exclusively to questions appearing on the face of the statute itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

18. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 290*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—EQUALIZATION OF ASSESSMENTS FOR DRAINAGE.

Though by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District, the board of commissioners, in equalizing assessments for benefits, hears complaints and corrects errors, and its determination is declared to be final and may therefore be said to act in this respect judicially, the act does not either create a court or confer judicial powers on executive and judicial officers, in violation of Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 5, and as against a fraudulent exercise of its power recourse may be had to the courts, the requirement of due process of law is satisfied in the creation of such tribunal with the powers conferred on it to hear and correct errors and abuses, on reasonable notice to the property owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 875; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

19. DRAINS (§ 17*)—ASSESSMENTS OF BENEFITS—DISQUALIFICATION OF COMMISSIONERS TO ACT.

The members of the board of drainage commissioners, under the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District, are apportioned amongst the counties embraced in the territory and are elected by the owners of real property within the district; each owner being entitled to cast one vote for each dollar's worth of property. Held, that the members of the board, as thus constituted, were not disqualified to act as a tribunal to hear objections to an assessment for benefits because they are landowners within the district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

20. DRAINS (§ 67*)—DOUBLE TAXATION—ASSESSMENT FOR DRAINAGE BENEFITS.

Special assessments for benefits in a drainage district do not constitute a double tax on the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. § 73; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

21. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 121*)—OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS—ACT CREATING DRAINAGE DISTRICT.

As against an objection that the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District, impairs the obligation of existing contracts, it is a sufficient answer that the act does not in terms attempt to do so, and that the state has an undoubted right to vary its plans for reclaiming lands, and in so doing to create new or different agents or mandatories, as was done in this case, and if in the operation of its new laws an attempt is made to impair vested rights, the attempt, on proper showing before a court, would be held nugatory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 309; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

22. ELECTIONS (§ 60*)—ELECTION OF COMMISSIONERS OF DRAINAGE DISTRICT—PROPERTY QUALIFICATION OF VOTER.

The requirement by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), creating the Sacramento Drainage District, of a property qualification for a voter in the election of drainage commissioners, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 24, declaring that no such qualifications shall ever be required for any person to vote or hold office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Quo warranto by the People, on the relation of one Chapman, against the Sacramento Drainage District and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston, W. H. Grant, and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for appellant. Devlin & Devlin and George & Dinsdale, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is a proceeding in quo warranto, brought under section 803, Code Civ. Proc. That section authorizes the Attorney General in the name of the people of the state, upon his own initiative, or upon that of a private person, to prosecute an action against any person "who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises any public office, civil or military, or any franchise within this state."

In 1905 (St. 1905, p. 443, c. 368), the Legislature passed an act entitled "An act to create a drainage district to be called 'Sacramento Drainage District,' to promote drainage therein; to provide for the election and appointment of officers of said drainage district; defining the powers, duties and compensations of such officers and providing for the creation, division and management of reclamation, swamp land, levee, drainage and protection districts within said Sacramento Drainage District, and providing for levying and collecting assessments upon the lands within said drainage district." The provisions of this act, so far as material to the present consideration are as follows: The Legislature created a drainage district, defining the boundaries thereof and the lands embraced therein. These lands are situated in the counties of Sacramento, San Joaquin, Solano, Yolo, Colusa, Sutter, Yuba, Placer, Glenn, and Butte, and this territory embraces in part, lands already organized into reclamation, drainage, swamp land, or levee districts. The act provides for the selection of drainage commissioners, nine in number, apportioned amongst the above-named counties. These commissioners are to be elected by the owners of real property within the district; each owner being entitled to cast one vote for each dollar's worth of property. Provisions are made for the conduct of these elections and the filling of vacancies which may arise in the board. With other powers, the board of drainage commissioners is given supervisory control over the proposed work of reclamation districts within the limits of the drainage district, is empowered "to approve or disapprove any plan of reclamation in any reclamation district, to compel the construction and maintenance of necessary reclamation works in reclamation districts, to appoint trustees of reclamation districts in case of vacancies, and in general, to do all other acts and things necessary or requisite for the full exercise of their powers, or necessary for the promotion of the reclamation of lands within the drainage district." In this connection power is expressly conferred "to supervise and control the formation, consolidation or division of reclamation districts within said drainage district." When necessary, the board may levy an assessment upon the lands within the district, and in the levying of such assessment the board is required to make an estimate of the sum necessary. It is then to appoint three disinterested persons as assessors. These assessors are to assess upon the land within the drainage district the sum so estimated by the board of drainage commissioners, and shall "apportion the same according to the benefits that will accrue to each tract of land in said district respectively by reason of the expenditure of said sums of money." The assessors are required to make their lists, describing the tracts of land assessed, with the names of the owners, if known, and the amount assessed against each tract. These lists are to be filed with the secretary of the board of drainage commissioners, who in turn shall forward to the county treasurer of each county the assessment list for such county, which shall be open to inspection by the public. Thereupon the board of drainage commissioners is to appoint a time and place for each county, when and where it will meet for the purpose of hearing objections to the assessments. Notice is to be given by publication for two weeks in a newspaper in the county published nearest to the district. Any person believing himself to be injured by the assessment may present his grounds of objection thereto, and at its meeting the board of drainage commissioners shall hear the evidence offered touching the correctness or equity of such assessment, "and may modify or amend the same, and the decision of said board of drainage commissioners shall be final, and thereafter said assessment list shall be conclusive evidence that the said assessment has been apportioned according to the benefits that will accrue to each tract of land in said district, and such assessment shall constitute a lien upon the lands so assessed." After thus equalizing the assessment, the moneys called for thereunder are to be paid into the county treasury in installments in such amounts and at such times as the board shall by order direct; 60 days being allowed for payment after such order. The board of drainage commissioners is authorized to begin suit in the superior court of the county where the land is situated for the collection of delinquent and unpaid assessments, and for the foreclosure of the lien upon the property in enforcement of such collection.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

▲ board known as the "Board of River

Control" is also created. This board consists of two members, appointed by the Governor of the state, one of whom is to be the president of the board of drainage commissioners, and the other some competent civil engineer. The duties of the board of river control are, for the most part, advisory. This board has supervision of all levees and canals intended to do duty in disposing of flood waters. It is empowered to acquire from private owners or from reclamation, swamp land, or other districts, such rights of way, easements, and property as may be necessary for its purposes. It is the duty of the board to advise and consult with such board or officers as may be appointed by the government of the United States, to devise and construct works for the improvement and rectification of the channels of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries. It is its duty also to examine all plans and specifications which may be prepared or adopted for the construction of the works for the controlling of flood waters or improvement of the channels of the rivers and their tributaries, and to submit a copy of all such plans and specifications to the state board of examiners for the latter's investigation and consideration. When called upon, the board is to confer and advise with the state board of examiners upon the matter of these plans.

Within six months after the organization of the board of drainage commissioners, this board is to appoint a committee of three persons to act in conjunction with a similar committee appointed by the Governor of the state of California to determine the proportion to be borne by said district and state, respectively, of the cost of constructing and completing either the work recommended in the report of certain named engineers, or the work called for by such other plan as shall be approved by the state board of examiners. When this cost has been apportioned, and the apportionment approved by the board of drainage commissioners, the latter shall appoint three assessors—disinterested persons—who, in the manner above outlined, shall proceed to assess upon the lands within the drainage district the sum apportioned against said district as its proportion of the cost of the work. All the proceedings for the levying, equalizing, and collecting of such assessment are prescribed as above set forth. It is provided, however, that no part of this assessment shall be called in or collected "until the state of California and the government of the United States, or one of them, shall have made an appropriation, or other legal provision, for the payment of the balance of the sum to be expended jointly with said district in performing the work according to the plans adopted, and in case payment of said sum by the state or by the United States shall not be provided for within five years from the time said assessment shall have been levied, said assessments shall become void, and the lien thereof upon the lands shall expire." Provisions then follow for the formation of new reclamation districts within the area of the drainage district, under the supervision and control of the drainage commissioners, and for the consolidation of existing districts, under like supervision and control. And, finally, it is provided that until legal provision has been made by the state of California or the government of the United States, for the payment of such proportion of the cost of the work as may be charged to them, or either of them, under the adopted plan, the powers of the board of drainage commissioners conferred by the act are suspended, excepting that the board may cause to be levied and collected an assessment, not exceeding the sum of $50,000, to be used in the furtherance of the general plan, and the powers of all boards of supervisors, trustees of reclamation and other districts are continued in force until the general powers of the drainage commissioners shall have become fully effective.

The purpose and scope of the act are clearly discernible from a reading of it. The causes which led to its enactment form a part of the history of the state. Riparian, or in proximity, to the great San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers, are vast tracts of low-lying lands, some strictly swamp lands, others subject to overflow at the usual stages of high water, others liable to inundation in times of extraordinary freshet, but all requiring the expenditure of money in the construction of levees, drainage ditches, and pumping plants for their reclamation and subjection to economic use. Some of these lands, and indeed some embraced within the drainage district thus created, were acquired by the state of California from the United States under the Arkansas act, and in turn were sold into private ownership by the state. Others came into the hands of private owners by mesne conveyances; the original source of such titles being the government of Spain or Mexico, whose grants were confirmed by the United States. Aside from any duty which it may be conceived that the state of California owed to the United States because of the trust upon which it took the lands under the Arkansas act, it was clearly desirable and beneficial to the state that all of these lands should be reclaimed for purposes of husbandry. This improvement would add great wealth to the state, and this improvement therefore would result in a public benefit. Upon the other hand, the specific lands thus reclaimed would be especially benefited by their enhanced and assured productiveness, and it was proper that such lands should bear the cost of the work of reclamation proportioned to the benefits which they would thus receive. Such being the condition, levee districts, drainage districts, and reclamation districts came into existence, some by special legislative enactment, others under general and permissive laws. One and all these laws had in view the same end—the reclamation of the lands from the excess of waters which poured upon them, and the opening of them to uses otherwise impossible, with the increase in settlement, population, and general prosperity which inevitably would follow. In time two impeding difficulties came to be perceived: (1) That, because of the great number of such small districts, each operated independently and under no general plan for the good of all, much money and labor were wasted. Since there was no common and harmonious plan of reclamation, one district frequently worked in antagonism to another. The operations or the neglect of one district might tend to imperil the existence of another; while the extravagant use of money, made necessary because of the lack of concerted action and because each district was obliged to fight not alone the common enemy—the water—but perhaps equally an adjoining district, put burdens upon many of the districts which soon became intolerable, with the result that the districts themselves were sometimes abandoned, and their works fell into disrepair and disuse. (2) Owing to the sediment and debris settling upon the bottoms of these rivers, the plane of their water levels was heightened, to the increased endangerment of the adjacent lands. In times of flood it became more and more difficult for these rivers to carry and discharge their waters through the natural channels, and the condition soon became a matter of state and national concern. The government of the United States primarily, and of the state secondarily, having in them vested the exclusive management and control of navigable waters, were confronted with the corresponding duty of preserving the two great inland water highways of the state. The accomplishment of this called for the deepening and the rectification of the river channels, matters exclusively of federal or state cognizance. In turn, however, such deepening and rectification, by enabling the rivers successfully to carry and dispose of their flood waters, would greatly facilitate the labor of reclamation imposed upon the owners of the adjacent lands. Thus, in outline, is presented the situation with which the state was confronted. Itself, or the federal government, or both, would take charge of the work of widening, deepening, and straightening the river channels. Itself, or the federal government, or both, would provide funds for the payment of this work. Upon the other hand, the lands adjacent to the rivers would be greatly and directly benefited by this work, and should be subject to special assessment to pay for the special benefit thus received. Such being the situation, it was deemed expedient by the state to form one large district, to the end that the commissioners of such district might by exercising supervisory control over the smaller districts, and by adopting one general plan of reclamation, economize in expenditures, save the extravagant waste of moneys which had been a part of their past history, and by a general assessment over a large area materially lessen, perhaps, the burden which the landowners might otherwise be called upon to bear. These were the obvious reasons actuating the Legislature in formulating the scheme in the act under consideration. It is to be considered whether the expression which they gave to their plan does violence to the Constitution.

1. The question of the power of the Legislature, in a proper case, to impose a burden in the nature of a tax upon specific lands, in proportion to the estimated special benefits which those lands will receive from the work done, may not be doubted. The limitation upon its power, it is well settled, is this: That to sustain such a law it must appear that the character of the work is such that its performance confers some general benefit on the public as well as a private benefit on the landowner; and that the improvements here contemplated are of such character has long been definitely settled. So complete is the power of the state over swamp and overflowed lands that its power to provide for reclamation of them is not limited to those lands the title to which was acquired under the Arkansas act; but it exists as to all swamp and overflowed lands in the state, even if the title was derived from a Spanish or Mexican grant. Hagar v. Yolo Co., 47 Cal. 222; Hagar v. Rec. Dist., 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569; Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 163, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369.

2. The act does no violence to article 1, § 11, nor to article 4, § 25, nor to article 11, § 6, of the Constitution of the state. That the district here organized, if it be considered a corporation at all, is not a corporation organized for municipal purposes within the contemplation of article 11, § 6, of the Constitution, must be taken as well settled. People v. Reclamation District 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016; People v. Levee District No. 6, 131 Cal. 30, 63 Pac. 676; Reclamation District v. County of Sacramento, 134 Cal. 477, 66 Pac. 668. It is unnecessary to repeat the reasons set forth in the decisions in those cases by which the conclusion there reached was expressed, to the effect that such districts are, in strictness, not corporations at all, but rather governmental agencies to carry out a specific purpose; the agency ceasing with the accomplishment of the purpose. But, additionally, it may be said that the likeness of these agencies to corporations is superficial, and that the similitude—for it is no more than this—ceases if consideration be paid to the fact that the state could accomplish this very work without organizing a district as such at all, and without giving the landowners within the district any voice in the selection of the managers or trustees. Thus it would be perfectly legal and competent for the Legislature, delimiting a tract of land, itself to appoint a commissioner or commissioners to perform all of the functions which, under the existing schemes, are performed by the trustees and the assessors. In fact, historically, such was the original method adopted when, in the reign of Henry VIII, the first statute was passed providing for the construction of sewers, drains, and other improvements designed to reclaim swamp lands (St. 23 Hen. VIII, c. 5, par. 1 [1531]), and such is the method still adopted in many of the states of this nation. It is in accord with the progressive spirit of our government to give to the people, or any part of them, the largest possible control in matters peculiarly affecting them and their interests. It is a concession to this spirit, and not the compulsion of the law, which prompts the Legislature to give the landowners so large a voice in the control of such affairs.

Nor, while a special act, is the law obnoxious to the other sections of the Constitution above cited. The considerations dictating the necessities of a special law are plain as above set forth. It would require a clear showing upon the face of the law itself that a special act was not required, before a court would interfere with the determination of a co-ordinate branch of the government upon this subject, and, generally, as is said in People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66, the determination of such a matter "depends upon questions of fact which this court has no means of investigating, and upon the solution of which it would not attempt to substitute its judgment in place of that of the Legislature."

3. It is argued with much earnestness that no such law as this has heretofore ever been found upon the statute books, and that it should be condemned as unconstitutional, as being a covert attempt upon the part of the state, under the guise of assessment for special benefit, to force upon the unfortunate landowners the cost of the work for which alone the sovereign state should pay—the work of the improving of the channels of its navigable rivers. The fact that legislation is novel demands of a court that it be scrutinized with exceptional care; but it does not dictate its condemnation. It is true that the protection and development of its harbors and waterways (subject always to the paramount right of the United States) are matters of state consideration and control. It is true also that usually, since the work is for the general benefit of all of the people, the expense is met by the state itself; but it does not herefrom follow that in every case it is the legal duty of the state so to bear the burden. Whenever the Legislature has spoken, the question before the court is not the propriety of its legislation, but its power to legislate. The harbor of San Francisco is benefited for purposes of navigation and commerce by a sea wall along the water front. At the same time it will not be questioned that the lands held in private ownership in close proximity to such sea wall, and which without such sea wall would be inundated "water lots," are especially benefited by this harbor work. The state, if it elects, may pay all the cost; but it will not be denied that the state has the power to impose upon the adjacent lands specially benefited by the work an assessment in proportion to such benefits, to defray a part of the cost. Or, again, in the matter of governmental power and control, the water highways of the state do not differ from the land highways. The power of the state to exact payment for the improvement of its streets from the owners of land adjacent thereto, in proportion to the benefits which their lands receive, is unquestionable and unquestioned. Legislation, which in like manner exacts similar contribution from lands adjacent to the inland waterways for like considerations, stand upon the same ground, and for the same reason may not be successfully assailed. The two classes of legislation are congeneric and have their origin and draw their inspiration from the same power and source—the governmental power of the state to tax, and to especially tax for a public purpose, where the work to be performed will confer a special benefit upon the property of the particular landowner, as distinguished from the general good which it will work to all.

4. It is urged the act does violence to article 4, § 24, of the Constitution, in embracing more than one subject-matter and in not embracing in its title the principal subject-matter. The penalty which the Constitution imposes upon such legislation is to make void the matter which is not expressed in the title. This inquiry being in quo warranto, and the legitimate subject-matter of investigation being the usurpation by defendants into an office or franchise, it may be that the act contains provisions not germane to nor fairly embraced within the subject-matter of the title; but only in the event that such an unexpressed provision or provisions may be essential to the existence to the law itself does it become material to this consideration. If not fatal to the life of the act, such provisions fall, without destruction of the act itself, and their consideration and discussion would have no proper place upon this appeal. The title of the act has been quoted above. It is contended that this title masks, conceals, indeed, omits reference to the principal purpose of the act, which is the improvement of the river channels, and the throwing of the burden of the cost of such improvement upon the private landowner. It may be conceded that the title of the act contains no suggestion that in the promotion of drainage and reclamation of the lands within the district the improvement of the river channels is contemplated; but the title is broad enough in its language to disclose that the general purpose of the act is to provide a scheme for the betterment of the lands lying within the described area. Such aspects of the rectification and improvement of the river channels as are set forth in the act, if falling within and germane to the general purpose announced by the title, did not require expression in that title. The two great purposes of the act, as above suggested, are, first, to bring into harmony under one general board of control the plans and work of existing districts and of the other lands not in them embraced. All this is quite independent of the matter of the improvement of the river channel. The second purpose is contingent upon the action of the state or federal government. It contemplates—still for the general purpose of the promotion of the reclamation of the lands—that it shall be determined what benefit those lands will receive, if and when the government shall undertake this work. It was not the purpose of the constitutional provision here invoked to hamper legislation, but to check and prevent deceptive legislation (Cooley, Const. Lim. [6th Ed.] p. 175; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 638, 29 Pac. 251; Law v. San Francisco, 144 Cal. 388, 77 Pac. 1014; Beach v. Von Detten, 139 Cal. 462, 73 Pac. 187; People v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 61 Pac. 86), and we hold that the subject-matter of the benefits which might accrue to the land in the event of the rectification and deepening of the river channels was subordinate, germane to, and within the general purpose of the title, and did not call for express mention in that title.

The other considerations presented by appellant as showing that the body of the act contains a multiplicity of subjects foreign to its title may be disposed of collectively. From what has been said, it appears that the creation of the board of river control is not only within the purpose, but within the very title, of the act. The other objections go to the powers conferred upon the officers, and it may be seen that these powers are in legitimate aid of the general purpose of the act. If it should hereafter be found that as to some specific matter excessive power had been conferred, it would be so decreed; but the decision would not tend to destroy the law as a whole. Upon the general subject-matter of the management and control over the existing districts, vested in the board of commissioners of the district here created, it may be suggested that it was within the unquestioned power of the Legislature, with due regard to vested rights, to have put out of existence all of these districts, and, having done so, to have created a board of commissioners to manage future works of reclamation. That it has done less than this, by conferring upon such a board supervisory control of these districts, while continuing their existence, is but an exercise by the Legislature of less than its plenary power.

5. It is argued that the act in question works a taking of the landowner's property without due process of law. Herein it is insisted: (a) That the landowner was denied a hearing to which he was entitled upon the question of the inclusion or exclusion of his land; (b) that an illegal and unconstitutional tribunal was created to pass upon and determine the question of the benefits which his land, so improperly included, may receive, in violation of article 6, §§ 1 and 5, of the Constitution.

(a) Where the Legislature has itself spoken in the creation of a district such as this, and where the legislative determination may be deemed to depend upon a question of fact, it is conclusively presumed that the Legislature took evidence in its determination, and the decision which it has reached will not be subject to review by the courts. The latter will confine themselves exclusively to questions appearing upon the face of the statute itself. Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 27 Pac. 1089, 14 L. R. A. 459, 25 Am. St. Rep. 230; Lewis v. Colgan, 115 Cal. 529, 47 Pac. 357; Smith v. Mathews (Cal.).<sup>1</sup> Says Judge Cooley (Const. Lim. [6th Ed.] p. 220): "If evidence was required, it must be supposed that it was before the Legislature when the act was passed, and if any special finding was required to warrant the passage of the particular act, it would seem that the passage of the act itself might be held equivalent to such finding." This court has said, commenting upon this language: "This view seems to be sustained by the decisions of the highest courts of other states and is in harmony with the central idea of the Constitution in prescribing the independence and equality of the three great departments of the state." Stevenson v. Colgan, supra. Speaking directly upon this subject-matter, the Supreme Court of the United States has said (Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 174, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 69, 41 L. Ed. 369): "It has been held in this court that the Legislature has power to fix such a district for itself without any hearing as to benefits, for the purpose of assessing upon the lands within the district the cost of a local public improvement. The Legislature, when it fixes the district itself, is supposed to have made proper inquiry, and to have finally and conclusively determined the fact of the benefits to the land included in the district, and the citizen has no constitutional right to any other or further hearing upon that question. The right which he thereafter has is to a hearing upon the question of what is termed the apportionment of the tax, i. e., the amount of the tax which he is to pay."

(b) Upon the amount of the tax which the landowner is to pay, the scheme by which that amount is to be apportioned and assessed has been outlined above. It will be remembered that, after disinterested persons have made their assessment, a notice of the time and place of the sitting of the board of drainage commissioners for the purpose of equalizing the assessment is to be given, the board is to hear complaints and correct errors, and its determination is declared to be final. It is insisted that this either creates a court or confers judicial powers upon executive and administrative officers, in violation of the constitutional provision of article 6, §§ 1 and 5, of the Constitution. That the board sitting to equalize the assessments acts judicially must be conceded. The very purpose for which it sits is to act judicially for the correction of errors and abuses in the original assessment; but to say that for this reason the Legislature has attempted to create a court in violation of the Constitution is a proposition to which assent must be denied. Many acts, judicial in their nature, must of necessity be performed by the executive and administrative officers of the government. The decisions of such officers upon any controverted question, upon any question even in which there is play for discretion, are in their nature judicial; but because this is so, and necessarily so, it does not follow that they are usurping the exclusive functions of the courts of the land, and, if they are not doing so, the power which they exercise may not thus be questioned. City councils and boards of supervisors annually fix the rates which water consumers within their territories shall pay to the quasi public corporations furnishing such water. Here these boards are called upon to consider and decide controverted questions of fact of great moment and of much nicety. Their decrees fixing rates contain many of the elements of a judgment. They are binding determinations upon the water company upon the one hand and upon the consumer upon the other. Yet, the power of these boards to exercise such quasi judicial functions has been upheld. Upon this very subject the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Chief Justice Waite, has said: "Like every other tribunal established by the Legislature for such a purpose, their duties are judicial in their nature, and they are bound in morals and in law to exercise an honest judgment as to all matters submitted for their official determination. It is not to be presumed that they will act otherwise than according to this rule." Spring Valley Waterworks Co. v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 4 Sup. Ct. 48, 28 L. Ed. 173. And, after quoting this language, that same court, speaking of the power of the board of supervisors under the irrigation district laws to pass upon the question of benefits, says: "In that case the board was to fix the price of water, while in this it is to determine the fact of benefits to lands. The principle is the same in each case." And, in this connection, it is declared that such a board, having the power to hear and determine the question of benefits, is a proper and sufficient tribunal to satisfy the constitutional requirements of due process of law. Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 169, 17 Sup. Ct. 67, 41 L. Ed. 369. And so in Hagar v. Rec. Dist., 111 U. S. 701, 4 Sup. Ct. 663, 28 L. Ed. 569, where the same subject is under discussion, it is said: "But where a tax is levied on property not specifically but according to its value, to be ascertained by assessors appointed for that purpose upon such evidence as they may obtain, a different principle comes in. The officers in estimating the value act judicially, and in most of the states provision is made for the correction of errors committed by them, through boards of revision and equalization, sitting at designated periods provided by law to hear complaints respecting the justice of the assessments. The law, in prescribing the time when such complaints will be heard, gives all the notice required, and the proceeding by which the valuation is determined, though it may be followed, if the tax be not paid, by a sale of the delinquent's property, is due process of law." Against a fraudulent exercise of this power, recourse may, of course, be had to the courts. Irr. Dist. v. Tregoe, 88 Cal. 334, 26 Pac. 237. But, otherwise, the requirement of due process of law is satisfied in the creation of this tribunal, with the powers conferred upon it to hear and correct errors and abuses, upon reasonable notice to the property owner.

<sup>1</sup> Rehearing granted. For opinion on rehearing, see 103 Pac. 199.

6. The members of the board of drainage commissioners, as the board is constituted, are not disqualified by interest to act as a tribunal to hear objections to the assessment by reason of the fact that they are landowners within the district. Members of the boards of supervisors and of city councils, in adjusting water rates, are themselves consumers, and to that extent have an interest in the subject-matter of their decision; but they are not therefore disqualified. The principle is the same in this case. Hamilton, Special Assessments, 138; Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 24 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195.

7. Nor is there a double tax upon the land. The special assessment for benefits is upon the theory that, to the amount of such assessment, the land is directly benefited. Such general tax as the land may pay to the state stands upon an entirely different foundation. The owner of land fronting upon a street, who is assessed for special benefits for the street work, does not suffer double taxation when that land is assessed, and is again subject to general tax by the city or state, even though a portion of the money so derived should go to the maintenance of the highway in front of his property.

8. The act in terms does not attempt to impair the obligation of existing contracts. The state has the undoubted right to vary its plans for the reclamation of these lands, and in so doing to create new or different agents and mandatories. If in the operation of its new laws an attempt should be made to impair vested rights, the attempt, upon proper showing before a court, would unquestionably be held nugatory.

9. No violence is done by the act to the constitutional inhibition against requiring a property qualification for a voter. Const. art. 1, § 24. This objection is completely disposed of by People v. Rec. Dist. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016. The assessments are for local improvements, not for general purposes of taxation, and the Legislature permits the landowners to appoint their own agents. The method which it imposes upon the landowners in making the selection is wholly within its control; for, as has been said, it is not compelled to give the landowners any voice in that selection.

We have thus discussed all the points advanced upon appeal and pertinent to this consideration under quo warranto. The questions presented arise upon the rulings of the court in striking out portions of the petition and in sustaining a general demurrer thereto.

For the reasons above given, the rulings complained of were correct, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

The CHIEF JUSTICE, being a partner interested as a landowner within the boundaries of the Sacramento Drainage District, did not participate in the foregoing.

155 Cal. 808

PEOPLE v. BRADBURY. (Cr. 1,496.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1909.
Rehearing Denied July 30, 1909.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 93*)—REQUISITES.

The particular circumstances necessary to show a complete offense must be pleaded in the indictment charging the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 266-268; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

2. PERJURY (§ 24*)—INDICTMENT—SETTING OUT TESTIMONY.

An indictment for perjury which alleges the perjury in the exact language employed, or in its substance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

3. PERJURY (§ 24*)—INDICTMENT—"TO TELL."

An indictment for perjury which charges that accused falsely testified that he never went to a bank, and told the bank not to loan to a third person money to meet an obligation, etc., sets forth the perjurious matter as against the objection that it fails to name the bank officer to whom accused made the statement; for, though the words "to tell" import oral communication, they may be employed where the communication is by writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

4. PERJURY (§ 26*)—INDICTMENT—ASSIGNMENT OF PERJURY—SUFFICIENCY.

The assignment of perjury consists of an express contradiction of accused's statement on oath explained by innuendo, when necessary, and, where the statement charged as false is of a particular fact, it is sufficient in the averment to negative that fact, but, where the statement is general and the existence of a particular fact makes it false, that fact must be alleged positively.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. §§ 90-94; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

5. PERJURY (§ 26*)—INDICTMENT—ASSIGNMENT OF PERJURY—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment for perjury averring that accused falsely testified that he had never gone to a bank, and told the bank not to loan to a third person money to meet a certain obligation, and that accused had told the bank not to loan any money, is subject to special demurrer for failing to comply with Pen. Code, § 952, subd. 3, providing that the indictment must be direct, as to the particular circumstances of the offense charged, by alleging in the assignment of perjury the name of the bank officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

6. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 148*)—PERJURY—DEMURRER—QUESTIONS RAISED.

A demurrer to an indictment charging perjury on the grounds that it did not meet the requirements of Pen. Code, § 952, in that the indictment was not direct and certain as to the particular circumstances of the offense charged, in that it could not be determined whether a designated court was a tribunal having jurisdiction, and whether the oath was duly administered, and that the indictment did not meet the requirements of section 966, declaring that proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which perjury is assigned shall be made, did not raise the question whether the indictment sufficiently assigned perjury by an express contradiction of accused's statement on oath.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1032*)—APPEAL—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT.

One charged with perjury cannot for the first time on appeal attack the indictment on the ground that the assignment of perjury therein was insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2627; Dec. Dig. § 1032.*]

8. PERJURY (§ 23*)—INDICTMENT—ALLEGATION OF ADMINISTERING OATH TO ACCUSED.

An indictment for perjury which alleges that accused was duly sworn before the superior court in open court, that the evidence that he should give to the court should be the truth, etc., charges that accused was sworn to testify truly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

9. PERJURY (§ 22*)—INDICTMENT—ALLEGATION OF ADMINISTERING OATH TO ACCUSED.

Since Const. art. 6, § 14, declaring that the county clerks shall be ex-officio clerks of the courts of record for their respective counties, creates the office of clerk of the superior court, an indictment for perjury charging that the oath was administered to accused by a designated person who was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting deputy clerk of the superior court shows that the oath was administered by one authorized so to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. §§ 76-79; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—INVITED ERROR.

Accused cannot complain of an instruction given at his own request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3007-3010; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Accused cannot complain that instructions were confusing to the jury, where such confusion operated to his benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3160; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

12. PERJURY (§ 36*)—MATERIALITY OF TESTIMONY—QUESTION FOR COURT.

On a trial for perjury, whether the alleged perjured testimony was material is a question of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 133; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Accused on trial for perjury cannot complain of the conflict between an instruction submitting the materiality of the alleged false testimony and an instruction that the materiality of the testimony is for the court, since the conflict operated to his benefit, for if the jury were led to believe that they could decide on the materiality of the evidence, and erroneously decided that it was not material, accused would obtain an acquittal to which he was not entitled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3157, 3160; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

That the jury, under an erroneous instruction on a trial for perjury submitting to them the materiality of the perjured testimony, correctly decided that the testimony was material, furnishes no ground for a reversal of the conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3161; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

15. PERJURY (§ 29*)—PROOF AND VARIANCE.

An indictment for perjury charging that accused falsely testified that he never went to a designated bank, and told the bank not to loan money to a third person, etc., is sustained by proof that accused made such a request of the then president and of the then teller of the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. §§ 97-106; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

16. PERJURY (§ 32*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On the trial for perjury alleged to have been committed by giving false testimony on the trial of a civil action, the judgment roll in the civil action is admissible in evidence to show the pendency of the proceeding, the jurisdiction of the court, the giving of the testimony, and its materiality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Perjury, Cent. Dig. § 110; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

William Bradbury was convicted of perjury, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Cochrane and Richard P. Henshall, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Thos. P. Boyd, Dist. Atty., for the People.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

IIENSIHAW, J. Defendant was indicted, tried, and convicted of the crime of perjury. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The indictment charged that defendant falsely testified that he "never went to the Marin county bank and told said bank not to loan to J. S. McCue money to meet the obligation that said J. S. McCue would be owing to said William B. Bradbury on the 22d day of October, 1904; that he, the said William B. Bradbury, never told the said Marin county bank not to loan any money to J. S. McCue." The averment of the falsity of these declarations is charged as follows, omitting unnecessary matter: "That the said William B. Bradbury did tell said Marin county bank prior to said 22d day of October, 1904, not to loan any money to said J. S. McCue." A demurrer was interposed to this indictment, and under this demurrer it is argued that the indictment is insufficient in failing to conform to section 952, subd. 3, Pen. Code; that is to say, that it does not allege the particular circumstances which here are necessary to constitute a complete offense. That, where necessary to show a complete offense, the particular circumstances must be pleaded, is, of course, well settled. It is sufficient to refer to such cases as People v. Lee, 107 Cal. 477, 40 Pac. 754; People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 42 Pac. 894; People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 Pac. 15; People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 Pac. 170. Appellant in support of his demurrer argues, first, that the indictment insufficiently alleges the perjurious matter, in this: It avers that Bradbury denied "that he told the Marin county bank" not to loan money to McCue; that the verb "tell" carries the meaning of information or of request orally conveyed to an understanding mind; that a bank, whether a corporation or not, has no mind, and information can be conveyed to it only through some one or another of its officers; that it was necessary, therefore, in connection with this language, to have explained by innuendo the meaning of the language by naming the officer whom Bradbury told or of whom he made his request.

While in its more general use the verb "to tell" does import oral communication, yet, by well-accepted usage, it may be employed where the communication is by writing. "Tell: To recount, orally or in writing." Standard Dictionary. No more force inheres to the objection that the pleader was in error in not making more specific by innuendo the averment of the perjurious matter that defendant "told the Marin county bank." It is always a good pleading to allege the perjury in the exact language or in the substance of the language employed. So far, therefore, as concerns the mere setting forth of the perjurious matter, no demurrer for uncertainty can be taken, since the response of the pleader is that such was the language actually used. Moreover, it is a common practice to address a corporation by its name, and not by direct reference to any particular officer of it. A letter addressed to the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank "telling" them to do so and so would be the ordinary form of a business communication, and, if a witness falsely testified that he did not tell the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank so and so, the pleader in setting forth this perjurious matter would be required only to state the fact as it was, that the witness said that he did not tell the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank. Upon neither of these matters which we have so far considered can the demurrer be held well taken.

But there is another well-recognized principle applicable to the pleading of a perjury. This principle has to do, not with the averment of the perjurious matter which we have just considered, but with the assignment of perjury. The assignment of perjury consists of an express contradiction of the party's statement on oath, when necessary, explained by innuendo. That principle is this: That, if the statement charged as false is of a particular fact, it is sufficient in the averment to negative that fact. But if the statement is general, and the existence of a particular fact makes it false, that fact must be alleged positively. It is in this latter class of cases that the necessity of an averment by innuendo arises. "If the statement be general and the assignment as general in the negative—as if a man swear that he has paid all his debts, and the assignment be that he has not paid all his debts—this would be bad for want of certainty, as it would afford the defendant no information of what was intended to be proved; but the assignment must show in what respect, or in what instances, he has not done so." 2 Archibold's Cr. Pr. & Pl. p. 1737; U. S. v. Morgan, Morris (Iowa) 341, 41 Am. Dec. 234; 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 1303; 2 Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 917. Thus, if the perjurious matter in this case had been a statement by defendant that he had not asked any bank to refuse to loan McCue money, it would not be sufficient in the assignment of perjury to have alleged that in truth and in fact he had asked some bank. It would be necessary, further, for the enlightenment of the defendant to have specified the particular bank. The same principle is applicable to this pleading. Defendant was entitled, upon proper demurrer, to have had the pleading made more specific by naming to him the officer of the bank of whom he is said to have made this request. The force of this reasoning and of this rule becomes quite apparent, if an indictment be considered which charged the request as having been made of the Standard Oil Company, coupled with the averment that, in fact, the defendant did make the request of the Standard Oil Company. The agents of the Standard Oil Company are scattered throughout the states of the United States and in foreign countries as well.

Manifestly a defendant under proper demurrer directed to this point would be entitled to be informed whether he was charged with having made the request of an agent in China, in New York, in Texas, or in California, and who the particular agent was. In this respect, therefore, the indictment was obnoxious to a special demurrer for failure to comply with the requirements of section 952, subd. 3, Pen. Code. But the defendant did not direct his demurrer specifically to this matter. He did demur generally upon the ground that the indictment did not conform to the requirements of section 952, and he did demur upon the ground that the indictment was not direct and certain as to the particular circumstances of the offense charged. But in making his demurrer specific upon this point, as good pleading required him to do, he did not direct special or any attention to the matter here pressed for review. The specific grounds of demurrer were merely that the particular circumstances were insufficiently charged, in that it could not be determined (1) whether the superior court of Marin county was a competent tribunal having jurisdiction; and (2) whether the oath was administered according to law. The demurrer also alleges that the complaint does not substantially conform to the requirements of section 966 of the Penal Code, which, dealing with indictments for perjury, declares that "proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned" shall be alleged. But, under this head, the demurrer does not attempt to specify the particular respect in which the indictment fails. That such a special demurrer must be interposed, to the end that the court may be enlightened upon the precise matter on which error is predicated, we think too plain to call for discussion. It is so decided by the Supreme Court of Utah, under provisions of their Criminal Code, conforming in all substantial particulars to the language of our own. People v. Hill, 3 Utah, 334, 3 Pac. 75. Defendant, therefore, may not be permitted here in this court and for the first time to urge this ground of special objection never presented to the trial court. See, also, Tucker v. State, 114 Ga. 61, 39 S. E. 926.

The contention that the indictment is defective in not alleging that the defendant was sworn "to testify truly" (People v. Simpson, 133 Cal. 367, 65 Pac. 834) is not well founded. The indictment charges "that the said William B. Bradbury was then and there duly sworn before the said superior court in open court, that the evidence that he, the said William B. Bradbury, should give to the said court, then and there touching the matters then in question in the trial of said civil action, should be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." No precise form of words is exacted, and this language completely fills the requirement that the indictment should contain a statement to the effect that he was so sworn "to testify truly."

The indictment charged that the oath was administered "by F. S. Holland, who was then and there the duly appointed, qualified and acting deputy clerk of the superior court of the county of Marin, state of California." It is urged that this allegation fails to show that the oath was administered by a person authorized so to do. The argument is that there is no such officer known as "clerk of the superior court," and therefore no such officer as a "deputy clerk of the superior court." The Constitution, however, itself declares that the county clerks shall be ex officio clerks of the courts of record in and for their respective counties or cities and counties. Const. art. 6, § 14. Thus the office of clerk of the superior court is created by law, and it needs no citation of authority to the effect that in such matters a deputy may act for his principal.

The court instructed the jury that before it could find the defendant guilty of perjury, it must find "that he knowingly and willfully testified falsely in the manner and form charged in the indictment in this case, excepting in one particular, which I will come to later." It is said that no subsequent instruction of the court explained the meaning of the italicized language, and that the effect of the court's omission in this regard was inevitably to leave the minds of the jurors in a state of confusion. The answers to this objection are threefold: First, it appears by the record that the instruction was one given at the request of the defendant, and therefore he may not complain of it; second, if the result of the court's failure was to leave the minds of the jurors in a confused state, such confusion, under the circumstances, would make for the benefit and not for the injury of the defendant; and, third, from the later instructions of the court the precise matter to which the exception has reference is made clearly to appear. That matter consisted of certain evidence alleged in the indictment to have been given by Bradbury which the court properly, as matter of law, determined was not material, and as to which the court instructed the jury that the defendant would not be guilty of perjury even if he had testified falsely concerning it.

The court instructed the jury that, before the defendant could be convicted of the crime of perjury, there must be established beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty by the testimony of at least two witnesses, or by the testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances, certain facts amongst these, "that such testimony so alleged to be false was material to the issue then before the court." In another part of its charge the court declared to the jury: "Whether the testimony alleged to be false was or was not material is a question of law which is for the court to determine and not the jury. The question of the materiality of evidence, no matter when or how it may arise, is always one of law for the court and not of fact for the jury." This latter instruction was unquestionably sound in point of law. People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 Pac. 11; State v. Lewis, 10 Kan. 157; State v. Caywood, 96 Iowa, 367, 65 N. W. 385; U. S. v. Singleton (D. C.) 54 Fed. 488; Gordon v. State, 7 Atl. 476, 48 N. J. Law, 611. Appellant argues that by reason of the conflict in instructions, whereby in one the jury is told it must determine the materiality of the evidence, while in the other it is told that such materiality is always a question of law for the court to decide, should work a reversal of the case. But this conflict could not have been injurious to the defendant and must have made for his benefit; for, if the jury were led to the erroneous belief that they could decide upon the materiality of the evidence and had decided that it was not material, the defendant would have obtained an acquittal to which he was not entitled. The fact that under such an erroneous instruction the jury has decided the question of the materiality correctly, as here it did, furnishes no ground for reversal. Thompson v. People, 26 Colo. 496, 59 Pac. 51; State v. Lewis, supra; 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 688. The evidence was sufficient to support the judgment. The materiality of the perjurious evidence is established by McCue v. Bradbury, 149 Cal. 103, 84 Pac. 993. It was shown that the defendant made this request of Mr. Cheda, the then president, and Mr. Hanson, the then teller, of the Marin county bank. This evidence was clearly sufficient to support the charge that the defendant told the bank. The judgment roll in McCue v. Bradbury was properly admitted in evidence, not, as appellant seems to think, for the purpose of establishing the truth or falsity of the testimony, but as tending to show the pendency of the proceeding, the jurisdiction of the court, the giving of the testimony and its materiality. 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 692; People v. Lee Fat, 54 Cal. 527; State v. Blaisdell, 59 N. H. 328; People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623, 67 N. W. 968; Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 57, 15 South. 866.

No other points presented by appellant merit particular mention.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.

(156 Cal. 32)

PETERS v. PETERS. (L. A. 2,259.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 3, 1909.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 205*)—ACTIONS BETWEEN—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

Under Pol. Code, § 4468, providing that the common law, not repugnant to the Constitution or statutes, is the rule of decision in the courts of the states, the common-law rule that husband and wife are one person, and that no action at law can be maintained by one against the other, is in force in California, except as modified by statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 744-755; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 205*)—ACTIONS FOR TORTS BY ONE AGAINST THE OTHER—STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 155, 158, 159, 325, 1093, 1094, 1187, providing that either husband or wife may enter into any engagement with the other regarding property, except that they cannot, by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except to make a contract for separation, etc., and Civ. Code Proc. § 370, providing that, when a married woman is a party to an action, her husband must be joined with her, except when the action is between herself and husband, etc., neither husband nor wife can sue the other for personal wrongs inflicted during the marriage; the Civil Code relating solely to contracts and property rights, and the Code of Civil Procedure relating only to parties to the single form of action provided by the Code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 753; Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1170*)—HARMLESS ERROR—STATUTES.

Where the complaint on its face shows that plaintiff cannot, in any event, recover, and that no amendment can cure the defect, the judgment against him will not be reversed for erroneous rulings, which under Code Civ. Proc. § 475, the court must disregard because not affecting the substantial rights of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1170.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1072*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where it appears affirmatively from the record that plaintiff has no right to maintain the action, the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict against him is immaterial, and the order denying a new trial notwithstanding such insufficiency will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1072.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Herbert M. Peters against Mary Gird Peters. From an order denying a motion for new trial after verdict and judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. S. Utley and Haines & Haines, for appellant. Daney & Lewis, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order denying his motion for a new trial. There is no appeal from the judgment.

The plaintiff and defendant, at the time the alleged cause of action arose, were, and still are, husband and wife. The wife severely wounded the husband by willfully, without just cause or excuse, shooting him in the leg with a shotgun, injuring him so severely that he was confined to his bed for more than a month and was disabled from doing his ordinary work for several months thereafter. The verdict and judgment were in favor of the defendant.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The appellant complains of a number of rulings of the court below upon the introduction of evidence and in the giving and refusing of instructions to the jury. He also assigns as cause for a new trial that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. It is unnecessary to consider these assignments of error in detail. If we should concede that the plaintiff could maintain an action against his wife for battery, we should be compelled to hold that the evidence was wholly insufficient to support the verdict. According to her own testimony, she deliberately and willfully shot her husband in the leg for no other reason than to prevent him from going into a bedroom of the house which she then occupied for the purpose of taking therefrom a small amount of cotton batting which he claimed a right to take. She made no claim that she was in any real personal danger from him at the time, and there is no real foundation for the pretense that she was acting in self-defense. The shooting was entirely unjustifiable as a defense of her right to maintain possession of the cotton batting. The court below, upon its view of the right of the husband to maintain such an action, should have directed the jury to find for the plaintiff in such amount as they should believe from the evidence he was damaged. The defendant may consider herself fortunate that she was not prosecuted criminally for the act, and that such prosecution is now barred by lapse of time.

Notwithstanding this conclusion, we are satisfied that, under the law in this state as it is, an action cannot be maintained by one spouse against the other for a battery committed during the continuance of the marriage relation, and hence that the plaintiff has suffered no substantial injury to his rights by the verdict against him. The question is entirely new in this state, and such cases are rare in other jurisdictions; but there is no case in favor of the right to maintain such an action.

The common law of England is declared to be the rule of decision in all courts of this state, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with our Constitution and statutes. Pol. Code, § 4468. By the common law the husband and wife were deemed to be one person, and no suit at law of any character could be maintained by one against the other. 21 Cyc. 1517; 10 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 195; 1 Cooley, Blackstone, 442; Schouler, Dom. Rel. § 52; Phillips v. Barnet, 1 Q. B. Div. 436; Countz v. Markling, 30 Ark. 17; Crowther v. Crowther, 55 Me. 358; Hobbs v. Hobbs, 70 Me. 381. Owing to the modern statutes giving the wife the right to separate property and to make contracts with her husband concerning the same, it is now generally held that an action at law concerning property may be maintained between them. In many of the states such actions are expressly authorized by statute; but even where such actions are allowed, either expressly or by necessary implication, it has been uniformly decided, in the few states where the question has arisen, that neither can sue the other, even after a divorce, for personal wrongs inflicted upon one by the other during the marriage. 21 Cyc. 1519; 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 857; Peters v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 182; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106; Bandfield v. Bandfield, 117 Mich. 80, 75 N. W. 287, 40 L. R. A. 757, 72 Am. St. Rep. 550; Abbe v. Abbe, 22 App. Div. 485, 48 N. Y. Supp. 25; Schultz v. Schultz, 89 N. Y. 644, reversing same case in 27 Hun, 26; Freethy v. Freethy, 42 Barb. 641; Longendyke v. Longendyke, 44 Barb. 306; Chestnut v. Chestnut, 77 Ill. 350; Smith v. Gorman, 41 Me. 405; Abbott v. Abbott, 67 Me. 304, 24 Am. Rep. 27; Heyob v. Her Husband, 18 La. Ann. 41; Moore v. Moore, 18 La. Ann. 613. In New York the statute authorized a married woman to "bring and maintain an action in her own name against any person for an injury to her person or character, as if she were sole." Yet the courts of that state declared that this was not intended to and did not permit a suit by her against her husband to recover damages for battery or slander. Longendyke v. Longendyke, supra; Freethy v. Freethy, supra; Schultz v. Schultz, supra. In the Longendyke Case the court said that to allow such actions is "contrary to the policy of the law and destructive of that conjugal tranquillity which it has always been the policy of the law to guard and protect." In the Freethy Case it was further observed "that, when the Legislature intends to make such a striking innovation of the rules of the common law and so much opposed to public policy and the peace and happiness of the conjugal relation, as would be the case if husband and wife were permitted to sue each other for alleged wrongs to character, it should use such language as will make it clearly manifest, and not leave it to the construction of the courts." These authorities clearly indicate what the rule should be in this state unless we find some statutory provisions to the contrary.

We discover in our statutes nothing that can be construed to show an intention to permit actions for tort between husband and wife. The Civil Code provides: That either husband or wife may "enter into any engagements or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried" (section 158); that they cannot "by any contract with each other, alter their legal relations, except as to property," except to make a written contract for separation (section 159); and that they "contract toward each other obligations of mutual respect, fidelity and support" (section 155); also, that each has the power to manage and dispose of his or her separate property (sections 1093, 1094, 1187, 325, 1273). The Code of Civil Procedure provides that,

"when a married woman is a party to an action her husband must be joined with her, except: (1) When the action concerns her separate property, or her right or claim to the homestead property, she may sue alone; (2) When the action is between herself and her husband, she may sue or be sued alone." The third subdivision of this section authorizes her to sue alone when she is living apart from her husband, by reason of his desertion or a separation agreement. Code Civ. Proc. § 370.

The provisions of the Civil Code relate solely to contract and property rights. They recognize the separate property of husband and wife and authorize contracts between them concerning the same. This necessarily implies that actions by one against the other for the protection of such property and the enforcement of contracts relating thereto can be maintained. Our Code system authorizes but one form of action for all cases either in law or equity. Suits between husband and wife have long been permitted in equity, and in actions for divorce the husband and wife were necessarily upon opposite sides of the case. It was necessary therefore, in a Code providing for but one form of action, to make a rule covering all cases. Hence, in the chapter of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the parties to the single form of action provided, it was declared that in actions between herself and her husband a married woman can sue and be sued alone. This sufficiently accounts for the presence of that provision. It would be a forced interpretation to attempt to discern in that declaration, or in any of the provisions of the Civil Code, an intent to make a departure from the common law so radical, and so opposed to its general policy, as the authorization of a suit by the husband or wife against the other for injuries to the person or character. In the language of the Supreme Court of Maine in Abbott v. Abbott, supra, the relation of marriage, while it continues, "so to speak, acts as a perpetually operating discharge of all wrongs between man and wife, committed by one upon the other." The only remedies for such wrongs, afforded by our law, as it stands, are to be found in the Penal Code and in the action for divorce or maintenance, with the additional portion of the community property which may be given to the wronged party where cruelty is the cause for which divorce is adjudged.

The appellant contends that, as his appeal is from the order denying a new trial only, and there is no appeal from the judgment, the sufficiency of the complaint cannot be considered, citing Swift v. Occidental M. Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700. He urges that the only course this court can pursue, inasmuch as there is manifest error in denying the motion for new trial and in the rulings upon the trial, is to reverse the order and remand the case for a new trial. The question whether or not the error complained of has produced substantial injury to the appellant is always a proper question for consideration upon appeal. It is not the rule that in every case where the evidence is insufficient to establish some one or more of the material facts in issue, or where erroneous instructions have been given, and there is no appeal from the judgment, this court must reverse the order denying a new trial and remand the cause, directing the lower court to try the case anew, notwithstanding our conviction that, because of facts admitted by the pleadings and of which there can be no dispute, no different verdict could ever be properly rendered. No error should suffice to reverse a judgment or order, if it appears that the appellant has not been and could not be injured thereby. Where the complaint on its face shows that the plaintiff could not, in any event, recover upon the cause of action set forth therein, and it appears that no amendment could cure it, no erroneous ruling at the trial will justify a reversal of the judgment against him. Gilbert v. Allen, 57 Ind. 524; McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115, 25 Pac. 266; McCreery v. Wells, 94 Cal. 485, 29 Pac. 877; 3 Cyc. 385; 3 Cent. Dig. cc. 1933, 1934; Code Civ. Proc. § 475. Here it appears affirmatively from the record that the plaintiff was not and could not be injured in any substantial legal right by the verdict against him, and that the greatest injury this court could inflict upon him in the case would be to reverse the order without informing him, or the lower court, of his predicament, and allow him to go through the form of another trial, only to be met ultimately with a decision that he never had the cause of action against his wife for damages upon which he has sued, and that no judgment in his favor therefor could be sustained.

Our conclusion is that, notwithstanding the fact that the evidence is insufficient to support any finding that the defendant was justified in shooting the plaintiff, or any of the defenses set up in the answer, the verdict against the plaintiff is harmless because of the fact that he has no right to maintain the action at all.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

155 Cal. 767

YOUNGER v. MOORE et al. (S. F. 4,556.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 28, 1909.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 171*)—CONSTRUCTION—SCOPE—"MANAGE."

Under Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 1, authorizing a trust to sell real property, and apply or dispose of the proceeds, in accordance with the instrument creating the trust, where a trust deed, besides empowering the trustee to sell the property to obtain money for the payment of the indebtedness, also empowered him to manage the same, the word "manage" gave only such control of the property as was proper in the lawful execution of a trust created as security for an indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 226; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4316, 4317.]

2. TRUSTS (§ 52*)—PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 1, authorizing a trust to sell real property, and the application of the proceeds in accordance with the instrument creating the trust, where the main purpose of a trust deed was to convert the property by sale, so far as necessary, to discharge the debt secured thereby, that it unlawfully authorized the trustee to exchange or partition the property did not affect the valid provisions of the instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

3. DEEDS (§ 90*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A deed must be interpreted in favor of the grantee, except in case of a reservation in any grant or a grant by a public officer or public body.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 235; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

4. DEEDS (§ 116*)—CONSTRUCTION—AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE.

A deed of bargain and sale without words of reservation, or any words showing an intent to make a quitclaim deed, described the property as all of a certain tract. Subsequently the grantor, the grantee, and a third party executed a trust agreement, reciting that the grantor had conveyed all her interest in the property to grantee, and that she would be entitled to a reconveyance on payment of certain sums due the third party. Held, that under the rule that, where a grantor purports to grant property in fee simple, and subsequently acquires any claim of title thereto, the same passes by operation of law to the grantee or his successors, the deed passed an interest in the property subsequently acquired by the grantor by inheritance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 330; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—ORDER DENYING A NEW TRIAL — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

No question of the sufficiency of the pleadings or of the findings to support the judgment can be considered on appeal from an order denying a new trial, and the claim that defendant in an action for partition waived its right to any lien on the property through failure to set up in its answer the amount due, etc., was not available to plaintiff on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3476; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Action by Helen Younger against Helen M. Moore and others. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, Helen M. Moore appeals. Affirmed.

William T. Jeter, Chas. M. Cassin, Benj. K. Knight, and Cassin & Lucas, for appellant. Charles B. Younger and Cushing, Grant & Cushing, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant Helen M. Moore from an order denying her motion for a new trial, after the making of an interlocutory decree in an action for partition of certain real property in Santa Cruz county. There is no appeal from the judgment. The only controversy on this appeal as shown by the brief of counsel is between defendant Helen M. Moore and defendant F. A. Hihn Company, a corporation, as to the ownership of an undivided seven-fifteenths of the Moore ranch, exclusive of that portion thereof set apart as a homestead April 26, 1881, to Helen M. Moore and her minor children, by the superior court of Santa Cruz county, in the matter of the estate of William H. Moore, her deceased husband. By its answer, defendant F. A. Hihn Company alleged that it owns in fee simple absolute said undivided seven-fifteenths of said land, having acquired the same by deed dated July 19, 1895. By her answer defendant Helen M. Moore alleged that she is the owner in fee simple absolute of the same undivided seven-fifteenths of said land. She further alleged that she acquired five-fifteenths under the decree of final distribution made July 27, 1891, in the matter of the estate of her deceased husband, who died intestate October 30, 1871, and two-fifteenths under the decree of final distribution made March 1, 1898, in the matter of the estate of her deceased son, William H. Moore, who died intestate May 5, 1896, the owner thereof, all of which is found by the trial court and is here conceded. She further averred that her deed of July 19, 1895, to the F. A. Hihn Company was for only an undivided five-fifteenths, and that the same was executed "as security for the payment of certain promissory notes then and there executed by her, and also as security" for future advances and interest, and, "though absolute in form was and is in fact a mortgage."

The trial court found that on July 19, 1895, said Helen M. Moore executed to the F. A. Hihn Company a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, purporting to convey all of the Moore ranch, that this deed "was intended to be and was a trust deed, and that on July 23, 1895, there was executed by Helen M. Moore, as party of the first part, by F. A. Hihn Company, as party of the second part, and by Charles B. Younger, as party of the third part, a certain declaration of trust relative thereto," subjecting said deed to the provisions of said agreement, which is set forth in the findings. This agreement contained recitals to the effect that on July 19, 1895, Helen M. Moore conveyed to the F. A. Hihn Company "all her right, title, interest, estate and claim" in and to the Moore ranch and other property, that all such interest had been sold at foreclosure sale on March 30, 1895, and said Charles B. Younger had on July 23, 1895, furnished her with the sum of $9,538.16 to be used for redeeming the same from said sale, that in addition thereto she was indebted to Younger in the sum of $4,933, and that she did on July 23, 1895, execute to Younger, as evidence of her indebtedness to him, her promissory note for $14,471, payable one year after date, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. It then provided that the F. A. Hihn Company "will manage the premises conveyed to it as aforesaid and will sell, exchange, partition, dispose of and convey" the premises, "either as a whole, or in such subdivisions and at such time or times as it may deem proper," applying the proceeds from "the rents, sales or other disposition of said premises," first, to payment of taxes, insurance, and other necessary expenses in the management and protection of the property, including necessary litigation; second, to payment to the F. A. Hihn Company of a commission of 5 per cent. on all proceeds; third, to payment to the F. A. Hihn Company of interest on all sums expended by it under the contract; fourth, to payment to the F. A. Hihn Company of all money expended by it under the contract; fifth, to payment to Younger of $14,471, with interest; sixth, the surplus, if any, to be paid to Helen M. Moore, her heirs or assigns. It was further provided that when Younger and the F. A. Hihn Company had been fully paid all sums due, with interest, said F. A. Hihn Company "shall, on demand by said party of the first part, reconvey to said party of the first part all its right, title and interest, estate and claim in and to the premises conveyed to it as aforesaid by said party of the first part, or such part thereof as shall then remain undisposed of by it." The court further found that the title to the two-fifths acquired by Helen M. Moore as of May 15, 1896, from her deceased son, passed by operation of law to the F. A. Hihn Company by virtue of her deed of July 19, 1895, subject to the agreement last specified.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It was further found in terms that the F. A. Hihn Company was the owner of this seven-fifteenths of the Moore ranch, excepting that portion thereof constituting the Moore homestead, "subject, however, to the agreement executed July 23, 1895," hereinbefore described, and that the other eight-fifteenths were owned, two-fifteenths by plaintiff and Charles D. Younger, two-fifteenths by Charles Moore, two-fifteenths by Stella Moore, and two-fifteenths by Alice Hoffmann. The interlocutory judgment was in accord with the terms of this finding; it further decreeing that Helen M. Moore had no interest in any of said property other than such as she had under said agreement. Appellant's statement on motion for a new trial contains the evidence and admissions of the parties, showing all the facts as to the acquirement by Helen M. Moore of the seven-fifteenths from her husband and her son, being the same facts in regard thereto stated in the findings of the trial court. It further contains the deed of July 19, 1895, from Helen M. Moore to the F. A. Hihn Company, and the agreement of July 23, 1895, hereinbefore described. This, it is stipulated in the statement, constituted all of the evidence given on the trial. It is conceded here that the findings of the trial court in regard to the ownership of this property were sustained by the evidence, if the instruments executed by Mrs. Moore, the F. A. Hihn Company, and Younger are to be regarded as a deed of trust to secure the indebtedness of Mrs. Moore described therein, as distinguished from a mere mortgage, and if the undivided two-fifteenths acquired by Mrs. Moore from her deceased son subsequent to the execution thereof passed by operation of law to the grantee for the purposes of the trust.

The deed of July 19, 1895, and the trust agreement of July 23, 1895, must be considered as parts of a single transaction, and so construed. There is no escape from the conclusion that the deed of Helen M. Moore to the F. A. Hihn Company "was intended to be * * * a trust deed," as found by the trial court, and was not intended as a mortgage. It is urged that it was not a valid trust deed, inasmuch as it was for some purposes not authorized by section 857, Civ. Code, defining the purposes for which express trusts in relation to real property may be created. If we were compelled to hold that it was not a valid deed of trust, doubtless the rights of the parties could be preserved by holding the instruments to constitute an equitable mortgage or lien. Earle v. Sunnyside Land Co., 150 Cal. 214, 227, 88 Pac. 920. But we see no difficulty in sustaining it as a valid trust deed. Primarily, the trust expressed was solely by way of security for the indebtedness of Mrs. Moore, with interest, expenses of protecting the property, and compensation of the trustee. The validity of trust deeds given as security for loans is established in this state by a long line of decisions. As was said in Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 385, 53 Pac. 813, these decisions "practically hold that they are authorized by section 857 of the Civil Code, * * * which rulings, long acquiesced in, have become a rule of property. * * *" Section 857, subd. 1, Civ. Code, authorizes a trust "to sell real property, and apply or dispose of the proceeds in accordance with the instrument creating the trust." Appellant's claim is that the instrument before us goes beyond the scope of the ordinary trust deed, in that, besides empowering the trustee to sell the property in order to obtain money for the payment of the indebtedness, etc., it purports to empower the trustee to "manage" the same, and to "exchange" or "partition" it. So far as the word "manage" is concerned, there can be no difficulty. The word must be construed as intending only such control of the property as is proper in the lawful execution of a trust created as security for an indebtedness. It may be that the conveyance in trust is invalid in so far as it purports to authorize the trustee to "exchange" or "partition" the property; but, if this be so, it seems apparent to us that the invalidity should not be held to affect the valid provisions. The main and ultimate purpose of the trust created by these instruments was to convert the trust property by sale so far as necessary into money wherewith to discharge the indebtedness secured thereby, and the power to exchange or partition was merely incidental, and not at all essential thereto. If the trustee could not be legally authorized to exchange or partition the property, the provisions in that behalf can be disregarded without interfering with and changing the main scheme of the grantor. See Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal. 745, 81 Pac. 138. In other words, there was no such inseparable scheme that the attempted power to exchange or partition cannot be disregarded without affecting or interfering with the main purpose of the parties. If the trustee should attempt to exchange or partition the trust property, the question of the validity of these provisions would become material, but we do not consider it material here.

Upon the point that the instrument before us must be considered a valid trust deed, rather than a mortgage, the case of More v. Calkins, 85 Cal. 177, 184, 24 Pac. 729, and 95 Cal. 435, 437, 30 Pac. 583, 29 Am. St. Rep. 128, is squarely in point.

Upon the question whether the undivided two-fifteenths owned by her son at the time of the execution of the deed and subsequently acquired by Mrs. Moore by inheritance, passed by operation of law to the grantee for the purposes of the trust, the District Court of Appeal said in the decision in this case: "It is not seriously contended that the deed of grant, bargain, and sale made by appellant on July 19, 1895, describing the Moore ranch would not, in the absence of any other agreement to the contrary, have conveyed the after-acquired title to the grantee therein named. It is fundamental that where a grantor, by proper instrument, purports to grant property in fee simple, and subsequently acquires any title or claim of title thereto, the same passes by operation of law to the grantee or his successors. The effect of such deed as matter of law is the same as if it were written upon the face that the grantor conveyed all the estate which he then possessed, or which he might at any time thereafter acquire. Civ. Code, § 1106; Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612, 76 Am. Dec. 449; Defrieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653, 30 Pac. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151; Merrill v. Clark, 103 Cal. 367, 37 Pac. 238. Appellant contends that the trust agreement made and executed four days after the execution of the deed should be read in connection with the deed, and as a contemporaneous agreement relating to the same subject-matter. We are inclined to agree with the contention. It is further contended, however, that when thus read, the agreement shows that the appellant intended to and did convey only her undivided one-third interest in and to the Moore ranch which she then owned, and that the agreement so limited and modified the granting clause in the deed as to clearly show that the deed was only a quitclaim deed of the interest and title then owned by the grantor. This contention cannot be supported by a logical analysis of the deed and agreement when read together. A deed must be interpreted in favor of the grantee except in case of a reservation in any grant, or a grant by a public officer or public body. Now the deed contains the usual words of grant, bargain, and sale of 'all that certain tract of land lying and being situate in said county of Santa Cruz in said state of California known as and called the "Moore Ranch," and further described as bounded on the northerly by land of Dwight Younglove, by land of Henry Cowell, and by land formerly of John W. Chance but now of the Bank of Santa Cruz County, a private corporation; on the easterly by said last-named land and by the land of Dwight Younglove and by land formerly of Richard H. Hall, but now of Margaret Hall; on the southerly by the Pacific Ocean; and on the westerly by land of Delos D. Wilder, by land of Dwight Younglove and by Meder Creek, containing an area of about eight hundred and sixty acres of land.' In the deed are no words of reservation, nor any words in any way limiting the interest conveyed, or tending to show the intent to make a quitclaim deed only. The agreement commences by a preliminary recital as follows: 'That whereas said party of the first part did on the 19th day of July, 1895, convey to said party of the second part, all her right, title, interest, estate and claim in and to the Pacific Ocean House property; in and to the Moore ranch situated in the county of Santa Cruz in the state of California.' The agreement further provided that when the party of the third part 'shall have been fully paid in United States gold coin said sum of $14,471, with interest thereon in like gold coin, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum compounding quarterly, said party of the second part shall on demand by said party of the first part reconvey to said party of the first part all its right, title, and interest, estate and claim in and to the premises conveyed to it as aforesaid by said party of the first part, or such part thereof as shall then remain undisposed of by it. The recital in the agreement as to the deed of July 19th was merely for the purpose of identification. The statement that whereas the appellant had theretofore done a certain thing—that is, made and executed the deed—was merely for the purpose of identifying the deed. The deed shows what was in fact done; and it would require a very plain and unambiguous statement in such an agreement to show that as a matter of fact the appellant intended to do a different thing from what it appeared by the written deed she did do. It is stated that on a certain day the appellant had conveyed all her right, title, estate, and claim in and to the Moore ranch, and so she had. She had conveyed all the title, estate, and interest she then had, and she, as matter of law, conveyed the title she subsequently acquired. In any ordinary grant, bargain, and sale deed the grantor conveys all the right, title, estate, and claim he has in and to the property. The agreement does not show that the granting clause in the deed was in any way limited or changed by the agreement, nor that it was intended that it should be. In fact, we may presume that the appellant was honest; that she intended to secure the indebtedness due Younger. She had no thought of reserving anything or conveying anything except as security. She had only to pay her indebtedness and the property would be conveyed back to her. She has now only to pay such indebtedness, and it will be reconveyed to her. The after-acquired title passed by her deed, and it will again vest in her by proper deed upon her indebtedness being paid. To this she cannot object unless she desires to avoid the payment of her indebtedness." We are satisfied that this is in all respects correct, and adopt the same as our views on the question.

The claim that the F. A. Hihn Company must be deemed to have waived its rights to any lien by reason of failure to set up in its answer the original amount due and the amount remaining due, with a statement as to the nature and extent of security, was not available to appellant on motion for new trial, or on appeal from an order denying her motion, even if we assume that there is any foundation for such a claim. As we have said, there is no appeal from the judgment. No question of the sufficiency of the pleadings, or of the findings to support the judgment, is involved or can be considered on an appeal from an order denying a new trial (Great Western, etc., Co. v. Chambers, 153 Cal. 307, 310, 95 Pac. 151, and cases there cited), and the point made by appellant in this regard is not otherwise presented by the record before us. Nor is there anything in the point that the trial court has failed to make any finding as to the amount of the indebtedness, etc. There was no issue made by the pleadings on this matter, and the court did find squarely on every material issue made.

As was substantially said by the District Court of Appeal, the rights of Mrs. Moore are fully protected by the findings and judgment to the effect that the ownership of the F. A.

Hihn Company is subject "to the said agreement executed July 23, 1895."

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

156 Cal. 38

SAN JOSE SAFE DEPOSIT BANK OF SAVINGS v. BANK OF MADERA et al. (Sac. 1,533.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 3, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 46*)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where a second mortgagee obtained money from a bank with which to redeem the property from a sale under foreclosure of the first mortgage, pursuant to an agreement to repay on the bank obtaining the sheriff's deed and binding the bank to reconvey on such payment, the obligation to repay did not mature until after the right to the sheriff's deed had accrued and a reasonable time thereafter had elapsed within which the bank could procure it, and limitations did not begin to run until that time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 240-253; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. ACTION (§ 62*)—PREMATURE ACTION.

Plaintiff advanced money to the second mortgagee to redeem the property from a sale under foreclosure of the first mortgage, pursuant to an agreement to repay on plaintiff's receiving the sheriff's deed. The sheriff's sale occurred on December 12, 1894, and the time for redemption expired on June 12, 1895. An action to recover the money advanced was begun on August 29, 1898; but the sheriff's deed was delayed until December 5, 1904, by the wrongful interference of the mortgagee. Plaintiff was not clearly apprised of his rights for a considerable period after the right to the deed had accrued. Held to justify a finding that the action was not prematurely brought, but that a reasonable time had elapsed after the right to the deed had accrued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 718-723; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 46*)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION—EVIDENCE.

The court was justified in finding that the obligation to repay the money matured within two years before the beginning of the action, so that it was not barred by limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1201*)—PROCEEDINGS IN TRIAL COURT AFTER REMAND—AMENDMENTS TO PLEADINGS.

The court, after the reversal of an action to enforce the lien of plaintiff advancing money to the second mortgagee to redeem the property from a sale under foreclosure of the first mortgage, pursuant to an agreement to repay, may allow plaintiff to amend the complaint, so as to allege the special agreement as to the time of maturity of the obligation to repay by changing it from an obligation to repay it immediately to an obligation to repay on the execution of the sheriff's deed under the foreclosure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4673-4683; Dec. Dig. § 1201.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

5. PLEADING (§ 248*)—AMENDMENTS—CHANGING CAUSE OF ACTION.

An amendment to a complaint, in an action to enforce the lien of plaintiff advancing money to the second mortgagee to redeem the property from a sale under foreclosure of the first mortgage, which merely changes the allegations as to the contract under which the money was advanced, by showing a different time of maturity of the obligation to repay, does not change the cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 686-709; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

6. MORTGAGES (§ 27*) — EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

One advancing money to the second mortgagee to redeem the property from a sale under foreclosure of the first mortgage pursuant to an agreement binding the second mortgagee to repay on the former obtaining the sheriff's deed as security, acquires a lien on the land which is sufficiently evidenced by his receiving the certificate of redemption until the execution of the deed, and the lien is enforceable against persons having notice of the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 45-48; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by the San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings against the Bank of Madera and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

M. K. Harris and S. L. Strother, for appellants. F. A. Fee and Frank H. Short, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The complaint states a cause of action to foreclose an equitable mortgage or lien.

The main question presented by the record is the question whether or not the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. This question depends upon the terms of the agreement between the parties with respect to the event which should make absolute and immediate the obligation of the defendant Mary Dworack to repay to the plaintiff the moneys advanced by plaintiff in her behalf. The case has been before this court on several previous occasions. 121 Cal. 539, 54 Pac. 83, 270; 121 Cal. 543, 54 Pac. 85; 144 Cal. 574, 78 Pac. 5. Upon the last appeal the judgment of the lower court was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial, upon the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. In the complaint before the court in that case there was no allegation with respect to the time of maturity of the obligation to repay the money constituting the debt which the plaintiff sought to recover, and the court treated it as a debt which was due immediately upon its creation, and decided the case upon the theory that the statute of limitations immediately began to run.

The following statement of the facts alleged in the complaint, all of which are found to be true by the trial court upon sufficient evidence, will suffice to present the question involved in the case. Charles A. Dworack was the original owner of the land involved. In 1893 he executed a mortgage thereon for the sum of $3,000, which was duly recorded. In July, 1894, he executed a second mortgage thereon to the defendant Mary Dworack, who was his mother, for the sum of $8,500. The first mortgage was foreclosed in an action to which Mary Dworack was made a party defendant. An order of sale was issued, and the land was sold upon this foreclosure for the sum of $3,515.20. In January, 1895, Mary Dworack, as a second mortgagee, desired to redeem the property from this sale. She had no money with which to effect such redemption, and thereupon applied to the plaintiff for the same. The plaintiff agreed that it would advance to her the money necessary for that purpose upon the arrangement that she should assign to the plaintiff all the rights which she would acquire in the land by reason of such redemption, that the certificate of redemption should be assigned to the plaintiff, and, if no other redemption was made, the plaintiff should obtain the deed of said property by such sale from the sheriff of the county and hold the same as security for the money advanced. It was further, at the time, and as part of the same transaction, agreed between the plaintiff and said Mary Dworack that, as soon as the sheriff's deed was received by the plaintiff, the said Mary Dworack would repay to the plaintiff the money advanced by it for her, and that thereupon the plaintiff would convey, or cause to be conveyed, to her the interest in the property which it would have acquired under the said sheriff's deed. The redemption was effected in pursuance of this arrangement; the money therefor being advanced by the plaintiff. The certificate of redemption was first taken in the name of one Moultrie, who immediately transferred the same to plaintiff. No other redemption was made, and the right to a sheriff's deed under the foreclosure, by reason of the sale and the subsequent redemption, had accrued to the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff applied to the sheriff for a deed of the property. Mary Dworack and Charles A. Dworack and the defendant the Bank of Madera conspired together for that purpose, objected to the execution of said deed by the said sheriff, and interfered with and prevented the sheriff from executing the said deed as he otherwise would have done, and by such interference and objections, and in spite of the diligent attempts of the plaintiff to procure a deed, they delayed the execution of such deed by the sheriff until December 5, 1904. At the time the redemption was effected, Mary Dworack had become the owner of the legal title to the property by conveyance from Charles A. Dworack. Afterwards she conveyed the same

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes to the defendant the Bank of Madera. This action was begun on August 29, 1898.

The claim of the appellants is that the obligation to repay the money to the plaintiff matured at the time that the plaintiff became entitled to a sheriff's deed under the redemption. The sheriff's sale occurred on December 12, 1894, and under the law then in force the time for redemption expired on June 12, 1895. The action was begun more than three years after the latter date, and, if this claim is correct, the action was barred by the statute of limitations. We are of the opinion, however, that, under the facts found to be true by the court with respect to the agreement between the parties, the obligation to repay the money did not become absolute at the time of the expiration of the period of redemption. The agreement was that she should repay the money as soon as the sheriff's deed was received, and that thereupon—that is, upon the payment of the money—the plaintiff would convey the property to her. The obligation to repay therefore did not mature until after the right to the sheriff's deed had accrued and a reasonable time thereafter had elapsed within which the plaintiff could have procured it. The receipt of this sheriff's deed by the plaintiff was delayed for more than nine years by the groundless objections and wrongful interference of Mary Dworack herself. The plaintiff could not justly be compelled to await the nine years for the repayment of the money advanced. Mary Dworack had no more right in equity thus to postpone the time of payment, than the plaintiff would have had to postpone it by an unreasonable delay in applying for a deed. She would have had the right, in the latter case, to offer payment after the lapse of a reasonable time, or perhaps at any time, and the plaintiff had the right, in the former event, to demand payment after she had wrongfully delayed the execution of the deed for an unreasonable time. What such reasonable time would be, under the circumstances of the case, would be a question of fact for the trial court. In making its decision it had the right to consider the record in the case. That record, including the opinions of this court upon the former appeals, shows that the plaintiff was not clearly apprised of its rights for a considerable period after the right to the deed had accrued. These circumstances had an important bearing upon the question. In view of these and all the other circumstances hereinbefore recited, we are satisfied that the court did not err in holding that the action was not premature, and that the obligation of Mary Dworack to repay the money to plaintiff did not mature until within two years before the beginning of the action.

It is also claimed by the appellants that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff to amend its complaint, after the reversal by the decision in 144 Cal. 574, 78 Pac. 5, so as to allege the special agreement with respect to the time of maturity of the obligation of Mary Dworack to repay the money, changing it from an obligation to repay it immediately upon its advancement, to an obligation to repay plaintiff upon the execution of the sheriff's deed under the foreclosure. We do not think the court erred in this respect. The amendment was made in the furtherance of justice, and, as the events showed, in accordance with the actual facts of the case.

A further claim is made that by this amendment the cause of action was changed, and that, in effect, a new action was begun upon the date of the filing of the last-amended complaint. We do not think the amendment changed the cause of action. It still remained, as before, a cause of action to enforce the lien of the plaintiff upon the land of the defendants to secure the payment of the original debt caused by the advancement of the money by the plaintiff to redeem from the foreclosure sale. The mere change of the allegations with respect to the contract, showing a different time of maturity, did not change the cause of action.

It is again urged, although without much insistence, that the transaction between Mary Dworack and the plaintiff did not invest the plaintiff with any lien upon the land for the payment of the money. We cannot agree with this contention. The money was paid upon an arrangement by which the plaintiff was to obtain the sheriff's deed as security for its money. It received the certificate of redemption which, until the deed was executed, was a sufficient evidence of its lien upon the property and preserved its rights. The defendants all had notice of the entire proceedings, and their rights are subject to those of the plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

156 Cal. 27

MILLER v. IMPERIAL WATER CO., NO. 8.
(L. A. 2,311.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 136*)—ENFORCEMENTS OF RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Mandamus lies to enforce the plain rights of stockholders of corporations, in the absence of any other adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 125*)—ENFORCEMENTS OF RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Mandamus lies to restore to a member of a corporation his corporate rights, where he has been improperly disfranchised or irregularly removed from his connection with the corporation, though his rights rest wholly on his contract of membership; the rule that mandamus will not be used for the enforcement of contract rights of a private or personal nature not being applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 138*) — ENFORCEMENTS OF RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Mandamus lies to compel a corporation, organized to secure a supply of water for irrigation purposes and distribute the same among its stockholders for use on lands owned by them, to deliver water to a member for use on his land for irrigation, for he has no adequate remedy at law, and his rights to have water furnished on his land is an inseparable adjunct to his membership, and a plain duty rests on the corporation to furnish the water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 252*)—IRRIGATION COMPANIES—RIGHTS OF MEMBERS —“OWNED.”

One in possession of unsurveyed public land, with intent to procure title thereto and preparing the land for cultivation and planting a crop thereon, is the owner of the land within the articles of incorporation of a corporation organized to secure a supply of water for irrigation purposes, and to distribute the same among its stockholders for use on lands “owned” by them, for the word “owned” means held or occupied, and the words “owning,” “owner,” and “owned” being general terms, and their precise meaning depending on the nature of the subject-matter and the connection in which they are used (quoting Words and Phrases, vol. 6, p. 5134).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

In Bank. Case Transferred from District Court of Appeal, Second District.

Petition in the District Court of Appeal by J. J. Miller for a writ of mandate against the Imperial Water Company, No. 8. A demurrer to the petition was sustained, and the case transferred to the Supreme Court. Demurrer overruled, with leave to answer.

Conkling & Brown, for petitioner. Eshleman & Swing and Stephens & Stephens (John M. Eshleman and Haines & Haines, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELOTTI, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate originally made to the District Court of Appeal for the Second District. That court sustained a demurrer to the petition and denied the writ upon the ground that the alleged right sought to be enforced rests wholly upon contract, and that mandamus will not lie to enforce contractual duties. The matter was ordered transferred to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal.

As stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal: “The petition alleges that respondent is a corporation organized for the purpose of securing a supply of water for irrigation, domestic, and other purposes from a named source, and to distribute the same at cost among its stockholders for use upon lands owned by them within certain defined boundaries. That in carrying out such purpose respondent acquired a perpetual right to a certain quantity of water sufficient to furnish four acre feet of water per annum for each outstanding share of the capital stock of respondent, and by the same contract provided for the construction of canals and ditches through which to deliver said water for irrigation purposes to the lands of its stockholders throughout the territory described, and that such canals and ditches pass through the lands of petitioner. That since the completion of these canals and ditches the other stockholders of respondent have been accustomed to receive and do receive from it water for the irrigation of any and all lands occupied by them within the said territory. That petitioner occupies a tract of land situate * * * within the exterior boundaries described, the same being unsurveyed public lands belonging to the United States, and which land petitioner has entered with intent to procure government title thereto (describing the land), has prepared the land for cultivation, planted a crop thereon, and the same is ready for irrigation, and if not irrigated speedily the crop will perish and be lost. That he is the owner of 320 shares of stock of the respondent corporation which entitle him to water to irrigate 320 acres of land, has demanded said water, has offered to pay all proper charges therefor, and is now ready and willing to pay the same, and that he is not receiving any water by reason of his ownership of said stock elsewhere, but that respondent refuses to deliver him any water. He asks for a writ of mandate from this court commanding respondent to deliver water to him upon his lands so occupied for the same price and upon the same terms as it delivers water to its other stockholders.”

We are of the opinion that the general rule that the writ of mandate will not be used for the enforcement of contract rights of a private or personal nature, and that obligations which rest wholly upon contract, and which involve no question of trust or official duty, cannot be enforced by mandamus (High's Extra. Legal Remedies, § 25), does not preclude the remedy upon the facts alleged. Assuming for the moment that plaintiff is the “owner” of the land upon which he desires water from defendant, within the meaning of that term as used in the articles of incorporation of defendant, we have the case of a member of a corporation who is improperly precluded by the corporation from participating in the only practical right resulting from such membership, that of having water available for the purpose furnished at cost upon his land, in proportion to the amount of stock held by him. He is seeking to enforce a plain right based entirely upon his membership in a mutual water company, deprivation of which right would practically exclude him for the time from all privileges of membership, in a case where it must be held under the decisions, there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, in the ordinary course of law. It is one of the well-recognized offices of the remedy by mandamus to enforce the plain rights of stockholders or members of corporations in the absence of any other adequate remedy. See High's Extra. Legal Remedies, § 276; Clark & Marshall on Priv. Corp. § 265c; Purdy's Beach on Priv. Corps. § 575. While a duty giving the right is often expressly imposed by statute on a corporation for the benefit of its members and stockholders, such rights are often in a sense based upon contract alone, where clearly they are not based on contract in the sense contemplated by the rule to which we have heretofore referred. For instance, nothing is more thoroughly established than the rule that mandamus will lie to restore to his corporate rights a member of a corporation who has been improperly disfranchised or irregularly removed from his connection with the corporation, and yet his right in this regard generally rests wholly on his contract of membership. The same rule appears to us to be applicable where the member is being excluded from participation in the benefits afforded by the corporation to its members, and there is no other adequate remedy. In the case at bar, the stockholder's rights to have water furnished on his land is not based on any special contract entered into by him with the corporation, but is an inseparable adjunct of his membership, and it is a plain duty resting on the corporation in the exercise of its corporate functions to furnish him such water.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The main point made by defendant on the merits is that the petition does not show that plaintiff is the "owner" of the land upon which he desires water to be furnished, and that, according to the petition, stockholders are entitled under the articles of incorporation only to water on lands "owned" by them. As we have seen, the petitioner alleges that "he occupies" the land, and that the same is "unsurveyed public land belonging to the United States," which he "has entered with intent to procure government title thereto." According to the petition, the limitation as to lands in the articles of incorporation is in the statement of the purposes of the corporation, and is as follows: To obtain the water, "and to distribute the same at cost among its stockholders for use upon lands owned by them within the following exterior boundaries, namely," etc. The terms "owning," "owner," and "owned" depend somewhat for their signification upon the connection in which they are used. They are not technical, but general terms, and are therefore liberally construed; "the precise meaning depending upon the nature of the subject-matter and the connection in which" they are used. See 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. 233; 6 Words & Phrases, p. 5134 et seq. We are of the opinion that, upon the facts alleged, the plaintiff must be held to be the owner of the land for which he desires water, within the meaning and intent of the articles of incorporation. The absolute ownership thereof is, of course, in the United States; but the plaintiff is in the undisputed possession thereof, having settled upon the same with intent to procure a government title when it can be obtained, and he is deemed the owner and entitled to maintain his possession and use of the land as against all except the government, or some one hereafter deriving title from the government. See Page v. Fowler, 37 Cal. 111; Doran v. C. P. R. R. Co., 24 Cal. 257. According to a statement in the brief of counsel for plaintiff, which is not disputed by counsel for defendant, the present status of all the land in the district described in the articles of incorporation is the same as of that occupied by plaintiff, viz., unsurveyed government land as to which a survey has been ordered, and as to which no legal entry can as yet be made. The plain object of the limitation as to use was simply to confine the use of water to be furnished at cost to any stockholder to land within the district devoted to his exclusive use. The whole purpose of the formation of the corporation was to provide a system by which all those possessing and occupying the land in the described district might obtain water with which to irrigate their respective holdings, equitably apportioning the expense thereof, and the word "owned" as used in the articles of incorporation means no more than the word "held" or the word "occupied" would have meant. Considering the nature and object of the defendant corporation, this appears to us to be clear.

In all other respects we are of the opinion that the petition makes out a sufficient case for mandamus as against the general demurrer. In the District Court of Appeal, the defendant asked leave to file an answer; but no ruling was made on such application in view of the conclusion on demurrer.

The demurrer to the petition for writ of mandate is overruled, with leave to defendant to answer within 10 days after this decision becomes final.

We concur: SLOSS, J; SHAW, J; LORIGAN, J; MELVIN, J; HENSHAW, J.

(156 Cal. 31)

McNAIR v. IMPERIAL WATER CO., NO. 1.
(L. A. 2,312.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1909.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by James McNair against the Imperial Water Company, No. 1. From a judgment denying an application for a writ of mandate, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Conkling & Brown, for appellant. Eshleman & Swing and Stephens & Stephens (John M. Eshleman and Haines & Haines, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Imperial county, denying an application for a writ of mandate. The judgment was entered after an order sustaining a general demurrer to the petition and the refusal of plaintiff to amend.

The facts alleged in the petition show, in effect, the same grounds for relief, and in substantially the same form, as those considered in an opinion this day filed by this court in a proceeding entitled J. J. Miller v. Imperial Water Company, No. 8 (L. A. 2,311) 103 Pac. 227. For the reasons therein stated, we are of the opinion that the demurrer to the petition in this case was improperly sustained by the trial court.

The judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer of defendant, with leave to answer if it be so advised.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

---

155 Cal. 797

RAGGIO et al. v. PALMTAG et al.

(S. F. 4,844.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 29, 1909.
On Rehearing, July 29, 1909.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 14*)—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

A mortgagee, who becomes the purchaser at a void foreclosure sale, and who enters into occupation of the property under a deed improperly executed and delivered by the commissioner, is a mortgagee in possession, and the mortgagor's assignee cannot quiet title to the property against the mortgagee without paying, or offering to pay, the debt secured by the mortgage, though such debt is barred by limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. MORTGAGES (§ 294*)—MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION.

The mortgagee of homestead and other lands presented to the administrator of the deceased mortgagor a claim, giving the date of the mortgage, and setting out the note secured thereby, but without giving the book and page of the record in which the mortgage was recorded, or the names of the mortgagor and mortgagee. The claim was allowed by the administrator, and approved by the court. After the death of the mortgagor's wife, who had joined in the mortgage, the court made an order for the sale of the real estate, and the mortgagee purchased the same, and entered into possession thereof. Held, that the mortgagee was a mortgagee in possession, though the claim presented to the administrator did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1497.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 294.*]

3. HOMESTEAD (§ 141*)—DESCENT.

On the death of one making a declaration of homestead on described land, the title thereto vests in his surviving wife, subject to a mortgage by him in which she joined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

4. HOMESTEAD (§ 153*)—DEATH OF MORTGAGORS—FORECLOSURE.

Where one making a declaration of homestead on described land executed a mortgage thereon, in which the wife joined, and then died, leaving the wife surviving, the mortgagee could, after the death of the wife, foreclose the mortgage on the property, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1500, by waiving recourse against any other property of the wife, without presenting a claim against her estate, under section 1475, notwithstanding section 1485, relating to the rights of persons succeeding to the rights of homestead owners, for on the death of the wife the homestead ceased to exist.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Dec. Dig. § 153.*]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 459*) — FORECLOSURE — ISSUES.

Where the cross-complaint, praying for the foreclosure of a mortgage, alleged that designated persons claimed an interest in the premises, which was subject to the mortgage, and the designated persons in their answer denied that their claims were subject to the mortgage, the issue required the designated persons to prove their right of priority, and on failure so to do, they could not complain of a finding against them, for the cross-complainant made out a prima facie case by proving the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage securing it, and the other formal matters required by statute.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 459.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 227*)—PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS—SUFFICIENCY—"INT."—"& INT."

A claim presented to an administrator for a specified sum "& int.," allowed by the administrator and approved by the court in similar language, is a claim for the specified sum and interest, the abbreviation, under Code Civ. Proc. § 186, standing for the word "interest."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 227.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3682.]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 241*)—CLAIMS—INTEREST.

A holder of a note secured by mortgage, who, on the death of the debtor, presented a claim based on the note and mortgage to the administrator, and obtained the allowance of interest up to a specified time, was not deprived of future interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

On Rehearing.

8. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 228*)—PRESENTATION OF CLAIMS—SUFFICIENCY.

A claimant presented to the administrator of the deceased debtor a verified claim, and gave the date of the mortgage securing it, without giving the names of the parties thereto, and incorrectly describing one of the parcels of the land mortgaged. The claim was presented in a sealed envelope containing the original note and mortgage. Held that, as the note and mortgage were made a part of the claim, it was sufficiently presented within Code Civ. Proc. § 1497, relating to claims against decedents.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Benito County; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by Luis Raggio and others against Fredericka Palmtag and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Briggs & Hudner, for appellants. H. W. Scott and F. H. Gould, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. In 1868, Luis Raggio made a declaration of homestead upon the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 4, township 13 S., range 4 E., Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian, containing 160 acres of land. The document was duly recorded in Monterey county, and was transcribed according to law in the records of San Benito county after that county was created. In December, 1894, Luis Raggio and Maria Ynezia Raggio, his wife, mortgaged said land, together with other lands adjoining, making in all about 475 acres, to Fredericka Palmtag, to secure the payment of a certain promissory note of \$4,000, executed by both of them, payable four years after date, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, compounding semiannually. In 1895 Luis Raggio died, leaving as his survivors his wife, Maria Ynezia Raggio, several children, and the children of a deceased daughter. A son, Luis Raggio, one of the plaintiffs in this action, and William Palmtag, were duly appointed and qualified as administrators of the estate. They filed an inventory of the property, including the tract described in the declaration of homestead, but failed to mention the fact that the homestead estate existed. Within the time prescribed by law, however, Fredericka Palmtag presented a purported claim based upon her note and mortgage. This was allowed by the administrator, and approved by the court. In October, 1896, Maria Ynezia Raggio died, leaving the same surviving children and grandchildren as did her husband, Luis. In February, 1897, after her death, the administrators of Luis Raggio's estate obtained an order of court to sell all the property of the estate, which consisted solely of the real estate subject to the mortgage of Fredericka Palmtag. This land was finally sold to the mortgagee for the sum of \$5,318, being \$218 in excess of the amount of her claim. She was induced to make this bid by the administrators, as the estate owed \$218 more than the money on hand. The real value of the property as found by the court was at that time, and at the time of the trial of this action, \$3,000. In February, 1899, this action was commenced by Luis Raggio, who had acquired all of the interests of his brothers and sisters. He was joined in the action by his minor nephews and nieces, represented by their guardian. Defendant Johnson was a tenant under Fredericka Palmtag, and it is not necessary for the purposes of this case to discuss his interest. Defendant Palmtag answered, and by cross-complaint set up the existence of her note and mortgage and the proceedings in the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased. She prayed that the note and mortgage be restored and reinstated, and that the mortgage be foreclosed. Judgment was given in favor of defendant and cross-complainant. This appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The trial court found that Fredericka Palmtag was a mortgagee in possession, and the most serious problems in this case arise out of the discussion of this finding. Appellants contend that the claim presented against the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased, by Fredericka Palmtag was so deficient as to be a nullity. Section 1497, Code Civ. Proc., prescribes the requisites for such a claim as follows: "If the claim or any part thereof be secured by mortgage, or other lien which has been recorded in the office of the recorder of the county in which the land affected by it lies, it shall be sufficient to describe the mortgage or lien, and refer to the date, volume and page of its record. If, in any case, the claimant has left any original voucher in the hands of the executor or administrator, or suffered the same to be filed in court, he may withdraw the same when a copy thereof has been already, or is then, attached to his claim. A brief description of every claim filed must be entered by the clerk in the register, showing the name of the claimant, the amount and character of the claim, rate of interest, and date of allowance."

In the purported claim here considered the property is not accurately described. The date of the mortgage is given but not the book and page of the record in which it is copied; and, although the note is set out in the claim, the names of the mortgagors and mortgagee are not given. In relation to this claim the court below found: "That at the time of the presentation of the said claim described in said cross-complaint, and presented with and accompanying the same, said Fredericka Palmtag did present and leave with the said administrators of the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased, the original note described in said cross-complaint, and the original mortgage described and set out in said cross-complaint, and that there was at that time indorsed on said mortgage, the place, date, volume, and page of its record in the records of San Benito county; that, except as herein found, said claim did not refer to the date, volume, or page of such record. That at the time of the sale of the real estate, described in, and set forth in, the answer and cross-complaint of Fredericka Palmtag by said administrators, to defendant Fredericka Palmtag, plaintiff Luis Raggio, then one of the administrators of the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased, had actual notice that the homestead, described in the cross-complaint of Fredericka Palmtag herein, had been declared upon the property therein described."

Appellants' theory is that the jurisdictional prerequisites of the presentation of a claim in due form having failed, the lien of the mortgage was forever lost, citing Estate of Turner, 128 Cal. 383, 60 Pac. 967, and other cases. Whatever might be the force of such a theory in a direct appeal involving the order of sale or other matters in the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased, we think that, under the settled law in California, the respondent was properly found to be a mortgagee in possession. It has been held that, where the mortgagee becomes the purchaser at a void foreclosure sale, and enters into occupation of the property under the deed improperly executed and delivered by the commissioner, he is nevertheless a mortgagee in possession, and the mortgagor's assignee cannot quiet his title to the property against such mortgagee without paying, or offering to pay, the debt for the security of which the mortgage was created. Burns v. Hiatt, 149 Cal. 621, 87 Pac. 196, 117 Am. St. Rep. 157. The same rule applies even when the debt secured by the mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations. Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 461, 27 Pac. 763. See, also, Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 276, 17 Pac. 225; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Zellerbach v. Allenberg, 99 Cal. 69, 33 Pac. 786; Peshine v. Ord, 119 Cal. 311, 51 Pac. 536, 63 Am. St. Rep. 131.

In Ions v. Harbison, 112 Cal. 260, 44 Pac. 572, this court held that a purchaser at a probate sale cannot be deprived of possession by the grantee of the surviving mortgagor without full payment of the debt, even though certain proceedings preliminary to the sale were not in accordance with statutory requirements. That case presents some resemblance to this. In that case, as in this, the homestead property had been mortgaged, and the title to the homestead vested in the surviving husband upon the death of his wife, subject, however, to the mortgage which had been executed by both husband and wife to secure payment of a certain promissory note. The property was sold to satisfy the mortgage, and to defray expenses of administration. In that case the court says: "Under these circumstances the plaintiff contends that the property in question was not subject to administration, and that therefore the court 'had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter administered upon.' But section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, 'if the homestead selected and recorded prior to the death of the decedent, be returned in the inventory appraised at not exceeding five thousand dollars in value, or was previously appraised as provided in the Civil Code, and such appraised value did not exceed that sum, the superior court must, by order, set it off to the persons in whom title is vested by the preceding section,' and also provides for the payment of existing liens thereon. It is therefore clear that the court has jurisdiction over the homestead for some purposes; and it seems to follow that, if the court, from ignorance of the fact that it was a homestead, or by inadvertence, or mistake of law, made an order not authorized by the statute, its proceedings, however erroneous, would not be without jurisdiction, and hence would be valid as against a collateral attack." In that case plaintiff, a grantee of the surviving husband, stood in the same position as that occupied by the plaintiffs here. There, as here, it was asserted by appellant that the order of sale was made without the proper performance of acts giving the court jurisdiction. The requirements of section 1537 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not strictly followed. In commenting upon this objection the court said: "There were many errors and irregularities in the proceeding; but, as was said in Burris v. Kennedy, supra, 108 Cal. 331, 41 Pac. 458, 'if the court had jurisdiction, errors in the exercise of it, however gross, would not render the decision invalid.' Appellants' counsel frankly admit the force of the rule as announced in Ions v. Harbison, but insist that the doctrine of that case cannot be upheld. We can see no reason for recalling or changing anything in that case, particularly in view of the conclusions reached in the decision of the later case of Burns v. Hiatt, supra. Nor is the force of the decision in Ions v. Harbison abated by the finding here that the plaintiffs became the owners of the fee. In that case it was directly held that the title to the homestead vested in the surviving husband upon the death of his wife, subject to the lien of the mortgage, and the source of plaintiffs' title was created in identically the same manner.

The lower court correctly held that Mrs. Palmtag was a mortgagee in possession, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider in detail the suggestion of respondents that plaintiff Luis Raggio, having as administrator approved Mrs. Palmtag's claim, and having participated in the transaction whereby she was induced to pay $218 in money, and to accept $3,000 worth of land in satisfaction of a legitimate claim of more than $5,000, was estopped in a court of equity from asserting a legal title to her prejudice. We think, however, that as to him there is merit in this contention; and, whether the estoppel would extend only to his one-sixth interest in his mother's estate (as his counsel declare it could only do in any event), or to the after-acquired additional four-sixths as well, he can hardly be looked upon as a suitor to be highly considered by a court of equity.

The title to the mortgaged property having vested in the widow of Luis Raggio, deceased, on his death, subject to the mortgage, it follows that Mrs. Palmtag had the right to foreclose her mortgage upon that property. This she proceeded to do under section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure, waiving recourse against any other property of the estate of Maria Ynezla Raggio, deceased. Appellants contend that such suit could not be brought without the presentation of a claim against the estate. It is admitted that the homestead ceased to exist upon the death of Mrs. Raggio. See Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 64 Pac. 995. But appellants maintain that, inasmuch as, under section 1485 of the Code of Civil Procedure the homestead descends from the successor thereto, and is taken by her heirs, having "all the rights and benefits conferred by law" upon such "successor," therefore the heirs had the same right conferred upon them as in cases where the homestead does not cease to exist upon the death of one of the parents, to have the property other than the homestead first applied to the payment of the debt that was secured by the mortgage. But when the homestead ceased to exist there could obviously be no necessity for the application of section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If we grant that the property which had been the homestead could not under section 1485 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be subjected to the ordinary debts of the estate, nevertheless it might, under section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be subjected to foreclosure of a lien upon that very property, by a waiver of recourse against the other assets of the estate. During her lifetime Mrs. Raggio might have mortgaged the homestead, which had come to her by succession, without any existing liens; and the mortgage might have been satisfied out of the very property upon which she had voluntarily placed it. Having joined in the mortgage before this succession, which took place upon her husband's death, she stood in the same position which she would have occupied had the incumbrance been placed upon the property by her single act after his demise. By the application of section 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure the property is disposed of just as it would have been if foreclosure had occurred during her lifetime. If, on the contrary, we should hold that section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be followed, we would be giving to her heirs greater privileges than she enjoyed in her lifetime, instead of the same "rights and benefits conferred by law."

In the cross-complaint there was an allegation in the usual form that N. C. Briggs and J. L. Hudner had, or claimed to have, some interest or estate in the premises described in Mrs. Palmtag's mortgage, but that such claims or interests were subject and subordinate to the Fredericka Palmtag mortgage and the lien thereof. In their answer to the cross-complaint they merely deny that their claims are subsequent to those of the cross-complainant. The rights of Messrs. Briggs and Hudner do not seem to have been litigated. No specific claim or lien, or demand of any kind, was set up by them, either by pleading or in any other manner. We think that the issue demands that whatever rights they had should have been asserted by Messrs. Briggs and Hudner, and proof as to the priority of their claims should have been introduced by them. Having failed to present any such proof, they cannot now complain of the finding against them. The demandant makes out a prima facie case when he proves the execution and delivery of the note and mortgage, and the other formal matters required by the statute. 2 Jones on Mortgages, § 1295; Burridge v. Fogg, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 183.

In the case of Foster v. Bowles, 138 Cal. 451, 71 Pac. 495, there was an allegation in the complaint that one of the defendants had, or claimed to have, some "right, title," etc., to said mortgaged lands. This averment was met by a denial of defendant in the answer. At the trial this defendant defaulted; and, as no proof was offered or made with respect to the allegations of the answer, these averments are found to be untrue, a finding which was sustained by this court. See, also, Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 608, 29 Pac. 220.

Objection is made to the amount of the judgment, on the ground that interest was waived at the time of the presentation of the claim of Fredericka Palmtag against the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased. The demand was for $4,000 "& int." The approval by the administrators and the allowance by the court were both expressed in the same manner, using the abbreviation "int." It is contended that this is a meaningless collocation of letters, not sufficient to support the demand, the approval, or the allowance. Section 186 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: "Such abbreviations as are in common use may be used, and numbers may be expressed by figures or numerals in the customary manner." The very form used in this demand has been recognized by the Supreme Court of Illinois as "beyond question an abbreviation of the word 'interest.'" Belford v. Beatty, 145 Ill. 414, 34 N. E. 254. We think the lower court very properly recognized it as representing that word.

There is no merit in the contention that because the allowance of interest was made on August 13, 1895, no further interest could be claimed after that date. There is nothing in Jones v. Waldon, 145 Cal. 523, 78 Pac. 1046, in conflict with this theory, nor does the case of Consolidated Nat. Bank of San Diego v. Hayes, 112 Cal. 75, 44 Pac. 469, announce any different doctrine. In the former case the claim itself was allowed for a small fraction of the original demand, and that was held to be a rejection of the balance; in the latter case the allowance was for the principal only, and that was held to be a rejection of the claim for accrued interest, which barred its collection, after the running of section 1493 of the Code of Civil Procedure, without the commencement of suit.

There are no other specifications of error that require special attention.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; SHAW, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur in the judgment. I am of the opinion that it should here be held that there was a sufficient presentation of the mortgage claim against the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased, to save the rights of the mortgagee, and that it was not necessary to present any claim against the estate of Maria Ynezia Raggio.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing is denied. In response to the points therein presented we think it proper to give as an additional reason for the affirmance of the judgment; that stated in the concurring opinion of Justice ANGELLOTTI. The court below held, in effect, that the mortgage claim was duly presented for allowance against the estate of Luis Raggio, deceased. This was fully established by the findings, and also by the evidence, which is not contradicted, and which is somewhat more specific than the findings. The claim was properly verified. It attempted to state the contents of the mortgage, and the statement was amply sufficient to identify it, except for the fact that the names of the mortgagor and mortgagee were not given, and that one of the parcels of land mortgaged was incorrectly described; the mistake being obviously a mere clerical inaccuracy. But the claim was presented to the administrator in a sealed envelope, and with it were inclosed the original note and mortgage, mentioned in the statement of the claim. The provisions of section 1497, Code Civ. Proc., regarding the reference to the record of the mortgage, in the statement of a claim secured thereby, are enabling, and not restrictive or exclusive. The purpose of the reference is to afford means whereby the administrator may ascertain the terms of the mortgage and the land it covers, and the statute allows a mere reference to the record, instead of the full statement of its terms which might otherwise be necessary. It is plain that, although any other mode of statement which fully informs the administrator of the terms of the mortgage would be sufficient, the claimant did not, in the present case, make the required reference to the book and page of the mortgage record, but instead thereof she afforded much more satisfactory means of information of its contents. She inclosed with the claim the original note and mortgage, all being in the same envelope and sealed. This made the note and mortgage as effectually parts of the claim as if they had been attached or fastened thereto in the ordinary manner, and it gave the administrator full knowledge of its contents. This was the object to be attained by the citation to the record. It was thus fully accomplished by more satisfactory evidence, and the presentation was complete. Estate of McDougald, 146 Cal. 193, 79 Pac. 878. The description of the land as set forth in the statement of the claim did not purport to be anything more than a copy of the description contained in the mortgage, and the clerical error therein was completely controlled and corrected by the original mortgage which accompanied it. Such an error so entirely cured would not invalidate the claim.

156 Cal. 82

OLCESE v. JUSTICE'S COURT OF FIRST JUDICIAL TP., CONTRA COSTA COUNTY, et al. (S. F. 5,194.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1909.)

1. CERTIORARI (§ 5*)—REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, empowering the Supreme Court to issue writs of certiorari, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, providing that the writ may be granted when an inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction and there is no appeal, the Supreme Court will not issue certiorari to review the judgment of a justice; there being right of appeal from it to the superior court, one of common-law jurisdiction, which can itself, in a proper case, issue certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. CERTIORARI (§ 5*)—REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Where a judgment of a justice has been appealed to and affirmed by the superior court, such judgment of affirmance is res judicata of the matter, and estops any review by the Supreme Court, on certiorari, of the judgment of the justice, leaving only the remedy of reviewing by certiorari, the judgment of the superior court, from which there is no appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. APPEARANCE (§ 9*)—GENERAL APPEARANCE.

There is, in effect, a general appearance, waiving informalities in the service of process, where, in addition to a motion to quash the service, in which defendant's appearance was special, he demurred to the complaint, not only on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the person, when such demurrer plainly would not lie, but also on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the subjects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 42-52; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Petition of G. B. Olcese for writ of review, directed against the Justice's Court of the First Judicial Township, County of Contra Costa, State of California, and C. H. Hayden, justice of the peace in and for said township. Writ discharged.

William M. Cannon, for petitioner. C. H. Marks, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. An action upon contract was brought in the justice's court for the First judicial township of the county of Contra Costa against petitioner, Olcese. The complaint was in all respects sufficient to show jurisdiction in the justice's court of the subject-matter of the action. Code Civ. Proc. § 832, subd. 7. It failed to allege, however, that the defendant's contract was in writing; and while, under the provision of the Code last above cited, jurisdiction of the subject-matter is in the justice's court, whether the contract be oral or in writing, yet, by the provisions of section 848, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in 1907, service upon the defendant may not be had outside of the county in which the action is brought, unless the contract be in writing. Service in this case was had upon the defendant in the city and county of San Francisco. He appeared in the justice's court by motion, supported by affidavit, to quash the service of the summons for the reason above indicated, and at the same time demurred; his demurrer reading as follows: "The defendant in the above-entitled action, specially appearing for said purpose, demurs to the complaint in said action, on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction of the person of this defendant or of the subject-matter of said action. Wherefore said defendant prays to be hence dismissed, with his costs herein incurred." The justice's court denied the motion, and overruled the demurrer; and, this petitioner declining to proceed further, judgment by default was entered against him. From that judgment in due time he prosecuted his appeal to the superior court of the county of Contra Costa upon questions of law. The superior court of Contra Costa affirmed the judgment of the justice's court. Thereafter this petitioner sued out certiorari to review the judgment, not of the superior court, but of the justice's court. The first question presented is whether or not petitioner has mistaken his remedy—that is to say, whether his right to a certiorari, if certiorari should be issued at all, is not limited to a review of the judgment of the superior court—second, upon the merits whether or not, conceding that petitioner was improperly served in the city and county of San Francisco, his appearance by demurrer did not constitute a general appearance so as to waive the irregularity in the service of summons.

The Constitution (article 6, § 4) vested this court with power to issue writs of certiorari. At the time this constitutional provision was passed, it was well settled and well understood that certiorari was not a writ of right, that the granting or refusing to issue it rested in the discretion of the court, and that by modern common-law usage, and by the rules laid down by the decisions of this state under its earlier Constitution, the writ would not be issued where the matter sought to be reviewed could be heard and determined upon appeal. "The remedy of defendant is by appeal, and not by writ of review. The latter lies only when the former does not." People v. Shepard, 28 Cal. 115; Comstock v. Clemens, 19 Cal. 80; Clary v. Hoagland, 13 Cal. 173. When the judges declared that certiorari would not issue when there was an appeal, and when, following this, the Code of Civil Procedure (section 1068) provided that a writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal, exercising judicial function, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal and there is no appeal, this language was not limited to the case where no appeal lay to the court petitioned for certiorari, but where no appeal lay to a court of general common-law jurisdiction, such a court as could itself, in a proper case, issue certiorari. Comstock v. Clemens, supra. That the superior court is such a court, with the fullest common-law and equity jurisdiction, is not questioned, and, moreover, it is a court which the Constitution vests with power to issue this writ. Article 6, § 5. By the same Constitution is vested in the superior court appellate jurisdiction "in such cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law." The law has provided for an appeal such as was taken in this case from the justice's court to the superior court, with full power and jurisdiction in the latter court to determine the question of law whether or not the justice's court acquired jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. The complete controversy here presented for review was presented to the superior court, and by the judgment of that court of general jurisdiction was determined adversely to this petitioner's contention.

The question which thus arises then is, May petitioner ignore a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction given upon this matter, and here seek by certiorari to have the judgment of the justice's court reviewed, or will the judgment of the superior court estop him from so proceeding, leaving open to him, as his proper method of redress, an application for a writ of certiorari from the judgment of the superior court, from which judgment the law had provided no appeal? We think, beyond doubt, that the judgment of the superior court so operates as an estoppel. It is the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, fully empowered to pass upon the law and the facts. Having done so, the matter becomes res judicata, with all the binding force and effect by way of estoppel which attaches to any other judgment. It is no argument against this to say that the effect is that the Legislature deprives this court of its constitutional power to review, under certiorari, the judgment of a justice's court, by providing that an appeal may be taken from such judgment to the superior court. Certiorari to check excesses in jurisdiction was not employed where there was an appeal. The fact of an appeal relieved from the necessity of, and denied the right to, certiorari. That the judgment of the superior court is in all respects a judgment by a competent court, and one of general jurisdiction, is not questioned. It may not be ignored in any succeeding effort to assail the judgment of the justice's court. It raises an estoppel against any such effort until it itself shall be overthrown. This, since an appeal from it is denied, may be undertaken under certiorari. But so long as the judgment of the superior court stands unassailed, that judgment, formally decreeing the validity of the judgment of the justice's court, cannot be ignored, nor in another proceeding swept aside. The appeal from the judgment of the justice's court, heard and determined by the superior court, was in all respects the equivalent of a writ of error, and the application to this court for certiorari is but an attempt to obtain a second writ of error, directed, not against the appellate judgment, but against the judgment of the justice's court, upon matters adjudicated by a court of general jurisdiction under the first appeal or writ of error. It is well settled that this cannot be done. Says the Supreme Court of Massachusetts (Hayes v. Collins, 114 Mass. 54): "If the judgment upon the former petition had passed upon the merits, it might well be held to be a conclusive adjudication that the petitioner was not entitled to have the original judgment reviewed, just as the affirmance of the judgment upon a writ of error is held to be a bar to a second writ of error for any cause which existed at the time of that judgment." State v. Water Com'rs, 30 N. J. Law, 247; Illingworth v. Rich, 58 N. J. Law, 507, 34 Atl. 757.

Such are the general principles, and the recognized practice in such a case as this has been to seek a review of the judgment of the superior court. Sherer v. Sup. Ct., 94 Cal. 354, 29 Pac. 716; Buckley v. Sup. Ct., 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8. This court has never recognized the right of a petitioner to a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of a justice's court after appeal taken and determined in the superior court. It has reviewed the judgment of a justice's court only under such exceptional circumstances as those indicated in Elder v. Superior Court, 136 Cal. 364, 68 Pac. 1022, where petitioner's power to appeal was lost by reason of the fact that he was never notified of the day set for trial, or the rendition of judgment against him.

But if consideration be paid the merits of this controversy, petitioner is not entitled to a judgment at our hands upon certiorari. For, notwithstanding the alleged defect in the service on him of the summons, if he made a general appearance in the justice's court, he will be bound by that appearance as having waived the informality of his summons. Pleas based upon lack of jurisdiction of the person are in their nature pleas in abatement, and find no especial favor in the law. They amount to no more than the declaration of the defendant that he has had actual notice, is actually in court in a proper action, but, for informality in the service of process, is not legally before the court. It is purely a dilatory plea; and, when a defendant seeks to avail himself of it, he must, for very obvious reasons, stand upon his naked legal right, and seek nothing further from the court than the enforcement of that right. He will not be heard to ask of the court anything further than an adjudication upon his plea, and if he does ask anything further, then, by logic of the fact, he must necessarily have waived the irregularity of his summons before the court. Here is one reason for the well-settled rule that, if a defendant wishes to insist upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person, he must specially appear for that purpose only, and must keep out for all purposes except to make that objection. Another reason, equally valid, is that if such defendant shall ask for any relief other than that addressed to his plea, he is seeking to gain an unconscionable advantage over his adversary, whereby, if the determination of the court be in his favor, he may avail himself of it, while, if it be against him, he may fall back upon his plea of lack of jurisdiction of the person. So it is well settled that, if a defendant, under such circumstances, raises any other question, or asks for any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, his appearance is general, though termed special, and he thereby submits to the jurisdiction of the court as completely as if he had been regularly served with summons. In re Clark, 125 Cal. 388, 58 Pac. 22; Security, etc., v. Boston, etc., 126 Cal. 418, 58 Pac. 941, 59 Pac. 296. In the present case the defendant made his motion to quash the service of the summons. In this his appearance was undoubtedly special, as he limited it solely to a request for this specific relief. But he also demurred to the jurisdiction of the court over his person and over the subject-matter of the action. In this case plainly a demurrer to the complaint for lack of jurisdiction over his person could not lie. If in any conceivable case it could lie, such a demurrer also would be treated as a special appearance. But here he went further, and demurred to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the action, a request for relief which the court could not grant him, saving upon the theory that he was regularly before the court. It was relief, moreover, independent and apart from his plea to the jurisdiction of the person, and, if successful, would have worked a dismissal of the action upon an entirely distinct legal ground. That in so demurring he waived the question of the jurisdiction of his person, and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, is abundantly settled. Section 1014, Code Civ. Proc.; Zobel v. Zobel, 151 Cal. 98, 90 Pac. 191; 2 Ency. Plead. & Prac. p. 625; 3 Cyc. p. 505.

For the foregoing reasons, the writ is discharged.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, C.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

156 Cal. 68

TURNER v. MARKHAM. (L. A. 2,212.)
(Supreme Court of California. July 6, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1180*)—REVERSAL—EFFECT—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

Proceedings supplementary to execution fall with the reversal of the judgment on which the proceedings are founded, and an unexecuted order in such proceedings must, after reversal of the judgment, be set aside by the superior court, though the order was affirmed prior to such reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4627, 4628; Dec. Dig. § 1180.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1179*)—REVERSAL—RESTITUTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 957, authorizing the court reversing a judgment to make restitution of property lost by the erroneous judgment, a judgment debtor, who complies with an order in supplementary proceedings requiring him to pay a specified sum to the judgment creditor, may, on the reversal of the judgment on which the proceedings were founded, recover the sum paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4621-4625; Dec. Dig. § 1179.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 781*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—IMMATERIAL QUESTIONS.

The Supreme Court will not retain an appeal, where its consideration and disposition of the merits will not affect any substantial right of the parties, though liability for costs of appeal may be involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 781.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by W. D. Turner against H. H. Markham and others. From an order in proceedings supplementary to execution defendant H. H. Markham appeals. Dismissed.

See, also, 102 Pac. 272.

Joseph R. Patton, for appellant. Porter, Sutton & Cruickshank and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff above named recovered a judgment in the superior court of Los Angeles county against H. H. Markham and George H. Coffin for $116,842.81 and costs. Thereafter he instituted in said court proceedings supplementary to execution, and these proceedings culminated in an order requiring Markham to pay over to the judgment creditor the sum of $4,800 found by the court to be in his hands and under his control. From this order Markham appeals.

If the judgment recovered by the plaintiff were still subsisting, we would be required to examine the points made by the appellant in order to determine whether the court below properly ordered him to make payment of the $4,800. But since the present appeal was taken, we have, in Turner v. Markham (Cal.) 102 Pac. 272, reversed the judgment upon which the execution and the proceedings supplementary to execution were founded. The proceedings to enforce the judgment must fall with the judgment itself. Even if Markham had already complied with the order here appealed from, he would, on reversal of the judgment, have been entitled to recover from the respondent the sum paid. Code Civ. Proc. § 957; Ward v. Sherman (Cal.) 100 Pac. 864. The order being still unexecuted, it is the duty of the superior court, upon reversal of the judgment, to set it aside. And this would be so, even if the order had been affirmed prior to the reversal of the main judgment.

The disposition of this appeal is therefore a matter of indifference to the parties. An affirmation will neither benefit the respondent nor harm the appellant. A reversal will add nothing to the security of the appellant, who can obtain complete relief by a mere request to the court below to vacate the order appealed from. This court has often decided that it will not retain an appeal where its consideration and disposition upon the merits will not affect any substantial right of the parties. The mere fact that liability for costs of appeal may be involved does not affect this conclusion. Estate of Blythe, 108 Cal. 124, 41 Pac. 33; Nelson v. Nelson, 153 Cal. 204, 94 Pac. 880.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(156 Cal. 58)

LINFORTH v. SAN FRANCISCO GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (S. F. 4838.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 6, 1909. Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1909.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 111*)—INJURY TO BUILDINGS—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The rule that the measure of damages for injury to a building by a trespass is the cost of restoring it to its former condition, and the loss of rental during the time required to make the repairs, is the rule established by Civ. Code, § 3333, defining the measure of damages for breach of a noncontract obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 274-278; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 571*)—INJURY TO PROPERTY—OPINION EVIDENCE.

The jury, in making an award of damages for injuries to a building by trespass, are not bound by expert opinions as to the cost of restoring the building but they may proceed on the description thereof as they find it from the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2398; Dec. Dig. § 571.*]

3. DAMAGES (§ 138*)—INJURY TO BUILDING—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

A $30,000 building was injured by an explosion of gas. It was severely jarred and thrown out of plumb. The owner expended $1,120 in temporary repairs. An estimate that it would cost $6,000 more to restore it did not include many details, and the building would not be in as good condition as before. The building rented for about $400 a month, and the owner had lost $680 in rent, and the building had not been repaired. Held, that a verdict of $10,000 for injuries to the building, and $800 for loss of rent, was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 397, 398; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

4. DAMAGES (§ 174*)—INJURY TO BUILDING—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for injuries to a building by an explosion of gas, evidence of the original cost of the building, and that it was as good as new at the time of the accident, was admissible on the issues of the condition of the building, and whether restoration could be made at a reasonable allowance by way of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 462; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

5. GAS (§ 20*)—INJURY TO BUILDING—SIMILAR DAMAGE.

In an action for injuries to a building by explosion of gas negligently permitted to escape between the walls, floors, and studdings thereof evidence of the effect of the explosion on another building in the neighborhood was inadmissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 194*)—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries to a building by explosion of gas escaping from defective pipes, couplings, etc., the evidence showed that three couplings, one of which was defective, was found in the meter room after the explosion, that three new couplings, similar to the three found, had been put in the meter room, and that on the morning of the explosion, and within a short time thereafter, the owner had observed an employé of the gas company in the meter room with couplings, the court properly admitted the couplings in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 679; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—FOUNDATION.

Where, in an action for injuries to a building by an explosion of gas escaping through defective pipes, a witness on direct examination testified for defendant to finding a hole in a meter after the explosion, that the hole was covered with soap, and that on pushing his hand over it, his nail went into the hole, and the gas came out of it, a question on cross-examination as to whether the witness had not stated to the owner of the building that the trouble was due to a pin hole in the meter was proper as laying a foundation for impeachment by proof of contradictory statements, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233-1242; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

8. NEGLIGENCE (§ 141*)—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that defendant's claim of contributory negligence presupposes the existence of negligence of defendant, and if there was no negligence of defendant, there could be no contributory negligence of plaintiff, is not erroneous, as leading the jury to infer that the defense of contributory negligence is a confession of defendant's negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 382-399; Dec. Dig. § 141.*]

9. DAMAGES (§ 210*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that, if the jury found for plaintiff, they would award him such damages as would compensate him for "the injuries complained of" was not erroneous, as leading the jury to award other damages than for the injuries proved.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 537, 538; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 351*)—SPECIAL ISSUE—REFUSAL TO SUBMIT.

It is not error to refuse to submit a special issue conceded by the adverse party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

11. TRIAL (§ 351*)—SPECIAL ISSUE—REFUSAL TO SUBMIT.

It is not error to refuse to submit a special issue covered by other special issues actually propounded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 834; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

12. TRIAL (§ 188*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY.

An instruction, in an action for injury to a building by an explosion of gas, that if defendant's pipes, meters, and connections were free from any leak in a week, or less, before the explosion, the presumption is that they were in such condition at the time of the accident, and unless this presumption is removed, the jury must find for defendant, invades the province of the jury, by directing them as to the inferences which they may draw from facts proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 412; Dec. Dig. § 188.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 981*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—RULINGS OF MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.

The granting of a new trial for newly discovered evidence is largely discretionary with the trial court, and its rulings will not be disturbed unless manifestly abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3876; Dec. Dig. § 981.*]

14. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 528*)—RECORD ON APPEAL—AFFIDAVITS ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Affidavits on a motion for new trial, not authenticated by bill of exceptions, are not properly in the record on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2374, 2385; Dec. Dig. § 528.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Walter H. Linforth against the San Francisco Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See 99 Pac. 716.

Page, McCutchen & Knight, for appellant. Samuel M. Shortridge and Peter F. Dunne, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for injuries to his property, a building in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendant supplied illuminating gas to the building. Its negligence, as alleged, was in its failure to maintain in suitable condition its pipes, meters, connections, and couplings. By reason of this failure gas was permitted to, and did, escape, and collected in large quantities between the walls, floors, and studding in the building, and finally exploded, with consequent injury to the building. The answer does not raise a direct issue, to the effect that the explosion was not occasioned by escaped gas, but denies that the explosion was occasioned through the alleged, or any, negligence of the defendant in allowing gas to escape from its pipes. In separate defenses the answer also charged that the explosion was occasioned by plaintiff's contributory negligence, and by the contributory negligence of plaintiff's tenants. Trial was had before a jury, to which special issues were submitted. The verdict of the jury was in the amount prayed for, $10,800, and from the judgment which followed, and from the court's order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The greater part of the briefs of appellant and respondent is devoted, upon the one hand, to argument that the explosion was not occasioned by gas at all; upon the other hand, to a showing that the evidence adequately establishes that it was so occasioned. (In explanation it should be said that a very unusual circumstance happened, in this: After trial had and judgment rendered one Harry Orchard, alias Frank Berry, imprisoned in a jail in the state of Idaho, awaiting trial for murder, confessed that he caused the explosion by a dynamite bomb placed at one of the entrances of the building [the building consisting of flats], for the purpose of killing Frederick Bradley, a tenant of one of these flats.) But upon this a review of the evidence at length would not be profitable. It must suffice to say that the evidence of plaintiff was directed to showing that the explosion was occasioned by gas; that the tenants, previous to the explosion, had noticed and complained of the odor of escaping gas, and the defendant company had been notified. Plaintiff's evidence was further directed to showing that the point, or points, of escape were in the meters of one or another of the tenants, and in couplings which were defective. In brief, the evidence which plaintiff presented upon these matters was sufficient to justify the submission of the cause to the jury, and to warrant the jury's finding, as it did, that the explosion was occasioned by gas furnished to the building by defendant, and by it being negligently permitted to escape. Indeed defendant's own testimony nowhere seeks to controvert the proposition that the explosion was occasioned by gas. Thus Professor Lowe, called as an expert upon these matters, and testifying on behalf of the defendant, says: "I was familiar with the accident at the time it happened. I saw that the building was pretty badly injured, and knew that a gas explosion had taken place." Professor O'Neil, likewise an expert for the defendant, expresses his belief that the explosion was occasioned by gas, and that it required but a small quantity to produce the result.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The fire marshal, Towe, also a witness for the defendant, testifies: "It was a very simple question to determine the cause of that (the explosion). It was the confining of the gas that caused the explosion. If you fill this room with gas, you are not going to explode it, unless you fill it full, but if you confine it in the wall, you are going to have an explosion." Defendant's evidence was addressed to the proposition that it had been in no way remiss in its duty of inspection and care of its pipes, meters and couplings, and that, not being negligent, either the accident belonged in the category of casualties happening in the exercise of due care, and for which, therefore, the law imputes no blame and charges no liability, or else that it was an accident due to the negligence of one or another of plaintiff's tenants in allowing their gas fixtures or gas grates to become so out of repair that leaks resulted and the explosion followed.

The jury awarded plaintiff $10,000 damages for injuries to the building, and $800 damages loss of rents. The measure of damages in cases such as this is well settled, and is thus expressed by Joyce on Damages: "Where a building has been injured by a trespasser, it has been determined that the measure of damages in an action against him therefor will be the cost of repairing or restoring the building to its former condition where the injury is of such a character that this may be done at a reasonable cost, an allowance also being made for loss of rental during the reasonable time required to make such repairs." This rule has met with general acceptance. Sutherland on Damages, § 1018; Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 10 Pac. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556; Fitzsimmons v. Braun, 199 Ill. 390, 65 N. E. 249, 59 L. E. A. 421; Helbing v. Allegheny Cemetery Co., 201 Pa. 171, 50 Atl. 970; Parish v. Baird, 160 N. Y. 302, 54 N. E. 724; Cincinnati, etc., Co. v. Falconer (Ky.) 97 S. W. 727; Whipple v. Wanskuck Co., 12 R. I. 321; Bradley v. Iowa Cent. Ry. Co., 111 Iowa, 562, 82 N. W. 996; Knight v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. 122 Mo. App. 38, 98 S. W. 81; Choctaw, etc., R. R. Co. v. Alexander, 7 Okl. 591, 54 Pac. 421. This rule allowing compensation for the cost of restoration to the original condition when this can be done at a reasonable expense, together with compensation for the loss of the use of the property, is in precise accord with section 3333 of the Civil Code.

The building had cost $30,000. The damage to it was estimated by the jury, and assessed at $10,000, and this, under the evidence, was not excessive. Besides the actual destruction of the building, it was shown that it was severely wrenched, jarred, and in many places thrown out of plumb. Plaintiff had been compelled to expend $1,120 in patchwork and temporary repairs. A contractor testified, in effect, that it would cost $6,000 more to restore it, and that, even then, it would not be in as good condition as before the explosion, and his estimate did not include many details of additional work, the cost of which the jury was competent to appraise, and did appraise. In making this award they were not even bound by the expert opinions as to the cost. Sutherland on Damages (3d Ed.) § 456, says: "So far as the amount of the verdict depends upon opinion, the jurors are to determine it upon their own judgment. They should proceed upon the description of the subject as they find it from the testimony, and avail themselves of such aid as is afforded to be given them. They are not obliged, however, to yield their own judgment, and should not conform their verdict to such opinions. Their findings may be more or less in amount than that stated by any witness." See, also, City of Springfield v. Darby, 139 Ill. 35, 29 N. E. 860; Dammann v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 186, 53 S. W. 932; Thompson v. De Weese & Co., 25 Colo. 243, 53 Pac. 507; Smith v. Frio County (Tex. Civ. App.) 66 S. W. 711. Nor can it be said that the amount allowed for loss of rents was excessive. Loss to the amount of $680, it was shown, plaintiff had already suffered. The building brought in a rental of about $400 a month. The difference between $680, loss actually sustained, and $800, the amount allowed, was doubtless considered by the jury to be the reasonable prospective loss which would be occasioned when the permanent repairs on the building were undertaken, loss resulting from the necessary suspension of tenancy during the progress of the work.

Evidence of the original cost of the building was admitted. Under the circumstances it was proper so to do. This evidence of original cost, standing alone, would, of course, have slight or no weight in determining the award of damages. It would be of value only in determining whether restoration could be made at a reasonable allowance by way of damages. As the award of damages would be based upon the amount necessary to restore the building to its condition before injury, evidence of the original cost would not at all tend to show what that condition was. But, taken with other evidence in the case, such as was here introduced, it did tend to show the condition of the building at the time of the injury. There was the evidence of a painter, who repainted and overhauled the building less than two months before the explosion, and who testified to its condition then, to the effect that he found it "then practically as good as when it was new." The evidence was not admissible as a criterion of damage, and was not admitted for that purpose. But it was admitted, and was admissible, as a bit of data, which, taken with other evidence, tended to enable the jury to formulate their conclusion upon the condition of the building at the time of the injury.

The court permitted plaintiff to testify, over defendant's objection, to the effect of the explosion upon another building in the immediate neighborhood. Evidence to the effect that the force of the explosion was such as to injure adjoining houses other than that of the plaintiff is held competent in Monroe v. Pac. Dredging Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248. In Fitzsimmons & Connell Co. v. Braun, 199 Ill. 390, 65 N. E. 249, 59 L. R. A. 421, which was an action for injuries to a building by an explosion of dynamite, a witness, in testifying to the damage done to plaintiff's building, was allowed to state, without objection, the damage done to his own building. When defendant produced a witness to testify that the latter's building was not damaged by the explosion, the Supreme Court of Illinois declared that the fact that other buildings at various distances from that of the appellee's were not injured would not be competent, and would tend to introduce collateral issues likely to mislead and confuse the jury. The case is clearly not in point. The damage that was actually done by an explosion is one thing; the damage that was not done is quite another. Proof of it, as the Supreme Court well said, would tend to establish nothing, since the extraordinary freaks of high explosives are well recognized, and would serve to confuse the jury.

Three couplings, one of which was defective, were found in the meter room under the meters, on the Sunday following the explosion. These couplings were produced at the trial. They belonged to the defendant, and fitted its meters. After the explosion, and before these couplings were found, three new couplings similar to the three in question had been put in the meter room connecting some of the meters. On the morning of the explosion, and within a short time thereafter, the plaintiff had observed an employé of the gas company in the meter room near the meters, with some couplings in his hand. Whether they were the actual couplings produced he could not state, though in appearance they were the same. An employé of the defendant was doing some work about the meters, and, when asked by the plaintiff what he was doing, made no response. The superintendent of the defendant, who was present at the time, told the employé to let things alone. Defendant produced evidence to the effect that the couplings in question were old and defective couplings, which had been left by its employés in the meter room long prior to the accident. The couplings produced, under the circumstances, were properly admitted, but that the defense successfully explained away any inference which could be drawn from them, and the faulty condition of one of them, is shown by the special finding of the jury, which eliminates these couplings, or any of them, as the cause of the leakage.

Witness Kelly, called by defendant, on his examination in chief testified to finding a hole in the back of one of the meters after the explosion. His testimony, in effect, was that the hole when found was covered largely, if not entirely, with soap, and, on pushing his hand over it, his nail "went into the hole, and gas came out pretty strong." On cross-examination he was asked that, if in the presence of certain persons named, at the time of his finding the leak, he did not say to the plaintiff that the trouble was due to a pin hole in the meter, caused by rust or defect in the tin. This question, as laying the foundation for impeachment, was proper. If the cause of the leak was due to a pin hole, his statement that his nail went into the hole, and the gas came out pretty strong, was not true. Code Civ. Proc. § 2032; 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 281.

With other instructions, the court charged the jury that: "Defendant's claim of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff or some of his tenants presupposes the existence of negligence on the part of defendant; for, if there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, there could be no contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, or any of the said tenants. Contributory negligence is that degree of negligence," etc. Against this instruction it is urged that it would "naturally lead a not overintelligent jury to infer that the defense of contributory negligence was tantamount to a confession of negligence by the party asserting the defense. That the instruction is sound in point of law may not be questioned. 7 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 373; Kentucky Railroad Co. v. Thomas' Adm'r, 79 Ky. 160, 42 Am. Rep. 208; Kansas City Railroad Co. v. Crocker, 95 Ala. 412, 11 South. 262; Ruter v. Foy, 46 Iowa, 132. Moreover, the instructions, taken as a whole, were fair and quite understandable upon the question. If, as appellant seems to contend, the jury, through ignorance, did not understand them, the fault lies not with the law.

As a part of one of these instructions the court declared to the jury: "If, however, you find that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, you will award him with such damages within the amount claimed as will, in your opinion, compensate him for all the injuries complained of." Standing by itself, and construed as appellant would construe it, the instruction is manifestly erroneous. The plaintiff would be entitled to recover damages only for the injuries complained of and proved. But throughout the instructions the true rule is clearly and repeatedly stated. Reading the particular instruction as a part of the whole, it cannot be believed that the jury could have been misled to appellant's detriment.

There was no error in refusing to submit the special issues proposed by defendant. The first, "Was the hole that now appears in the meter of 1402 Washington street caused by gas, or was it otherwise made?" was not in issue. It was conceded by plaintiff that the hole as it then appeared was not caused by gas. The second, "Did gas escape from any of defendant's meters, pipes, or their connections, on and just prior to the 17th day of November, 1904? If so, specify the source of the leak"—was fully covered by other special issues actually propounded.

156 Cal. 70

Defendant proposed an instruction as follows: "If you shall find that defendant's pipes, meters, and their connections were free from any leak a week or any less time before the explosion, then the presumption is that they were in such condition at the time of such accident; and, unless this presumption is removed by evidence sufficient to convince you to the contrary, you must find that the presumption is true, and your verdict must be given to the defendant." This instruction was properly refused. It invaded the province of the jury, by directing them as to the inference of fact which they should draw from other proven facts. Stone v. Gysler Q. M. Co., 52 Cal. 315; Frazier v. Lynch, 97 Cal. 370, 32 Pac. 319; Omaha, etc., Ass'n v. Mo. Pac. R. R. Co., 42 Neb. 105, 60 N. W. 330; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. (16th Ed.) § 48.

Upon motion for a new trial affidavits were presented touching newly discovered evidence. This evidence was a confession of Harry Orchard that he had occasioned the explosion by dynamite in his attempt to kill Bradley. Orchard's affidavit was not presented, but there are found the affidavits of others to whom his confession was made, and reason is shown why the affidavit of Orchard could not be procured. Counter affidavits were presented in opposition to this. The court denied the motion, and it may not be said that it abused its discretion in so doing. The granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is largely discretionary with the trial court, and the exercise of its discretion will not be disturbed, except in a case of manifest abuse. Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 610, 34 Pac. 342; Hausmann v. Sutter St. R. Co., 139 Cal. 174, 72 Pac. 905; People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 4, 78 Pac. 235; People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 301, 79 Pac. 965. Moreover, in strictness, these affidavits may not here be considered at all. They are not authenticated by bill of exceptions, and are therefore not properly before the court. Herrick v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. 299; Somers v. Somers, 81 Cal. 608, 22 Pac. 967; White v. White, 88 Cal. 430, 26 Pac. 236; Ramsbottom v. Fitzgerald, 128 Cal. 76, 60 Pac. 522; People v. Terrill, 131 Cal. 112, 63 Pac. 141; Esert v. Clock, 137 Cal. 533, 70 Pac. 479; Estate of Dean, 149 Cal. 487, 87 Pac. 13.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.

PIERCE v. STABLEMEN'S UNION, LOCAL NO. 8,760, et al. (S. F. 4,092.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 6, 1909.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 101*) — INTERFERENCE BY EMPLOYÉS WITH BUSINESS OF FORMER EMPLOYER.

That certain of the acts, charged in a complaint for an injunction against a labor union's illegal interference with plaintiff's business, amount to crimes, or threatened crimes, does not prevent the granting of the relief; for, while equity will not restrain the commission of a crime as such, the fact that an act threatening irreparable injury to property rights is of itself criminal does not deprive equity of its right to enjoin its commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 175; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 48*)—GROUNDS—TRESPASSES.

While equity will not enjoin a trespass as such, yet when the acts committed and threatened are in the nature of a continuing trespass, working irreparable injury, they will be enjoined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 87*)—PROTECTION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

St. 1903, p. 289, c. 235, providing that no combination to procure any act to be done in furtherance of any trade dispute between employers and employés shall be restrained, etc., if construed to prevent the court from restraining a labor union from illegal interference with the business of a former employer, is violative of the constitutional right to acquire, enjoy, and protect property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 82*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

The act so construed is invalid as special legislation, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 5, subds. 3, 33, for it legalizes a combination in restraint of trade, entered into by a trade union, which would be illegal if entered into by any other persons or associations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 82.*]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 205*)—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

The act so construed grants privileges and immunities to certain citizens, or classes of citizens, which are not granted on the same terms to all citizens, in violation of Const. art. 1, § 21.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

6. INJUNCTION (§ 101*)—INTERFERENCE WITH EMPLOYERS—"BOYCOTT."

A "boycott" may adopt illegal means, and thus become a conspiracy and illegal, in which case injunction lies to restrain it, or a boycott may employ legal means and methods, and be merely a legitimate combination by a number of men to accomplish a legal result, in which case equity will not restrain it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 855, 856; vol. 8, p. 7592.]

7. CONSPIRACY (§ 8*)—INTERFERENCE WITH EMPLOYERS—"STRIKE."

In the absence of a contract obligation, an organized union of employés may strike, which is done by their ceasing their employment by concerted action, and the "strike" may be based on the refusal of the employer to comply with the employés' demand for the betterment of wages, conditions, hours of labor, the discharge of one employé, the engagement of another, or other considerations which in good faith may be believed to tend toward the advancement of the employes.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-10; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, p. 6698.]

8. INJUNCTION (§ 101*)—INTERFERENCE WITH BUSINESS OF EMPLOYERS—"PRIMARY BOYCOTT"—"SECONDARY BOYCOTT."

An organized union of employes may, by concerted action, cease dealing, either socially or in a business way, with a former employer, and this act is a "primary boycott," and such employes may, by fair oral or written persuasion, induce others interested in, or sympathetic with, their cause to withdraw their social intercourse and business patronage from the employer, and they may request another to withdraw his patronage from the employer, and may use the moral coercion of threatening a like boycott against him if he refuses to do so, and the latter act is the "secondary boycott," but any act which passes beyond moral suasion, and plays by intimidation on physical fears, is unlawful, and will be restrained by injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

9. CONSPIRACY (§ 8*)—STRIKES.

Employes who have struck occupy no contract relation with their former employer, and have no right to coerce him, or attempt to coerce him, by the employment of any other means than those which are equally open to any other individual, or association of individuals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-10; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

10. INJUNCTION (§ 101*)—STRIKES—LEGAL INJURY.

The inconvenience which the public may suffer by a boycott lawfully conducted is not a legal injury, but the public's rights are invaded the moment the means employed are calculated to, and naturally do, incite riot and disturbance of the peace, and equity will restrain such means.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

11. INJUNCTION (§ 101*)—STRIKES—LEGAL INJURY.

Striking union employes may not maintain pickets about their former employer's place of business, for a picket tends to physical intimidation to deter other men from seeking employment in the places vacated by the strikers, and tends to disturbance of the peace, and equity will restrain the strikers from picketing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

Shaw, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by E. G. Pierce against the Stablemen's Union, Local No. 8,760, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Maguire, Lindsay & Wyckoff and Houx & Barrett, for appellants. Bush Finnell, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The plaintiff went into equity seeking an injunction to restrain the defendants from illegal interference with its business. Plaintiff conducted a livery, board, and feed stable in the city and county of San Francisco. The officers and representatives of defendant made request of him to "unionize" his stable by discharging his nonunion employes, and employing union men in their places. Upon his refusal a strike of the union men was declared. Following the strike, a boycott was decreed. A patrol about plaintiff's place of business was established, and, under the findings, these representatives of the defendants, the pickets, "called forth in loud, threatening, and menacing tones to the patrons and customers of plaintiffs not to patronize plaintiffs in their said business. Defendant, the Stablemen's Union, through its agents and representatives, has stated to, and threatened, patrons and customers and other persons dealing with plaintiffs that, if said patrons and customers and other persons continued to patronize and do business with plaintiffs, said Stablemen's Union would cause them respectively to be boycotted in their business." Menacing terms and threatening language were made use of by the agents, representatives, and pickets of the union toward the employes of the plaintiff, such as: "Unfair stable, union men locked out, and nonunion men put in. Look at this stable; the only unfair stable on Market street; the stable that always was, and always will be, unfair. This is a scab stable. When we catch you outside, we will finish you. We will get you yet. It is a scab stable, full of scabs. We will fix you yet. It is a matter of time when we will get you all right. You will never get out of the stable alive. We will break you in half. We will beat you to death. When we catch you outside, we will finish you." A judgment for an injunction followed upon these findings, and that judgment by its terms commanded the defendant, its agents, and employes to desist and refrain "from in any wise interfering with, or harassing, or annoying, or obstructing plaintiffs in the conduct of the business of their stable, known as the 'Nevada Stables,' and situated at No. 1350 Market street, in the city and county of San Francisco; or from in any wise molesting, interfering with, threatening, intimidating, or harassing any employé or employes of plaintiffs; or from intimidating, harassing, or interfering with any customer or customers, patron or patrons, of plaintiffs in connection with the business of plaintiffs, either by boycott or by threats of boycott, or by any other threats; or by any kind of force, violence, or intimidation, or by other unlawful means, seeking to induce any employé or employes of plaintiffs to withdraw from the service of plaintiffs; or by any kind of violence, threats, or intimidation inducing, or seeking to induce, any customer or customers, patron or patrons, of plaintiffs to withdraw their patronage or business from them, or from stationing or placing in front of said plaintiffs' place of business any picket, or pickets, for the purpose of injuring, obstructing, or in any wise interfering with, the business of plaintiffs, or for the purpose of preventing any customer or customers, patron or patrons, of plaintiffs from doing business with them; or from in any other way molesting, intimidating or coercing, or attempt to molest or intimidate or coerce, any customer, patron, or employé of plaintiffs now or hereafter dealing with, or any employé now or hereafter employed by or working for, plaintiffs in their said business." This appeal is from the judgment.

The findings are not attacked. Certain objections to the complaint are presented upon demurrer, and these may be briefly disposed of. The complaint is sufficient to invoke the interposition of a court of equity. It is in this respect similar to the complaint considered in Goldberg-Bowen Co. v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145. The complaint alleges specific acts calling for preventive relief, and is not confined to mere generalities, as was the case in Davitt v. American Bakers' Union, 124 Cal. 99, 56 Pac. 775. The fact that certain of the acts charged amount to crimes, or threatened crimes, does not offer reason why equity will refuse to restrain them. While equity will not attempt to restrain the commission of a crime as such, the fact that an act threatening irreparable injury to property rights is of itself criminal does not deprive a court of equity of its right and power to enjoin its commission. In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092; Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 17 N. E. 307, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443. In like manner, while equity will not enjoin against a trespass as such, yet when the acts committed and threatened are in the nature of a continuing trespass, working irreparable injury, they will be enjoined. Boston R. R. v. Sullivan, 177 Mass. 230, 58 N. E. 689, 83 Am. St. Rep. 275; Lembeck v. Nye, 47 Ohio St. 336, 24 N. E. 686, 8 L. R. A. 578, 21 Am. St. Rep. 828.

Appellants' principal contentions upon the appeal, however, are the following: First, that, as the controversy between these parties arises from and over a trade dispute, the court is powerless to grant any injunction, under the language of "An act to limit the meaning of the word 'conspiracy' and also the use of restraining orders and injunctions as applied to disputes between employers and employes in the state of California approved March 20, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 289, c. 235; Pen. Code, p.

581)"; second, that the boycott is a legal weapon in a trade dispute, and therefore an injunction should not issue to restrain its use, or threatened use; third, that "picketing" as an adjunct to the boycott is itself legal, and may not be forbidden.

1. As to the first of these contentions, this court had occasion in Goldberg, etc., Co. v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, to consider the statute above referred to and relied upon by appellants, and declared that, if the construction there contended for (and here contended for) was the proper construction, this provision of the act was void. Not only would it be void as violative of one's constitutional right to acquire, possess, enjoy, and protect property, but as well would it be obnoxious to the Constitution in creating arbitrarily and without reason a class above and beyond the law, which is applicable to all other individuals and classes. It would legalize a combination in restraint of trade or commerce, entered into by a trades union, which would be illegal if entered into by any other persons or associations. It would exempt trades unions from the operation of the general laws of the land, under circumstances where the same laws would operate against all other individuals, combinations, or associations. It is thus not only special legislation, obnoxious to the Constitution (article 4, § 25, subds. 3, 33), but it still further violates the Constitution in attempting to grant privileges and immunities to certain citizens, or classes of citizens, which, upon the same terms, have not been granted to all citizens (article 1, § 21).

2. In considering the second proposition, whether or not a court of equity may enjoin a "boycott," the meaning of the word is of primary importance. It is defined in 4 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 85, as follows: "The boycott is a conspiracy, the direct object of which is to occasion loss to the party or parties against whom the conspiracy is directed, and the means commonly used is the inducing of others to withdraw from such party or parties their patronage and business intercourse by threats that, unless they so withdraw, the members of the combination will cause, directly or indirectly, loss of a similar character to them." Appellants announce their willingness to accept this definition, substituting the word "confederacy" or "combination" for "conspiracy." But the definition, even as so amended, it will be noted is not complete. The "means commonly used" are specified, but other means may be, and frequently are, employed. A boycott may adopt illegal means, and thus become a "conspiracy," a word which imports illegality; or a boycott may employ legal means and methods, and thus be merely a legitimate combination by a number of men to accomplish, within the law, a legal result. The crux of the question and the strain in every case turns, then, upon the means employed.

We think that to-day no court would question the right of an organized union of employes, by concerted action, to cease their employment (no contractual obligation standing in the way), and this action constitutes a "strike." We think, moreover, that no court questions the right of those same men to cease dealing by concerted action, either socially or by way of business, with their former employer, and this latter act, in its essence, constitutes the primary boycott. But what acts organized labor may do, and what means it may adopt to accomplish its end, without violation of the law, have presented questions of much nicety, over which the courts have stood, and still stand, widely divided. It would not be profitable to discuss and analyze these widely divergent cases. It is sufficient to formulate briefly the principles adopted in this state many of which have recently found elaborate expression in the case of Parkinson v. Building & Trades Council of Santa Clara (Cal.) 98 Pac. 1040. The right of united labor to strike, in furtherance of trade interests (no contractual obligation standing in the way) is fully recognized. The reason for the strike may be based upon the refusal to comply with the employes' demand for the betterment of wages, conditions, hours of labor, the discharge of one employe, the engagement of another—any one or more of the multifarious considerations which in good faith may be believed to tend toward the advancement of the employes. After striking, the employe may engage in a "boycott," as that word is here employed. As here employed, it means not only the right to the concerted withdrawal of social and business intercourse, but the right by all legitimate means—of fair publication, and fair oral or written persuasion—to induce others interested in, or sympathetic with, their cause to withdraw their social intercourse and business patronage from the employer. They may go even further than this, and request of another that he withdraw his patronage from the employer, and may use the moral intimidation and coercion of threatening a like boycott against him if he refuse so to do. This last proposition necessarily involves the bringing into a labor dispute between A., and B. C., who has no difference with either. It contemplates that C., upon the request of B., and under the moral intimidation lest B. boycott him, may thus be constrained to withdraw his patronage from A., with whom he has no controversy. This is the "secondary boycott," the legality of which is vigorously denied by the English courts, the federal courts, and by the courts of many of the states of this nation.

Without presenting the authorities, which are multitudinous, suffice it to state the other view, in language of the president of the United States, but recently uttered: "A body of workmen are dissatisfied with the terms of their employment. They seek to compel their employer to come to their terms by striking. They may legally do so. The loss and inconvenience he suffers he cannot complain of. But when they seek to compel third persons, who have no quarrel with their employer, to withdraw from all association with him by threats that, unless such third persons do so, the workmen will inflict similar injury on such third persons, the combination is oppressive, involves duress, and, if injury results, it is actionable." President Taft, McClure's Magazine, June, 1909, p. 204. Notwithstanding the great dignity which attaches to an utterance such as this, which, as has been said, is but the expression of numerous courts upon the subject-matter, this court, after great deliberation, took what it believed to be the truer and more advanced ground, above indicated and fully set forth in Parkinson v. Building Trades Council, etc., supra. In this respect this court recognizes no substantial distinction between the so-called primary and secondary boycott. Each rests upon the right of the union to withdraw its patronage from its employer, and to induce by fair means any and all other persons to do the same, and, in exercise of those means, as the unions would have the unquestioned right to withhold their patronage from a third person who continued to deal with their employer, so they have the unquestioned right to notify such third person that they will withdraw their patronage if he continues so to deal. However opposed to the weight of federal authority the views of this court are, that they are not unique may be noted by reading National Protective Association v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 63 N. E. 369, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648; Lindsay v. Montana Federation of Labor, 37 Mont. 264, 96 Pac. 127, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, where the highest courts of those states formulate and adopt like principles.

It has been said that it is important to any correct understanding of, or adjudication upon, such questions that a definition of the word "boycott" should be first stated. Thus, to say that a boycott is a "conspiracy" immediately implies illegality, and puts the conduct of the boycotters under the ban of the law. So also does the definition which describes boycotting as "illegal coercion," designed to accomplish a certain end. As we have undertaken to define boycott, it is an organized effort to persuade or coerce, which may be legal or illegal, according to the means employed. In other jurisdictions where a definition is given to a boycott which imports illegality, the injunction will of course lie against boycotting as such. In this state the injunction will issue depending upon the circumstance whether the means employed, or threatened to be employed, are legal or illegal.

3. We are thus brought to consider the method of "picketing," the use of which appellants contend is a legal weapon in their hands. So far in this discussion we have dealt exclusively with the respective rights of the employer and of the employé. There are other parties, however, whose rights are entitled to equal consideration, and whose rights always become involved and imperiled when picketing is adopted as a coercive measure in aid of a boycott.

If the strikers have the right, as above indicated, to withdraw patronage themselves, and by fair publication, written and oral persuasion, to induce others to join in their cause, and finally by threat of like boycott, to coerce others into so doing, their rights go no further than this. It is the equal right of the employer to insist before the law that his business shall be subject at the hands of the strikers to no other detriment than that which follows as a consequence of the legal acts of the strikers so above set forth. It is not to be forgotten that when the employés have struck, they occupy no contractual relationship whatsoever to their former employer, and have no right to coerce him, or attempt to coerce him, by the employment of any other means than those which are equally open to any other individual, or association of individuals. No sanctity attaches to a trades union which puts it above the law, or which confers upon it rights not enjoyed by any other individual or association. The two classes of persons to whom we have adverted, and whose rights necessarily become involved where a picket or patrol is established, are, first, the rights of those employed, or seeking employment, in the place of the striking laborers; and, second, the rights of the general public. It is the absolute, unqualified right of every employé, as well as of every other person, to go about his legal business unmolested and unobstructed, and free from intimidation, force, or duress. The right of a labor association to strike is no higher than the right of a nonunion workman to take employment in place of the strikers. Under the assurance and shield of the Constitution and of the laws, the nonunion laborer may go to and from his labor, and remain at his place of labor, in absolute security from unlawful molestations, and wherever such protection is not fully accorded, their execution, and not the laws themselves, is to be blamed. In this country a man's constitutional liberty means far more than his mere personal freedom. It means that, among other rights, his is the right freely to labor and to own the fruits of his toil. Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664. Any act of boycotting, therefore, which tends to impair this constitutional right freely to labor, by means passing beyond moral suasion, and playing by intimidation upon the physical fears, is unlawful.

The inconvenience which the public may suffer by reason of a boycott lawfully conducted is in no sense a legal injury. But the public's rights are invaded the moment the means employed are such as are calculated to, and naturally do, incite to crowds, riots, and disturbances of the peace. A picket, in its very nature, tends to accomplish, and is designed to accomplish, these very things. It tends to, and is designed by physical intimidation to, deter other men from seeking employment in the places vacated by the strikers. It tends, and is designed, to drive business away from the boycotted place, not by the legitimate methods of persuasion, but by the illegitimate means of physical intimidation and fear. Crowds naturally collect; disturbances of the peace are always imminent and of frequent occurrence. Many peaceful citizens, men and women, are always deterred by physical trepidation from entering places of business so under a boycott patrol. It is idle to split hairs upon so plain a proposition, and to say that the picket may consist of nothing more than a single individual, peacefully endeavoring by persuasion to prevent customers from entering the boycotted place. The plain facts are always at variance with such refinements of reason. Says Chief Justice Shaw, in Commonwealth v. Hunt, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346: "The law is not to be hoodwinked by colorable pretenses; it looks at truth and reality through whatever disguise it may assume." If it be said that neither threats nor intimidations are used, no man can fail to see that there may be threats, and there may be intimidations, and there may be molesting, and there may be obstructing, without there being any express words used by which a man should show violent threats toward another, or any express intimidation. We think it plain that the very end to be attained by picketing, however artful may be the means to accomplish that end, is the injury of the boycotted business through physical molestation and physical fear, caused to the employer, to those whom he may have employed, or who may seek employment from him, and to the general public. The boycott having employed these means for this unquestioned purpose is illegal, and a court will not seek by overniceties and refinements, to legalize the use of this unquestionably illegal instrument. Vegeahn v. Guntner, supra; Crump v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 927, 6 S. E. 620, 10 Am. St. Rep. 895; Union Pacific v. Ruef (C. C.) 120 Fed. 124; 18 Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 85.

In conclusion, then, and applying these principles to the injunction here under consideration, it appears that, while the injunction was properly granted, it was broader in its terms than the law warrants. It was, for example, too broad in restraining defendants from "in any wise interfering with" plaintiff's business, since the interference which we have discussed, of publication, reasonable persuasion, and threat to withdraw patronage, is legal, and such as defendants could employ. So, also, was the injunction too broad in restraining defendants from "intimidating any customer by boycott or threat of boycott" since, as has been said, the secondary boycott is likewise a legal weapon. In all other respects, however, the injunction was proper.

The trial court is directed to modify its injunction in the particulars here specified, and in all other respects the judgment will stand affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, O. J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

ANGELLOTTI and SLOSS, JJ. We concur in the judgment. The modification of the judgment is in line with the views announced in the Parkinson Case. So far as "picketing" is concerned, while we are not prepared to hold that there may not be acts coming within that term, as it is accepted and understood in labor disputes, that are entirely lawful, and should not be enjoined, we believe that, as to such "picketing" as is described in both findings and judgment in this case, the views expressed in the opinion of the court are correct.

SHAW, J. I agree with all that is said by Justice HENSHAW in his opinion, except the part relating to the so-called "secondary boycott" and the attempt to draw a distinction between the compulsion of third persons caused by picketing and the compulsion of third persons produced by a boycott. My views concerning the "secondary boycott" are expressed in my dissenting opinion in Parkinson v. Building Trades Council (Cal.) 98 Pac. 1040. The means employed for the coercion or intimidation of a third person in a "secondary boycott" are unlawful whenever they are such as are calculated to, and actually do, destroy his free will, and cause him to act contrary to his own volition in his own business, to the detriment of the person toward whom the main boycott or strike is directed; in other words, whenever the means used constitute duress, menace, or undue influence. Whether this coercion or compulsion comes from fear of physical violence, as in the case of picketing, or from fear of financial loss, as in the "secondary boycott," or from fear of any other infliction, is, in my opinion, immaterial, so long as the fear is sufficiently potent to control the action of those upon whom it is cast. I can see no logical or just reason for the distinction thus sought to be made. There is no such distinction in cases where contracts or wills are declared void, because procured by duress, menace, or undue influence. There should be none where actual injury is produced or threatened through such means acting upon third persons. Nor do I believe any well-considered case authorizes any such distinction. The opinions in the case of National Protective Association v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 63 N. E. 369, 53 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, are devoted to a discussion of the right to strike, and the limitations of that right, and not to a discussion of the "secondary boycott." A close analysis of the cases on the subject will, as I believe, show that this court stands alone on this point.

For these reasons I do not agree to that part of the judgment directing a modification of the injunction. I believe that it should stand in the form as given by the court below.

156 Cal. 103

GERVAISE v. BROOKINS. (L. A. 2,208.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 128*)—CONTRACT—TITLE.

A contract, by which one "agrees to sell" to others "all his right, title and interest" in lots, and, on payment of the full price, to "execute a deed of grant, bargain and sale of said lots free and clear of all incumbrances," binds the vendor to convey a good title in fee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 234-237; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 170*)—OFFER OF PERFORMANCE BY PURCHASER.

The offer of performance by the purchaser, under a contract requiring the vendor to give good title on payment of price, is good, where, the purchase-money notes being payable on or before certain dates, he offers to pay all of them immediately, on condition that he receive at the same time a conveyance of good title, he having a right, under Civ. Code, § 1498, to make his offer dependent on performance of this concurrent condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 344-348; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 182*)—DEFAULT OF PURCHASER.

Though a purchaser makes a good offer of performance by offering to pay all the remaining purchase money on condition of receiving concurrently a conveyance of good title, yet, the contract providing that he shall only be entitled to remain in possession so long as he makes payments as agreed, he is in default by remaining in possession without making a payment due, not desiring to rescind, but refusing to pay except on condition of receiving a good title, when the vendor has no title, and can give none.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 182.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 296*)—RECOVERY OF LAND BY VENDOR.

The vendor can recover the land in ejectment of the purchaser who, contrary to the provision of the contract, remains in possession after default in deferred payment, the purchaser not desiring to rescind, but refusing to pay except on condition that he receives good title, when the vendor has no title and can give none; the purchaser being estopped while retaining the possession received from his vendor to deny his title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 832; Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes;

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Alberta Gervaise, executrix of Lillian Mae Book, deceased, against George W. Brookins. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 103 Pac. 332.

Edwin A. Meserve, for appellant. W. C. Batcheller, for respondent.

SIIAW, J. This is an appeal from a judgment, which, it is claimed, is not supported by the findings. The action was begun by Lillian M. Book to recover possession of three lots of land, and damages for the withholding thereof. The defendant claims the right of possession under a contract for the sale of said land by one W. P. Book to Brookins and one Kirkwood. After the execution of the contract W. P. Book conveyed to Lillian M. Book all his interest in the land, and transferred to her all his rights under the said contract for the sale thereof, and Kirkwood transferred all his rights under the contract of purchase to Brookins. Upon the death of Lillian M. Book, pending the action, the present plaintiff was substituted in her place. The transfer from Kirkwood to Brookins occurred soon after the execution of the contract. Brookins took possession immediately, as the contract provides. The complaint alleges that Brookins failed and refused to pay the balance of the agreed price when due, that plaintiff Lillian M. Book thereupon demanded possession of the lots, which Brookins refused to yield, and that he still holds possession thereof. The right of the plaintiff to recover possession is based on the alleged failure and refusal of Brookins to pay the price specified in the contract of sale.

The contract was made on February 3, 1900. The price for the lots sold was therein fixed at $15,000, of which $3,000 was paid on April 15, 1900, and notes were given for the remaining $12,000. There were 10 notes, each for $1,200, payable respectively, on or before the 15th day of April of each year for 10 consecutive years, beginning with the year 1901. Brookins paid the three installments falling due in the years 1901, 1902, and 1903, and interest amounting to $1,944, making in all $8,544 which he paid upon the price, leaving $8,400, with accruing interest, unpaid. Prior to the time of making the contract of sale W. P. Book had conveyed the land to the Rex Oil Company. Neither he nor Lillian M. Book ever afterwards acquired or possessed any title thereto. The contract states that Book "agrees to sell" to the vendees "all his right, title and interest in" the lots, and that, upon payment of the full price, he will "execute a deed of grant, bargain and sale of said lots [describing them] free and clear of all incumbrances." The effect of these provisions is that Book was bound to convey to the ven-dees, upon payment, a good title in fee to the lots. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 314, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Wilcox v. Lattin, 93 Cal. 594, 29 Pac. 226. Brookins did not discover the want of title until after the payment of April 15, 1903, was made. The transfer to Lillian M. Book occurred prior to January 1, 1904. The contract further provides that the vendees "shall only be entitled to remain in possession of said premises so long as they make the payments as agreed."

Brookins has not unconditionally refused to make the payments. Before the installment of 1904 became due, Lillian M. Book told him that she did not expect him to make further payments until she could secure title, or arrange to have the same conveyed to him. He thereupon offered to pay all the notes immediately, upon the condition that he should concurrently receive a conveyance of the land transferring to him the title therein, and he refused to make any payment, except upon that condition. Each installment being made payable on or before the date named, at his option, he had the right to declare it all due, and to make an offer of full performance at any time. He was entitled to the performance of this concurrent condition, and he had a right to make his own offer dependent thereon. Civ. Code, § 1498. He was then, and ever since has been, ready, able, and willing to pay the whole price upon the condition stated. His offer was therefore a good offer of performance under the law and the contract, and he is not in default, unless he has become so by reason of his retaining possession while refusing to make payments and accept such title as his vendor can give. On August 4, 1904, after the defendant's offer was made, she demanded of him the immediate possession of the land, basing that demand upon his refusal to pay. She did not offer to comply with the demand that she convey the title, nor did she offer to rescind the contract, and return the money previously paid upon the price. Prior to the discovery of the want of title Brookins had made improvements on the land of the value of $3,000. The land has increased in value since the purchase, and ever since April, 1904, it has been worth $30,000, including the improvements.

The case depends upon the law as to the rights of a vendee in possession of land under a contract which entitles him to a conveyance of the fee thereof, who has paid a substantial part of the price, and who is able, ready, and willing to pay the whole thereof upon receipt of a good title, and who has made an offer to do so, against the vendor who has no title, and who is unable to transfer the title, where the vendee does not wish to rescind, but refuses to pay except on condition that he receives a good title, the contract providing that he can remain in possession only so long as he makes the payments as agreed. It appears to be well established that under such circumstances, the vendee cannot retain possession of the land while neglecting to pay the price when due, and that the failure of the title does not give him the right to continue in possession by merely keeping good an offer to perform on his part conditioned upon performance by the vendor. The reasons for this rule are thus stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 293, 19 L. Ed. 712: "If the contract stipulates for possession by the vendee, or the vendor puts him into possession, he holds as a licensee. * * * The case comes within the category of a license. In such cases the vendee cannot dispute the title of the vendor any more than the lessee can question the title of his lessor. The assignee of the vendee is as much bound by the estoppel as the vendee himself. Upon default in the payment of any installment of the purchase money, the possession becomes tortuous, and the vendor may at once bring ejectment." In that case the court further held that the fact of want of title in the vendor, and the fact that the vendee had paid a large part of the price, were alike immaterial as defenses to an action of ejectment by the vendor.

These principles have been many times affirmed in this state. In Hoen v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 120, 52 Am. Dec. 291, an action by the vendor of land against the vendee for possession, the court says: "The defendants, having entered into possession claiming under the plaintiff and in subordination to his title are estopped from questioning it." The same rule is stated in Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 416, Walker v. Sedgwick, 8 Cal. 402, O'Keiffe v. Cunningham, 9 Cal. 589, Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 20, 27 Pac. 942, 49 Am. Rep. 679, Coates v. Cleaves, 92 Cal. 430, 28 Pac. 580, and McLeod v. Barnum, 131 Cal. 608, 63 Pac. 924. In Hicks v. Lovell, supra, an action by the vendor against the vendee to recover possession of the land, the defendant, as to one of the parcels of land in controversy, had entered under a contract of sale with the plaintiff, and "was ready and able to perform his agreement whenever he could have a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of said lands, but, as the plaintiff had no title to the same, he could not comply with the agreement on his part." The defendant asked him that the contract be canceled, the effect of which would be to leave him in possession. With regard to this the court says: "By his own showing he abandoned the purchase of one of the contracts, and disclaimed the title of his vendor; but, having entered into possession under the title and in subordination to it, he was estopped from denying it"—and proceeds to hold that the want of title in the vendor is no defense. In Rhorer v. Bila, 83 Cal. 54, 3 Pac. 275, upon similar facts the court says: "A purchaser cannot remain in possession of lands under a contract, and at the same time refuse to pay the purchase price. * * * So long as the purchaser retains possession he waives all previous objections, whether of defect of title or delay in completing it, and is bound to accept title according to the terms of the contract, if offered while he still retains possession." In Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 50, 11 Pac. 492, 493, the court says: "Even where the contract provides for the vendee taking possession, the remedy of the purchaser, where the title of the vendor fails, or he is unable to make conveyance as stipulated in the contract, is to rescind the contract, or offer to, and to restore the possession, in which case he may recover the purchase money advanced and the interest, together with the value of his improvements, deducting therefrom such sum as the use of the premises may reasonably have been worth. If, on the other hand, the purchaser chooses not to rescind, but to retain possession under the contract, he can do so only on the condition that he pays the purchase money and interest according to the contract. In the latter case it is considered that he is willing to receive such title as the vendor is able to give." This doctrine is also approved in Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 531, 91 Pac. 498, Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 118, Haynes v. White, 55 Cal. 41, Central P. Co. v. Mudd, 59 Cal. 590, Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 241, Hannan v. McNickle, 82 Cal. 126, 23 Pac. 271, Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 517, 27 Pac. 767, 25 Am. St. Rep. 209, Hill v. Den, 121 Cal. 46, 53 Pac. 642, and Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 419, 60 Pac. 1032.

These doctrines dispose of the case. Brookins is estopped from denying the title of Book while he retains the possession, which he obtained from Book in pursuance of the contract of sale. Hence he cannot set up the want of title as an excuse for nonperformance on his part. The proffered defense to the action for possession founded on the failure and inability of the vendor's successor in interest to comply with Brookins' demand for a good title must be disregarded, because of the fact that he received his possession from Book, from whose successor he would now withhold it. His retention of the possession thus received binds him to pay the price and accept the vendor's title, such as it is.

It is claimed that the decision in Haile v. Smith, 113 Cal. 659, 45 Pac. 872, is made upon facts identical with those here presented, and that it lays down a rule which would require a judgment in favor of Brookins in this case. The facts are similar to those here involved, except in one important particular, namely, the want of title in the vendor. That case was twice before this court, the first decision being in the 113th volume of the reports at page 656, 45 Pac. 872, and the second in 128 Cal. 415, 60 Pac. 1032. The decision in the first case did not present the question of the vendor's title or want of title. It disposed of the case upon the theory that the title of the vendor was good; that the vendee was willing to accept it, and had offered full payment, and demanded a conveyance according to the contract; that this had been refused by the vendor; and that the vendee continued able, ready, and willing to pay upon receipt of the vendor's deed. Under such circumstances it was said the unaccepted tender of the vendee released the lands from any further claim by the vendor, and remitted him to an action for the recovery of the balance of the price, and that the vendee, so long as he stood thus able, ready, and willing to pay the money and accept the title, could retain possession of the land, and insist upon performance by the vendor. This decision goes so far as to hold that this release of the land from the vendor's claims is final, and that a subsequent tender of a conveyance by the vendor, with a demand of payment and a refusal by the vendee to pay and accept the deed, would not revive the right of the vendor to recover possession. This remark was obiter, and it is not necessary to approve it here. The opinion expressly declares that the question of the effect of the want of title in the vendor, or of a refusal by the vendee to accept his title, is not involved. In the decision upon the second appeal (128 Cal. 415, 60 Pac. 1032) the question of want of title in the vendor was directly presented, and the doctrines set forth in the quotations from the opinions heretofore given were fully approved.

The defendant complains that this would leave him divested of possession, and with no remedy for the recovery of the money expended by him in payments upon the price and in the improvements upon the land. We cannot perceive that this misfortune in which he is placed can affect the legal propositions we have stated. The query might arise whether he may not have a lien on such estate as the vendor, or his successor, possessed in the land, for the securing of the repayment of the money expended, or that by lapse of time since he got possession, and the continuation of that possession adversely to the Rex Oil Company, it may be that the title of Lillian M. Book, his possession inuring to her benefit, may now have become good; but these questions are not involved, and must remain unanswered. We can decide only the case before us. The defendant must find his own way out of the difficulty without repudiating the authority upon which he obtained his possession.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

156 Cal. 110
GERVAISE v. BROOKINS. (L. A. 2,226.)
 (Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1909.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 69*)—PLEADING—ANSWER—DENIAL OF DAMAGES.

The complaint for recovery of land and damages for retention alleged that the value of the rents and profits of the land was $10 per day, and that by the withholding of possession plaintiff had been deprived thereof to his damage in the sum of $10 per day. Held, that the denial that the withholding of possession had caused plaintiff damage "in the sum of $10 per day," or in any other sum, while a sufficient traverse of the allegation of damages, was not technically a denial of the allegation of the value of the rents and profits, which constitutes the measure of that damage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED.

It appearing from a finding of fact, and other matters in the record, that on the trial the answer was regarded as a good denial of certain averments of the complaint, and that the case was tried on such theory, plaintiff may not contend on appeal, for the first time, that it was not such a denial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1053-1069, 1161-1165; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Alberta Gervaise, executrix of Lillian Mae Book, deceased, against George W. Brookins. From a judgment awarding plaintiff only a certain sum, she appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 103 Pac. 329.

W. C. Batcheller, for appellant. Edwin A. Meserve, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This action was brought to recover the possession of certain real property situated in Los Angeles county, together with damages for its withholding. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff, awarding to her the possession of the land, together with $10 damages. The plaintiff has appealed from so much of the judgment as awards to her the sum of $10 damages; her contention being that she was entitled to a greater amount.

The sole contention of this appellant is that the finding of the court that she had been damaged by the withholding of the possession of the premises in the sum of $10 is in conflict with the facts admitted by the pleadings, and that on those admitted facts she was entitled to judgment for the sum of $10 per day from the filing of the complaint to the rendition of the judgment. The complaint alleged "that the value of the rents and profits of said land and premises is the sum of $10 per day, and that by reason of the unlawful withholding of the same by the defendant, as aforesaid, plaintiff has been deprived of said rents and profits since the 16th day of April, 1904, and by the continuance of defendant's possession thereof will be deprived of the use and occupation of the same to plaintiff's loss and damage in the sum of $10 per day so long as such occupation and use by the defendant continues." The answer as to these allegations is as follows: "This defendant denies that he wrongfully or unlawfully withholds the possession of said premises from the plaintiff to plaintiff's injury or damage in the sum of $1,000, or in any other sum whatsoever, or at all, and denies that the plaintiff, by reason of the withholding of the premises by this defendant, has been deprived of the rents or profits of said property since the 16th day of April, 1904, or at all, and denies that because this defendant withholds the possession of said premises from plaintiff, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $10 per day for any length of time, or for any other sum whatsoever, or at all; and this defendant alleges that he, at all times since the 15th day of April, 1900, has been, and now is, in the lawful and rightful possession of said premises, and in the use and enjoyment thereof."

The defendant here denies that the withholding of possession by him has caused the plaintiff damage "in the sum of $10 per day for any length of time, or for any other sum whatsoever, or at all." This denial is a sufficient traverse of the allegation of damages, but it is not, technically, a denial of the allegation of the value of the rents and profits, which constitutes the measure of that damage. There was a finding that the rents and profits were worth only $20 a month. This implies that evidence was given upon that subject as if it were a fact in issue, and that this evidence was sufficient to support the finding. From this and other parts of the record we think it appears with reasonable certainty that upon the trial the answer was regarded as a good denial of all the averments of the complaint on the subject of rents and profits, and that the case was tried upon the theory that the answer put in issue the value thereof. This being so, the plaintiff will not be allowed to raise the point on appeal. "It is well settled that, where the parties have proceeded to trial upon a pleading, without objection to its sufficiency to raise a particular issue, and evidence has been received of the fact, and the issue found upon, the party whose duty it was to object will not be heard in this court to say that the finding is not within the issues." Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 297, 47 Pac. 60. In that case the presence in the record of a finding of the fact, which it was claimed was not in issue, was considered a sufficient showing that the cause was tried upon the theory that the fact was in issue. On the same subject see Reniff v. The Cynthia, 18 Cal. 669; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal.

39, 85 Am. Dec. 157; King v. Davis, 34 Cal. 106; Huges v. Wheeler, 76 Cal. 232, 18 Pac. 386; Sukeforth v. Lord, 87 Cal. 403, 25 Pac. 497; Willey v. Bank, 141 Cal. 518, 75 Pac. 106.

In the case of F. A. Hihn Co. v. Fleckner, 106 Cal. 95, 39 Pac. 214, where the absence of a denial of a similar allegation as to the value of rents and profits was discussed, the point that the plaintiff had waived the admission of the value by going to trial upon the theory that it was in issue was not raised or considered. That case is not contrary to the decisions above cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

156 Cal. 43

SANFORD v. BERGIN et al. (S. F. 4,897.)
(Supreme Court of California. July 3, 1900.
Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court
Aug. 2, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 118*)—COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION—FILING ANSWER.

An answer in partition setting up a mortgage, and asking that it be declared a lien on the land, and its payment provided for, is equivalent to an action to foreclose, and the question of the bar of limitations or of laches decided as if the action was begun when the answer was filed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 527; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 87*)—CONTRACTS.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 312, 339, bar an action on a contract or liability, not founded on a writing, or founded on a writing executed out of the state, two years after the cause of action shall have accrued. A debt secured by deed executed out of the state was due when the deed was executed, December 11, 1875. The debtor came into the state early in 1876, and remained there until his death. Held, that any action on the debt or mortgage deed was barred December 11, 1877.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 458; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 167*)—BAR OF DEBT AS AFFECTING SECURITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 2911, extinguishing a lien after lapse of the time within which an action can be brought on the principal obligation, a mortgage is extinguished by lapse of the time within which an action can be commenced upon the debt secured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 651-653; Dec. Dig. § 167.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 151*)—BAR OF DEBT AS AFFECTING SECURITY—EFFECT OF NEW PROMISE.

Where a debt secured by mortgage is acknowledged before the action is barred, the original contract being thereby kept alive, the mortgage is not extinguished by lapse of the period of limitation after the cause of action first accrued, and a suit may be maintained thereon within the new period initiated by such acknowledgment; but, where the acknowledgment occurs after the debt is barred and the mortgage extinguished, the new promise, express or implied, becomes the basis of the cause of action, and it does not revive or renew the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 619; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 80*)—SUSPENSION OF STATUTE—DEATH.

The want of an administration upon an estate does not suspend the statute of limitations upon a mortgage in favor of such estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 424, 425; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 128*)—SUCCESSION TO POWERS OF ADMINISTRATRIX.

An executor of an administratrix does not succeed to her duties or powers as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 531; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

7. TRUSTS (§ 244*)—CHANGE FROM EXPRESS TO CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.

An executor of a trustee of an express trust becomes a trustee of a constructive trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 311; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Partition by Charles E. Sanford against T. I. Bergin, M. R. Jones, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Harriet Sanford, deceased, and others. From the order of partition, and an order denying a new trial, Charles E. Sanford and M. R. Jones, administrator, appeal. Affirmed.

Charles S. Wheeler, Donzel Stoney, M. R. Jones, and E. De Los Magee, for appellants. Garret W. McEnerney, Elliott McAllister, J. C. McKinstry, H. W. Bradley, Stafford & Stafford, Gaillard Stoney, and W. B. Treadwell, for respondents. T. I. Bergin, in pro. per.

SHAW, J. This is an action for the partition of a tract of land containing 13,316 acres, known as the rancho los Megaños, in Contra Costa county. An interlocutory order, declaring the interests of the several parties, and directing partition accordingly, was made by the court below. The plaintiff Charles E. Sanford and the defendant, M. R. Jones, as administrator with the will annexed, of the estate of Harriet Sanford, deceased, moved the court for a new trial, which was denied. They appeal from the order for the partition, and from the order denying a new trial.

1. The plaintiff was adjudged to be the owner of an undivided five and five-sixteenths hundredths of the land. In his complaint plaintiff alleged title to an undivided one-half thereof. This claim was based upon an alleged resulting trust in the land, whereby it was claimed that James T. Sanford, uncle of the plaintiff, in 1871 acquired the title to the land in trust for his mother, brother, and sisters, the plaintiff being the sole and only heir of the brother; the trust arising from the alleged fact that the purchase money belonged to the beneficiaries above mentioned. The court found that the allegations of fact upon which it is claimed that the trust arose were untrue. It is conceded that this finding is supported by sufficient evidence. The claim to an interest in the land by virtue of such resulting trust is now abandoned.

2. The claim of Jones as administrator of the estate of Harriet Sanford, deceased, is that Harriet Sanford held a mortgage upon the land to secure a debt amounting to at least $300,000, and he asks that said mortgage be declared a lien thereon, and that its payment be provided for in the partition proceedings. He asserts that on December 11, 1875, James T. Sanford was the owner of the land, that on that day he executed to Harriet Sanford, who was his mother, a deed purporting to convey the land to her in fee simple for an expressed consideration of $172,500, but that, in fact, said deed was intended as a mortgage to secure a debt then due from James T. Sanford to Harriet Sanford and "the family"; that is, his brother, Charles B. Sanford, and his sisters, Harriet A., and Josephine L., Sanford. It was alleged that this debt aggregated more than $300,000, but the mortgage lien asserted in this partition proceeding consists only of the amount thereof alleged to be due to Harriet Sanford. The court found that the deed to Harriet Sanford was absolute, and that no debt or mortgage from James T. to Harriet Sanford was proven, but that, if any such debt and mortgage did at any time exist, they were barred and extinguished by the statute of limitations and by laches, long before the commencement of the action. The action was begun on April 30, 1898. The answer of Jones, in which, for the first time, the mortgage claim was asserted, was filed on April 20, 1903. The filing of this answer must be deemed to be equivalent to an action of foreclosure, and the question of the bar of the statute of limitations or of laches must be decided upon the theory that the action was begun upon the date last mentioned.

The debt, if any, which was secured by the alleged mortgage, was not evidenced by any bond or note, nor, as far as appears, by any instrument in writing whatever. The evidence shows that if such debt ever existed, it arose in the state of New York while the parties resided in that state, and that if any writing was given in evidence thereof, such writing was executed in that state. The deed of December 11, 1875, claimed to constitute a mortgage, and which is the foundation of the asserted right of Jones as administrator of Harriet Sanford's estate, was executed in New York. "An action upon a contract, obligation, or liability, not founded upon any instrument in writing, or founded upon an instrument in writing executed out of the state," is barred, unless such action is begun within two years after the cause of action shall have accrued. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 312, 339. There is an exception in the case of a defendant who is out of the state, in which case the time of his absence is not a part of the time limited for the beginning of the action. But here the alleged debtor and mortgagor came to this state early in 1876, and remained here until his death on May 2, 1885. It is alleged in the answer that the debt which the deed of December 11, 1875, was intended to secure, was due at the time of the execution of that deed. Hence it follows that, unless something occurred to prevent the operation of the statute, or to revive or renew the debt or mortgage, any action thereon was barred on December 11, 1877, 25 years before the filing of the answer which we hold to be the beginning of such action. San Jose, etc., Bank v. Bank, 144 Cal. 574, 78 Pac. 5.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is claimed that the following facts are proven by the evidence without conflict, and that they show that the action is not barred:

On October 12, 1881, Harriet Sanford, at the request of James T. Sanford, executed a quitclaim deed purporting to convey the land to her daughter, Harriet A. Sanford. This deed was intended and accepted as an assignment of the mortgage interest and rights claimed to have been created by the deed of December 11, 1875, from James T. Sanford to his mother. Before the execution of this deed the Savings & Loan Society of San Francisco, a corporation, and other persons holding as trustees for said corporation, had received deeds and conveyances of the land in trust to secure a debt due said society from James T. Sanford, but the society wrongfully claimed absolute title thereunder in trust for its benefit, and that James T. Sanford had no right or interest in the land. The society was in possession. On May 1, 1882, James T. Sanford and Harriet A. Sanford began an action in the United States Circuit Court against said society for an accounting, and to redeem the said land. Harriet A. Sanford and James T. Sanford both signed the complaint in said action. Therein they averred that the indebtedness of James to his mother on December 11, 1875, was more than $172,500; that the deed of that date, executed to Harriet Sanford by James T. Sanford was given as security for said indebtedness then due; that the quitclaim deed of October 12, 1881, by the mother to Harriet A. Sanford, assigned and transferred to Harriet A. Sanford all the rights and interests of the mother acquired by the deed aforesaid to her from James T. Sanford, and they prayed that the Savings & Loan Society, upon payment to it of the amount found due to it from James T. Sanford, be required to convey, or cause to be conveyed, the said rancho to Harriet A. Sanford. On April, 1884, James T. Sanford gave and signed his deposition as a witness in said action." Therein he testified that the said deed by his mother to his sister Harriet A. Sanford was made for the reason that his mother was too ill to commence or carry on the action against the Savings & Loan Society, which was then in contemplation, that the reason that the conveyance was not made to himself was that he did not wish to disturb the security that that deed carried with it, and that the deed to his sister was made without any other consideration. It is claimed that the complaint and deposition in said action constitute written acknowledgments of the existence of the debt and mortgage to Harriet Sanford, taking the same out of the operation of the statute of limitations.

Harriet Sanford died on October 11, 1883. Her will was probated in New York on December 26, 1886, and Harriet A. Sanford was appointed executrix thereof. James T. Sanford died on May 3, 1885. His will was probated in New York, and Harriet A. Sanford was there appointed executrix thereof. By Harriet Sanford's will a legacy of $150,000 was given to her daughter Josephine L. Sanford, some small legacies were bequeathed to others, and the residue equally to the four children, Charles B. Sanford, Harriet A. Sanford, James T. Sanford, and Josephine L. Sanford. Charles B. Sanford died on January 29, 1896. The plaintiff is his son and only heir. Harriet A. Sanford died testate on January 12, 1888. Her will gave all her property to her sister Josephine L. Sanford. On February 13, 1888, said will was admitted to probate, and said Josephine was appointed administratrix of her said estate, and on October 6, 1890, the said estate, including all the interest of Harriet A. in the lands in controversy here, was finally distributed to said Josephine. On May 21, 1887, Josephine was appointed administratrix of the estate of James T. Sanford. His will gave all his property to his said sisters, Harriet and Josephine. On May 12, 1888, his estate was distributed to Josephine; one-half in her own right, and one-half as successor to her sister Harriet A. Josephine then represented all the interests concerned in the prosecution of the action in the United States Circuit Court. In her dual capacity as the representative of the respective estates of her brother and sister, as aforesaid, she obtained a revival of said action against the Savings & Loan Society and others, and on December 31, 1889, was duly substituted as plaintiff therein. Thereafter, until her death on September 12, 1897, the prosecution of said action was continued by her, individually, and as administratrix of the respective estates of James T. and Harriet A. Sanford. Final judgment in the action to redeem was rendered on February 27, 1897, and the action was appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals. On May 1, 1900, the administrators of the estate of Josephine were substituted in her stead as plaintiffs in said action, and on the same day the appeal was determined in their favor, and the judgment became final.

The first written acknowledgment of the debt and mortgage by James T. Sanford was the aforesaid complaint, filed by him on May 1, 1882, more than six years after the mortgage was made. As the alleged mortgage secured a debt which said complaint declared was due at its date, it follows that the debt was barred three times over when the acknowledgment was made. At that time, therefore, the mortgage had already become extinguished by the lapse of time within which an action could be commenced upon the debt which it secured. Civ. Code, § 2911; San Jose, etc., Bank v. Bank, supra; Wells v. Harter, 56 Cal. 343; Jeffers v. Cook, 58 Cal. 152; Henderson v. Grammar, 66 Cal. 336, 5 Pac. 488; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 505, 24 Pac. 930; Hughes v. Cannedy, 92 Cal. 387, 28 Pac. 573; Newhall v. Sherman, 124 Cal. 512, 57 Pac. 387. When a written acknowledgment of a debt is made after the statute of limitations has begun to run, but before the statutory period has expired, the effect is to keep the original obligation alive, and a suit may be maintained on the original contract after the expiration of the original period, and within the new period initiated by such acknowledgment. Rogers v. Byers, 127 Cal. 528, 60 Pac. 42, and cases there cited. But if the new promise or acknowledgment is not made until after the debt has become barred, the original contract is practically extinguished, and the suit can only be maintained upon the new express promise, or upon the new promise which the law implies from an acknowledgment in writing. Rogers v. Byers, supra; Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 17, 66 Pac. 40; Southern P. Co. v. Prosser, 122 Cal. 417, 52 Pac. 836, 55 Pac. 145. The effect of the application of these rules to a debt secured by a mortgage is that, where the acknowledgment is made before the action is barred, the original contract being thereby kept alive, the mortgage is not extinguished by the lapse of the period of limitation after the cause of action first accrued. The original contract not having been barred at the time of such acknowledgment, it is extended, and the mortgage lien continues with it. Daniels v. Johnson, 129 Cal. 417, 61 Pac. 1107, 79 Am. St. Rep. 123. But when the new promise or acknowledgment occurs after the debt is barred and the mortgage lien extinguished, the new promise, express or implied, becomes the basis of the cause of action, and it does not revive or renew the mortgage lien. Wells v. Harter, supra; Southern P. Co. v. Prosser, supra. "A mortgage can be created, renewed or extended, only by writing, executed with the formalities required in the case of a grant of real property." Civ. Code, § 2922. Neither the complaint nor the deposition can be construed to be a renewal or revival of the mortgage lien. Undoubtedly, if the case of the administrator of Harriet Sanford depended upon this question, the action would have long ago become barred.

In avoidance of this conclusion the appellants contend that the complaint in the redemption suit was more than a mere acknowledgment. They say that it was an assertion by James T. Sanford that on May 1, 1882, when the complaint was filed, the said mortgage was then a subsisting, valid lien on the property to secure the existing debt, and that the debt was not then barred, nor the mortgage lien extinguished; that this assertion necessarily implies that there had been successive renewals or acknowledgments of the debt from time to time within the period of limitation, whereby both the debt and the mortgage had been kept in existence as continuing obligations until that date, and that this averment in the complaint is the equivalent of proof of the renewals necessary to accomplish that end. It will here be observed that, even if this is taken as correct, and the giving of the deposition in 1884 be deemed a new acknowledgment of the debt within the new period of limitation beginning on May 1, 1882, in which event the debt and mortgage would be kept alive until April, 1886, there would still remain a period of 17 years between April, 1886, and April, 1903, when the present proceeding is deemed to have been commenced, by which period the action would be barred. To surmount this obstacle, in part at least, the appellants advance another proposition, which we will now state.

It is said that the filing of that complaint to redeem from the prior mortgage, the mortgagor and second mortgagee joining therein, with a prayer that the second mortgage be protected by the decree, was a continuing declaration by the mortgagee and his successors in the suit, repeated, in effect, every day during the pendency of the action until the final judgment therein, that the second mortgage was a valid and subsisting lien to secure the payment of the debt for which it was given, and that this prevented the running of the statute of limitations during the pendency of that action. It is also claimed in the same connection, that so long as the mortgagor and his successors were engaged with the mortgagee and her successors in prosecuting the action to redeem the prior mortgage, for the purpose, among others, avowed in the complaint therein, of protecting and preserving the estate so that the lien of the said second mortgage might be effectual thereon, such mortgagor and his successors are estopped, so far as the beneficiaries under the second mortgage are concerned, to assert that the statute of limitations had been running in their favor, or that by that means the mortgage lien had been extinguished.

It may be conceded that there is some force in these three propositions respecting the effect of the complaint and depositions and the joinder in the prosecution of such action. We are not disposed to enter upon a discussion of the questions presented thereby, but will, for the purposes of the case, concede all that the appellants claim in respect thereof. We are of the opinion, notwithstanding these propositions, that the action to foreclose the mortgage is barred.

Final judgment of the essential fact in dispute in the action to redeem, the right of the said plaintiffs to redeem at all, was given by the United States Circuit Court on November 16, 1893, after a trial upon the merits. This judgment declared that the Savings & Loan Society, through George Mearns, its trustee, held the land and the title thereto in trust, as security for the payment of a debt due to it from James T. Sanford, and that upon payment of such debt the complainants, "as the personal representatives and successors in interest of James T. Sanford," were entitled to have executed to them a conveyance of all the estate, right, title, and interest in the land had and held by the said society and its trustees in the said land. An accounting was necessary, and a referee was appointed to take the account. He made his report, stating the account up to February 25, 1897, and on that date the court gave final judgment of redemption and conveyance to said complainants, upon payment of the debt. Josephine L. Sanford was the sole complainant at the time the aforesaid interlocutory and final judgments were rendered, she having been regularly substituted for James T. Sanford and Harriet A. Sanford, respectively, as administratrix of their respective estates. Redemption was to be made within six months, or, if an appeal was taken, within six months from the time the judgment should become final on such appeal. In default of any redemption the complainants' bill was to thereupon stand dismissed. This judgment was affirmed on appeal. The executors of the estate of Josephine L. Sanford were substituted for her as complainants, and by stipulation of both parties to the suit a supplemental decree was made therein on May 1, 1900, bringing the account down to that date, declaring that $195,000 had been agreed to as the sum due to the Savings & Loan Society, and that upon payment thereof within six months thereafter the said society should execute, or cause to be executed, to the "complainants, their successors, assigns, or appointees, the conveyance provided for in, and directed to be executed by, said final decree," referring to the decree of February 25, 1897. No redemption having been made within the six months allowed therefor, the complainants' bill, by the terms of the decree itself, stood dismissed on November 1, 1900. A formal order dismissing the bill was made on May 13, 1901. It further appears in the evidence that the plaintiff caused Jones to obtain letters of administration upon the estate of Harriet A. Sanford in Contra Costa county on April 6, 1903, nearly 20 years after her death; that the answer of Jones as administrator was filed and prosecuted at the instance of the plaintiff in this action; that as early as 1897 he had employed attorneys to prosecute such rights as he had under the asserted mortgage to Harriet Sanford; that he and his attorneys were at that time informed of all the facts tending to establish those rights; and that no disclosure of his claim to any such rights was made to the adverse parties prior to the filing of the answer of Jones on April 20, 1903.

The final decree of May 1, 1900, fully settled the rights of all the parties, and then, if not before, there was an end to those relations between them which, it is claimed, suspended the operation of the statute of limitations, and estopped James T. Sanford and his successors from invoking it. Nothing then remained to be done, except to pay the debt declared to be due to the Savings & Loan Society. James T. Sanford and his successors had, by that decree, which was final, obtained all the relief that was possible in that action. Thenceforward his successors and representatives were not asking any relief on behalf of the successors of Harriet Sanford or Harriet A. Sanford, as mortgagees, nor were they constructively repeating any written declaration in the complaint that the deed of December 11, 1875, was in effect a mortgage. If the beneficiaries under that instrument had any rights thereunder at that time, such rights had then accrued and matured, and were at once enforceable by foreclosure suit against the interests of the successors of James T. Sanford, and there was nothing in the relations between them which should have prevented such foreclosure, if it were necessary in order to keep the mortgage alive. Charles E. Sanford had then full knowledge of all the facts upon which the claim that such mortgage existed was based. He was at liberty to procure letters of administration upon his grandmother's estate, and begin such action without delay. The want of an administration upon an estate does not suspend the statute of limitations upon a mortgage in favor of such estate. Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 28; Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 634, 95 Am. Dec. 152; Hibernia, etc., Soc. v. Conlin, 67 Cal. 178, 7 Pac. 477. Conceding, therefore, that the statute was suspended while the action was pending it again began to run either on May 1, 1900, the date of said decree, or on November 1, 1900, the date when the period of redemption expired. In either case the present action to foreclose was barred.

Furthermore, the record shows that there was, prior to that decree, an abandonment and repudiation by Josephine L. Sanford of the original plan to have the Harriet Sanford mortgage of 1875 kept alive, and that this was known to Charles E. Sanford and his attorneys, so that it cannot be said that they were relying on the good faith of Josephine L. Sanford or her successors. The decree of 1893 in the redemption suit declared the right of redemption, which was the vital question, but it did not follow the prayer of the complaint by providing for a conveyance of the land to the successors of Harriet Sanford, the alleged mortgagee, or of Harriet A. Sanford, the alleged successor and trustee of Harriet Sanford. Josephine L. Sanford, then the sole complainant, was the administratrix of the respective estates of the two original complainants, and thus represented both interests. But instead of procuring a decree providing for a conveyance to her as representative of Harriet A. Sanford's interest, she obtained a decree declaring that upon redemption a conveyance should be made to her as the personal representative and successor in interest of James T. Sanford. Here was a distinct repudiation of the claim that the old mortgage of December 11, 1875, then remained a subsisting lien or right. Neither the final decree of 1897, nor that of 1900, specified or stated the capacity in which the complainant was to receive such conveyance. They merely followed the original decree of 1893, and did not purport to change or modify it in that particular. Josephine L. Sanford executed her last will on May 3, 1897, in which she disposed of the rancho los Megafios in terms showing an intent to dispose of the entire estate in fee simple, and inconsistent with any other intention. She was not on friendly terms with Charles E. Sanford, as he well knew. She did not mention nor dispose of any interest in the estate of her mother, but treated the entire estate as composed of said land and certain goods and chattels. This will was filed for probate on September 20, 1897. Charles E. Sanford filed a contest thereof, but it was admitted to probate on September 14, 1898. The inventory of her estate was filed by her executors on April 6, 1900. It stated that the estate consisted of the said rancho, subject to the Savings & Loan Society mortgage, and various articles of personal property, making no mention at all of any legacy due from her mother's estate, or any lien in her favor on the rancho. It thus appears that from and after 1893 she was acting in open hostility to plaintiff's claims, whether under a resulting trust, or as one of the residuary legatees under Harriet Sanford's will. This evidence of repudiation of the former relations which may have been supposed to have existed between Josephine L. Sanford and the plaintiff was sufficient to justify the court in concluding that the plaintiff had not been the victim of any misplaced confidence in his aunt. In addition, it is to be noticed that on May 1, 1900, the executors of Josephine were substituted as complainants in the redemption suit, and it was therein decreed that upon redemption the conveyance from the trustee of the Savings & Loan Society was to be made to said executors as complainants. Upon the death of Josephine the administration of the two estates of James T. Sanford and Harriet A. Sanford lapsed. No successor was appointed in either estate. The executors of Josephine L. Sanford did not succeed to her duties or powers as administratrix of the estates of her deceased brother and sister. If she were trustee of an express trust, they became trustees of a constructive trust. They did not represent those estates when they were substituted as complainants in the suit to redeem, but they then represented the interests of Josephine L. Sanford alone. Norton v. Bassett (Cal.) 97 Pac. 894. A conveyance to them as such executors would be a conveyance on its face inuring to the benefit of the estate of Josephine, and not for the benefit of the plaintiff. It would be antagonistic to him. In view of all these considerations it is very clear that the statute of limitations immediately began to run in favor of her estate against any claim of the plaintiff, or of the successors or representatives of Harriet Sanford, based upon any mortgage then claimed to exist upon the interest of James T. Sanford then vested in the successors of Josephine. The court below properly refused to give any relief to the administrator of the estate of Harriet Sanford.

The respondents earnestly contend that the parol express trust in favor of Harriet Sanford, upon which it is claimed Harriet A. Sanford and Josephine, as her successor, held the mortgage herein sought to be enforced, was not established by satisfactory or sufficient evidence, and that consequently the transfer thereof to Harriet A. Sanford was absolute, that the estate of the mother had no interest therein, and that it vested wholly in Josephine, under her sister's will. They also contend that upon the failure to redeem on November 1, 1900, the title to the land became absolute in the Savings & Loan Society and its trustees, free from all claim on the part of the plaintiff or Jones as administrator, that the title of the respondents is derived by subsequent deeds from said trustees, and that by these transactions all right to, or lien upon, the land in favor of the plaintiff or Jones has been cut off. In view of the conclusions we have reached in regard to the statute of limitations, we find it unnecessary to consider these questions.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.

156 Cal. 114

HALSEY et al. v. GILLETT, Governor, et al.
(S. F. 5,309.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 12, 1909.)

STATES (§ 155*) — STATE BONDS — ISSUANCE — SIGNATURE.

Act 35th Leg. (St. 1903, p. 247, c. 211), providing for the issuance and sale of state bonds for the construction of a sea wall and appurtenances in the city and county of San Francisco, and requiring all the bonds to bear date as of January 2, 1905, the Governor, Comptroller, and Treasurer in office at the time the bonds were originally issued and not those in office when the bonds were sold, were the proper persons to execute them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. §§ 146, 147; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

In Bank. Petition for writ of mandamus by N. W. Halsey and another against the Hon. James N. Gillett, Governor of the State of California, A. B. Nye, Comptroller of the State, and William R. Williams, State Treasurer. Writ denied.

Goodfellow & Eells, for plaintiffs.

BEATTY, C. J. Omitting merely formal allegations, the facts alleged in the petition are the following:

"That at the Thirty-Fifth session of the Legislature of the state of California there was duly enacted by said Legislature an act entitled 'An act to provide for the issuance and sale of state bonds to create a fund for the construction by the Board of State Harbor Commissioners of a sea wall and appurtenances in the city and county of San Francisco; to create a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds, and providing for the submission of this act to a vote of the people,' which said act was duly approved by the Governor on the 20th day of March, 1903. That said act was thereafter submitted to the people of the state of California for their ratification by the proclamation of the Governor of said state of California calling for a general election by the people of said state to be held in the month of November in the year 1904, in which proclamation the said Governor included the submission of said act of the Legislature, and said act was duly ratified at said general election by receiving a majority of all the votes cast for and against it at said election; and ever since the said election said act, commonly known as 'The San Francisco Sea Wall Act' has been and is in full force and effect.

"That in said month of November, 1904, after and pursuant to said election and in accordance with section 10 of said act, the Governor of California made due proclamation that said act had been so ratified and was in full force and effect, and thereupon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of said act, Truman Reeves, who was then State Treasurer of the state of California, did prepare as such State Treasurer 2,000 suitable bonds in the form prescribed by said act, the said several bonds being numbered consecutively from 1 to 2,000 inclusive, and the said bonds were then, in or about the month of December, 1904, signed by George C. Pardee as Governor of said state, and were countersigned by E. P. Colgan as Comptroller of the state of California, and were indorsed by Truman Reeves as State Treasurer of the state of California, and each bond then had the seal of the state of California stamped thereon, and to each of said bonds, when so signed in the year 1904, were attached interest coupons in accordance with said act, which coupons were consecutively numbered on each bond, and were each signed by Truman Reeves as the State Treasurer of the state of California. That each of said bonds bore date of the 2d day of January, 1905, and in said month of December, 1904, and on said 2d day of January, 1905, the said George C. Pardee was the Governor of the state of California, and the said E. P. Colgan was the Comptroller of said state, and the said Truman Reeves was the State Treasurer of said state; but none of said persons is the holder of any of said offices at the present time, or did hold the same at any time since January, 1909.

"That of said 2,000 bonds 1,250 of the bonds, numbered 1 to 1,250, inclusive, were by the State Treasurer sold at public auction, and delivered to the highest bidder for cash, prior to January 1, 1909. That on the 6th day of May, 1909, the Board of State Harbor Commissioners of the state of California, at a meeting regularly called and held on said day, duly passed and adopted a resolution requesting the said Hon. James N. Gillett, as Governor of the state of California, to direct the sale of 500 of the bonds to be issued under said San Francisco sea wall act then remaining unsold; and thereafter the said Governor, under seal of the state of California, did direct said William R. Williams, as State Treasurer of said state, to offer for sale, and to sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, as provided in said act, 500 of the bonds authorized by said act, to wit, bonds numbered 1,251 to 1,750, both inclusive, and did further direct that said 500 bonds be sold in one parcel. That said Treasurer thereafter, and on the 24th day of May, 1909, caused notice of the public auction of said bonds to be given as required by said act, stating therein that said State Treasurer would sell said bonds numbered 1,251 to 1,750, inclusive, as authorized and required by said act, on Friday the 2d day of July, 1909, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of that day at the office of the State Treasurer in the state capitol building at Sacramento, Cal. A copy of said notice is hereto attached, and marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this petition.

"That on said 2d day of July, 1909, at the hour and place aforesaid, the said State Treasurer, William R. Williams, did offer for sale at public auction 500 of the bonds authorized and directed to be issued by the said act in accordance with the said notice; and your petitioners, as copartners as aforesaid, did then and there bid and offer for the said 500 bonds in United States gold coin the sum of $500,000, together with all interest accrued, and to accrue, upon said bonds to the time of their delivery to your petitioners, and also the further sum of $3,025 premium or bonus upon said bonds. That said bid by your petitioners was the highest and best bid made to, or received by, the said State Treasurer at said sale, and was by the said Treasurer accepted, and the said State Treasurer did then and there award and sell all of the said 500 bonds to your petitioners as copartners, as aforesaid.

"That the said State Treasurer William R. Williams has offered and tendered to your petitioners, as and for the bonds so sold to them, 500 of the bonds which were so signed in the year 1904 by the said Pardee as Governor, and countersigned by the said Colgan as Comptroller, and indorsed by the said Reeves as State Treasurer; and has refused to date, or cause to be dated, any of said bonds as of the year 1909, or to indorse any of said bonds, or to sign the coupons thereto attached as State Treasurer of the state of California, and does refuse so to do; that the said James N. Gillett and A. B. Nye have refused, and do refuse, to sign or countersign any of said bonds so sold and tendered to your petitioners as Governor or Comptroller of said state, and none of said bonds so tendered or offered to your petitioners by the said State Treasurer are signed or authenticated in any manner except by the signature of said state officers in the year 1904.

"That by such refusal so to sign, countersign, and indorse said bonds and to sign their coupons the said Governor, Comptroller, and Treasurer, defendants herein (as your petitioners are informed and believe) have violated, and are violating, the provisions of said San Francisco sea wall act, relating to the issuance and execution of said bonds; and the 500 bonds so tendered and offered to your petitioners by the said State Treasurer as aforesaid, have not been signed or executed by the proper officers of the state of California, as required and directed by said act. That your petitioners, as copartners as aforesaid, are ready and willing to pay the State Treasurer the full amount of their said accepted bid in exchange for, and upon receipt of, 500 bonds executed in accordance with said act, and it is the express duty of said officers, defendants herein, so to sign, countersign, and indorse the same. That unless said bonds shall be so signed, countersigned, and indorsed by the defendants, your petitioners will suffer great loss and hardship, and that your petitioners have no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law for the wrongs hereby complained of.

"That in the opinion of your petitioners it is proper that the writ herein applied for should issue originally from this honorable court without previous application to a lower court, because the construction and meaning of said act of the Legislature, herein involved, was recently before your honors in the application made by E. C. Graham to this honorable court for a similar writ of mandate to the same state officers, which application, numbered S. F. 5,294, was denied by your honors because said Graham, not being a purchaser or holder of any of said bonds, has no status entitling him to invoke the remedy sought by him.

"Your petitioners make this application to your honors in the first instance for the further reason that the validity and value of the bonds of the state of California already issued, and to be issued and sold by the state, will be determined by the court's decision, and the question is therefore of great public interest, affecting large property values, which must ultimately come before your honors for decision, in order to end all doubts of investors who may wish to purchase any of said bonds."

Upon these allegations of fact the petitioners pray "that an alternative writ of mandate issue herein out of this court directed to the defendants above named, and each of them, requiring and commanding them to immediately execute said 500 bonds numbered 1,251 to 1,750, inclusive, in accordance with said act; that is to say, that the said defendant Hon. James N. Gillett be required to sign said 500 bonds, and each of them, as Governor of the state of California; that said defendant A. B. Nye be required to countersign said bonds, and each of them, as Comptroller of the state of California; that said defendant William R. Williams be required to indorse said bonds, and each of them, as Treasurer of the state of California, and also to sign each of the interest coupons attached to said bonds maturing subsequent to said 2d day of July, 1909, and thereupon to deliver said 500 bonds with their coupons to your petitioners upon receipt of $503,025, with all accrued interest as shown by said coupons up to the date of such delivery to your petitioners. And further that the said defendants above named be required to do any and all things necessary for the due and legal execution and issuance of said bonds in the manner required by law, and that upon the hearing of this cause the said writ be made absolute, and that your petitioners may have such other relief, judgment, and order as may be meet in the premises."

The statute authorizing the issuance and sale of the bonds described in the petition is somewhat ambiguous, but since the whole

2,000 bonds authorized are required by the act to bear date the 2d day of January, 1905, the better construction of its equivocal provisions seems to be that the Governor, Comptroller, and Treasurer then in office were the proper officers to execute them, and such having been their construction of the act evidenced by their contemporaneous action, we hold that the bonds tendered to the plaintiff were duly and properly executed according to law.

For that reason only, the writ is denied.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(155 Cal. 638)

KAISER LAND & FRUIT CO. v. CURRY,
Secretary of State. (S. F. 5,146.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 15, 1909.)

1. STATUTES (§ 181*)—CONSTRUCTION—REASONABLE CONSTRUCTION.

An intention should not be attributed to the Legislature which would make a statute ineffectual and worthless, unless such intention is plain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 259, 263; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 592½*)—CONSTRUCTION—STATUTES—FORFEITURE—IPSO FACTO FORFEITURE.

A statute, forfeiting corporate charters if an annual tax thereby imposed is not paid by a certain time, should be construed against an ipso facto forfeiture without further proceedings, if it can be fairly so construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 592½.*]

3. LICENSES (§ 18*)—FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE.

Act approved March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 493, c. 386), as amended June 13, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19), March 19, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 664, c. 347), and March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 745, c. 403), imposing a license tax on all domestic corporations with certain exceptions, and all foreign corporations doing business in the state, and forfeiting the charter or the right to do business in the state on failure to pay, held to require every domestic corporation to pay the tax, whether or not it transacted business in the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 608*)—FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—IPSO FACTO FORFEITURE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

While at common law, a forfeiture does not divest title until the rights of the state have been determined by a proper judgment, a statute prescribing a forfeiture may be self-executing, and the failure of any domestic corporation to pay the charge imposed by the statute in question for any year by 4 o'clock p. m. on November 30th, ipso facto forfeited the corporate charter without further proceedings; section 6, making the original act of June 13, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 23, c. 19), permitting any corporation which has failed to pay the license tax, and penalty, to pay the same between July 1, 1906, and 4 o'clock p. m. on September 1, 1906, together with the tax for the current year, and thereby be relieved from the forfeiture prescribed, and the amendment to that section approved March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 746, c. 403), relating to amounts unpaid for the years 1905 and 1906, and 1906-1907, merely relieving corporations from forfeitures already accrued by their failure to pay charges for the years specified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2416-2419; Dec. Dig. § 608.*]

5. LICENSES (§ 7*)—CORPORATE FRANCHISES—TAX UPON "PROPERTY"—PRIVILEGE TAX.

The tax imposed by the statute is not a tax upon "property," within Const. art. 13, § 1, requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, being a license fee for the privilege of existing as a corporation in case of domestic corporations, and for the privilege of doing business within the state in case of a foreign corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5693-5728; vol. 8, pp. 7763-7770.]

6. TAXATION (§ 49*)—CORPORATE FRANCHISES—"PROPERTY."

Everything which gives value to corporate stock must be assessed as "property," under Const. art. 13, § 1, requiring all property not exempt to be taxed in proportion to its value, and corporate franchises are property within the Constitution, which may be assessed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§§ 4, 391*)—POWER TO REGULATE.

The state can determine upon what conditions corporations may be created and exist therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 11-13, 1573, 1578; Dec. Dig. §§ 4, 391.*]

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 126*)—CORPORATE FRANCHISES—ALTERATION.

Under Const. art. 12, § 1, providing that all laws "now" in force, or which may hereafter be passed, concerning corporations may be altered or repealed, the Legislature may change the condition upon which the privilege of acting as a corporation shall continue, and every corporation accepts its charter subject to the exercise of such power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 325, 366-369; Dec. Dig. § 126.*]

9. LICENSES (§ 7*)—CORPORATE FRANCHISES.

Under Const. art. 12, § 1, permitting the alteration or repeal of all laws concerning corporations, the state may require the payment of an annual license tax of all corporations for raising revenue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

10. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 287*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—TAXATION OF PROPERTY—FORFEITURES OF CORPORATE CHARTER.

The statute does not violate the constitutional provision, prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law, because the failure to pay the tax ipso facto forfeited the corporate charter, as there could be no forfeitures of charters of corporations exempted from paying the tax, even if they were reported as delinquent, nor could the charter of any corporation required to pay the tax be forfeited by a declaration of forfeiture, if the tax was in fact paid, as it could show that fact whenever its legality was attacked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 831, 905; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

11. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 287*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—LICENSE TAX.

The statute was not a taking of property at all within the constitutional provisions, even though the continuance of the right to exist or do business as a corporation might be very valuable; the charge imposed being a mere license either for the privilege of being, or doing business as, a corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 80*)—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS—LEGISLATIVE POWERS—ENCROACHMENT—ENCROACHMENT ON JUDICIARY—CONSTITUTION OF STATUTE.

The statute does not violate Const. art. 3, § 1, prohibiting any person charged with the exercise of powers of one of the three departments of government from exercising functions pertaining to either of the others, on the ground that the Secretary of State, an executive officer, is given the judicial power to determine whether any delinquent corporation is within the class of corporations exempted by St. 1906, p. 24, c. 19, § 7, from paying the tax; such determination being merely incidental to his ministerial duty of reporting to the Governor the list of delinquent corporations, and not being binding upon any corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 140, 143-147; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

13. LICENSES (§ 7*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—DISCRIMINATION IN FAVOR OF FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

The statute does not violate Const. art. 12, § 15, providing that no foreign corporation shall be allowed to transact business within the state on more favorable terms than are prescribed by law for similar domestic corporations; domestic corporations being required to pay the same tax at the same time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

14. STATUTES (§ 72*)—OPERATION—UNIFORM OPERATION—GENERAL LAWS.

That a law operates differently on different classes does not make its operation not uniform, if the classification is reasonable, so that a statute forfeiting a charter of domestic corporations which failed to pay the license tax imposed, and forfeiting the right to do business of foreign corporations failing to pay such tax, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, requiring all general laws to have a uniform operation, since in each case the state forfeits all it has given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

15. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 230*)—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW—LICENSE TAX.

A statute forfeiting the charters of domestic corporations for nonpayment of an annual license fee does not deny the equal protection of the law, within the rule that there is a denial of equal protection of the law where the validity of a statute depends upon the existence of a fact which can only be determined by an investigation of a complicated and technical character, and a provision thereof imposing severe penalties for its violation so as to intimidate persons affected from resorting to the courts to test the validity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 687; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

16. STATUTES (§ 113*)—TITLES—EXPRESSION OF SUBJECTS.

Act approved March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 493, c. 386), as amended June 13, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19), March 19, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 664, c. 347), and March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 745, c. 403), entitled "An act relating to revenue and taxation," providing for a license tax upon corporations, and making an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the act, imposes a license tax upon foreign and domestic corporations, incorporated or doing business within the state, requiring the Secretary of State to report a list of all corporations becoming delinquent, and forfeiting the charters of such delinquent corporations upon a certain date each year. Held, that the title of the act sufficiently expressed its subject, as required by Const. art. 4, § 24, even though the statute was construed to impose a tax upon corporations irrespective of whether they were actually engaged in business, and, though the title did not state that the act was one amending the charters of corporations, every new law affecting corporations necessarily amends their charter.

[Ed. Note.—For other case, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

17. STATUTES (§ 199*)—SUBJECTS—EXPRESSION OF SUBJECTS IN TITLE.

Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring the subject of every act to be expressed in its title, was intended to prevent fraud and deception in the enactment of statutes, the title of which did not intimate its contents, and the inclusion of incongruous matter not specified in the title, and the title is sufficient if it reasonably intimates matters contained therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 136-139, 196; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

In Bank. Petition for a writ of mandate by the Kaiser Land & Fruit Company against Charles F. Curry, Secretary of State of the state of California. On demurrer to petition. Demurrer sustained and proceeding dismissed.

Gray & Cooper, Otto Irving Wise, Louis Hirsch, and Hugo K. Asher, amici curiæ, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., R. C. Van Fleet, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Raymond Benjamin, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Mandamus prayed to be directed against Charles F. Curry, Secretary of State of the state of California. This is an original proceeding in mandate. The petition shows the following to be the material facts: Plaintiff is a domestic corporation formed for purposes of profit, whose certificate of incorporation was issued August 12, 1899. By its articles of incorporation, its number of directors is fixed at five. On or about October 15, 1908, a majority of the stockholders thereof duly met, executed and acknowledged a certificate, decreasing the number of directors from five to three, which, on October 22, 1908, was filed in the office of the county clerk of Santa Barbara county, the county in which was located the principal place of business of the corporation. A certified copy of this certificate was presented to the Secretary of State for filing, on October 29, 1908, together with the fees allowed by law for filing, and the corporation demanded that such officer file the same, and issue a certificate of decrease of the number of directors. Section 290, Civ. Code. The Secretary of State refused to file the same, or to issue such certificate, on the ground that said corporation had never paid

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

the "corporation license tax," claimed to be due under an act of the State Legislature, entitled "An act relating to revenue and taxation, providing for a license tax upon corporations, and making an appropriation for the purposes of carrying out the objects of this act," approved March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 493, c. 386), as amended June 13, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19), March 19, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 664, c. 347), and March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 745, c. 403), claiming that by reason of such nonpayment said corporation had become dissolved and had forfeited its charter and no longer existed. Said corporation transacted no business of any kind or character in the state of California, or elsewhere, between July 1, 1907, and June 30, 1908. It had never paid said tax, but at the time of the tender for filing of said certificate, on October 29, 1908, it offered to pay the amount due for said fiscal year 1907-1908, the penalty for delinquency provided in the act, and any other amount that had since become due thereunder, and is now ready and willing to pay the same. The matter has been submitted for decision upon the petition and the demurrer thereto of the Secretary of State, based on the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to warrant relief.

So far as it may be considered material, the act is as follows:

"Section 1. No corporation heretofore or hereafter incorporated under the laws of this state, or of any other state, shall do or attempt to do business by virtue of its charter or certificate of incorporation, in this state, without a state license therefor.

"Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of every corporation incorporated under the laws of this state, and of every foreign corporation now doing business, or which shall hereafter engage in business in this state, to procure annually from the Secretary of State a license authorizing the transaction of such business in this state, and shall pay therefor a license tax as follows: [Then follows a statement of the amounts of tax proportioned to the amount of the authorized capital stock of the corporation, the tax running from $10 where the authorized capital stock does not exceed $10,000, to $250 where it exceeds $5,000,000.] Said license tax or fee shall be due and payable on the first day of July of each and every year to the Secretary of State, who shall pay the same into the state treasury. If not paid on or before the hour of four o'clock p. m. of the first day of September next thereafter, the same shall become delinquent and there shall be added thereto, as a penalty for such delinquency, the sum of ten dollars. The license tax or fee hereby provided authorizes the corporation to transact its business during the year or for any fractional part of each year in which such license tax or fee is paid. 'Year,' within the meaning of this act, means from and including the first day of July to and including the thirtieth day of June next thereafter.

"Sec. 3. The Secretary of State shall, on or before the 15th day of September in each year, report to the Governor of the state a list of all corporations which have become delinquent, as provided in section two of this act, and the Governor shall forthwith issue his proclamation, declaring under this act that the charter of such delinquent domestic corporation will be forfeited and the right of such foreign corporation to do business in this state will be forfeited unless payment of such license tax, together with the penalty for such delinquency, as hereinbefore provided, be made to the Secretary of State on or before the hour of four o'clock p. m. of the thirtieth day of November next following.

"Sec. 4. Said proclamation shall be filed immediately in the office of the Secretary of State, and said Secretary of State shall immediately cause a copy of said proclamation to be published in one issue of each of two daily newspapers to be selected by the Governor.

"Sec. 5. At the hour of four o'clock p. m. of the thirtieth day of November each year the charters of all delinquent domestic corporations which have failed to pay the said license tax, together with said penalty for such delinquency, shall be forfeited to the state of California, and the right of all delinquent foreign corporations to do business in this state which have failed to pay said license tax, together with the penalty for such delinquency, shall be likewise forfeited. * * *

"Sec. 7. All educational, religious, scientific and charitable corporations, and all corporations which are not organized for pecuniary profit, are exempt from the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 8. On or before the thirty-first day of December of each year the Secretary of State shall make a list of all domestic corporations whose charters have been so forfeited and of all foreign corporations whose right to do business in this state has been so forfeited, and shall transmit a certified copy thereof to each county clerk in this state, who shall file the same in his office.

"Sec. 9. It shall be unlawful for any corporation, delinquent under this act, either domestic or foreign, which has not paid the license tax or fee, together with the penalty for such delinquency, as in this act prescribed, to exercise the powers for such corporation, or to transact any business in this state, after the thirtieth day of November next following the delinquency. * * *

Section 10a makes the directors or managers in office of a corporation whose charter is so forfeited the trustees of the corporation and stockholders or members to settle up the affairs of the corporation.

Section 10b is as follows: "At the time of filing a certified copy of articles of incorporation of any corporation when filed on or between the first day of July and the following first day of December in any year, there shall be paid, in addition to all other fees required by law to be paid to Secretary of State, the sum of twenty dollars, which shall be received and license receipt issued in full of the license tax payable under this act, for the then current year."

Certain questions as to the proper construction of this act are involved by this application. We are satisfied that the act must be construed as imposing the duty on all domestic corporations (excepting educational, religious, scientific, and charitable corporations, and all corporations which are not organized for pecuniary profit) to pay the so-called "tax," regardless of whether they actually transact, or attempt to transact, business in the state. Section 2, the section prescribing this duty, is plain and explicit in this regard. "It shall be the duty of every corporation incorporated under the laws of this state, and of every foreign corporation now doing business, or which shall hereafter engage in business in this state, to procure annually from the Secretary of State a license authorizing the transaction of such business in this state, and shall pay therefor a license tax as follows." The words "now doing business or which shall hereafter engage in business in this state" are of course referable only to the words "every foreign corporation." A distinction is thus clearly made between domestic and foreign corporations in the matter of the duty imposed, which, in view of other provisions of the act, is unexplainable on any other theory than that the doing of business is immaterial so far as a domestic corporation is concerned. If such distinction had not been intended it would have been the natural and ordinary course to have followed substantially the form used in section 1, by prescribing that any corporation "heretofore or hereafter incorporated under the laws of this state or of any other state" doing, or which shall hereafter engage in, business in this state, etc., or the form used in section 9, by providing that every corporation, "either domestic or foreign," now doing business or which shall hereafter engage in business in this state, etc., shall obtain a license, etc. The provision that the license thus to be obtained shall authorize the transaction in this state of "business," or "such business," does not detract from the force of the preceding portion of the section, which, in terms, requires every domestic corporation to obtain such a license and pay the amount prescribed therefor, whether or not it transacts business. The view that the act contemplated the imposition of this burden on every domestic corporation, regardless of whether or not it transacts business in the state, is, we think, more consistent with the whole frame of the act than would be the view that it was intended simply to impose a tax on the transaction of business in the state by any corporation. The title in no way indicates the imposition of any charge upon the carrying on by a corporation of any business or occupation, excepting so far as the use of the words "license tax" in designating the burden imposed may so indicate. It is simply "an act relating to revenue and taxation, providing for a license tax upon corporations," etc. The words "license tax," used with reference to corporations exclusively, mean no more necessarily than a charge of some kind imposed upon them solely for their corporate privilege, and as here used simply import a charge, for purposes of revenue it may be conceded, upon "corporations" generally; that is, upon all corporations so far as it was within the power of the Legislature to impose the charge.

Again, we find it provided in section 10b that, "at the time of filing a certified copy of the articles of incorporation of any corporation, when filed on or between the first day of July and the following first day of December in any year, there shall be paid, in addition to all other fees required by law to be paid to Secretary of State, the sum of twenty dollars, which shall be received and license receipt issued in full of the license tax payable under this act for the then current year." As the statute was at the time of this enactment the "tax" prescribed for all corporations was $20 per annum. A foreign corporation had no right to do business in this state without filing a certified copy of its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State (St. 1901, p. 108, c. 93), and the filing of such a copy by a domestic corporation was a condition precedent to the issuance of the certificate of incorporation (Civ. Code, § 296). It thus appears very clearly that it was the intention of the Legislature that the "tax" should be paid by every corporation a certified copy of whose articles of incorporation was on file in the office of the Secretary of State. This construction is still further supported by the provisions of section 3. The Secretary of State is to report to the Governor a list of all corporations that are delinquent under section 2, and the Governor is to act solely on such report. No method is provided by which the Secretary of State can ascertain which of the many thousand corporations in this state are actually engaged in business in this state under its articles, and there is no intimation in the act that he is to make any such investigation. It seems obvious that the intention was that he should act upon the records of his office, showing the corporations that were in fact authorized to do such business, and that all corporations so authorized were liable, and should be reported to the Governor if they failed to pay the tax; any foreign corporation so authorized being engaged in business in this state within the meaning of the act, even if it failed to actually transact business. Any other construction would render the act absolutely worthless, so far as its practical effect is concerned, and certainly we are not to attribute to the Legislature an intention that would bring about such a result, unless that intention is plain. It may be conceded that the intent to impose this charge on all domestic corporations and foreign corporations whose articles of incorporation are on file in the office of the Secretary of State, regardless of whether they actually do the business they are authorized to do by such articles, might have been more clearly and concisely expressed, but we think it obvious from a consideration of the whole act that such was undoubtedly the intent, and that such intent has been sufficiently expressed.

The next question to be considered in regard to the construction of the act is whether under its provisions a failure on the part of a domestic corporation to comply with its provisions by paying the charge imposed thereby for any year by 4 o'clock p. m. of the 30th day of November of that year ipso facto works a forfeiture of its charter. The contention of plaintiff on this point is that the act merely states the conditions under which the charter is liable to forfeiture, and that the forfeiture before becoming effective must be established by the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, in some proceeding brought for that purpose. It is of course admitted that the only question in this connection is one of legislative intent. All the cases agree upon the proposition that, although a forfeiture at common law does not operate to divest the title of the owner until by a proper judgment in a suit instituted for that purpose the rights of the state have been determined, a statute prescribing a forfeiture may be self-executing. Upon this point the language of the act is so clear and unmistakable in meaning that we should be obliged to hold that it was intended that such failure should ipso facto work a forfeiture, even if the result thereof should be, as claimed, that the act so providing must be held unconstitutional on the ground that it violates the due process of law clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. We concede the claim that the act should be construed against such ipso facto forfeiture if the language used is fairly susceptible of such interpretation, but we are satisfied that it is not so susceptible. As we have seen, the act, after imposing the specific charge, provides that it shall be paid between July 1st and 4 o'clock p. m. of September 1st of the year for which it is due; that at the last-mentioned time a penalty of $10 for delinquency shall accrue (section 2); that the Secretary of State shall, on or before September 15th in each year, report to the Governor a list of all delinquent corporations, whereupon the Governor shall issue his proclamation declaring "that the charters of such delinquent corporations will be forfeited * * * unless payment of said license tax, together with the penalty for such delinquency, * * * be made to the Secretary of State on or before the hour of four o'clock p. m. of the thirtieth day of November next following"; that a copy of such proclamation shall be immediately published by the Secretary of State in one issue of each of two daily newspapers to be selected by the Governor (section 4); that "at the hour of four o'clock p. m. of the thirtieth day of November each year the charters of all delinquent domestic corporations which have failed to pay the said license tax, together with said penalty for such delinquency, shall be forfeited to the state of California" (section 5); and that on or before the 31st day of December of each year the Secretary of State shall make "a list of all domestic corporations whose charters have been so forfeited" (section 8). The language used is irreconcilable, under the decisions in this state, with any other theory than that of ipso facto forfeiture, and the whole frame of the act is in support of this theory.

In Los Angeles Ry. Co. v. Los Angeles, 152 Cal. 242, 92 Pac. 490, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1269, the latest case on this subject, the provision under consideration was that portion of section 502 of the Civil Code relative to street railroad corporations, providing that "a failure to comply with either of the foregoing provisions of this section, or with either of the provisions of the ordinance granting said right of way, works a forfeiture of the right of way, and also of the franchise," etc. It was held, Chief Justice Beatty speaking for the court, that the words italicized made the statute self-executing, and it was said: "A judgment declaring and enforcing a forfeiture does nothing more than work a forfeiture, and when a breach of condition works a forfeiture, there is no office for a judgment to perform, except perhaps to supply conclusive evidence of the fact—evidence which may in certain contingencies be useful, though not for all purposes essential." In Oakland, etc., R. R. Co. v. Oakland, etc., R. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181, the provision was "that, if the provisions of this act are not complied with, then the franchise and privileges herein granted shall utterly cease and be forfeited." It was held that the statutory provision was self-executing, and that the mere failure to comply with the provisions of the act ipso facto worked a forfeiture. In Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 250, 257, the provision was that if the said parties shall fail, etc., "then all the rights granted by this act shall become forfeited to the state," and it was held that this provision ipso facto worked a forfeiture. See, also, Borland v. Lewis, 43 Cal. 569; Town of Arcata v. The Arcata, etc., Co., 92 Cal. 639, 645, 28 Pac. 670.

Section 6 of the act, inserted by way of amendment to the original act on June 6, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 23, c. 19), providing that any corporation which failed to pay the license tax and penalty required by the original act "may between the first day of July, 1906, and the hour of four o'clock p. m. of the first day of September, 1906, pay the said license tax and penalty," together with the license tax for the current year, and thereby "be relieved from the forfeiture prescribed" by such original act, is somewhat relied on as showing an intention that the failure to comply with the provisions of the act as to payment does not ipso facto work a forfeiture. The same claim could with equal force be made as to the amendment of this section approved March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 746, c. 403), referring to amounts due and unpaid for the years 1905-1906 and 1906-1907. We think that these provisions can be reasonably construed in no other way than as being designed simply to relieve corporations that had failed to pay the charges for certain specified years from the effect of a forfeiture that had already occurred, upon condition that such corporations should then pay the amount of such charges. This is the necessary construction, whether or not the effect thereof be that under section 7 of article 12 the provisions are void. The question of the validity of such provisions is not involved in this proceeding.

This brings us to a consideration of the question of the nature of the charge imposed by this act on the corporations affected by its provisions. It is earnestly claimed that, although denominated a "license tax," it is a tax on "property" within the meaning of that word as used in section 1, art. 13, of our Constitution. That section providing that "all property in the state, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law," it is claimed that, as this act taxes the property of the various corporations without regard to its value, it is void. In view of what we have already said, it is clear that the charge imposed by this act is a charge for the privilege of being and continuing to exist as a corporation in the case of a domestic corporation, and a charge for the privilege of doing business as a corporation in this state in the case of a foreign corporation. It is settled in this state that the corporate franchise of a corporation, the right to be and exist as a corporation, may constitute valuable property of the corporation within the meaning of the term "property" as used in section 1, art. 13, and that when it does constitute such valuable property, it is to be assessed and taxed "in proportion to its value" as any other property. Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; Spring Valley W. W. v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, 110; Bank of California v. San Francisco, 142 Cal. 276, 75 Pac. 832, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130. The well-settled theory of our system of taxation of corporations is that everything that gives value to the shares of stock of a corporation must be assessed as property of the corporation under this section of the Constitution (see Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 583, 589, 87 Pac. 102, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167), and it is recognized that this corporate franchise constitutes one of such elements.

As was said in Bank of California v. San Francisco, supra, 142 Cal. 288, 75 Pac. 837, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130: "It is the exercise of the right that gives the value that our laws require to be taxed." (The italics are ours.) In the same case it was also said, speaking of the right or franchise of a corporation engaged in the business of supplying water or artificial light in municipalities to use the public streets for their pipes, etc., conferred by section 19, art. 11, of the Constitution on any corporation or individual engaged at any time in such business: "While the generality of the grant does not deprive such rights of the character of franchises, they have value only so far as the exercise thereof contributes to the value of the capital of the corporation, and are precisely the same in this respect as the exercise of the corporate franchise." It is only in this sense that such a franchise has any value under our general laws relating to the formation of corporations. It is this value that our law requires to be ascertained and taxed as property. The provision of our Constitution authorizing and requiring such assessment and taxation of the corporate franchise as a thing of value cannot be held to preclude the state from imposing a charge for the privilege obtained from it of being and acting as a corporation. Under our law there is really no difference in principle in this regard between a fee required to be paid to the state "as a condition or for the privilege of being a corporation" and an annual charge or excise upon the right to continue corporate existence. So far as such charge is a tax at all, it is a mere privilege or license tax (Gray's Limitations on Taxing Power, §§ 54, 55), the mere purchase price of the privilege. The state has the sole power to determine upon what conditions corporations may be created and exist within its borders. As put by Mr. Gray, "Corporate life is a creation of the state, and can be bestowed by the state upon such conditions as it chooses." Section 54. In section 1, art. 12, of the Constitution of 1879 it is provided: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act. All laws now in force in this state concerning corporations, and all laws that may be hereafter passed pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time or repealed." Under this reserved power it is not to be doubted that the Legislature has the right to change the conditions upon which the privilege of being and acting as a corporation shall continue to exist, and that every corporation accepts its charter subject to the exercise of such power. Where the state possesses such reserved power as to corporations already created that it may, for the purpose of increasing its revenue, prescribe as one of such conditions the annual payment of any amount it sees fit, it cannot be questioned. See Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 599, 10 Sup. Ct. 593, 33 L. Ed. 1025.

In New Jersey, where, as here, the corporate franchise was assessed as property, according to its value, a statute provided, so far as material to the case before the court, that "all other corporations incorporated under the laws of this state, and not hereinbefore provided for, shall pay an annual license fee or franchise tax of one-tenth of one per centum on all amounts of capital stock issued and outstanding." In holding the receiver in charge of an insolvent corporation liable to pay this charge, notwithstanding that the corporation's franchises were no longer a valuable asset, and were not being used, the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey said: "Although the statute designates an imposition of this kind as a license fee or franchise tax, it plainly is not a tax upon corporate franchises. In fact, strictly speaking, it is not a tax at all, nor has it the elements of one. It is in reality an arbitrary imposition, laid upon the corporation without regard to the value of its property or its franchises, and without regard to whether it exercises the latter or not solely as a condition of its continued existence. The state in creating a corporation has the right to impose upon its creature such conditions as the Legislature within constitutional limits may deem proper; and the acceptance by the corporation of the franchises, powers, and privileges conferred upon it binds it to the performance of those conditions so long as it continues to remain in possession of those franchises, powers, and privileges, and the conditions themselves remain unrevoked by the Legislature, and this is so without regard to the solvency or insolvency of the corporation, the value, or want of value, of its franchises, or whether or not it is exercising them either by its officers and directors or through a receiver. The sole test in determining its liability to comply with those conditions so long as they remain unrevoked is the existence or nonexistence of the corporation." In re United States Car Co., 60 N. J. Eq. 516, 43 Atl. 673. This quotation aptly states the real nature of the charge imposed by the act under consideration, and the grounds upon which the imposition is justified. It is substantially the purchase price which the state has seen fit to charge for the continuance of the privilege of being and acting as a corporation. Although this privilege had already been granted to plaintiff and all other existing corporations, it had been granted subject to the power reserved by the state, to be exercised by general laws, of revocation, or the imposition of new charges therefor, or new conditions upon which it might be enjoyed. The charge is in no sense a tax upon the thing granted, as is the tax imposed under section 1, art. 13. It is a mere license fee charged for the privilege, and is not a tax upon property at all, and the requirements of section 1, art. 13, of the Constitution do not apply thereto. See, in addition to authorities already cited, Jersey City, etc., Co. v. United, etc., Co. (C. C.) 46 Fed. 264; State v. Pacific, etc., Co. (Or.) 99 Pac. 427; Chehalis Boom Co. v. Chehalis Co., 24 Wash. 135, 63 Pac. 1123; American Smelting, etc., Co. v. People, 34 Colo. 240, 82 Pac. 531; Marsden Co. v. Assessors, 61 N. J. Law, 461, 39 Atl. 638; People v. Knight, 174 N. Y. 478, 67 N. E. 65, 63 L. R. A. 87. So far as the charge is imposed on foreign corporations, it is of the same general nature, and rests upon the same basis. It is imposed as a condition of the grant of the privilege to do business in the state. "A foreign corporation can only come into a state and do business there by consent of the state; and the charge imposed by the state as a condition of that consent is not ordinarily a tax on property." Gray's Limitations of Taxing Power, § 57; Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 14 Sup. Ct. 865, 38 L. Ed. 773.

Construing the act as we do, and in view of what we have already said, we see no force in the claim that it is void as being in conflict with the due process of law provisions of the federal and state Constitutions, by reason of the fact that the failure of a domestic corporation to pay the charge imposed ipso facto works a forfeiture of its charter, without any opportunity to the corporation to be heard. Practically we have here simply the case of the grant by the state of a privilege upon condition subsequent, the privilege of being and acting as a corporation, which is to continue only upon the condition that the corporation shall annually pay to the state a certain specific amount therefor, on or before the 30th day of November at 4 o'clock p. m., it being provided that upon failure to pay at such time, the privilege shall ipso facto cease, provided, of course, that the acts required to be performed by the Secretary of State and the Governor shall have been performed in the manner required. This is not the taking of property without the due process of law, or, indeed, the taking of property at all within the meaning of the constitutional provisions, notwithstanding that the continuance of the privilege might be very valuable. By virtue of the terms of the statutes relating to the grant of the privilege and its continuance the privilege ceases to exist upon the failure of the corporation to make the payment specified as a condition of its continuance. As said in Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles Co., supra, where a breach of condition works a forfeiture of the thing granted, "there is no office for a judgment to perform, except perhaps to supply conclusive evidence of the fact" which itself works the forfeiture. See, also, Arcata v. Arcata, etc., Co., 92 Cal. 639, 645, 28 Pac. 676. It is obvious that there is no analogy between such a case as is here presented and cases like Chauvin v. Valiton, 8 Mont. 451, 20 Pac. 658, where the statute provided for the summary seizure and sale in a manner held to be in violation of the due process provisions of any property used in carrying on a trade, occupation, or profession for which a license was required, to pay the amount due for the privilege of carrying on such trade, occupation, or profession. It may be conceded for the purposes of this case that the Legislature has not the power to enact a law the effect of which would be to summarily deprive a corporation of other property owned by it, as a penalty for the nonpayment of an amount due the state, without notice and some opportunity to the corporation to be heard. The property rights of a corporation are, of course, as sacred as those of the individual. But so far as the privilege to be and act as a corporation granted by the state constitutes property of the corporation, one of its elements is that it is held subject to such conditions as may lawfully be imposed by the state, and that it will cease to exist upon noncompliance with those provisions if the state has so declared. We need not consider, therefore, what kind of notice and hearing is essential in proceedings to enforce taxes by the seizure or sale of property of the taxpayer, or the question of the validity of such a provision as was involved in King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 407, 18 Sup. Ct. 925, 43 L. Ed. 214, which was one contained in the Constitution of West Virginia providing for the forfeiture of any land the owner of which had failed during a given period to have placed on the proper land book for taxation.

It should be unnecessary to say that it is only when the breach of condition prescribed by the act in fact occurs that there is any forfeiture, and that there can be no forfeiture as to any corporation exempted from the provisions of the act. Nothing is conclusively adjudicated, or adjudicated at all, against any corporation by any tribunal or officer. If a corporation exempted from the provisions of the act under the section exempting "all educational, religious, scientific and charitable corporations, and all corporations which are not organized for pecuniary profit," is nevertheless reported to the Governor by the Secretary of State as delinquent, and included in the proclamation of the Governor provided for in section 3, there is no forfeiture as to such a corporation, and wherever its right to be and continue as a corporation is legally assailed, that fact could be made to appear. So if a corporation liable under the act had in fact paid the amount prescribed prior to the 1st day of September at 4 o'clock p. m., but was nevertheless included in such report and proclamation, there would be no forfeiture, for the simple reason that the event upon which the forfeiture depended had not occurred, and whenever its right to continue as a corporation is legally assailed that fact can be shown. See King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 404, 434, 18 Sup. Ct. 925, 43 L. Ed. 214. And if there be any objection to the validity of the act, either as to the whole act or in so far as it purports to affect any particular corporation, such corporation has ample opportunity to make such objection when an attempt is made to enforce the forfeiture declared thereby. If the objection be sustained, it will of course result that there has been no forfeiture.

The act is not in violation of section 1, art. 3, of the Constitution, providing that no person charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of the three departments of the state, the legislative, executive, and judicial, shall exercise any functions appertaining to either of the others, except as in the Constitution provided. The point in this connection is that the Secretary of State, an executive officer, is given the judicial power to determine whether any corporation which has failed to pay the charge is within or without the exception mentioned in section 7 of the act. He is given no such power within the meaning of the constitutional provision. He is simply called upon to report to the Governor, with a view to the making of the proper proclamation of the latter officer, a list of the corporations which, according to the records of his office, have not paid the charge imposed upon them by the act. This proclamation, it will be remembered, is practically a notice to delinquent corporations, advising them that unless the charge, together with penalty for delinquency, is paid at the time designated by the statute, their charters will be forfeited. While the Secretary of State must exercise his judgment in determining which of the corporations whose articles are on file come within the description given in section 7, purely for the purpose of determining which shall be included in the list he is required to make, he does this as a mere incident to the exercise of a purely ministerial function, and is not making a determination that is binding on any corporation. See People v. Hayne, 83 Cal. 111, 23 Pac. 1, 7 L. R. A. 348, 17 Am. St. Rep. 211; In re Stevens, 83 Cal. 322, 332, 23 Pac. 379, 17 Am. St. Rep. 252; People v. Board of Education, 54 Cal. 375; Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 49, 90 Pac. 129, 121 Am. St. Rep. 90; Owners of Lands v. People, 113 Ill. 296, 309.

We are unable to see any force in the objection made by amici curiæ that the act is in conflict with section 11, art. 1, of the Constitution, in that it does not operate uniformly upon all the corporations to which it is applicable, in that it imposes different penalties upon domestic and foreign corporations for nonpayment of the charge. The California corporation forfeits its charter, while the foreign corporation forfeits only the right to do business in the state. As to each, the state takes away all that it has given, and all that it can take away. The operation of a law is none the less uniform because it operates differently upon different classes, provided there be a reasonable basis for the classification and for a different treatment of the various classes. There is such a reasonable basis here. The difference in the power of the state as regards domestic and foreign corporations furnishes a rational and proper basis for providing these different penalties in case of delinquency by the two classes of corporations.

The act is not in conflict with section 15, art. 12, of the state Constitution, which provides that "no corporation outside the limits of this state shall be allowed to transact business within this state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law to similar corporations organized under the laws of this state." The conditions prescribed upon which corporations are allowed to transact business within this state are absolutely the same as to both classes, domestic and foreign. Each is required to pay the same amount, and the time for payment is the same as to each.

We do not think that the case falls within the rule enunciated in Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, to the effect that, where the validity of a statute depends upon the existence of a fact which can be determined by a court only after investigation of a very complicated and technical character, a provision in the statute which imposes such severe penalties by way of fine and imprisonment for disobedience of its provisions as to intimidate the parties affected thereby from resorting to the courts to test its validity practically prohibits those parties from seeking such judicial construction, and denies them the equal protection of the law. It is claimed that the provision for a forfeiture of the corporate charter of a domestic corporation for nonpayment of the charge imposed by the act is of such a nature as to bring it within the operation of this rule. The statutes under consideration in Ex parte Young were statutes fixing rates for the various railroad companies for the carriage of passengers and merchandise, and providing penalties by way of fine and imprisonment for a failure to comply therewith. It was claimed that the rates so fixed were too low to permit any return upon the investment, and constituted an attempt to confiscate valuable property of the railroad companies, and that the law was therefore void. There was no opportunity to test the validity of the act except after violation thereof. The penalties imposed by the act for noncompliance were so enormous, it was held by the court, as to practically prevent any person from disobeying the statute and resorting to the courts to test its validity, in view of the possibility that the result of such investigation might be adverse, and these enormous penalties be imposed. The court, however, said: "The distinction is obvious between a case where the validity of the act depends upon the existence of a fact which can be determined only after investigation of a very complicated and technical character and the ordinary case of a statute upon a subject requiring no such investigation, and over which the jurisdiction of the Legislature is complete in any event." Regardless of other considerations, the case before us is clearly of the kind last mentioned in this quotation.

In our judgment, the act is not void for failure of the title to sufficiently express its subject. Article 4, § 24, Const. As is said in Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251: "The object of the provision is to prevent legislative abuse—to prevent the passage of acts bearing deceitful and misleading titles. It is intended to protect the members of the Legislature, as well as the public, against fraud; to guard against the passage of bills the title of which give no intimation to the members of the Legislature or to the public of the matters contained therein; * * * to prevent deception by the inclusion of matters incongruous with the subject specified in the title. If the title contains a reasonable intimation of the matters under legislative consideration, the public cannot complain." These objects were fully subserved by the title of this act, "An act relating to revenue and taxation, providing for a license tax upon corporations, and making an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the objects of this act." This obviously indicated the imposition of a charge of some kind upon corporations as such, and there was nothing in the language used reasonably tending to induce the belief that the act was confined to corporations actually engaged in the transaction of business. As we have heretofore said herein, the words "license tax," used with reference to corporations exclusively, mean no more, necessarily, than that a charge of some kind is imposed upon them solely for their corporate privilege. It was not necessary to state in terms in the title that it was an act "amending the charters of corporations." Every new general law affecting corporations necessarily amends such charters to the extent that it operates upon them differently from existing laws. The title, we think, measures fully up to the requirements of our constitutional provision, as the same are declared in Ex parte Liddell, supra. See, also, Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 488, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73.

What we have said substantially covers all of the points that have been made against the validity of the act.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

10 Cal. App. 719

BENEDICT v. WILSON et al. (Civ. 633.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.

May 29, 1909.)

1. STIPULATIONS (§ 14*)—CONSTRUCTION—PRESUMPTION.

In an action for commissions on a contract, by which plaintiff was employed to sell lots at private sale or public auction, "collect all first moneys," and do certain other things, the question was whether plaintiff was entitled to commissions on defaulted contracts of sale, and the case was submitted on an agreed statement, reciting the amount of commissions accruing "on defaulted contracts of sale with purchasers at the auction sale, * * * and no part of which has been or will be received," and that plaintiff claims right to the commissions "regardless of subsequent defaults of contracting parties." Held, that there was nothing to show that, as to sales in which default was made, there was any "first money" to be paid, in the absence of provision for which the auction sale was, under Civ. Code, §§ 1793, 1798, complete when the auctioneer announced the lots were sold, and entered minutes of the sale in his sale-book, and nothing to show that, if there was provision for "first money," it was not collected by plaintiff, the recited failure of receipts being capable of being referred solely to subsequent defaulted payments, and that no presumption as to existence of such a provision, or as to failure of plaintiff to collect "first money" if there was a provision therefor, could be made, so as to defeat plaintiff's right of recovery in the absence thereof; the contract not making it a guarantor of payment of the purchase price on sales made by it.

[Ed. Note.—For other case, see Stipulations, Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 179*)—PARTIES.

Where persons, though describing themselves, in recitals of a contract employing a company to sell land, as a syndicate committee of the syndicate owning the land, sign it individually, they, at least in the absence of other evidence, bind themselves personally.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by F. C. Benedict against Calvin J. Wilson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Wilson and another appeal. Affirmed.

H. M. Barstow, for appellants. Charles S. McKelvey, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to recover on contract for commissions earned and disbursements made in sales of real estate by plaintiff's assignor. The case was submitted on an agreed statement of facts. The contention of plaintiff is that he was entitled to collect $750 on account of the disbursements made by him under the contract, consisting of $500 on account of presents to stimulate sales, and $250 paid for traveling expenses in going to and from the place at which the sales were made, and commissions on all sales made by him, amounting in the aggregate to $2,310.94, on which he had received the sum of $1,021.25, leaving a balance due of $2,039.69. The defendants admitted by the agreed statement that plaintiff's assignor had expended $325 on account of presents, and that they owed plaintiff under the contract the further sum of $504.18, included in which was the $250 transportation charge. The defendants contend, however, that of the commissions claimed by plaintiff $1,035.50 were computed on sales made by plaintiff's assignor, the Metropolitan Land Company, under the contract, but upon which nothing "has been or will be received." The court gave judgment for the sum of $325 on account of presents, $250 for traveling expenses, and $1,289.68 balance due on commissions; the latter sum including the $1,035.50, to which defendants object. The question here presented is the right of plaintiff to recover commissions on the sales in which the purchasers have defaulted. The contract does not make the Metropolitan Land Company a guarantor of the payment of the purchase price on the sales made by it. Its duties were to make a sale of the lots at private sale or public auction, collect all first moneys, make out bonds and contracts, and get signatures thereto, and to render accounts of its transactions and of moneys received, and to furnish all data necessary for the execution of deeds to the purchasers.

There is nothing in the statement of facts showing that it failed to perform these duties, or any of them. The language of the statement referring to the defaulting of purchasers is not entirely clear, but the only matter as to which any question can be raised in respect to the performance of the contract by the Metropolitan Land Company is that of collecting first moneys. Paragraph 3 of the agreed statement is as follows: "That the commissions accruing on defaulted contracts of sale with purchasers, at the auction sale had under such contract by the Metropolitan Land Company, and no part of which has been or will be received, amount to $1,035.50." If it were to be assumed from the statement that a certain sum or percentage of the purchase price was required to be collected on the fall of the hammer, or no sale, there is nothing to negative the inference that any amounts so required to be collected were actually collected by the land company. The inference that such sums were not collected does not necessarily follow from the language used, to wit, "and no part of which has been or will be received." This failure of receipt may refer solely to subsequent defaulted payments. Such a view of the term "defaulted contracts of sale" is borne out by the use in subdivision "b" of paragraph 4 of the agreed statement of the language "regardless of subsequent defaults of contracting parties," in connection with the statement of plaintiff's contention in this respect. There is nothing, however, in either statement or pleading to show that as to the sales in which default was made there was any first money required to be paid, and consequently it cannot be presumed that the land company failed to collect it.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In the absence of any such a provision in the contract the sale by auction was complete when the auctioneer announced that the lot was sold. Civ. Code, § 1793. An entry by him in his salebook, specifying the thing sold, the names of seller and buyer, the price and terms of the sale, binds the parties the same as if the memorandum was made by the parties themselves. Civ. Code, § 1798. We hardly think the appellants would contend that if a broker had brought the parties to a private sale to this point, he would not be entitled to his commissions in the absence of some express agreement requiring him to do something else. If there was anything else required of the Metropolitan Land Company which it failed to do, it is not set down in the statement of fact, or the answer.

There may be some question whether or not, under the agreed statement of facts, it is necessary for us to consider the other point made by appellants, the controversy having been submitted solely upon the matter of the amount of commissions to be allowed, and there having been no question raised as to the liability of appellants to pay whatever judgment was properly entered. Conceding that the question is one of law within the rule applied in S. F. L. Co. v. Bibb, 139 Cal. 325, 73 Pac. 864, it is clear that the defendants made themselves liable as principals to the Metropolitan Land Company under the contract set out in their answer. They did not execute it in the name of any one as agent, but as individuals, and describe themselves as a syndicate committee of the syndicate owning Corinth Heights in the recitals in the contract. Taking the language most strongly against them as makers of, and promisors in, the covenants of the instrument relied upon by them here, the word "committee" may be construed to be a committee of the whole syndicate. Civ. Code, § 1654. The allegations of the answer cannot be considered in aid of the construction of this language to the advantage of the defendants, or to add to the agreed statement of facts. Where a person executes a writing in his individual capacity, and recites in the body of the instrument that he acts as the representative of a third person, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that by so doing he binds the third person, and with much less reason can it be said that he does not bind himself. At most, it becomes a question of fact, which may be determined by parol evidence (S. P. Co. v. Von Schmidt, 118 Cal. 368, 50 Pac. 650), and there is no evidence on the subject before us, except the fact of the execution of the writing by defendants individually.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

10 Cal. App. 690
HODGKINS v. DUNHAM et al. (Civ. 558.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 27, 1909. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court, July 26, 1909.)

1. FRAUD (§ 4*)—ELEMENTS—INTENT.

That false representations were with intent to deceive is an essential of actionable fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. FRAUD (§ 42*)—COMPLAINT—ALLEGATIONS OF INTENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1572, defining actual fraud, and section 1709, providing that one willfully deceiving another with intent to alter his position to his injury is liable, etc., a complaint, in an action for fraudulent representations, inducing plaintiff to purchase a horse, which alleges that material representations made by the seller were untrue, and were known by him to be untrue at the time, and were made to induce plaintiff to purchase, etc., sufficiently charges that the representations were made with intent to defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 434*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — FRAUDULENT MISREPRESENTATIONS.

Fraudulent misrepresentations as to a material matter, by which one is induced to enter into a contract to his damage, is ground for an action at law or relief in equity, though the contract is in writing, and the representations were not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2012; Dec. Dig. § 434.*]

4. ATTACHMENT (§ 217*)—PROCEEDINGS—JUDGMENT.

By an attachment, where there is no service of summons, the court acquires only the right to apply the property attached to the satisfaction of the judgment, which, though in form a personal one, has no effect beyond the property attached.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. § 745; Dec. Dig. § 217.*]

5. FRAUD (§ 37*)—ACTIONS—VENUE.

An action for fraudulent representations in the sale of personal property is transitory, and redress may be given by any court obtaining jurisdiction, though defendant, personally served within the state, is a nonresident, and only temporarily therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 33; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. APPEARANCE (§ 19*) — EFFECT — JURISDICTION OF NONRESIDENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 416, declaring that the voluntary appearance of defendant is equivalent to personal service, and section 1014, providing that defendant appears when he demurs, the court acquires jurisdiction of a nonresident defendant in an action for fraud, based on misrepresentations made in a sister state, where he demurs to the complaint generally, and also on the ground of want of jurisdiction, and the court may render a personal judgment against him, without reference to the property seized under an attachment issued in the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appearance, Cent. Dig. §§ 80, 82; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

7. FRAUD (§ 11*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—FACTS OR OPINIONS.

Whether false representations are statements of facts, and actionable fraud, or merely matters of opinion, depends on the circumstances of the case, and the court must consider the situation of the parties, their general intelligence and experience, and then determine whether the representations complained of were understood as a matter of fact or opinion.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

8. SALES (§ 363*)—"WARRANTY"—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Any affirmation made at the time of a sale of property as to the quality or condition thereof is "a warranty," if so intended, and the buyer bought on the faith thereof, and whether it was so intended, and the buyer acted on it, are questions of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1064; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7396-7404; vol. 8, p. 7833.]

9. FRAUD (§ 11*)—REPRESENTATIONS—MATERIALITY.

A representation that a horse is a sure foal getter, made to induce one to buy the horse for breeding purposes, is a representation of a material fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

10. FRAUD (§ 58*)—MISREPRESENTATIONS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show the falsity of representations that a horse was a sure foal getter, made to induce one to buy the horse for breeding purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 56; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

11. FRAUD (§ 58*)—MISREPRESENTATIONS—KNOWLEDGE OF FALSITY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that a seller of a horse had no reasonable grounds for believing in the truth of a representation made to the buyer to induce him to buy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

12. FRAUD (§ 58*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—INTENT—EVIDENCE.

In an action for fraudulent representation, inducing one to buy a horse for breeding purposes, evidence held to justify a finding that the representations were made with intent that they should be acted on by the buyer, and that he acted on them in ignorance of their falsity, and reasonably believed them to be true.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 58; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

13. FRAUD (§ 13*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—LIABILITY.

A representation, believed on reasonable grounds to be true, is not actionable fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-5; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

14. FRAUD (§ 35*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—WAIVER.

A seller of a horse represented to the buyer that it was a sure foal getter. Before learning that the representation was fraudulent, but after the horse had shown its incapacity, the buyer applied to the seller for a modification of the contract, so as to permit the breeding of mares to another horse. Held that the buyer did not waive the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 30; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

15. SALES (§ 425*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—ACTIONS.

A buyer, induced to buy personal property by the false representations of the seller, is not bound to rescind the written contract of sale, but may sue for the fraudulent representations which were independent of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1207, 1208; Dec. Dig. § 425.*]

16. SALES (§ 124*)—FRAUD—RESCISSION.

Where a buyer elects to rescind the contract of sale, because of the fraud of the seller, he must restore the property; but, where he elects to affirm the contract, and sue for damages for the fraud, he need not offer to restore the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

17. ELECTION OF REMEDIES (§ 7*)—FRAUD—ACTS CONSTITUTING AN ELECTION.

A buyer, remaining silent after the discovery of the seller's fraudulent representations, affirms the contract with knowledge of the facts, so that his right to rescind is extinguished, but he may sue for deceit, practiced on him to induce the execution of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Election of Remedies, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

18. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 966*)—RULINGS ON MOTION FOR CONTINUANCE—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where plaintiff had not said or done anything to mislead defendants as to what he would testify to, and a defendant who knew the facts was present, and was not sworn, the denial of a continuance to take the deposition of a co-defendant, to obtain his version of a conversation testified to by plaintiff, was within the court's discretion, and would not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3337; Dec. Dig. § 966.*]

19. DEPOSITIONS (§ 95*)—ADMISSION IN EVIDENCE.

A party may not introduce selected portions of a deposition of his own witness on direct examination, omitting the rest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. § 276; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

20. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1047*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF DEPOSITIONS.

Where an entire deposition was admitted, but because of a party's objection it was limited in its use to a fact desired to be shown by the adverse party, the party was not prejudiced by the limit given the deposition by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4146; Dec. Dig. § 1047.*]

21. SALES (§ 442*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—DAMAGES.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3313, 3314, relating to the detriment caused by the breach of the warranty of the quality or fitness of personal property, a buyer of a horse for breeding may recover for the fraudulent representations of the seller that the horse is a sure foal getter, the actual damages sustained, based on the value of the breeding season, and the money lost because of the incapacity of the horse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1284; Dec. Dig. § 442.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by Francis I. Hodgkins against W. S. Dunham and others, copartners as Dunham, Fletcher & Coleman. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston and Geo. F. Buck, for appellants. Budd & Thompson and Nicol & Orr, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover the price agreed to be paid for a certain stallion, and also damages for alleged fraudulent representations as to the reproductive potency of the horse. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had judgment, from which defendants appeal on bill of exceptions.

In the amended complaint it is averred that defendants are nonresidents of this state, and were copartners, whose business was that of "importing and breeding of draft stock and sale of stallions for breeding purposes," and that plaintiff is engaged "in breeding draft and driving stock and breeding stallions to his own brood mares and the brood mares of others for hire"; that plaintiff, being "desirous of securing a first-class imported black Percheron stallion, which was a sure foal getter for the head of his stud for breeding to his said mares and for booking to outside mares," so stated to defendants on or about July 25, 1904, "and the defendants then and there stated and represented to the plaintiff that they had an imported black stallion named Joubert, registered No. 40,002 (45,105) one of the most noted sires that ever left France, and which they were then and there using in stud for their own brood mares, and that he was one of the stallions at the head of their stud, and had been so used by them; that he was a sure foal getter, and offered to sell him to plaintiff for $2,500, for the uses so as aforesaid stated by plaintiff to them; that the plaintiff had confidence in the defendants and believed said statements and representations to be true, and, relying wholly on the truth thereof, he then and there agreed to purchase, and did purchase, said stallion Joubert from the defendants at the price and for the uses and purposes so stated by him to the defendants as aforesaid; * * * that the said statements and representations were so made by the defendants to plaintiff at the very time of the purchase of said stallion Joubert to induce, and did induce, plaintiff to purchase the same; that the said statements and representations of the said defendants so made as aforesaid to plaintiff (other than that they then had said stallion Joubert registered No. 40,002 (45,105) were untrue, and were known to the defendants to be untrue at the very time the same were made." It is then averred that plaintiff "bred and rebred his said brood mares to said stallion at the proper time in the season of 1905, and used all proper care in so doing, and gave said Joubert a full and fair trial, but that he failed to get said mares in foal, and was during all the times herein mentioned impotent, and was of no value as a breeding stallion." It is then averred that by reason of the impotence of said stallion, and his failure to get said mares in foal, plaintiff lost the season of 1905 for breeding purposes to said stallion, and lost the breeding of said mares during said season, to his damage for the season of 1905 in the sum of $9,500. It is also alleged that for like reason he lost the season of 1906, to his damage in the sum of $4,650. It is also alleged that for like reason he lost the breeding of certain outside mares, to his damage in the sum of $700. "That by reason of the failure of said stallion Joubert as a breeding stallion, plaintiff was and is further damaged in the amount of the agreed purchase price, to wit, $2,500."

A general and special demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendants answered, denying specifically the material averments of the complaint, and for further answer defendants set forth a bill of sale or contract executed by them to plaintiff at the time of said sale, which it is averred "includes and covers all the transactions between the said plaintiff and the said defendants relative to the sale of the said stallion Joubert," and avers that defendants "have at all times complied with said contract," and "deny that said plaintiff has complied with any of the terms or conditions of said contract." It is further answered that at all times mentioned in the complaint none of said defendants resided in the state of California, and do not now reside therein, and no time has or have resided in said state, but are residents of the state of Illinois, and that all contracts, agreements, representations, and warranties relative to the said stallion were made and entered into by and between plaintiff and defendants outside the state of California, and that this court has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the said amended complaint, or of the persons of said defendants, or either of them."

The bill of sale or contract referred to is as follows: "Know all men by these presents, that we, Dunham, Fletcher & Coleman of Wayne, Du Page county, Illinois, have this day sold to Francis I. Hodgkins of Stockton, San Joaquin county, California, the black imported Percheron stallion Joubert 40002 (45105) foaled March 25th, 1889; got by Nesi (42499); Barcelone (42955). For extended pedigree see certificate of registry; for the consideration of twenty-five hundred dollars the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged. In the event that the above-named stallion in perfect health, with proper usage, and the mares to him regularly returned and tried or bred, on one full service season's trial does not get with foal fifty per cent. of the mares regularly tried and bred to him, then on return of the said stallion to us at Wayne, Du Page county, Illinois, during the first week in the month of April, next following the full service first concluded we agree to furnish the above-named purchaser, without further charge, another imported or pure bred stallion of equal quality, in exchange; but it is expressly provided as a condition of this warrant, that the tally sheet accompanying and delivered with this bill of sale shall be accurately filled out, with date of each service trial, to enable identification of all mares bred, and after being so filled out shall be returned to us at Wayne, Du Page county, Illinois, by registered letter, not later than July 15, 1905. It is hereby stipulated that a stallion's full service season shall be considered as the period commencing the first day of May and ending the first day of July. In the event the conditions of the above agreement are not faithfully performed, or should the above-named stallion hereafter become injured or disabled through accident or disease, or should any changes, additions or alterations be made in this bill of sale, not shown by the press copy of same preserved by us, this warranty shall be null and void and of no effect and all obligations incurred by us herein shall be considered fulfilled and ended. This bill of sale contains all the agreements of warranty or guaranty made by us in the sale of the above-mentioned stallion, and it is expressly provided that we shall not be liable for any claim that may hereafter be made alleging any verbal agreement of ourselves or agents in the sale of said horse. In witness whereof, we have hereto set our hand and seal this twenty-fifth day of July in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and four. [Signed] Dunham, Fletcher & Coleman. [Seal.]

This bill of sale was delivered to plaintiff at the time of said purchase for which the following receipt was given: "Received and accepted of Dunham, Fletcher & Coleman of Wayne, Du Page county, Illinois, their written bill of sale to Francis I. Hodgkins of Stockton, San Joaquin County, California, dated July 25, 1904, and conveying the title to the black imported Percheron stallion Joubert. * * * Dated Wayne, July 25, 1904. Francis I. Hodgkins."

The court found the facts substantially as set forth in the complaint and made also the following findings: "(7) That by reason of the failure of said stallion Joubert to get said brood mares in foal, the plaintiff lost the season of 1905 for breeding purposes to said stallion, to his damage $1,625; (8) that plaintiff, by reason of the failure of said stallion Joubert as a breeding stallion, was further damaged in the sum of $2,500, the agreed purchase price for said stallion; (9) that said stallion Joubert while in the possession of plaintiff and on or about the month of June, 1906, died." It was also found that plaintiff did not offer to return the said stallion to defendants, and that it is not true that no statements or representations and warranties relative to said stallion other than contained in said bill of sale, were made by defendants to plaintiff.

It appeared in evidence, and was not disputed, that on May 20, 1905, plaintiff wrote to defendants the following letter: "Dear Sirs: In regard to Joubert I want to know if you are going to hold me exactly to your guaranty. There is one clause in there which reads: 'It is hereby stipulated that a stallion's full service season shall be considered as the period commencing the first day of May and ending the first day of July.' The season out here commences the first of March and practically ends the middle of June. Now I don't want to lose the use of my mares entirely for this year and if I have to keep breeding Joubert it will mean that I will, because every mare that I have bred has come back to him twice and three times and I have bred to over forty mares. Most of these mares have colts at their sides so that I know they are producing mares. Please wire an answer to this at my expense so that I can begin to breed my mares to another horse or I will lose next year's crop of colts as Joubert has not got one mare in foal yet, and he has had as fair a trial as possible for any horse to have. I have not had any kicks yet from any of the horses I have sold except one and I think he is doing all right now. Please wire me an answer to Stockton and oblige. Yours truly, Francis I. Hodgkins." And on May 26, 1905, received the following telegram from defendants: "You may change Joubert mares after second service." Defendants wrote plaintiff in reply on May 26, 1905, as follows: "Dear Sir: Yours of May 20th regarding Joubert is received. We do not wish to be unreasonable in the matter and yet at the same time we are anxious of course that Joubert should have the fairest of trials and have no doubt you are also. So we have wired you and now confirm. 'You may change Joubert mares after second service.' As we understand it you have bred practically all of his mares the second time so this will allow you to make the change you wish to another horse." Upon this evidence the court found "that it is not true that on or about May 20, 1905, or at any time, with full knowledge of the facts, the said plaintiff applied to defendants for a modification of said contract permitting plaintiff to breed to any stallion certain mares that had been bred to said stallion Joubert."

It was also found that none of the defendants resided in this state, but were and are residents of the state of Illinois; that the agreements and representations in the findings mentioned, relative to said stallion, were made outside of this state, "but the said stallion was sold to plaintiff by defendants to be used by him in the state of California, and that the representations made by defendants were so made with that fact in mind; that the records and files in this action show that an attachment was issued in this action and a levy made upon personal property of defendants in this state, but that the same was released by the sheriff of Yolo county and the sheriff of San Joaquin county upon bonds duly executed for such release at request of defendants." Plaintiff had judgment accordingly for $4,125.

1. It is claimed by defendants that the complaint does not state a cause of action. The point here relied upon is that there is a failure to allege that the statements and representations attributed to defendants were made by them with intent to deceive or defraud plaintiff, citing Newman v. Smith, 77 Cal. 26, 18 Pac. 791; Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Estate of Benton, 131 Cal. 478, 63 Pac. 775. Without doubt the essence of a cause of action for deceit consists in the fact that false representations were made with intent to deceive; such intent being a necessary element to constitute actual fraud. The averments here, it seems to us, meet the requirements of the law. It is averred that the representations made by defendants "were untrue, and were known to the defendants to be untrue, and the very time the same were made," that "the said statements were so made by defendants to plaintiff at the very time of the purchase of said stallion Joubert to induce, and did induce, plaintiff to purchase the same," and that "plaintiff had confidence in the defendants, and believed said statements and representations to be true, and, relying wholly on the truth thereof, he then and there agreed to purchase," etc. Plaintiff had previously averred in the complaint the purpose for which he desired the horse, and the representations made by defendants showing that the horse was adapted to that purpose, and would meet plaintiff's requirements, among which was the material qualification that the horse "was a sure foal getter." It is true that the word "intent" is not used in the pleading, but the intent is implied, or may well be inferred, from the allegations that defendants made untrue statements which they knew to be untrue for the purpose, at the time they were made, of inducing plaintiff to purchase the horse. Section 1572 of the Civil Code declares that actual fraud "consists in any of the following acts, committed by a party to the contract, or with his connivance, with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract: (1) The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true; (2) the positive assertion in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true." Where A. knows that he is stating an untruth "to induce, and did induce," B. to act to his injury, the intent to deceive is necessarily involved in the conduct of A. Section 1709 of the Civil Code provides that: "One who willfully deceives another, with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable for any damage which he thereby suffers." It was said in Newman v. Smith, supra, cited by defendants: "It is elementary that fraudulent misrepresentation as to a material matter, by which a party was induced to enter into a contract to his damage, is ground for an action at law or relief in equity, notwithstanding that the contract was in writing, and the representations were not."

What has been said upon this point will dispose of the objection that the findings are insufficient, for they are quite as specific in the respects complained of as is the complaint.

2. It is contended that under the admitted facts the court was without jurisdiction either of the persons of defendants or the subject-matter of the action. The court found that the defendants are nonresidents of this state, and that the representations complained of were made in the state of defendants' residence, to wit, Illinois; that an attachment was issued in this action, and personal property of the defendants levied upon under the same in this state, but that it was released by the sheriff "upon bonds duly executed for such release at request of said defendants." It is conceded by plaintiff that upon the complaint and attachment alone the case was in its nature in rem, "and the jurisdiction (other than of the subject-matter) depended upon, and was limited to, what the plaintiff had acquired by such attachment." By an attachment where there is no service of summons the court simply acquires the right to apply the property to the satisfaction of whatever may be found due the plaintiff; that is, the judgment of the court, though in form a personal judgment against the defendant, has no effect beyond the property attached in the suit; and the court, in such a suit, cannot proceed unless the officer finds some property of defendant on which to levy the writ of attachment. Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 317, 19 L. Ed. 931; Works on Jurisdiction, p. 48.

Defendants devoted much attention to the point that the attachment was void, not being authorized by section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 492, c. 385), and hence the court was without jurisdiction. The proceedings are not in the record. All that we know is shown in the findings. We do not understand that plaintiff claims jurisdiction by virtue of his attachment. Nor is it necessary that he should. The action is transitory as distinguished from what are local actions. "The distinction," says Mr. Cooley, "is this: If the cause of action is one that might have arisen anywhere, then it is transitory; but, if it could only have arisen in one place, then it is local." "And," says this author, "it is a general rule that for the purpose of redress it is immaterial where a wrong was committed; in other words, a wrong being personal, redress may be sought for it wherever the wrongdoer may be found." Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 899. Where the action is for fraud, he cites McQueen v. New, 87 Hun, 206, 33 N. Y. Supp. 802. Mr. Works says: "If the defendant is personally served within the state, although a nonresident, and only temporarily, or transiently therein, this gives the court full jurisdiction." Works on Jurisdiction, p. 48, citing Peabody v. Hamilton, 106 Mass. 220. In Roberts v. Dunsmuir, 75 Cal. 203, 16 Pac. 782, a British subject brought suit against other British subjects in this state to recover damages for injuries received while employed by them in their coal mines in British Columbia. The court said: "The action is transitory, and the defendant may be sued wherever found. Otherwise a person might in some cases escape such liability by simply going to another state."

Defendants demurred to the complaint generally and also upon other grounds, including want of jurisdiction. A defendant appears in an action when he demurs. Code Civ. Proc. § 1014. The voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and copy of the complaint. Id. § 416. The court, therefore, acquired jurisdiction of the persons of defendants, and also jurisdiction to render a personal judgment, without reference to the property which had been seized by attachment.

3. It is urged that the evidence is insufficient to establish a cause of action. It appeared from the evidence that plaintiff was in 1904, as he had been in previous years, engaged in breeding fine horses, Percherons and others, and had been a valuable customer of defendants. In the spring of 1904 Mr. Coleman, one of the defendants, visited plaintiff's farm near Stockton, and was told by plaintiff that he desired to purchase the best Percheron stallion for breeding purposes that he could buy. Coleman represented to him that he had a stallion, recently imported from France, called Joubert, whose colts defendant Fletcher said he had seen in France, and were the best he ever saw. Plaintiff had received a catalogue from defendants describing this, among other thoroughbred horses and mares on sale at their Oaklawn stock farm in Illinois. This catalogue gave Joubert high praise as a superior stallion. Two or three months after this conversation plaintiff visited defendants' farm to make purchases, arriving about July 15, 1904, and there met defendants Dunham and Coleman. Plaintiff testified: "The first conversation I can remember having with Mr. Dunham took place in his private house, and during that conversation I asked him if Joubert was proving a sure foal getter, and whether he was getting his mares in foal properly. He said, 'Yes.' I then asked him about how many mares Joubert had been bred to. He said about 40 to the best of his knowledge, but that Billy Burns had a list, and could tell me all about them, the man at the time in charge of Joubert." Four or five days later plaintiff saw Burns: "I asked Mr. Burns if Joubert was a sure horse. Mr. Burns told me he considered Joubert to be as sure a foal getter as he had ever had in his barn except Villiers. This was in July, and Joubert was in service upon the farm of Dunham, Fletcher & Coleman in Illinois at that time. I saw him bred to a mare there. That was after I had the conversation with Dunham."

Plaintiff was on the farm about 10 days in all "looking at mares and stallions." After his conversation with Dunham he had a conversation with Coleman, in which he said to Coleman: "I didn't care particularly about a show horse, but that I did want a sure breeder. I further told him that he knew what I wanted the horse for. He then advised me, or he told me, that if he was in my place he would buy Joubert, that Mr. Fletcher had seen his colts in France, and considered them a fine lot of colts, and that I wasn't taking any chances on Joubert, and that Mr. Dunham—and he thought Mr. Dunham was a damn fool for selling him." Plaintiff testified that he had not up to this time made up his mind to buy Joubert; that he knew nothing concerning the horse's power of procreation except as obtained from these people; that he was depending upon their judgment; that he would not have purchased the horse had it not been for the statements of these people to which he testified; and that the horse had no value for any purpose other than breeding. Plaintiff testified that the purchase was concluded the day of, or the next after, his last conversation with Coleman, and the price was fixed at $2,500.

The horse was taken to plaintiff's farm in August of that year. He was in good condition on his arrival and thenceforward received such care and attention as was ordinarily given to a horse of his character and value. In December of 1904 he was taken ill with pneumonia, and was seriously sick for a week or more, but recovered upon proper treatment in about six weeks, and entered the season in March, 1905, in good health and vigor. The breeding season begins in March, and ends about July 1st. The evidence is that Joubert was bred to 31 mares belonging to plaintiff, and 32 "outside mares"; that the usual care given a stallion during such service—as to feed, exercise, etc.—was given this horse, and usual efforts to get mares with foal, such as return service, when failing at first, were made, sometimes mares being returned two or three or more times. The result of the season was that of plaintiff's mares but one was in foal, and of the others one or two only. There was evidence that the mares were breeders, some having sucking colts by their sides. There is evidence, from which the inference could be drawn that the failure of the horse could not be attributed to any cause other than his impotency. It was in evidence that Dunham visited plaintiff's ranch and saw Joubert in April, 1905, during the breeding season, but did not inform plaintiff of the result of his (Dunham's) breeding, and did not tell him that of the 40 mares bred by him only 2 were got with foal. About a month after the close of the season Joubert was attacked with a disease, which developed into what was pronounced by veterinary surgeons to be spinal meningitis. He found difficulty in getting up when once down, and his locomotion was affected.

In August Fletcher visited plaintiff's ranch, and saw the horse, and something was said as to how the horse was to be disposed of. Plaintiff testified: "Q. Did he say anything to you at that time with respect to what you should do with this horse? A. He said I could probably sell him for a certain amount of money, enough so to pull even. Q. What did you say? A. I said I couldn't and wouldn't sell him. Q. Was anything said at that time as to the return of this horse? A. Yes. Q. What did you say? A. In the course of the conversation I told Mr. Fletcher that if I was to return him, they wouldn't accept him on account of the condition he was then in. Q. What did he say? A. He says no, that they couldn't accept him." Witness was asked if he had further conversation with Fletcher as to the horse at this time, and what Fletcher said: "I asked Mr. Fletcher if Joubert had proved a satisfactory breeder for Mr. Dunham. He said: 'No; I don't think so.' I then asked him if it was true that Joubert had only gotten 2 colts for Mr. Dunham. He said, 'Yes.' I then told him that they couldn't have helped but known that the horse was no good at the time they sold him to me, and he didn't say anything."

Joubert did not recover from this second illness. The disease progressed slowly, notwithstanding the efforts made to restore him to health, and he died in June, 1906. As tending to show impotency in the horse, it appeared that a stallion of sufficient age in good condition could safely serve 60 to 75 mares each season; that he should get in foal about 60 per cent. of the mares bred to him, of which about 90 per cent. are dropped alive and healthy. It also appeared from the evidence that almost invariably when a mare has "caught" or is impregnated, she will not demand or submit to a second service, and, if she returns, it is the experience of experts that she is not in foal. It is thus known during the season whether or not the horse is incapable of procreation. Defendants seem to have had knowledge on this point, for they authorized plaintiff to change the stallion after the second service. There was evidence that Joubert was foaled in March, 1899, and his former owner, in France, Mr. Perriott, bred him to 75 mares in 1902, and to 65 in 1903, and that he got 51 colts the first season, and 43 the second. It also appeared, by the uncontradicted testimony of an expert, that such early breeding would almost certainly destroy the horse's potency; and it appeared that in the two seasons following—one under defendants' management, and the other under plaintiff's—the horse showed unmistakable loss of procreative virility.

Opposed to this testimony, and in conflict with it to some extent, the deposition of Mr. Fletcher was introduced by defendants. Mr. Coleman was a witness at the trial. Mr. Dunham was present, but was not called as a witness, and left before the trial closed. Fletcher testified that he was not personally present, although he was at the Oaklawn farm when plaintiff purchased Joubert; that he made no representations to him about the horse until after the purchase, and then only as to what he learned about him from Mr. Perriott; that he had no knowledge other than through that source as to Joubert's breeding qualities, and that he believed him to be all right in that particular, and did not know to the contrary; that he did not know, and had no reason to believe, that the horse was impotent. Mr. Coleman testified that he and Fletcher were not interested in breeding, and that the mares were owned by Dunham; that he and Fletcher were interested only in the importation of stallions with Dunham, but he knew that Dunham was using them for breeding; that Fletcher bought Joubert in France, after having investigated his history, and reported him to be a sure breeder and "a grand breeding horse" with a fine pedigree; that he met plaintiff at his ranch in California in June, 1904, and told him what Fletcher had said of the horse. His testimony as to what took place the day plaintiff came to the Oaklawn farm is brief, and to the effect that, after a few minutes talk at the office, he and Dunham went with plaintiff to the barns, and had Joubert led out by Burns with another stallion called Bosquet; that he looked the horses over carefully, "probably 15 minutes, and he came around to me, and he says: 'Joubert is good enough for me; I will take Joubert.'" He testified that he said nothing to plaintiff about the horse, except as to some blemish of the hocks; that he gave him no advice, and made no representations then or at any time about his being a sure breeder; denied all knowledge on that point, except as told him by Fletcher, although he said he understood he had been bred to 6 mares, and had gotten 3 with foal; that plaintiff was there several days, and nothing more was said about Joubert until July 25th, when they came to settle up, and plaintiff took the bill of sale, signing a receipt therefor; that plaintiff used his own judgment, and did not act on his (Coleman's) advice or judgment.

It appeared that the deposition of one Vandervere, who had charge of the accounts and books of the firm, and had access to the breeding book, was taken by defendants, but was not introduced by them at the trial. The court, over the objection of defendants, allowed plaintiff to introduce this deposition for the sole purpose of showing that breeding books were kept and could be produced but that on the advice of defendants' counsel the witness refused to produce them. The inference sought to be drawn from this fact was that this record would have shown how many mares were bred to Joubert by defendants, and the evidence would have been unfavorable to defendants, and would have tended to corroborate plaintiff's testimony, as well as to dispute that of defendants.

It seems to us that the evidence justified the findings of the court. It is strongly urged by defendants that the most that can be made out of the representations of defendants is that they were but expressions of opinion, and were so received by plaintiff. Cases are cited holding that misstatements of matters of opinion do not constitute fraud; that expressions of opinion, however erroneous, if honestly made, will not be regarded as fraud. Wainscott v. Occidental Association, 98 Cal. 258, 33 Pac. 88, is cited, wherein the rules applicable to cases of this character are said to be succinctly stated, as quoted from the opinion in Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 250, 8 Sup. Ct. 882, 31 L. Ed. 678, and it is there stated that "these rules, properly construed, exclude such statements as consist merely of expressions of opinion or judgment honestly entertained." And as was said in Reeves v. Corning (C. C.) 51 Fed. 774, cited by defendants: "Whether false representations or statements are facts or matters of opinion depend upon the circumstances of each case. In reaching a conclusion the court will consider the intelligence, the situation of the parties, the general intelligence and experience of people as to the nature and use of the property, the habits and methods of those dealing in or with it, and then determine whether, the representation was understood as a matter of fact or opinion." It was said in McLennan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 558, 17 Pac. 687: "To create an express warranty the word 'warrant' need not be used, nor are any particular words necessary. Any affirmation made at the time of the sale as to the quality or condition of the thing sold will be treated as a warranty, if it was so intended, and the purchaser bought in the faith of such affirmation; and whether it was so intended, and the purchaser acted upon it, are questions of fact for the jury."

In the light of these rules let us consider the elements necessary to constitute fraud or deceit, and the evidence in the case. (1) That the representations made were as to material facts is abundantly shown. The single fact alone that the horse was represented to be a sure foal getter covers this requirement. (2) That the representation was untrue is established by the evidence that in 1904, bred to 40 mares by defendants, the horse got but 2 with foal, and of 63 mares bred to the horse by plaintiff, in 1905, but 3 proved in foal. According to the uncontradicted testimony no surer test could be given of the horse's sterility. (3) Were the representations actually believed by defendants on reasonable grounds to be true? If so, the rule exonerates them. Assuming that the horse was virile when he came from France, and that his history there was believed by defendants to be as Mr. Perriott represented, the evidence is that, when they made the representations to plaintiff, the season was about concluded. Forty mares had been bred to Joubert, and only 2 were with foal. As breeders and dealers in breeding horses and mares of long and wide experience, it must be presumed that they knew, what witnesses stated was well known to breeders, that these mares were not being got with foal. Plaintiff was referred by defendants to Burns, who had charge of the horse, and was by him assured of the fact uppermost in plaintiff's mind—that Joubert was a sure foal getter—and yet Burns' position must have shown him that the statement was untrue, and that he had no reasonable grounds to believe it to be true. The silence of Fletcher when confronted with the fact later lends support to this view. (4) That these representations were made with intent that they should be acted upon by plaintiff it seems to us must follow from the knowledge of the fact on the part of defendants, and their withholding that knowledge when making the representations. We can conceive of no other intention in the minds of defendants than that plaintiff should act upon their statements. (5) That plaintiff acted upon these representations clearly appeared. And (6) that in so acting he was ignorant of their falsity and reasonably believed them to be true. He had no means at the time of knowing the truth, except as he got it from defendants, and his former dealings with defendants justified him in believing what they told him, and acting upon it.

These are the six elements relied on by defendants as necessary to be established, and we think they have been. It is urged by defendants as peculiar that plaintiff said nothing to Dunham in April, 1905, when he visited plaintiff's ranch, about any misrepresentation, and that this fact, together with his having written the letter of May 20, 1905, shows conduct incompatible with any claim of fraud. In April the season had but just begun, and it was too soon to form an opinion as to the capacity of the horse. By May 20th his incapacity had shown itself, but not necessarily that plaintiff had been willfully deceived by defendants. It was not until August—after the close of the season, and when Fletcher told plaintiff of facts not hitherto known to plaintiff—that the fact of defendants' fraudulent misrepresentations was brought home to him. We cannot regard this letter of May 20th as a waiver of the fraud as claimed by defendants, for the reason that when it was written, plaintiff had no sufficient knowledge to warrant such a charge. He cannot be presumed to have waived a fact of which he was not as yet informed. He simply said that he had gone far enough to learn that he would lose the use of his mares for the season if obliged to continue the vain thing of breeding Joubert longer. Defendants' answer is a concession that plaintiff had done all that could be required of him, and authorized him to "change Joubert mares after second service." Up to this time, as we have seen, and until August following, plaintiff was ignorant of the material fact that Joubert had proved sterile in 1904.

4. It is defendants' further contention that in bringing his action for damages for fraud plaintiff affirmed the contract of sale, and is bound by its terms. The position taken by defendants is that, if plaintiff intended to repudiate the contract, and not rely upon its provisions as furnishing him a remedy for the failure of Joubert to meet the requirements of the contract, plaintiff was in duty bound to rescind. Instead of doing this, it is contended that he elected to affirm the contract and retain the property, and cannot therefore escape the burdens and limitations imposed upon him by the writing, citing 15 Cyc. 252; Bigelow on Frauds, p. 65; Montgomery v. McLaury, 143 Cal. 87, 76 Pac. 964; Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 48 Pac. 54, and other cases. We do not regard this case as falling within the rules of the cases cited. The action is not for breach of the contract, nor is it for any warranty, express or implied, as found in it. The contract contains no express warranty that the horse was a sure foal getter. The promise there made is to furnish plaintiff a horse of equal quality (whatever that means) in case of failure. The action is for fraudulent representations made at the time of the purchase, against which no provision was made in the bill of sale. Up to May 20th, and to July, when he returned to defendants the tally sheet of mares bred, indeed, until in August, 1905, plaintiff seems to have been disposed to look to the contract, and on May 20th he communicated the facts so far as disclosed to him. He then had reason to believe that the horse was a failure, and that the representations made to him were untrue, but he had no reason for believing that they were known by defendants to be untrue, or were made with intention to deceive. There must be full knowledge before there could be a waiver. The friendly relations long existing between the parties, and their former business dealings, would make plaintiff slow to attribute fraud to defendants. But in August the truth came out. Plaintiff charged the fraud promptly, and a suggestion that the horse be taken back was as promptly refused by Fletcher, while remaining silent as to the charge of fraud. The fraudulent representations upon which plaintiff bases his action are entirely independent of the contract. "Fraud vitiates all transactions, and cannot be put beyond the reach of the law by so simple a device as a writing." Newman v. Smith, supra.

When the party imposed upon elects to rescind, he must make restoration of the property, but where he elects, as he may do, to affirm the transaction, and sue for damages, no offer to restore what was received is necessary. 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. Pl. & Pr. p. 895. He is not restricted to his right to rescind his contract of sale on discovery of the fraud practiced upon him, but may bring assumpsit for money had and received (Lord v. French, 61 Me. 420); or he may have other remedies (Edwards v. Owen, 15 Ohio, 503; Meeker v. Potter, 5 N. J. Law, 586). A party may remain silent after discovery of the fraud, and affirm the contract with knowledge of such fraud, as this can only extinguish the right to rescind, leaving his other remedies unimpaired; and by bringing an action for deceit before he has complied with the terms of the contract on his part, he merely restricts the extent of any recovery which might be authorized. Weaver v. Shriner, 79 Md. 530, 30 Atl. 189; Groff v. Hansel, 33 Md. 166. The action here is not for rescission, nor is it for breach of contract, but is for the deceit practiced to induce its execution.

The following cases will illustrate the one here with clearness. In Dixon v. Barclay, 22 Ala. 370, a bill of sale was given for a slave. At the time the contract was executed it was agreed by the vendee that he would remove the slave from the state, and this it was claimed was part of the consideration entering into the price. The action was by the vendor for deceit and fraud in making with plaintiff a contract which at the time he made it, the defendant did not intend to keep. The court allowed parol proof of the fraud, although it contradicted the bill of sale set out in the complaint, the gravamen of the action being the fraud and deceit. Similarly held in Plant v. Condit, 22 Ark. 454. In the case of Inge v. Bond, 10 N. C. 101, the action was for deceit in the sale of an unsound negro. A bill of sale had been given containing no warranty of soundness; defendant expressly refusing to sign a bill of sale containing such warranty. The court said: "The affirmation, as stated in the declaration, is not laid in the way of a contract, the breach of which has brought damage to plaintiff, but as a deceit practiced upon him, whereby he was induced to make the contract. * * * If there is any fraud in the case, that cannot be done away by the contract, and the buyer may notwithstanding bring his action on the case, which is the only one that could be brought in this case"—the slave having died. In Antle v. Sexton, 137 Ill. 410, 27 N. E. 691, the action was on the case to recover damages for fraud and deceit in the sale of timber standing on the land of one Jameson. The subjects of the sale included timber land. The ground of fraud was the representation that the tract of timber contained 80 acres when in fact the contract conveyed only 30 acres. The court said: "The action was not brought upon the contract, but upon false representations and deceit, used to induce the plaintiffs to enter into the contract, whereby they have been damaged. It is well settled that such an action will lie though the parties may have entered into a written agreement, and though in such agreement there may be a warranty or stipulation upon the point covered by the misrepresentations"—citing 2 Addison on Torts, 1004; 1 Chitty Pl. 137, note 4; Hilliard on Torts, §§ 4, 5, 12; Ward v. Wiman, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 193. "And so it will lie if in the written contract there is no reference to the subject of the deceitful statements. * * * The fraud is not merged nor extinguished by the covenant, but affords an additional and more complete remedy."

5. Error is assigned for denying defendants' motion for a continuance of the case, to take Fletcher's deposition, to obtain his version of the conversation related by plaintiff as having occurred in 1905. The ground of this motion was that plaintiff's testimony was a surprise, and could be met only by Fletcher, whose business engagements forbade his being present. We cannot see that plaintiff had, by anything said or done by him, misled defendants as to what he would testify to. The essential fact to be known was whether Dunham did breed 40 mares to Joubert, and the result. Dunham, who knew the facts, was present, but was not sworn. This situation was one in which the granting of the motion was peculiarly within the discretion of the court. The showing made is far from convincing us that the court abused this discretion.

6. Error is claimed in admitting the deposition of Vandervere for the purpose to which the court limited it. It may be that, had the court refused to allow defendants' request that all or none of the deposition be read, it would have been error. A party may not introduce selected portions of the deposition of his own witness upon direct examination, omitting the rest of the deposition. Bank of Orland v. Finnell, 133 Cal. 475, 65 Pac. 976. Here the entire deposition was admitted, but, because of defendants' objection, it was limited in its use by the court to the fact desired to be shown by plaintiff. Defendants could have made the entire deposition part of the record had they been so minded, but they did not want this, and were therefore not prejudiced by the limit given the deposition by the court. The fact shown, as already pointed out, was material as showing that breeding books were kept by defendants, and that they refused to produce them. The demand to produce the books was made by plaintiff before resorting to the Vandervere deposition. We see no error in the ruling.

7. There was much testimony introduced by plaintiff, over defendants' objection, for the purpose of showing damages. Evidence of the value of colts, thoroughbred and graded, when foaled; also when weaned at six months; and the value of the breeding season; the money loss in failure of the horse, resulting in the failure of the mares to have colts. It is claimed that the evidence was remote, and the damages speculative, conjectural and uncertain; that plaintiff is not entitled to recover profits which he might have made had he not been deceived. The evidence left little, if any, uncertainty as to the actual damages sustained. Whatever may be the rule elsewhere, we understand our Civil Code (sections 3313, 3314) to establish the rule in this state. The rule contended for by defendants is that laid down in section 3313, which relates to "the detriment caused by the breach of a warranty of the quality of personal property," etc. Section 3314 relates to "the detriment caused by the breach of a warranty of the fitness of an article of personal property for a particular purpose," in which case the detriment "is deemed to be that defined by the last section (3313), together with a fair compensation for the loss incurred by an effort in good faith to use it for such purpose." In the case of McLennan v. Ohmen, 75 Cal. 558, 17 Pac. 687, the warranty related to an engine which the seller warranted to save the buyer 25 per cent. of his fuel bills. Evidence was taken that it increased the coal bill 40 per cent. The judgment for damages was held to be supported by the evidence. Greenleaf v. H. & A. Works, 78 Cal. 606, 21 Pac. 369, was an action for damages resulting from the failure of a threshing machine to meet the warranty as to its fitness to do a certain work. Actual damages sustained by plaintiff were recovered, under the rule laid down in these Code provisions. There was evidence in the present case ample to support the judgment.

The case was well and thoroughly tried, and seems to have had careful attention by the learned trial judge, and has been ably argued here. The manifest zeal and earnestness of counsel for defendants, and the insistence with which their many points are urged, must plead our apology for the unusual length of this opinion.

With the consideration we have been able to give the case, we fail to discover any prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

8 Cal. App. 74

LIGHT v. STEVENS. (Civ. 436.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 9, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 4, 1908.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 527*)—PAYMENT—EVIDENCE.

The giving of checks and drafts by a debtor to a creditor, with the fact that they were indorsed by the payee, and returned in due course to the drawee, and marked "Paid," is evidence of payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1855; Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 527*)—PAYMENT—APPLICATION—EVIDENCE.

Payment by the maker to the payee of a note is evidence of payment thereof, in the absence of evidence of other indebtedness; there being no presumption of other indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 527.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 93*)—INCONSISTENT DEFENSES.

Inconsistent defenses may be set up in an answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 189, 190; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 93*)—ANSWER.

A denial in one defense of an answer is not waived by the setting up of affirmative matter in another defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 190; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 489*)—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Evidence, tending to prove the averment of the answer that the amount of the note sued on was paid, can and must be considered, though not supporting another distinct count of the answer setting up a counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 957*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT.

An order setting aside a default will not, in the absence of abuse of discretion, be disturbed, unless the rules of procedure imperatively demand it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3823; Dec. Dig. § 957.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by E. S. Light against C. A. Stevens (F. S. Crouch, substituted), as administrator of Theodore A. Light, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and new trial denied. Defendant appeals. Reversed.

Bell, York & Bell, for appellant. Lynch & Drury (R. Benjamin, of counsel), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the sum of $3,000, and interest, alleged to be due upon a promissory note of decedent in favor of respondent, executed April 15, 1902. All the allegations of the complaint are admitted, except the one in reference to nonpayment, which is denied, and there is an affirmative allegation in the answer "that said promissory note was fully paid, satisfied, and discharged by said intestate, Theodore A. Light, during his lifetime." The only question, then, on this appeal is, as stated by appellant, based upon said averment of full payment.

The plaintiff offered in evidence the promissory note described in his complaint; there being no indorsement of any payment thereon, and then rested his case. This was a prima facie showing, sufficient to support a finding that the note had not been paid. Thereupon, C. A. Stevens, subject to the objection of plaintiff, testified as follows: "I know that subsequent to this loan of $3,000 which Theodore A. Light secured from his brother, Theodore A. Light paid money to his brother, Eugene S. Light. On July 10, 1902, Theodore A. Light paid to E. S. Light, or deposited in my bank, subject to his brother's order, $1,250. That was paid to him on December 9th of that same year. He cashed that certificate at the bank." The certificate was received in evidence. It was stamped on the face: "C. A. Stevens, Banker. Paid Dec. 9, 1902, Calistoga, Cal." "On the back of this certificate appeared the signature of E. S. Light. I made out that certificate of deposit, and delivered it to some one, I don't know to whom, but it was subsequently returned indorsed by E. S. Light, I think in December. Whereupon I marked it 'C. A. Stevens, Banker, paid Dec. 9, 1902, Calistoga, Cal.'" The witness further testified in a similar manner as to two other certificates for the aggregate sum of $1,408.65, and then: "On December 25, 1903, T. A. Light paid his brother, E. S. Light, $2,000. Theodore A. Light drew this money out of his regular account, and obtained this draft, December 28, 1903, which he mailed to his brother in San Francisco, who cashed it on December 30, 1903. The signature on the back of this draft is the signature of E. S. Light. The money for this draft was paid to Eugene S. Light by the Bank of California in San Francisco." On cross-examination the witness testified that he did not remember whether he had seen Theodore Light deliver any of these drafts to Eugene S. Light; that he might have seen it, and might not, but did not remember. "These drafts and certificates of deposit were issued for money deposited by T. A. Light, and returned to the bank in regular order of business indorsed by E. S. Light. If he presented it to the bank, I saw him sign his name on the back, but I could not swear that I saw him indorse them, because I do not remember whether I did or not." The court was thereupon moved to strike out the testimony of the witness, on the ground that it was immaterial, incompetent, and irrelevant, counsel specifying particularly that it was not connected with any issues of the pleadings, did not tend to establish a counterclaim, and was not connected with the promissory note in issue in the case. The court granted the motion, and instructed the jury that all the testimony of witness Stevens was eliminated from the case, and was not to be considered. This ruling of the court presents the vital question for our determination.

It is to be observed that in the direct examination Mr. Stevens testified positively that the money had been paid to the plaintiff, but the cross-examination discloses this to be the conclusion of the witness drawn from the fact that the checks and drafts properly indorsed by the plaintiff were returned to the bank in regular order of business, and credited as paid. If this circumstance affords any evidence of payment of the note, it is manifest that the action of the court was prejudicially erroneous. Respondent cites a large number of cases to the effect that "a note, check, or draft, given by a debtor to a creditor, does not constitute payment, unless received by the creditor under an express agreement to accept it as absolute payment, and that the presumption is against it being so received." The doctrine as stated is supported by the authorities cited, and indeed is well settled, but it has no application to the case at bar, for the reason that we have the additional features shown by the testimony that the checks and drafts were indorsed by the payee, and returned in due course to the drawee and marked "Paid." If the said bills had been in possession of plaintiff at the time the action was brought, without any indorsement thereon, the ruling of the court would have been undoubtedly correct, but from the facts shown we think the presumption of payment would arise, and therefore that it was error to withdraw the evidence from the consideration of the jury. A paid bank check, payable to the order of the creditor, and indorsed by him, is admissible as evidence of payment. 9 Ency. of Evidence, p. 725. Payment of a bill or note will be presumed from possession, after maturity, by the party liable on it, especially if indorsed and canceled. Randolph on Commercial Paper, §§ 1475, 1476. After a bill has been circulated, its possession by the acceptor will be presumptive evidence that it is paid. Baring v. Clark (Mass.) 19 Pick. 220. The same conclusion follows from these presumptions of the Code: "That a person in possession of an order on himself for the payment of money or the delivery of a thing has paid the money or delivered the thing accordingly," and "that the ordinary course of business, has been followed." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subs. 13, 20. Exactly the same principle is involved as where a note is in possession of the maker after maturity, and in the latter case no one would probably contend that payment would not be presumed. In Griffith v. Lewin, 125 Cal. 621, 58 Pac. 205, through Commissioner Cooper, it is declared: "It is said we must presume 'that the ordinary course of business has been followed.' If so, we must presume that, if deceased in his lifetime ever paid the note in this case, it was delivered up to him. If it had been delivered up to him we would have to presume that it had been paid; but, as it was not delivered up, but was at his death in the possession of plaintiff, we must presume that it has not been paid."

The question then arises whether the said bills were evidence of payment of the note in controversy. The record is silent as to that point, but there is no showing of any other indebtedness of decedent to plaintiff. In Murphy v. Richardson, 33 Pa. 236, it is said: "There was no evidence of any other transaction, or of any other account, between Mr. Brick and the defendant and his wife, or either of them. When there is but one single transaction to which a payment can be referred, the law necessarily appropriates it to that account, and no other." In Masser v. Bowen, 29 Pa. 128, 72 Am. Dec. 619, the rule is stated as follows: "A check by the defendant to the plaintiff's order, indorsed by him and paid, is evidence that the amount of it was paid to the plaintiff on account of such debt as we know to have existed, and it cannot be excluded because the court may think it belongs to a different transaction." To the same effect are Jesse v. Davis, 34 Mo. App. 353; Boyd v. Daily, 85 App. Div. 581, 83 N. Y. Supp. 539; Stevens & Andrews v. Gainesville Nat. Bank, 62 Tex. 499. In 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 608, the rule is stated as follows: "Where a debtor pays or transfers to his creditor a sum of money or property equal in value to, or greater than, the indebtedness, the presumption arises that the transaction was intended to operate as a payment and satisfaction of the indebtedness." Indeed the conclusion that the money paid, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, should be applied to the indebtedness evidenced by the promissory note follows from these considerations: It is never presumed that one man is indebted to another. The presumption is otherwise. Hence in the case at bar it must be presumed that the only indebtedness of the decedent to plaintiff is what was shown by the evidence. Again it is presumed "that money paid by one to another was due to the latter." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 7. Therefore the inference necessarily is that the money was paid on the indebtedness in controversy.

Respondent insists that "the contention of appellant that three of these drafts were ever intended to apply as payment on account of said promissory note is untenable under the allegations of his answer that they were received by said E. S. Light from said Theodore A. Light for the former's use and benefit, upon a promise and agreement to be returned to said Theodore A. Light upon demand, and there is no consistency between the pleadings on behalf of appellant and the argument advanced in his brief in reference to the three drafts." But it is clearly established that inconsistent defenses may be set up in an answer (McDonald v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 101 Cal. 206, 35 Pac. 643, 616; Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 315, 46 Pac. 1076), and the rule is the same when the answer is verified (Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 418, 53 Pac. 935). The effect of a denial in one defense is not waived by the setting up of affirmative matter in another defense. Billings v. Drew, 52 Cal. 565. In view of the foregoing it would be inexcusable to hold that evidence, which tends to prove the averment of the answer that the amount of the note was paid, must not be considered for that purpose, but must be rejected because it does not lend support to another distinct count of said answer setting up a counterclaim. The fact is, of course, that evidence offered by defendant must be considered if material and relevant to any legal defense that is pleaded.

Respondent claims that we should not consider the statement on motion for a new trial contained in the transcript, for the reason that the trial judge, over the objection of respondent, improperly settled it. We think, however, that there was no abuse of discretion shown by the order relieving appellant from his default. Causes should, if possible, be heard upon their merits, and an order setting aside a default should not be disturbed, unless the rules of procedure imperatively demand it. We think the interests of justice require that there should be a new trial in order that all the evidence available may be considered in the determination of the important issue submitted.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

10 Cal. App. 685

RITZ v. LIGHTSTON, City Treasurer.

(Civ. 589.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 27, 1909.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 205*)—GRANTS OF REGULATIONS OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC—SPECIAL PRIVILEGES.

An ordinance confining the right to a license to sell liquor at a bar in certain parts of a city to bona fide hotels confers the privilege on a classification that the council has a right to make.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 205.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 42*)—CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RAISE.

The council having the right to provide that a bar license in certain parts of the city shall be granted only to hotels, one desiring a license, but having no hotel, is not in a position to complain of any discrimination in the ordinance in limiting the right to hotels in existence at the time of its passage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Application by E. Ritz for writ of mandate to Charles J. Lightston, as treasurer of the city of San Jose. Writ denied, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Karns & Whitehurst, for appellant. H. L. Partridge, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the trial court denying the application of appellant for a writ of mandate against the defendant as treasurer of the city of San Jose. It is conceded that the defendant was, at all the times set forth in the verified petition, the treasurer of the city of San Jose, and that it was his duty, by virtue of his said office as such treasurer, to issue licenses to all persons conducting a legal business within the corporate limits of said city, where such business is authorized under the ordinances of said city, and where persons conducting the same are required to take out a license for the purpose of conducting such business.

The petitioner, on and prior to the 16th day of December, 1907, had been engaged in the business of conducting and maintaining a saloon and bar upon his premises within the corporate limits of said city, and continued in such business until the 1st day of July, 1908, when the defendant as treasurer refused to issue to him any further license or permit to carry on the said saloon and bar. The defendant based his refusal upon an ordinance, duly passed by the mayor and common council of the city of San Jose, on the 16th day of December, 1907, to take effect on and after July 1, 1908, which ordinance provides: "No license for any bar, barroom, saloon or other public drinking place, and no transfer or removal of any license for any such place shall be granted, except where such bar, barroom, saloon or other public drinking place is to be conducted in a building fronting upon one of the streets hereinafter named, or upon that portion of some street or alley contained within the territory hereinafter described, to wit: * * * " Then follows a description by metes and bounds of the portion of said city in which saloons and bars are expressly authorized. The ordinance then concludes as follows: "Provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the renewal of any license to conduct a bar in any bona fide hotel at present existing without said limits." It is the contention of the appellant that the ordinance is void by reason of the proviso, which in effect declares that in certain territory of said city a license to conduct a bar shall only be issued to a bona fide hotel at present existing, and for this reason it is claimed that the ordinance discriminates against the appellant in favor of other persons conducting a hotel business, that it creates a monopoly, and that it is not a police regulation.

The appellant is within the territory covered by the proviso, but he is not, and was not, a hotel keeper, nor did he conduct his bar in any hotel at the time the ordinance was passed. He, therefore, comes clearly within the class of persons in the territory to whom, by the terms of the ordinance, no license shall be granted. This is the decree made by the governing body of the city in which he lives, and to whom has been intrusted the right to enact all proper legislation for the safety, health, peace, good order and morals of such community. By adopting the city of San Jose as his home the petitioner has consented to be governed by general laws and ordinances passed by the legislative body of such city. Of course such ordinances must not unreasonably discriminate; must be general in their nature, and impartial in their operation. They must not be unjust or oppressive, or make an act done by one person penal which, if done by another, would not be so, unless under some general rule or classification founded upon some reason. As to whether or not the matter in any particular case is a police regulation, or a proper classification, must be left, to a great extent, to the judgment of the law-making power of the city. It is only in unusual cases that the courts interfere with the discretion of such lawmaking power.

It is said by the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice Field, in Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620: "By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community, there are few sources of crime and misery equal to the dramshop, where intoxicating liquors in small quantities, to be drunk at the time, are sold indiscriminately to all parties applying. The statistics of every state show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source. The sale of such liquors in this way has therefore been, at all times, by the courts of every state, considered as the proper subject of legislative regulation. Not only may a license be exacted from the keeper of the saloon before a glass of his liquors can be thus disposed of, but restrictions may be imposed as to the class of persons to whom they may be sold, and the hours of the day and the days of the week on which the saloons may be opened. Their sale in that form may be absolutely prohibited. It is a question of public expediency and public morality, and not of federal law. The police power of the state is fully competent to regulate the business, to mitigate its evils, or to suppress it entirely. There is no inherent right in a citizen to thus sell intoxicating liquors by retail; it is not a privilege of a citizen of the state or of a citizen of the United States. As it is a business attended with danger to the community, it may, as already said, be entirely prohibited, or be permitted under such conditions as will limit to the utmost its evils. The manner and extent of regulation rest in the direction of the governing authority. That authority may vest in such officers as it may deem proper the power of passing upon applications for permission to carry it on, and to issue licenses for that purpose. It is a matter of legislative will only." The rule laid down in the case above cited has been uniformly followed by the Supreme Court of this state and by the District Courts of Appeal, and by the best-considered decisions of the higher courts in other states. As the sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage may injure society and impose a burden upon the state, it is uniformly held that no person can engage in that business of common right, as in the sale of commodities which are classed as necessities. There being no inherent right in a citizen to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors, he cannot complain of general laws which impose burdens, conditions, and regulations upon its sale. Under such general laws a privilege may be conferred upon one class of persons which is denied to another class, provided there is good reason for such classification; and, as before stated, that is to a great extent a matter for the governing body of the city to determine. Ex parte Murphy (Cal. App.) 97 Pac. 199; In re Kidd, 5 Cal. App. 159, 89 Pac. 987; Sandys v. Williams, 46 Or. 327, 80 Pac. 642; Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 209, 24 Pac. 747; People v. Murray, 148 N. Y. 171, 42 N. E. 584.

The ordinance in question confines the right to obtain a license to sell intoxicating liquors at a bar to bona fide hotels within the territory. This was a classification that the governing body of the city had the right to make. The fact that the right to a license was limited to hotels in existence at the time of the passage of the ordinance might become a very material one in case of another bona fide hotel being erected or opened within the territory and applying for a license; but that question does not affect the right of appellant. He has no hotel, and therefore is not in a position to complain of any discrimination made by the ordinance as to hotels. In re Kidd, supra; Ex parte Murphy, supra; Davidson v. Von Detten, 139 Cal. 467, 73 Pac. 189.

We, therefore, conclude that the ordinance is not void as to the appellant, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

10 Cal. App. 723

DONOVAN v. ÆTNA INDEMNITY CO. OF HARTFORD, CONN. (Civ. 602.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 29, 1909. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 28, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 537*)—RECORD—PROPOSED STATEMENT—ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

A proposed statement, on motion for new trial, cannot be considered on appeal, not having been served in the time provided by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 537.*]

2. REPLEVIN (§ 120*)—LIABILITY ON BOND.

The sureties on the bond of plaintiffs in replevin, binding the surety, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 512, for return of the property, if a return be adjudged, or for payment to defendants in replevin of such sum as may be recovered against said plaintiff, are liable, where the judgment in replevin is against said plaintiff for money only, without an alternative for return of the property, such a judgment being authorized under certain conditions, which will be presumed to have existed; findings of fact in the replevin suit having been waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

3. REPLEVIN (§ 120*)—LIABILITY ON BOND—JUDGMENT ON STIPULATION.

The surety on a replevin bond is liable thereon, though the judgment in replevin is entered on stipulation; there being nothing to show it was the result of the fraud or collusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Margaret J. Donovan against the Ætna Indemnity Company of Hartford, Connecticut. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George F. Hatton, Walter H. Robinson, and Hartley F. Peart, for appellant. Welles Whitmore and Alexander & O'Donnell, for respondent.

HALL, J. In this case two appeals are presented in one transcript—an appeal from the judgment, taken March 9, 1908, and an appeal from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, taken April 16, 1908.

Preliminary to taking up the main points involved in the appeal it is necessary to dispose of the objection made by the respondent that the statement on motion for a new trial is properly no part of the record upon either appeal, for want of jurisdiction in the court to settle the same. At the hearing upon the settlement of the statement respondent objected to the settlement thereof, upon the grounds, first, that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was not filed within the time provided by law; and, second, that the proposed statement on motion for a new trial was not served upon plaintiff within the time provided by law. These objections are preserved and presented in a bill of exceptions properly settled.

Whether or not the notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed in time is not important, for it is perfectly clear that the proposed statement was not served in time. At the hearing of the objections to the settlement of the statement it was stipulated "that defendant's statement was served on December 12, 1907, which date was too late, unless the time in which to serve same was extended by the special holidays then in force under proclamations of the Governor." These so-called special holidays, under the act of 1907, amending sections 10, 135, Code Civ. Proc. (St. 1907, p. 561, c. 287, and page 682, c. 358), have, since the settlement of the statement in this case, been held to have been no holidays at all (Diepenbrock v. Superior Court of Sacramento Co., 153 Cal. 597, 95 Pac. 1121). The statement having been served too late, the judge had no jurisdiction to settle the same, and it cannot be considered on these appeals. Cameron v. Arcata & Mad River R. R. Co., 129 Cal. 279, 61 Pac. 955; Freese v. Freese, 134 Cal. 49, 66 Pac. 43. In thus holding we have not overlooked the suggestion of appellant made at the oral argument, that respondent by a stipulation has consented that such statement may be taken as a bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment. As we read the stipulation, it has no such effect. By preserving in said stipulation the respondent's bill of exceptions taken on such settlement it is manifest that respondent did not waive his objections that said statement was not served in time, but intended to preserve his objections and exceptions thereto. The purpose of the stipulation was simply to permit the presenting of both appeals upon a record printed in one transcript.

The only record that we can look into upon these appeals consists of the judgment roll and notices of appeal. The action was brought to recover upon a replevin bond, given by defendant in an action, entitled "Mrs. A. B. Deussing v. Margaret J. Donovan et al.," to enable the plaintiff in the replevin suit to take from the possession of the defendant in that suit Margaret J. Donovan the possession of the property sued for. It is alleged, among other things, in the complaint in this action "that afterwards, on, to wit, the 19th day of September, 1905, in said action in said superior court, department No. 4 thereof, judgment was duly given and made in favor of the defendant Margaret J. Donovan, and against the plaintiff, Mrs. A. B. Deussing, for the sum of $1,250 principal, and $4 costs, aggregating the sum of $1,254, and said judgment was duly entered on the 25th day of September, 1905, in Judgment Book No. 96, at page 431, of the records of said superior court." In its findings of fact the court found the facts as to the judgment in the replevin suit exactly as alleged in the complaint, and further found:

"That said judgment was so given, made and entered as aforesaid in pursuance of a stipulation in writing, entered into by the respective parties to said action on the 19th day of September, 1905, and by said stipulation findings of fact and the right to move for a new trial, and the right to appeal from said judgment, was waived, and said judgment then and there became, and is now, a final judgment, and that no part thereof has ever been paid, and the same is now wholly unsatisfied." It is now urged that the findings do not support the judgment, first, because the judgment in the replevin suit was not in the alternative—that is, the judgment does not comply with the requirements of section 667, Code Civ. Proc., that the judgment must be for the return of the property, or, in case return thereof cannot be had, for its value—and, second, because the judgment in the replevin suit appears to have been rendered and entered by consent of the parties to said suit.

1. The statute under which the bond was given requires the giving of a bond by the plaintiff in the replevin suit, with two or more sureties, "to the effect that they are bound to the defendant in double the value of the property, as stated in the affidavit, for the prosecution of the action, for the return of the property to the defendants if return thereof be adjudged, and for the payment to him of such sum as may from any cause be recovered against the plaintiff." By the language of the statute the surety is required to bind himself to answer for three things: First, for the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute the action; second, for the failure of the plaintiff to return the property, if a return thereof be adjudged; and third, for the failure of the plaintiff to pay to the defendant such sum as may from any cause be recovered against the plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 512.

The bond now in suit is in exact accord with the statute. By its terms the surety (appellant herein) bound itself in the penal sum of $3,600 "for the prosecution of said action, for the return of said property to said defendants, if return thereof be adjudged, and for the payment to said defendants of such sum as may from any cause be recovered against said plaintiff." The plaintiff in the replevin suit did prosecute the action to judgment, and there was therefore no breach of the condition of the bond for failure to prosecute the action.

No judgment for the return of the property was rendered or entered, and there was therefore no breach of the bond on that score. A judgment against plaintiff in the replevin suit for the payment of the sum of $1,258 to defendant therein (plaintiff herein) was entered, which has not been paid. It is difficult to see why the surety on the replevin bond is not liable for failure of the principal to pay such judgment. It has been said that the primary purpose of an action in replevin is to enforce a right of possession in personal property, and this is true. But it sometimes happens that it becomes impossible in the action to specifically enforce the right of possession, and in such cases a money compensation may be given in lieu thereof. Ordinarily the judgment in form requires a delivery or return of the property, with an alternative for the payment of the value thereof in case a return cannot be had. Code Civ. Proc. § 667. But the law is well established that, where it appears that a delivery of the property cannot be had, the judgment need not be in the alternative, but may properly be for its value alone. A judgment for the value, without the alternative for the delivery of the property, is not void, even though erroneous, and in many cases such a judgment would not even be erroneous. Erreca v. Meyers, 142 Cal. 308, 75 Pac. 826; Brown v. Johnson, 45 Cal. 76; Burke v. Koch, 75 Cal. 356, 17 Pac. 228; Seligman v. Armando, 94 Cal. 314, 29 Pac. 710. See, also, Boley v. Griswold, 20 Wall. 486, 22 L. Ed. 375, where it is said: "The court must be satisfied that the delivery cannot be made before it can adjudge absolutely the payment of money. But, if so satisfied, it may so adjudge. A special finding to that effect is not necessary. An absolute judgment for the money is equivalent to such a finding." The cases just cited are all cases where judgments for plaintiff, in replevin, for a sum of money only, were affirmed; it being held that, where from any cause, such as the loss or destruction of the property, a delivery cannot be had, the judgment need not provide for any delivery. For precisely the same reason a judgment for defendant in a replevin suit may properly be for a sum of money only. If, after the taking of the property on the replevin bond from the possession of the defendant, it should be lost or destroyed while in the possession of the plaintiff, the plaintiff is liable to the defendant for the value of the property. De Thomas v. Witherby, 61 Cal. 92, 44 Am. Rep. 542. Such being the law it is perfectly clear that, if at the trial of the replevin suit it should appear that for any reason the property taken on the replevin bond from the defendant cannot be returned, a judgment for its return would be idle and vain, and the court may without error, and certainly without exceeding its jurisdiction, give a money judgment to defendant for its value.

Such a judgment would certainly be within the condition of the replevin bond, given in accordance with the statute, whereby the surety bound himself or itself "for the payment to him [defendant] of such sum as may from any cause be recovered against the plaintiff." Code Civ. Proc. § 512. What became of the property taken on the replevin bond, or what disposition was made thereof, does not appear from the judgment roll in this case, which, as we have before shown, is the only record properly before us. Findings of fact in the replevin suit were waived, and the judgment was therefore without findings. Upon a direct appeal from such judgment, upon the judgment roll, we would be obliged to assume that the facts supported the judgment. The same assumption must be made here. The judgment was against the plaintiff in the replevin suit, for the payment to defendant therein (plaintiff herein) of a sum of money. The judgment on its face was clearly one that the court might lawfully make in such suit, and must be presumed to be not even erroneous. Erreca v. Meyers, supra; Brown v. Johnson, supra; Burke v. Koch, supra; Seligman v. Armando, supra, and De Thomas v. Witherby, supra; Boley v. Griswold, supra.

Thus far in our discussion of the liability of sureties on a replevin bond we have not noticed any of the decisions of the courts concerning such liability, where judgment was entered for defendant in the replevin suit, without adjudging a return of the property taken on the replevin bond. We think we have clearly shown that, under the established law of this state, such a judgment may be properly entered, and that, under the language of replevin bonds given under our statute, the sureties are liable for the payment of any sum of money to the defendant in the replevin suit that may be for any cause recovered against the plaintiff in such suit. When we come to examine the authorities upon the liability of sureties on replevin bonds, there appears to be some conflict as to the correct rule. This seeming conflict may perhaps arise out of differences in the conditions of replevin bonds under the laws and practice in different states.

In Mason v. Richards, 12 Iowa, 73, the surety on the replevin bond was held liable for a money judgment only. The court said: "An irregular judgment for the value of property taken in replevin, in which no order for the return of the property was made, does not change the liability of a surety in an action on the replevin bond." So, also, in McCarthy v. Strait, 7 Colo. App. 59, 42 Pac. 189, it is held that the sureties are liable, where a judgment for money only is entered, without adjudging a return of the property. It was there said: "The undertaking of the sureties was secondary—collateral. Upon the default of the principal their liabilities as sureties attached. They were not parties to the adjudication in replevin, nor could they in this case avail themselves of any errors or defects in it. It was res adjudicata. Their undertaking was, in case of the default of the principal, to pay to the defendant such sum of money as might from any cause be recovered against said plaintiff. A judgment was entered against the principal, which he failed to pay." Dorrington v. Meyer, 8 Neb. 211, also holds that sureties are liable for the judgment in the replevin suit, though for money only, without an alternative for the return of the property. See, also, Barry v. Frayser, 57 Tenn. 207.

On the other hand, Gallarati v. Orser, 27 N. Y. 327, and Ladd v. Prentice, 14 Conn. 109, seem to hold to the contrary. In the New York case, however, the action was against the sheriff for failure to justify the sureties, and what was said as to the liability of the sureties may be obiter; and in Connecticut the condition of the bond is quite different from the condition of a similar bond in this state. Thomas v. Irwin, 90 Ind. 557, also seems to sustain the proposition that the sureties are not liable for the value unless there be a judgment for the return of the property, but it is impossible to determine from the case whether or not any judgment was entered in the replevin suit for the value. The case ends by holding that the complaint against the sureties did state a cause of action against them. Certain it is that the cases directly in point with the case at bar hold the sureties on the replevin bond liable for the money judgment, though no return of the property be adjudged. Mason v. Richards, supra; McCarthy v. Strait, supra; Dorrington v. Meyer, supra. Appellant, however, places much reliance upon Nickerson v. Chatterton, 7 Cal. 568, and Clary v. Rolland, 24 Cal. 148.

The first case was an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer which attacked a complaint upon a replevin bond upon various grounds. The replevin suit seems to have been tried before a jury, which failed to find the value of the property sued for, though it rendered a verdict for its recovery. The court said: "But there is no averment that any value was found by the jury or the court in that case." The court did say that the judgment must be in the alternative, which we have seen from subsequent cases cited is not always required. No judgment for value was given, and the case is not authority for the proposition that the sureties on the replevin bond are not liable where a money judgment is entered for the defendant without adjudging a return of the property. In the subsequent case of GINICA v. Atwood, 8 Cal. 446, it was held that the decision in Nickerson v. Chatterton only applies to cases which have been submitted to a jury. For this reason the rule in Nickerson v. Chatterton is not applicable to the case at bar. Clary v. Rolland, 24 Cal. 148, follows Nickerson v. Chatterton, reluctantly upon the doctrine of stare decisis, and is authority for the proposition that, where a return of the property is adjudged, and no judgment entered for its value, the sureties are not liable for its value. It is not authority for the proposition that where a money judgment is entered, but without adjudging a return of the property, the sureties are not liable for the judgment entered. This case, by quoting from GINICA v. Atwood, seems also to recognize that the rule laid down in Nickerson v. Chatterton only applies where the trial was had before a jury. Neither case can be said to be authority for the proposition that, where judgment is entered for the value without the alternative of a return of the property being adjudged, the sureties are not liable. In other jurisdictions the rule laid down in Nickerson v. Chatterton, supra, and followed in Clary v. Rolland, supra, has been distinctly repudiated. Lomme v. Sweeney, 1 Mont. 584; Marix v. Franke, 9 Kan. 132; Whitney v. Lehmer, 26 Ind. 503. In each of these cases it was held that the sureties were liable for a judgment for the return of the property, though no alternative judgment for the value had been given.

Both upon principle and authority it is clear to us that defendant was not released from the obligation of its bond to answer for the payment to plaintiff (defendant in the replevin suit) of the sum of money recovered against the plaintiff in the replevin suit, because the judgment entered was not in the alternative, and did not direct a return of the property taken on the replevin bond.

2. As before stated, appellant also insists that the findings do not support the judgment because it appears that the judgment in the replevin suit was entered in pursuance of a stipulation entered into by the respective parties to said suit. In support of that contention he cites Lee v. Hastings, 13 Neb. 508, 14 N. W. 476. In this case it affirmatively appeared from the complaint that the judgment in the replevin suit was entered in pursuance of a stipulation, which stated that the property could not be returned, and that the interest of the defendant in said suit in said property was of the value of $157.50, and that the judgment should be entered for defendant against plaintiff for said sum. Judgment was entered accordingly, and was not paid. No demurrer was filed to this complaint, but defendants (the sureties on the replevin bond) filed an answer, setting up affirmatively, first, that the stipulation was entered into without their consent, and that the property, at the time the stipulation was entered into, was in good condition, and in the possession of the plaintiff in the replevin suit, and capable of being returned, which the parties to the stipulation well knew; and, second, that in the judgment for $157.50 was included a debt of $44, owing by plaintiff in the replevin suit to the defendant therein, that did not grow out of the action in replevin. The trial court overruled a demurrer to this answer, and entered judgment against the sureties, and it was this ruling that was before the appellate court. It is manifest that the facts pleaded in the answer showed fraud and collusion between the parties to the replevin suit, which on plain principles of equity ought to release the sureties. The answer affirmatively showed that the property not only could have been returned, as was well known to the parties to the stipulation stating the contrary, but that the parties agreed to a judgment, including a debt in no way connected with the replevin suit. No such facts appear from the record in this case. All presumptions arising from the fact of the judgment must be to the contrary. In Lee v. Hastings the case was returned for trial upon the issues presented by the affirmative matter set up in the answer, and without suggestion that the complaint did not state a cause of action. As the complaint on its face showed a judgment entered on stipulation for a given sum, without adjudging a return of the property, it is difficult to see why a new trial should have been ordered if the court had been of the opinion that such facts released the sureties. What was said in Lee v. Hastings as to the necessity for an alternative judgment was subsequently in effect clearly overruled in the later case in the same state of Selby v. McQuillan, 59 Neb. 158, 80 N. W. 504.

A judgment entered on a stipulation is none the less a judgment of the court because consented to by the parties. It is a most common occurrence for parties to a litigation to stipulate to important facts that often determine the result of the litigation. In the absence of fraud and collusion we see no good reason why sureties on a replevin bond should not be bound by a judgment thus obtained. Perigo G. M. & Y. Co. v. Grimes, 2 Colo. 652. In this case the court held that a submission to arbitration that provided for the entry of judgment on the award did not release the sureties on the replevin bond. The court said: "As, therefore, it cannot be doubted that a plaintiff in replevin may, by confessing judgment in favor of the defendant, bind himself and his sureties to the performance of the judgment, no reason is perceived for discharging the sureties when the judgment is obtained according to the terms of a submission to arbitration." In Bradford v. Frederick, 101 Pa. 445, it is held that a confession of judgment is a recognized and orderly mode of ending a pending suit, and that sureties are not released because the judgment was confessed. The court said: "There is no difference in legal effect between a judgment confessed and a judgment on the verdict of a jury." There being nothing in the record to show that the stipulated judgment was the result of fraud or collusion, it was a judgment regularly and lawfully obtained in the replevin suit, and we see no reason why the defendant (surety on the replevin bond) should not be bound by it.

The other points referred to in appellant's brief relate to matters that do not appear on the judgment roll, and cannot be considered.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

ceive from the bank a proportionate part of the shares of stock received by the bank from F.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. SUBROGATION (§ 33*)—PRIORITIES.

In applying the property received from F. in satisfaction of the entire debt, the bank's claim to have actual satisfaction for the legitimate part of its debt against F. would have priority over the president's claim to subrogation or to a lien on the property for the sum he refunded on account of the improper loans.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

3. SUBROGATION (§ 31*)—WHEN RIGHT EXISTS.

Even if the president could claim subrogation or a right to hold the bank as trustee as to the property received from F., upon the theory that for his benefit equity would consider the entire debt still existing and the bank as the holder of the entire property in pledge for the payment of the entire debt, the president would have to make full payment of the entire debt as a condition precedent to his right of subrogation to the title of the bank to any part of the property or his right to hold the bank as trustee thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

4. SUBROGATION (§ 31*)—PERSONS ENTITLED TO.

The bank in any case should not be compelled to return F. a part of the stock turned over by him upon payment by the bank president of the sums improperly loaned by him to F., where the remainder of the stock would not be sufficient to secure or satisfy the part of F.'s debt which the president did not repay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Simpson Finnell against Jas. H. Goodman & Company Bank. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Garret W. McEnerney and Walter Rothchild, for appellant. Charles W. Slack, Charles S. Wheeler, Bush Finnell, Charles E. Trower, and J. J. Dunn, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant, a banking corporation, appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The object of the action, as shown by the complaint, is to have the plaintiff adjudged to be the owner of 3,241 shares of the capital stock of the Finnell Land Company, standing in the name of the defendant, and to compel the defendant to transfer and deliver the said shares to plaintiff. The court below gave judgment directing the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff 2,717 of the said shares. The transactions out of which the claim of the plaintiff arises occurred between the defendant and George E. Goodman. The plaintiff has succeeded to the rights of George E. Goodman by assignment. In our consideration of the case we will refer only to the actions and rights of

(156 Cal. 13)

FINNELL v. JAS. H. GOODMAN & CO. BANK. (S. F. 4,696.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1909.
On Motion to Modify Judgment, July 30, 1909.)

1. SUBROGATION (§ 31*)—WHEN RIGHT EXISTS.

Where a bank had lent F. money, and the bank's president had also improperly lent him a further sum, and F. paid to the bank certain merchandise and shares of stock in his company as an entirety in extinguishment of his debt to the bank including the amount improperly lent by the president, the sum paid being much less than the debt, and the president subsequently paid the bank the amount he had wrongfully lent F., the president was not entitled to re-

Goodman. The facts upon which the judgment was based are stated in the findings and will now, in substance, be stated.

The defendant was incorporated as a banking corporation on June 11, 1889, and ever since July 1, 1889, has been engaged in the banking business. We shall hereafter designate it as the "bank." Goodman was its president during all the period involved except from March 22, 1895, to July 9, 1896. During that period, however, no important transactions occurred. The Finnell Land Company was incorporated on May 24, 1900, with a capital stock declared in its articles to be of the value of $650,000, divided into 6,500 shares of the par value of $100 each, all of which were owned by John Finnell. On October 26, 1900, John Finnell was indebted to the bank in the sum of $447,742.80, of which $275,559.87 was evidenced by notes secured by deeds of trust covering 12,221.87 acres of land belonging to the Finnell Land Company, and $172,182.93 was due for overdrafts on open account and unsecured. Of this sum of $447,742.80 due from Finnell to the bank, $267,372 was on account of money of the bank which had been loaned to Finnell by George E. Goodman, to be used to pay debts from Finnell to Goodman. This money was loaned by Goodman for that purpose at divers times while he was president of the bank and was so used and applied. On that day, October 26, 1900, Goodman being then president of the bank, Finnell made a settlement of his aforesaid debt to the bank. This settlement was made with the knowledge and consent of Goodman. The evidence shows further that he negotiated the settlement, but this is not stated in the findings. By this settlement Finnell sold and transferred to the bank 4,500 shares of the capital stock of the Finnell Land Company and certain wheat, barley, and wool, in consideration whereof the bank discharged Finnell's said debt. The wheat, barley, and wool taken by the bank were of the value of $21,477.80, and that sum was credited by the bank on its account against Finnell, which account included the secured notes aforesaid as well as the overdrafts. The findings show that at the same time Finnell transferred to Goodman the remaining 2,000 shares of stock in the Finnell Land Company in consideration of the discharge by Goodman of a debt of some $352,238.27 and accrued interest due from Finnell to said Goodman. We do not think these facts are material to the case, except, perhaps, as matters of evidence.

On August 21, 1903, the bank demanded of Goodman the sum of $323,970, on account of the said $267,377 of the bank's funds previously loaned as aforesaid by Goodman, as president, to Finnell and used to pay his debts to Goodman. This demand included 7 per cent. interest from October 26, 1900, to August 21, 1903, on the sum so used by Goodman. After some negotiation with Goodman the interest was reduced to 5 per cent., and Goodman thereupon paid the bank $307,000 in satisfaction of the demand. On account of this payment the court below held that Goodman was entitled to a proportional part of the 4,500 shares of the Finnell Land Company stock which the bank had received from Finnell in satisfaction of the debt of which the $267,372 was a part. It also found that the bank had expended $10,000 in obtaining necessary advice and service of an attorney in enforcing its demand against Goodman for said sum, and that, on that account, in estimating the proportion of the stock due to Goodman, the sum of $257,372, only should be taken as the numerator. The $21,477.80 credited on account of the wheat, barley, and wool was taken from the total debt, leaving a balance of $426,265, for which balance the bank, as the court concluded, had received the 4,500 shares of stock. The theory was that each share of stock represented a due proportion of the debt, and that, when Goodman was forced to repay to the bank $267,372 of the same debt, he became equitably entitled to receive from the bank a number of shares of the stock bearing the same proportion to the 4,500 shares as the sum of $257,372 (being the sum he paid, less the $10,000, and without interest) bears to $426,265. This proportion would amount to 2,717 shares, for which judgment was given.

The original complaint alleged that when Goodman paid the $267,372 and interest in August, 1903, in liquidation of the demand then made upon him, it was agreed between him and the bank that the bank, in consideration thereof, would transfer to him a proportionate part of the 4,500 shares of the stock. In the amended complaint it was alleged that the bank agreed to transfer to him, in consideration of said payment, 3,241 shares of said stock. The court found that no such agreement was made, and that no agreement to transfer any shares to Goodman was made in connection with that transaction. The complaint alleges that the shares of stock of said company have no market value. The answer alleged that on October 26, 1900, when it was taken by the bank in discharge of Finnell's debt, each share of the stock "was of the value of $30," and that it has greatly depreciated in value since that date. The court found that the stock has no market value. It also found as follows: "It is not true that on the 26th day of October, 1900, each share of the said Finnell Land Company stock was of the value of but $30." The complaint contained no allegation as to its actual, or intrinsic value, as distinguished from its market value. The suit of the plaintiff was manifestly founded upon the alleged agreement that upon payment by Goodman to the bank the bank would transfer to him a proportionate part of the stock. The court, as stated, found that this allegation was wholly untrue. The plaintiff is therefore forced to rely on other propositions in order to sustain the judgment.

We know of no principle of law or equity by which the plaintiff can claim a right to a proportion of the stock, upon the facts found. The claim of the plaintiff is: That, when the funds of the bank were improperly loaned by Goodman to Finnell, it then had two remedies whereby to obtain reimbursement of the $267,372, thus loaned, one to pursue Finnell, the debtor, the other to compel payment from Goodman its unfaithful president; that it elected to pursue Finnell and accepted property from him in satisfaction of the entire debt of $447,772.80, including the $267,372 for which Goodman also was liable; that, after having thus obtained satisfaction from Finnell, the bank could not demand payment from Goodman of a part of the debt, and at the same time hold the property received from Finnell for its own use; but that it thereupon and thenceforward held as trustee for Goodman that part of the stock received from Finnell which was the equivalent of the $267,372 refunded to it by Goodman. This claim is necessarily founded upon the proposition that, in the settlement with Finnell, each share of the stock was taken separately, as satisfaction for its proportion of the debt, or that it must be so considered in equity, so that, when Goodman refunded any of the money, he at once became entitled to its equivalent in stock at this ratio. This proposition finds no support either in the findings or in the evidence, and we know of no rule or principle in equity which declares it as a matter of law. It omits all consideration of the right of the bank to a full payment of its whole debt in preference to the claim of Goodman. The shares of stock were not taken separately at a fixed price per share. The stock, as a whole, was not even taken as satisfaction of a stated part of the debt. What actually occurred, according to the findings, was that Finnell transferred to the bank the wheat, barley, wool, and stock, as an entirety, in consideration of the satisfaction and extinguishment of his debt to the bank and the discharge thereof by the bank. There was no separation or segregation of the items, and the whole of the property was taken for the entire debt. The evidence shows further that when the wheat, barley, and wool were sold, after they were transferred to the bank, the selling price, $21,477.80, was credited on its books to the Finnell account, that the property was not accepted because it was considered full payment, or as sufficient to satisfy the debt, but because it was all that could be obtained from Finnell, and that it was not considered as satisfaction, but that in fact the bank's account against Finnell was balanced by crediting $276,000 for the stock, $21,477.80 for the other property, and writing off the balance of $150,265 as a charge to "Reserve" and "Profit and Loss."

There is nothing to the contrary of this in the findings. Neither is there anything to indicate that at that time the right of the bank to look to Goodman for reimbursement for any part of the debt was considered or even thought of. The entire theory of the right of Goodman to a proportion of the stock therefore falls to the ground for lack of the essential facts upon which it must be founded.

The claim of the plaintiff is untenable upon other grounds. The wrongful acts of Goodman had added $267,372 to the claim of the bank against Finnell, who was unable to pay. It may be conceded for argument's sake that if Goodman repaid this money to the bank he would have a claim against Finnell therefor; Finnell being the primary debtor. But, in that case, it must also be conceded that, in making application of the property received from Finnell in satisfaction of the entire debt, the claim of the bank to have actual satisfaction for the legitimate part of its debt against Finnell, the part not improperly created by Goodman, would have priority and preference to any claim of Goodman to subrogation, or to a lien in his favor upon the property for the sum he refunded on account of the improper loans. He could not equitably claim equality with the bank, in resorting to this property for the reimbursement of the moneys returned by him to the bank which had been wrongfully taken by him in the first place. As between the bank and Finnell, the transaction had been closed and the debt settled; but Goodman can claim a right of subrogation, or a right to hold the bank as trustee with regard to the property, if he can claim it at all, only upon the theory that for his benefit equity will consider the matter still at large, the entire debt still existing, and the bank as the holder of the entire property in pledge for the payment of the entire debt. Such being the case, the well-known principles of equity, as well as the relations of the parties and the tortious origin of Goodman's claim, require him to make full payment of the entire debt as a condition precedent to his right of subrogation to the title of the bank to any part of the property, or his right to hold the bank as trustee thereof, conceding for argument's sake that he could in any case have such right. Where property is mortgaged or pledged by a single transaction, as security for several claims to a single creditor, another person who is bound to the creditor for one, only, of the claims secured, is not entitled to subrogation until he has paid, not only the claim for which he is bound, but also all the claims for which the property is held. 1 Brandt, Suretyship, §§ 338-354; 6 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur., § 922, note 95, § 923, note 102; 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 211; Crump v. McMurtry, 8 Mo. 414; Grubbs v. Wysors, 32 Grat. (Va.) 130.

Furthermore, it would be inequitable in any case to compel the bank to yield the plaintiff a part of the property taken for its debt, unless the remainder of such property is sufficient to secure or satisfy the part of the debt which Goodman did not repay. This part, excluding the payment upon the sale of the wheat, barley, and wool, amounted to $158,893 on October 26, 1900. As the findings show that the Finnell Land Company had no revenue, it is obvious that it could not have paid any dividends. Allowing interest thereon, this part of the debt in August, 1903, when Goodman repaid the sum for which he was liable, amounted to over $190,000. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff, upon his own theory of the case, and by obvious principles of equity, to aver and prove that the stock was of a value more than sufficient to pay this balance. He did not allege that it had any value, and the findings show only that its value exceeded $135,000. The evidence indicates that it was worth even less. The stock left to the plaintiff by the judgment would be worth only $53,491.

We are of the opinion therefore that the findings do not support the judgment, and for this reason the judgment must be reversed. A large number of rulings in the exclusion and admission of evidence are assigned as error. The conclusions we have reached will, as we believe, be sufficient to indicate the evidence that will be proper upon another trial and render it unnecessary to consider these points at length. It may be remarked that the insolvency of Finnell, the failure of Goodman to take security for the money of the bank loaned him, or part thereof, the agreement, if any, when the bank was organized and succeeded to the assets of the previously existing partnership, that the bank was to be fully paid before Goodman would enforce his own debts against Finnell, and the actual value of the stock at the time it was taken and subsequently up to the time of trial, would be pertinent matters of evidence upon any trial of the real controversy between the parties.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Motion to Modify Judgment.

PER CURIAM. The appellant has filed a petition asking that the judgment reversing the case unconditionally be vacated, and that, instead thereof, the cause be remanded with directions to the court below to enter judgment that the plaintiff should be entitled to receive the whole of the Finnell Land Company stock, upon payment of the balance due upon the debt for the satisfaction of which it was taken by the bank, treating that balance as a still subsisting obligation. In the opinion rendered we held in effect that this was the only relief which the plaintiff could equitably demand. The defendant now consents that this relief be directed. The bill of exceptions expressly declares that it exhibits the substance of all the evidence given and offered upon the trial. The trial was careful and thorough. The evidence in proof of the alleged agreement that, upon the payment by Goodman of the money demanded of him by the bank, it would transfer to him a proportionate part of the stock it had received from Finnell, was vague, unsatisfactory, and clearly insufficient to prove such agreement, and it appears therefrom that the plaintiff produced all the evidence upon the subject which it could ever hope to obtain. There is no occasion for a new trial if the defendant is content with a judgment as above indicated. The judgment on unconditional reversal would require a new trial. That judgment is vacated, and upon the consent of the defendant aforesaid the following is given as the judgment of this court:

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the superior court, with directions to enter judgment that if the plaintiff shall, within six months from the date hereof, pay to the defendant the sum of $158,893, with legal interest from October 26, 1900, after crediting all profits received on the stock after that date, the plaintiff shall thereupon receive from the defendant the 4,500 shares of stock of the Finnell Land Company which said defendant received from John Finnell; and that, if such payment is not made within said period, then that the plaintiff take nothing by his action. The defendant will recover the costs of appeal.

156 Cal. 89

In re BREWER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,181.)
(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 355*)—MOTION TO DISMISS—JURISDICTION.

Motion to dismiss appeal, on the ground that service and filing of notice of appeal were too late, goes to the jurisdiction, which cannot be conferred by acts of the parties so that no waiver or estoppel to urge the objection can be claimed because of respondent indorsing admission of service on the notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1926; Dec. Dig. § 355.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 338*)—TIME FOR APPEAL—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—REPEAL OF STATUTE.

The enlargement, by Act March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410), of Code Civ. Proc. pt. 2 (entitled "Of Civil Actions"), tit. 13 (entitled "Of Appeals in Civil Actions"), c. 1 (entitled "Appeals in General"), by the addition of the new sections 941a, 941b, 941c, furnishing an alternative method of appeal, is, like the sections of part 2 thereby supplemented, carried into part 3 (dealing with special proceedings), tit. 11 (dealing with probate proceedings), by section 1714 of said title 11, providing that the provisions of part 2 relative to appeals, "except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title," apply to the proceedings mentioned in this title, but, so far as inconsistent with section 1715, providing that the appeal in probate proceedings shall be taken within 60 days after entry of order of judgment, it is not carried into such title; there being no repeal by implication of such sections in regard to the special subject of appeal in probate matters by the new sections relating to the general subject of appeal in civil matters.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County.

In the matter of the Estate of James A. Brewer, deceased. James Morris Brewer and another appeal. Dismissed.

Clark & Clark, R. Clark, James Morris Brewer, and Henry Clay Brewer, for appellants. Thomas C. Huxley, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Motion to dismiss an appeal from a decree of final distribution. The decree was entered on October 15, 1907. Notice of appeal was served on the attorney for the executrix on December 16, 1907, and was filed on the same day. The ground of the motion to dismiss is that the appeal was "attempted to be taken after the time limited by law." Under the statutes, as they existed prior to the legislative session of 1907, there can be no doubt that the service and filing of the notice of appeal were too late. Section 1715 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that appeals in probate proceedings "must be taken within sixty days after the order, decree, or judgment is entered." In re Ward, 83 Cal. 619, 24 Pac. 45. The objection that an appeal has not been taken within the time limited by law goes to the jurisdiction of the appellate court. People v. Walker, 132 Cal. 138, 64 Pac. 133; Estate of Campbell, 141 Cal. 73, 74 Pac. 550. There is therefore no force in the contention made by appellants that such objection was waived by the action of the respondent in indorsing upon the notice of appeal an admission of service. Towdy v. Ellis, 22 Cal. 650. Nor can the appellants rely upon the position that respondent is estopped by such admission from objecting to a consideration of the appeal. The acts of the parties cannot confer jurisdiction on the court in a case withheld by the law from its jurisdiction. Even if no objection were made, it would be the duty of the court, of its own motion to dismiss the appeal if it appeared to be taken too late. Langan v. Langan, 89 Cal. 186, 195, 26 Pac. 764; Estate of Pearson, 119 Cal. 28, 50 Pac. 992. The appeal must therefore be dismissed unless it is saved by the provisions of the act of March 20, 1907, entitled "An act to add three new sections to the Code of Civil Procedure, to be known as sections 941a, 941b, and 941c, of said Code, respectively, providing a new and alternative method by which appeals may be taken from judgments, orders or decrees of the superior court of the state of California to the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal thereof." St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410. Section 941b, added to the Code by this act, allows an appellant to file his notice of appeal at any time after the rendition of the judgment, order, or decree, and requires him to file it within 60 days after notice of entry of the judgment or order has been served upon the attorneys of record in the proceeding, provided that, in any event, the notice of appeal must be filed not later than six months after entry of the judgment or order. In the present instance it is admitted that no notice of entry of the decree was even served, and the appeal is, accordingly, in time, if the case is governed by the new statute.

The three sections adopted in 1907 became, by virtue of the numbers assigned to them, a part of chapter 1, tit. 13, pt. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Part 2 bears the general title "Of Civil Actions." The subject of title 13 is that "Of Appeals in Civil Actions," and chapter 1 deals with "Appeals in General." Prior to the enactment of the new sections 941a, 941b, and 941c, the manner and the time of taking appeals were covered by sections 939, 940, and 941. Under section 939 an appeal might be taken from "a final judgment in an action or special proceeding commenced in the court in which the same is rendered, within six months after the entry of judgment." This language is general, and, if it had stood alone and unaffected by any other provision, would unquestionably have authorized an appeal from a decree of distribution in a probate matter to be taken within six months after entry. Code Civ. Proc. § 23. But the Code, by other sections, specifically limits the application to probate proceedings of the provisions relating to appeals generally. Part 3 deals with special proceedings, and title 11 of that part, covering sections 1294 to 1810, with proceedings in probate courts. Section 1714 provides that "the provisions of part two of this Code, relative to new trials and appeals—except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title—apply to the proceedings mentioned in this title," and section 1715 that "the appeal must be taken within sixty days after the order, decree or judgment is entered." Here is an express declaration that the general enactments regarding appeals are to apply to probate appeals only where not inconsistent with provisions declared in the title devoted to probate proceedings, and that in case of inconsistency the provisions of the probate title are to prevail. When the chapter relating to appeals in general was enlarged by the addition of new sections furnishing an alternative method of taking appeals, these new sections, both by the generality of their language (Estate of McPhee [Cal.] 97 Pac. 878, 881), and by the terms of section 1714, were carried over and imported into probate proceedings, but, like the provisions which they supplemented, only in so far as they were consistent with the rules laid down in the title governing probate proceedings. The appellant may follow the method laid down in sections 941a, 941b, and 941c. He may perfect an appeal by filing a notice, and is not required either to serve notice or to furnish an undertaking. But in the matter of time for taking an appeal section 1715 still remains in force. It limits the appellant to 60 days after the entry of the order, judgment, or decree. To the extent that this provision is inconsistent with the provision of 941b, it prevents the application of that section to probate appeals.

This result can be avoided only by holding that the new sections work a repeal, by implication, of sections 1714 and 1715. Such a holding would be contrary to well-established rules. Repeals by implication are not favored. They will be held to have taken place only where there is an irreconcilable conflict between the two acts, so that it is manifest that the Legislature did not intend both to be effective. Malone v. Bosch, 104 Cal. 680, 38 Pac. 680; Rowe v. Hib. S. & L. Soc., 134 Cal. 403, 66 Pac. 569. Here it is readily possible to give effect to both acts. The new sections, like sections 939, 940, and 941, are applicable to appeals in all cases except probate, and as to probate appeals they are applicable in all respects concerning which a contrary provision is not made in title 11, pt. 3, of the Code. Sections 1714 and 1715 may still be given the effect they had before; that is, the effect of importing into probate proceedings all Code provisions governing appeals which are not inconsistent with the title covering probate matters, and excluding such of them as are inconsistent.

Furthermore, it is to be observed that sections 1714 and 1715 deal with the limited and special subject of appeals from orders and decrees in probate. Sections 941a, 941b, and 941c relate to appeals in all civil matters. Their very generality furnishes the only argument for the contention that they override any contrary provision of section 1715. But "where two statutes treat of the same subject, one being special and the other general, unless they are irreconcilably inconsistent, the latter, although latest in date, will not be held to have repealed the former, but the special act will prevail in its application to the subject-matter as far as coming within its particular provisions." People v. Pac. Imp. Co., 130 Cal. 442, 446, 62 Pac. 739. See, also, Banks v. Yolo County, 104 Cal. 258, 37 Pac. 900.

From these views, it follows that the appeal was attempted to be taken after the time allowed by law.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

156 Cal. 1

PEREIRA v. PEREIRA. (S. F. 4,882.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1909.
On Rehearing, July 30, 1909.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 111*)—OBJECT—ILLEGALITY—DEROGATION OF MARRIAGE.

A husband, with property worth $77,000, and an income of $11,000, was sued for divorce; but the action was dismissed, the parties having become reconciled and resumed marital relations. Subsequently, in pursuance of negotiations begun before the dismissal but after the reconciliation, they entered into a contract which recited the pendency of the divorce action. The wife therein waived the cause of divorce alleged, and agreed to dismiss the action. It was provided that, if the husband should thereafter so conduct himself as to give the wife a new cause of action for divorce, and she should establish it in a subsequent action against him, he should pay her $10,000, which should be a full satisfaction and discharge of all claims of the wife in the action for alimony, costs, support, homestead property, and benefit of every character, and, if such suit were brought, all claims by her to any property, community or otherwise, owned or acquired by the husband, other than the $10,000, were thereby settled and abandoned. Held, that the contract was void as against public policy, as intended to facilitate the dissolution of the marriage tie by the husband.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 515-520; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 6*) — SEPARATE PROPERTY OF HUSBAND.

Where a husband, at his marriage, had a sum of money invested in his business, it was his separate property, and, where it remained in the business, he was entitled to have as his separate property the profits of the business due to the capital invested, under Civ. Code, § 163, providing that the profits of property owned by a husband before marriage shall be his separate property, and the amount of profits should be determined from all the circumstances of the case, and the business, being profitable, would amount at least to the usual interest on a long investment well secured.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 280*)—REVIEW—DISPOSITION OF COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

The disposition of community property by the superior court in a divorce case in all particulars, including matters committed to its discretion, is subject to revision by the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 287*) — REVIEW — COMMUNITY PROPERTY—DISPOSAL.

Where the wife has not appealed from a judgment in a divorce case, the Supreme Court cannot, on the husband's appeal, change the judgment by increasing the share of community property given to the wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

5. DIVORCE (§§ 249, 293*)—PROCEEDINGS—POWER OF COURT TO DECLARE RIGHTS TO PROPERTY AND CHILDREN BEFORE FINAL JUDGMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 131, providing that in divorce, if the court determines that the divorce should be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce, and section 132, providing that, after one year after the entry of the interlocutory judgment, the court, on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter final judgment granting the divorce, which shall restore the parties to the status of single persons and permit either to marry, and such other relief as may be necessary to a complete disposition of the action, the court need not postpone trial of rights to property and children until rendition of final judgment, but may try the entire action at the same time as the issues as to the divorce and render an interlocutory judgment declaring the parties' rights with respect to property and children, and providing that the rights of the parties upon all the issues shall become final only when the divorce decree shall become final, allowing temporary alimony in the meantime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. §§ 249, 293.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Anna Agnes Pereira against Frank Pereira. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed and remanded in part.

Arthur J. Dannenbaum and Meyer Jacobs, for appellant. Charles S. Wheeler, Snook & Church, and J. F. Bowie, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff obtained an interlocutory judgment of divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. This judgment also declared that the plaintiff should have three-fifths of the community property when the divorce became final, that she should thereafter have custody of her minor child by the marriage, and it provided for temporary alimony to her and for the custody of the child during the time that would elapse between the interlocutory judgment and the final judgment. The defendant appealed from this interlocutory judgment within 60 days after the rendition thereof. This appeal is presented upon the judgment roll and upon a bill of exceptions containing the evidence. It is conceded that the evidence was sufficient to justify the divorce and the award of the custody of the child to plaintiff. The claim of the appellant is that the court erred in the finding as to the amount of the community property and in excluding evidence relating thereto.

1. The first point to be noticed is the ruling of the court declaring void a contract between the parties relating to their property and the division thereof, and in refusing to enforce or consider it in that connection. We are of the opinion that the court properly refused to consider this contract on the ground that it was plainly against public policy. The present action was begun on January 21, 1905. A previous action of divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, consisting in large part of the same acts assigned in the present complaint, was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant on September 23, 1904. After that action was begun, the parties became reconcil-ed, resumed marital relations, and on November 1, 1904, the plaintiff dismissed the action. On November 4, 1904, in pursuance of negotiations begun before the dismissal, but after the reconciliation, the contract in question was executed. It was dated November 1st, and it recites that the previous action was then pending. Therein the plaintiff expressly waived the cause for divorce alleged in said complaint and agreed to dismiss the action. The contract further provided: That none of the relatives of either party should settle in, be invited to, or visit, the home without the consent of both parties; that if the husband should thereafter so conduct himself as to give the wife a new cause of action for divorce, and she should establish the same in a subsequent action against him for divorce or maintenance, the husband should thereupon pay to the wife $10,000, which should be a full satisfaction, settlement, and discharge of all claims of the wife in such action "for alimony, costs, counsel fees, support, maintenance of herself, homestead, homestead right, property, and benefit of every kind and character." It also declared that, "In the event of the institution of such subsequent action, all claims and demands by her or on her part in or to any moneys, property rights, or property, community or otherwise, now or hereafter owned or acquired by" the defendant, other than said $10,000, "are hereby forever settled, liquidated, relinquished, released, waived, and abandoned, and no claim, demand, or monetary or property benefit or relief shall ever be claimed, asserted, or sought in, by, or by reason of said subsequent action, should it be instituted, except only to the extent aforesaid."

The Civil Code provides that the husband and wife may enter into any engagement with the other respecting property which they might enter into if not married, subject to the law as to fiduciary relations in general (section 158); and that they may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation; but that they cannot by contract otherwise alter their legal relations, except as to property (section 159). There was in this contract no agreement for separation, and hence the agreement to pay $10,000 cannot be upheld as a provision for the support of the wife on a separation, as provided in section 159. The real effect of the contract to pay the $10,000, so far as the husband is concerned, would be to provide against liability for a contemplated wrong to be subsequently inflicted by him upon his wife, and to liquidate such liability in advance of the commission of the wrong. The evidence and findings show that the defendant was then possessed of property worth about $77,000, was engaged in a very lucrative business, and was receiving an income of about $11,000 a year which he had every reason to believe would continue. By this contract, if valid, he was left free to inflict upon his wife the most grievous marital wrongs, such as would compel her to obtain a divorce, secure in the protection of his contract that $10,000 would satisfy all her claims against him of a pecuniary nature or in relation to the community property. If he should, after its execution, be moved by evil impulse to commit anew the offenses against his wife which first gave her cause for divorce, or other acts having the same legal effect, the existence of a valid contract of this sort could not but encourage him to yield to his baser inclinations and inflict the injury. As it was obviously adapted to produce this result, it is to be presumed that this was one of the inducements which made him desire its execution. The law does not countenance such agreements. "Any contract between the parties having for its object the dissolution of the marriage contract, or facilitating that result, * * * is void as contra bonos mores." Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 512, 39 Pac. 802, quoting Phillip v. Thorp, 10 Or. 494; Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354, 4 Pac. 229; Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 289, 61 Pac. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548. In Seeley's Appeal, 56 Conn. 206, 14 Atl. 291, the court says: "Inasmuch as the state rests upon the family and is vitally interested in the permanency of a marriage relation once established, it, for the promotion of public welfare, and of private morals as well, makes itself a party to every marriage contract entered into within its jurisdiction, in this sense, that it will not permit the dissolution thereof by the other party thereto. Its consent in the form of a decree of its court passed after hearing in due process of law is a prerequisite for a divorce. * * * Courts will not enforce any contract which is the price of consent by one party to the marriage relation to the procurement of a divorce by the other." And, in reference to a similar agreement to that in the case at bar, the court in the case just cited said: "Presumably each party saw in that agreement an individual advantage; to him, in that he possibly paid her less thereby than the judgment of the court upon hearing would compel; to her, in that he refrained therefore from answering the allegations of her petition by proof, and thus possibly permitted a divorce which he could have prevented."

Before the contract was made, or its terms agreed to, the parties had made up their former differences and had become reconciled. It shows by its terms that it is not an agreement to settle property rights accruing by reason of a marital offense already perpetrated and complete as a cause for divorce. There is therefore no force in the claim, as applied to this case, that it is competent evidence, or valid as a settlement of such rights, even if it were conceded that such an agreement might under some circumstances be permitted to stand. The court also found that this contract was procured by the husband through undue influence and by fraud. Our conclusions upon the point that it was against public policy make it unnecessary to consider the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these findings.

2. The court found that the community property of the parties was of the value of $57,664.77. It is claimed that this is not sustained by the evidence.

There is practically no conflict on the subject; there being no witness to that point except the defendant. The findings state that this property consisted of the real estate on which the defendant carried on business, which was of the value of $45,000, and certain money on hand, making up the remainder. The evidence shows that the plaintiff and defendant intermarried on April 19, 1900. At that time the defendant was, and he ever since has been, carrying on a saloon and cigar business, then producing a net income of about $5,000 annually. He owned the cigar and saloon stock and fixtures, worth in all about $15,500, and had, besides, some $6,000 in cash. Soon after the marriage he bought the home wherein the parties afterwards lived, paying $2,700 therefor, and he afterwards expended thereon $2,300 in improving it. This home is adjudged to be his separate property, and plaintiff is given no interest in it. A year and a half after his marriage he bought the property in which he was carrying on business at the price of $40,000. He paid in cash therefor $5,000, and afterwards, out of his income, he paid the balance of the price and accumulated the cash on hand at the time of the trial, in addition, amounting to over $12,000. His net income at the time of the trial was about $11,000 a year. From the time of his marriage to the time of trial he allowed his wife $75 a month to run the house, and she made her own clothes. There is an unexplained discrepancy between the total amount of his income less the household expenses, and his total gains. He must have received more than he was willing to disclose, if his net income over household expenses amounted to as much as the money which he admits he has received, not allowing anything for his personal expenses.

The court may have believed that he had other property which he had succeeded in concealing. There was some justification for this inference, for he was caught in the act of attempting to conceal $7,761 of the cash on hand by means of a New York draft which he had carried in his pocket for the four months preceding the trial. It appears, however, that the decision of the court was made upon the theory that all of his gains received after marriage, from whatever sources, were to be classed as community property, and that no allowance was made in favor of his separate estate on account of interest or profit on the $15,500 invested in the business at the time of the marriage. This capital was undoubtedly his separate estate. The fund remained in the business after marriage and was used by him in carrying it on. The separate property should have been credited with some amount as profit on this capital. It was not a losing business, but a very profitable one. It is true that it is very clearly shown that the principal part of the large income was due to the personal character, energy, ability, and capacity of the husband. This share of the earnings was, of course, community property; but without capital he could not have carried on the business. In the absence of circumstances showing a different result, it is to be presumed that some of the profits were justly due to the capital invested. There is nothing to show that all of it was due to defendant's efforts alone. The probable contribution of the capital to the income should have been determined from all the circumstances of the case, and, as the business was profitable, it would amount at least to the usual interest on a long investment well secured. Bogges v. Richards, Adm'r, 39 W. Va. 576, 20 S. E. 599, 26 L. R. A. 537, 45 Am. St. Rep. 938; Trapnell v. Conkling, 37 W. Va. 252, 16 S. E. 570, 38 Am. St. Rep. 30; Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Grat. (Va.) 503, 94 Am. Dec. 478; Glidden v. Taylor, 16 Ohio St. 509, 91 Am. Dec. 98. We think the court erred in refusing to increase the proportion of separate property and decrease the community property to the extent of the reasonable gain to the separate estate from the earnings properly allowable on account of the capital invested.

It is true that the disposition of the community property by the superior court, in all particulars, including matters committed to its discretion, is subject to revision in this court on appeal. Civ. Code, § 148; Eslinger v. Eslinger, 47 Cal. 64; Brown v. Brown, 60 Cal. 580; Strozyński v. Strozyński, 97 Cal. 192, 31 Pac. 1130. In each of these cases the Supreme Court increased the wife's share of the community property from one-half, as given by the trial court, to three-fourths. But the wife has not appealed, and we cannot, upon the husband's appeal, change the judgment by increasing the share of community property given to the wife. The only error, in respect to community property, which we can consider upon this appeal by the husband, is the error in classing as community property that part of the gains which was derived from the "issues and profits" of his separate property (Civ. Code, § 163), the amount of which we cannot determine. It will be necessary to remand the case for a retrial of this issue. The court below will be free, upon such new trial, to apportion a larger share of the community property to the plaintiff, or to divide it between the parties in such shares as it shall deem just, under all the circumstances. The present division seems fair in point of fact.

3. The appellant further claims that, under the amendment of 1903 to sections 131 and 132 of the Civil Code, the court has no power, at or before the time of rendering the interlocutory judgment of divorce, to make any inquiry, finding, or decree with respect to the property rights of the parties, or with respect to any other subject connected with the divorce, except the right of the complainant to a divorce. Section 131 on this point is as follows: "In actions for divorce the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted, final judgment must thereupon be entered accordingly. If it determines that the divorce ought to be granted an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce." Section 132 provides that, when "one year has expired after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce, and such final judgment shall restore them to the status of single persons, and permit either to marry after the entry thereof; and such other and further relief as may be necessary to a complete disposition of the action. * * * The death of either party after the entry of the interlocutory judgment does not impair the power of the court to enter final judgment as hereinbefore provided; but such entry shall not validate any marriage contracted by either party before the entry of such final judgment, nor constitute any defense of any criminal prosecution made against either." As these provisions were made after the other sections of the Code had been in force for many years, it was to be expected that the new provisions would not in all respects be consistent in language with other sections on the same subject. In section 146 the Code speaks of a disposition of the community property "in case of the dissolution of the marriage." In section 147 the Code declares that "the court in rendering a decree of divorce must make such order for the disposition of the community property and of the homestead as in this chapter provided," and in section 90 it declares that marriage is dissolved only by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction declaring a divorce. From these provisions it is argued by the appellant that the court's power to make a disposition of the property rights of the parties exists only at the time when the divorce judgment becomes final, and that any act attempted to be accomplished before that, in the way of a trial or interlocutory judgment declaring the property rights or the rights to the custody of children, is coram non jndice and void.

We do not think that the Code provision requires such a narrow construction. When the history of legislation on the subject and the conditions existing at the time of the adoption of the amendment of 1903 are considered, the purpose, meaning, and effect of that amendment are not difficult to discover. While the law deems it necessary to provide that a divorce may be granted when conditions are such as to make the marriage relation intolerable, it is nevertheless true that the policy of the law does not favor the dissolution of marriages. It has been generally believed that many divorces were sought, not in good faith, but because a roving fancy had found another affinity more attractive, and that a dissolution was often desired solely for the purpose of forming a new marital connection. With the design of providing conditions under which it would be understood that ardent passions of this character must perforce have time to cool before a new marriage relation could be actually formed, the Legislature, in 1897, enacted a law in effect providing that no marriage should be entered into by any divorced person until at least one year had elapsed after the decree of divorce was rendered. St. 1897, p. 34, c. 36. It had become customary to avoid the provisions of this act by the expedient of going to an adjacent state for the purpose of entering into a new marital relation. This court was compelled to hold that marriages contracted in another state were valid in this state, although they were entered into within less than a year after a divorce had been granted in this state to one of the parties. Estate of Wood, 137 Cal. 129, 69 Pac. 900. The purpose of the amendment of 1903 was to carry into effect the object attempted to be attained by the statute in 1897. To do this the expedient was adopted of delaying the final judgment in divorce cases for the period of one year after it was judicially ascertained that a divorce should be granted. By thus making the right to a divorce ineffective for the period of one year, it became impossible for the parties to contract a valid new marriage anywhere until at least a year after the trial of the action of divorce had taken place. Except so far as was necessary to accomplish this object, it was not the intent of the statute to change in any respect the practice and procedure in actions for divorce. We do not doubt that the court has the same power now that it has always had to try and determine the issues between the parties in a divorce action with respect to property and custody of children, and that this may, and generally should, be done at the same time as the issues with respect to the cause for divorce are tried and determined. Unquestionably the court would have power under the present law, as it always has had the power under previous laws, to postpone the trial and decision of the property rights and custody of the children to any reasonable time after the rendition of the judgment of divorce, whether interlocutory or final. The amendment has not changed its power in this respect. It is proper in all actions for divorce to try the entire action at the same time as the issues respecting divorce are tried and to give an interlocutory judgment declaring the rights of the parties with respect to property and children.

We commend the action of the court below in this case in declaring, in its interlocutory decree concerning the property, that the rights therein specified should become final at the time the decree of divorce became final. We are not called upon here to determine whether the adjudication of property rights would or would not have been final at the expiration of six months from the time of the entry of the interlocutory decree, if no appeal had been taken, and the parties had, before the expiration of one year and after the expiration of the six months, by mutual consent, procured an order from the court annulling the interlocutory decree of divorce; or whether such annulment would have had the effect of setting aside the decree relating to property rights and children. These questions are not involved in this case, and it will be well to leave them for future disposition in some case where they are directly presented. In the present case the court determined all the issues in one trial and rendered an interlocutory judgment declaring the rights of the parties upon all the issues, and providing that the same should in all respects become final only at the time when the decree of divorce became final, in the meantime allowing temporary alimony. We see no objection to this practice and commend it as not only within the power of the court, but as a proper method of the exercise of that power.

The judgment as to the amount and value of the community property and as to the disposition thereof between the parties is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial and judgment upon that issue alone. In all other particulars the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Since the filing of the opinion in this case, the plaintiff has asked that, instead of remanding the case for a new trial of the issues as to the property, the judgment be modified in regard thereto, and has filed a written consent that the defendant be allowed, as part of his separate estate, out of the cash on hand, interest at the rate of 7 per cent. on the $15,500 found to be the capital invested in his business. This removes the objection to directing a modification of the judgment. The defendant introduced no evidence to show that the capital invested was entitled to a greater return than legal interest, and, in the absence of such evidence, the burden of proof being upon him, that would be the utmost he could claim. The wife would have been entitled to an opportunity to prove, if she could, that it earned a smaller proportion of the profits than legal interest, and, she being the respondent, it was for that reason considered necessary to order a new trial for that purpose. Her consent aforesaid avoids this necessity and leaves the case in such condition that a modification of the judgment will end the litigation with justice to both parties. Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. Min. Co., 122 Cal. 221, 54 Pac. 731.

Interest at 7 per cent, on the $15,500 from April 19, 1900, the date of the marriage, to November 3, 1905, the time of the trial, amounts to $6,012.70. Deducting this from $12,139.03, found to be the cash on hand at the time of the trial, leaves $6,126.33, as the part of the cash belonging to the community. The plaintiff's three-fifths of this is $3,675.86, and the defendant's two-fifths is $2,450.47.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified by changing the respective statements of the shares of each in the cash on hand therein, so that the part relating to the plaintiff's share shall read as follows: "Second. The sum of three thousand six hundred and seventy-five and 86-100 dollars ($3,675.86), in cash, being three-fifths of the sum of $6,126.33 in cash found by the Supreme Court to be community property of the plaintiff and defendant; and that no interest in defendant's separate property be awarded to plaintiff." And so that the part relating to the defendant's share shall read as follows: "Second. The sum of two thousand four hundred and fifty and 47-100 dollars ($2,450.47), in cash, being two-fifths of the sum found to be community property as aforesaid." And that as so modified the judgment stand affirmed; the plaintiff to recover all costs.

(156 Cal. 93)

LEWIS et al. v. CURRY, Secretary of State, et al. (S. F. 5,200.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1909.)

1. LICENSES (§ 19*)—TAX ON CORPORATION FOR PECUNIARY PROFIT.

A corporation is one for pecuniary profit, and so not within St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19, § 7, exempting certain corporations from license tax on corporations; it being formed, on the death of one of the partners of a firm possessing vast properties, to take over the properties, issuing shares of its stock to the owners, to dispose of it as soon as could be done without loss, and divide the proceeds among the stockholders, and, in the meantime, in order to preserve its value, to carry on the business and make annual dividends to the stockholders of the net profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. LICENSES (§ 32*)—LICENSE TAX—PAYMENT.

Though a foreign corporation was formed to acquire all the property of a California corporation and generally to take the place of the latter in the affairs for which it was organized, and did so, its payment of its license tax under St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19, for the privilege of doing business in the state, was not a discharge of the license tax on the state corporation, which is not imposed alone for the doing of business, but a condition for the corporate privilege and authority to do business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 599*)—LICENSE TAX—FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—PROCLAMATION.

Under St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19, providing that, where the Secretary of State shall have reported a list of all the corporations which are delinquent in payment of the license tax, the Governor shall issue a proclamation declaring that the charters of such delinquent domestic corporations and the right of such foreign corporations to do business in the state will be forfeited unless payment be made before a certain day, the proclamation, giving a list of the names of the corporations, is sufficient without specifying which are domestic and which foreign.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 599.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 599*)—FORFEITURE OF CHARTER—PROCLAMATION AND PUBLICATION.

St. 1906, p. 23, c. 19, § 3, requiring the Governor "forthwith" on the filing, on or before September 15th, of the list of corporations delinquent in payment of their license tax, to issue a proclamation that the charters of such domestic corporations and the right of such foreign corporations will be forfeited unless the tax be paid on or before November 30th, and section 4, requiring that the proclamation shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State "immediately," and the Secretary shall cause it to be "immediately" published in two daily newspapers of the state, is satisfied as to dispatch by the proclamation being issued September 18th and published September 21st.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 599.*]

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"FORTHWITH" AND "IMMEDIATELY."

There is no precise definition, so far as time is concerned, of the words "forthwith" and "immediately"; but the meaning depends on the circumstances of the case and the act to be performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2916-2925; vol. 8, p. 7665; vol. 4, pp. 3403-3410.]

In Bank. Application by Azro N. Lewis and another, as trustees, and by the former individually, for writ of mandate to be directed to Charles F. Curry, Secretary of State, and another. Denied, and writ discharged.

Charles S. Wheeler, for petitioners. Jos. Slye (Chas. W. Kitts, of counsel), for intervenor. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., R. C. Van Fleet, and Edward F. Treadwell, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The respondent, Miller & Lux, was duly and regularly incorporated under the laws of California in the year 1897. It did not pay to the state of California the state license tax for the year 1907, which the law requires to be paid annually by corporations organized under the laws of this state. The petitioners are stockholders of said corporation and, as such, on behalf of said corporation, they tendered to the Secretary of State the amount due the state on account of such tax for the year ending June 30, 1909. The Secretary refused to receive the money on the ground that the corporation had forfeited its charter by its failure to pay the tax for the year 1907. The present proceeding is an application to this court for a writ of mandate to compel the Secretary of State to receive such license tax, either from said corporation, or from the petitioners as stockholders thereof.

An answer was filed on behalf of the respondent Miller & Lux. It alleges: That the managing officers of said corporation refused to pay the state license tax of said corporation which became due on July 1, 1907, intending thereby to cause a forfeiture of its corporate charter and the dissolution of the corporation; that thereupon, as the law provides, the Secretary of State reported said failure to the Governor, who, on September 18, 1907, duly issued his proclamation that said corporate charter would be forfeited, unless such tax were paid on or before November 30, 1907; that the tax was not paid; that, consequently, said charter became forfeited, whereupon the directors of the corporation took charge of its property as trustees, under the authority given by section 400 of the Civil Code; and that they are proceeding with the settlement of its affairs. The answer purports to be filed by said trustees of the corporation, as a dissolved corporation. The Secretary of State has submitted the case upon a general demurrer to the petition. Melissa A. Potter, a stockholder of the Miller & Lux corporation, has intervened and filed an answer giving a full history of the corporation and of the facts leading to its dissolution, and praying that the writ be denied. The facts are all admitted.

The statute expressly provides for the forfeiture of the charters of all domestic corporations at 4 o'clock p. m. on November 30th of each year, in all cases where there has been a failure to pay the annual charges required by law and a due report of delinquents and proclamation thereof by the Governor, and it further provides that it shall be unlawful for any such corporation thereafter to do any corporate business. St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19, § 5. It is conceded that if this law is valid, self-executing, and applicable to the Miller & Lux corporation, then the Secretary of State has no authority and is under no obligation to receive further state license taxes from or on account of that corporation, that his refusal to accept the tax was justifiable, and that the writ of mandate should not issue.

A number of objections are raised to the validity of the law. We presume it will be admitted that, if it is wholly invalid, no tax became due, and the secretary could not be compelled to receive for the state that which is not due. Admitting its validity, so far as it imposes an annual tax or charge, counsel for petitioners advance various reasons against the validity and effect of the provision declaring the forfeiture of the charters of delinquent corporations, and against its application to the particular corporation, Miller & Lux. The case of Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Charles F. Curry, Secretary of State (S. F. No. 5,146) 103 Pac. 341, was pending before this court at the time the present case was submitted. It involved, with three exceptions, the same questions as are here presented. In the consideration of that case the briefs and arguments in this case were used. The points raised there are fully stated and treated in the opinion filed in that case, and the petitioners' contentions, so far as they are identical with those made here, are declared to be untenable. We refer to that opinion for a full statement and disposition of those questions. We will consider here only the questions peculiar to this case.

1. It is claimed that Miller & Lux is not a corporation for pecuniary profit, and hence that it is not subject to the operation of the law. Section 7 of the statute declares that: "All educational, religious, scientific and charitable corporations, and all corporations which are not organized for pecuniary profit, are exempt from the provisions of this act." The following facts show the purpose, object, and powers of said corporation. There was formerly a partnership between Henry Miller and Charles Lux, known as "Miller & Lux." It possessed vast properties in California and other states. Lux died, and his estate, including his interests in said firm, was ready for distribution by the probate court. The distributees were numerous, and the property of the firm was of such character and its business so large and complicated that it was believed that it would cause serious pecuniary loss and injury to all interested parties, and that it would be impracticable, also, to undertake to carry it on by so many persons as partners, and that it would involve a great sacrifice of its actual value to attempt to sell the property and distribute the proceeds, either in the administration proceedings then pending, or in a subsequent action for partition. To meet this condition the plan was conceived of forming a corporation, conveying and transferring to it all the property of said firm and dividing the corporation stock among the distributees and the surviving partners in proportion to their interests in the firm and in the estate of Lux. The respondent corporation was formed accordingly, under the name of "Miller & Lux," and the plan was carried out in all details. Its articles gave it power to acquire the property of said firm, to dispose of the same as soon as it could be done without loss, to divide the proceeds among the stockholders, and, in the meantime, in order to preserve the value of the property, to carry on the business formerly conducted by the said firm, and in the same manner, and divide the net profits of the business among the stockholders annually as dividends. See Baldwin v. Miller & Lux, 152 Cal. 454, 92 Pac. 1030. We have no doubt that this was as much a corporation for pecuniary profit, in contemplation of law, as if its sole object had been to carry on the business and distribute the earnings as dividends. The fact that it was to take and hold the property as trustee and sell the same and distribute the proceeds among the former owners does not make it any the less a corporation for pecuniary profit. The main object of the entire scheme which led to its organization was to promote, preserve, and protect the property interests of its stockholders, by preventing the sacrifice thereof which the ordinary processes of law would entail. Its purpose and object was wholly of a pecuniary nature, and its powers were designed to either increase the property interests of its stockholders, or to prevent depreciation thereof. It would be immaterial, where such is the case, whether the corporation was required by its articles to declare direct dividends or not. A mere holding corporation which its stockholders formed because they believed it to be for their pecuniary advantage to do so and with that object in view, would be, in the sense of the law, a corporation organized for pecuniary profit.

2. It is claimed that the tax had been in fact paid, and hence that there could be no legal forfeiture. This point involves some facts not heretofore stated. In 1905, in pursuance of an agreement made between the holders of more than two-thirds of the stock of the corporation, "Miller & Lux," said corporation being also a party thereto, another corporation was formed under the laws of the state of Nevada, under the name and style of "Miller & Lux, Incorporated." This corporation was formed, as its articles declare, for the purpose of acquiring all the property and assets of the California corporation, "Miller & Lux," carrying on all the business and performing all the functions, duties, and obligations of that corporation, and generally to take its place in the affairs for which it was organized. The California corporation immediately afterwards assigned, conveyed, and transferred all its property and assets to "Miller & Lux, Incorporated," and ceased thereafter to do business as a corporation; the business and purposes which it was organized to do and perform being thenceforward done and performed by "Miller & Lux, Incorporated." The Nevada corporation did this business chiefly in this state, and it has regularly every year paid the license tax required of foreign corporations doing business in this state, by the statute under consideration; the amount being the same as in the case of California corporations having the same authorized capital stock. Its authorized capital stock was the same as that of the California "Miller & Lux" corporation. The argument that this payment by the Nevada corporation excuses the California corporation from paying the charge imposed by the statute as a condition for its continued corporate existence, or that it operates as a payment or satisfaction of the demand in favor of the state upon the California corporation for such tax, appears to us to be without force. It is based chiefly on the theory: That the tax is imposed upon California corporations in consideration of the actual transaction of business; that there should be, and was intended to be, but one tax upon the right to do or the doing of the same business; that, as the Nevada corporation has transacted all the business and the California corporation none, the payment by the Nevada corporation for the privilege of doing it, or for the transaction of it, completely satisfies the law and discharges both obligations. This argument is completely refuted by the conclusion reached in Kaiser, etc., Co. v. Curry, supra, that the charge is imposed not alone for the doing of business, but as a condition for the corporate privilege and authority to do business, and that it must be paid by a California corporation as a condition of continued corporate existence, regardless of whether any business is done by such corporation or not. There is no double tax. The Nevada corporation is charged as a condition of its right to do business here; the California corporation as a condition of its right to continue its corporate existence here or elsewhere.

3. It is also contended that the Governor's proclamation and the subsequent publication thereof were defective and ineffectual. The statute provides that when the Secretary of State, on or before September 15th, shall have reported to the Governor a list of all corporations which are delinquent in the payment of the tax, "the Governor shall forthwith issue his proclamation declaring under this act that the charters of such delinquent domestic corporations will be forfeited and the right of such foreign corporations to do business in this state will be forfeited unless payment of such license tax" be made on or before 4 o'clock p. m. of the following 30th day of November. We are not advised as to the date of the making of the report to the Governor by the Secretary of State in the year 1907; but, as the 15th of September of that year was Sunday, we may presume that it was made either on the Saturday preceding or the Monday following that date. The Governor's proclamation was issued on September 18, 1907. It recited the report of the list of delinquent corporations by the Secretary of State, named a large number of corporations as those so reported, and then proclaimed that, unless the payment was made within the time allowed by law, the "charters of domestic corporations of this state above mentioned will be forfeited, and the right of foreign corporations above mentioned to do business in this state will be forfeited." There was nothing in the proclamation to show which of the corporations named in the proclamation were domestic and which were foreign, except that after stating in the list a number of corporations, the subheading "Foreign. A-Z" occurs, followed by a number of additional names of corporations. There is nothing in the act which requires that the proclamation shall distinguish between domestic and foreign corporations. It is possible that there may be corporations of another state having the same name as corporations of this state. In such a case a stockholder could not know with certainty, from the proclamation alone, whether the named corporation was the one in which he was interested or not; but he would have no difficulty in ascertaining the truth, if he was sufficiently interested to inquire. The contingency is not of such frequent occurrence as to make it of great importance, or to require us to hold such proclamation void unless it gives a more particular description of the respective corporations than that given by their true corporate name. Such designation is sufficient in any ordinary legal document, and even in proceedings in invitum for the levy and collection of taxes. We see no substantial reason for greater certainty here.

It is also claimed that the proceedings were not carried on with sufficient dispatch. Section 3, above quoted, requires the Governor to issue the proclamation "forthwith," upon receiving the Secretary's report. Section 4 requires that the proclamation shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State "immediately," and that the Secretary shall "immediately" cause it to be published in two daily newspapers of the state. The publications of the proclamation were made on September 21st in newspapers in Oakland and Los Angeles. In our opinion the proceeding was sufficiently expeditious. There is no precise definition, so far as time is concerned, of the words "forthwith" and "immediately." In every case the meaning depends upon the circumstances of the case and the act to be performed. The law in question manifestly contemplates a speedy performance of the respective acts up to the publication of the proclamation, and any considerable delay therein might prevent an effectual forfeiture; but here there were, at most, but two business days between the date of the report and the date of the issuance of the proclamation and a like period thereafter before the ensuing publication. The Governor presumably has many duties to perform, and a delay for that space of time could not be said to be unreasonable. As to the publication, it being necessary to make it in two newspapers of the state, and it being a reasonable interpretation of the act to allow the publication in different parts of the state, some time must necessarily elapse between the time of the filing of the proclamation with the Secretary of State and the time of the issuing of the first publication thereof. A period of three days for this purpose indicates that the business was done with reasonable speed. See Anderson v. Goff, 72 Cal. 73, 13 Pac. 73, 1 Am. St. Rep. 34.

These comprise all the points urged by the argument, except those already considered in Kaiser, etc., Co. v. Curry, supra.

The petition for a writ of mandate is denied, and the writ discharged.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

156 Cal. 101

LEWIS et al. v. MILLER & LUX et al.
(S. F. 5,201.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 7, 1909.)

CORPORATIONS (§ 617*)—DISSOLUTION—REISSUE OF STOCK.

A corporation having forfeited its charter and become dissolved, and its directors having thereupon, as directed by Civ. Code, § 400, taken charge of its affairs as trustees for purpose of settlement, it or they cannot be allowed or required to perform functions of a corporation or directors by reissuing stock in the name of one to whom it has been transferred by a stockholder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 617.*]

In Bank. Application by Axro N. Lewis and another, as trustees, for writ of mandate to Miller & Lux and others. Denied, and writ discharged.

Charles S. Wheeler, for petitioners. Edward F. Treadwell, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is a petition by certain persons claiming to be stockholders of a corporation known by the name of "Miller & Lux," organized under the laws of California, against the said corporation and its alleged directors, to obtain a writ of mandate from this court directing the corporation to reissue to the petitioners a certificate of stock of said corporation. The parties are the same as those mentioned in the case of Lewis v. Curry (S. F. No. 5,200, in which the opinion is this day filed) 103 Pac. 493. The stock was originally issued by said corporation in the name of one George W. Lewis, who had assigned the same to the petitioners. They tendered the certificate so assigned and asked that the said stock be reissued in their name as trustees. The respondents refused to reissue the said stock upon the ground that the said corporation has forfeited its charter and has ceased to exist.

The facts involved in the case concerning the existence of the corporation are precisely the same as those involved in the case of Lewis v. Curry, supra, and the two cases were submitted together. It is clear from what has been said in the opinion in the other case that the corporation, "Miller & Lux," has forfeited its charter by reason of its failure to pay the state license tax due for the year 1907. The directors of the corporation having taken charge of its affairs as trustees as provided in section 400 of the Civil Code, and the corporation having ceased to exist, neither the corporation itself nor its directors can be compelled to continue to do business by reissuing stock transferred from one of its stockholders to another person. The holders of such stock by assignment, of course, have a right to participate in the division of the corporate assets by virtue of such ownership; but the machinery of the corporation has been superseded by that of the trustees in liquidation, and they cannot be allowed or required to perform further functions in their capacity as a corporation or as directors thereof.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The petition is denied, and the writ discharged.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

---

10 Cal. App. 734

RABIN et al. v. PIERCE, Justice of the Peace.
(Civ. 706.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 25, 1909.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 162*)—APPEAL—EFFECT.

An appeal from a justice's judgment on questions of both law and fact vacates the judgment and transfers the entire record to the superior court, as though the action had been originally brought there.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 603; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 190*) — JUDGMENT—APPEAL—JUDGMENT OF APPELLATE COURT—EXECUTION.

The judgment of the superior court on an appeal from a justice of the peace on the law and the facts is executed in the same manner as if the action had been originally brought in the superior court; there being no remission to the justice's court for any purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 734; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 166*)—APPEAL—DISMISSAL—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 980, giving a superior court power to dismiss an appeal for failure to prosecute the same, applies only to a failure to perfect the appeal, and does not authorize dismissal for appellant's failure to prosecute the perfected appeal with diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 640; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 166*)—APPEALS—DUTY TO PROSECUTE.

Where an appeal is taken by a defendant from a justice's judgment on questions of both law and fact, the plaintiff is the actor in the superior court, and he and not the defendant is bound to prosecute the action to a final determination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

5. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 196*)—CERTIORARI—SCOPE OF WRIT—RECALLING EXECUTION.

Since certiorari can only issue where an inferior tribunal, board, or officer is exercising judicial functions in excess of jurisdiction, it does not apply to review the ministerial act of a justice of the peace in issuing an execution on a judgment originally entered by him from which an appeal had been taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 763-765; Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

Petition by E. Rabin and another for a writ of review against H. A. Pierce, Justice of the Peace for Los Angeles Township. Petition denied.

Hanson, Hackler & Heath, for petitioners.

PER CURIAM. It is made to appear by the verified petition in this case that a judgment was regularly entered by the respondent justice against petitioners, in March, 1907; that within due time an appeal was perfected to the superior court of Los Angeles county, and the papers transmitted thereto, and said cause placed upon the calendar of said court; that afterwards, on the 27th of May, 1909, plaintiff moved the superior court to dismiss the appeal, assigning as a reason therefor that the same had not been prosecuted by appellant with reasonable diligence. On the 29th of May, the defendants, petitioners herein, moved to dismiss the action, for the reason that plaintiff had failed for a period of two years after said cause had been appealed to the superior court, and after the cause had been at issue, to bring said action to trial. Upon the hearing of these motions, the superior court denied the motion to dismiss the action, but entered an order granting the motion to dismiss the appeal, and instructed the clerk to send the files back to the justice's court. The justice, respondent herein, assuming authority by virtue of this last-mentioned order, issued an execution out of the judgment originally entered by him, and from which the appeal was taken, and the same is in the hands of a constable of the township, and the constable is seeking, by levy, to enforce the same. Petitioners ask this court for an order directing the justice to send up all papers in the cause before him, and that this court review the action of the justice, and command the justice to desist from any further proceedings in said action and to recall the execution issued.

The appeal in this case having been one upon questions of both law and fact, when the same was perfected, the judgment of the justice was vacated and set aside, and the cause was transferred, with the entire record, to the superior court, to the same effect as if the action had originally been brought therein. The judgment of the superior court upon such an appeal is executed just as if the action had originally been brought therein, and is not remitted to the justice's court for any purpose. Bullard v. McArdle, 98 Cal. 355, 33 Pac. 193, 35 Am. St. Rep. 176. Section 980 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which confers upon the superior court power to dismiss an appeal, with costs, or costs and penalty, for a failure to prosecute the same, has been by the Supreme Court of this state, in the case of Alexander v. Municipal Court of Appeals (Cal.) 4 Pac. 961, held to apply only to cases wherein there was a failure technically to perfect the appeal. There is no warrant for the superior court to dismiss an appeal, after the same is once fully perfected, upon the motion of the plaintiff, because the appellant has failed to prosecute the appeal with diligence. The authority last cited determines the proposition that, where the appeal is upon questions of both law and fact, the plaintiff is the actor in the superior court, and that it is his duty to cause the prosecution of the action to a final determination, and no duty in that regard devolves upon a defendant, who is the appellant, notwithstanding he is invoking the jurisdiction of the appellate court.

It is unnecessary for us upon this application to determine whether the order of the superior court dismissing the appeal was without jurisdiction, as held in Carlson v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 628, 11 Pac. 778; Hall v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 24, 8 Pac. 509, and other cases, or within its jurisdiction, but erroneous, as held in Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 120, 31 Pac. 8. Under either view, this application must be denied. The only act of the justice of the peace complained of, or subject to complaint, as affecting the respondent, relates to the issuance of the execution out of the judgment originally entered by him and from which the appeal was taken. The issuance of an execution by such justice is a ministerial act only. Hamilton v. Tutt, 65 Cal. 57, 2 Pac. 878; Town of Hayward v. Pimental, 107 Cal. 390, 40 Pac. 545. The writ sought can only issue where it is shown that an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded its or their jurisdiction. The character of the act, and not that of the tribunal, is the proper subject of inquiry. If petitioners have any relief in the premises, it is not that of certiorari; and, whatever may be the effect of the action of the superior court, this application must be denied.

Application denied.

---

156 Cal. 119

In re MILLER'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,378.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 11, 1909.)

WILLS (§ 651*) — LEGACIES — FORFEITURE BY CONTEST—PUBLIC POLICY.

A provision that any legatee contesting the will should forfeit her legacy, which should pass to the others under the will, was not contrary to public policy; and hence the widow, having unsuccessfully contested the will, forfeited her legacy, though she had reasonable cause for such contest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1542; Dec. Dig. § 651.*]

---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Judicial settlement of the estate of R. R. Miller, deceased. From a decree of final distribution, Delia F. Miller appeals. Affirmed.

Walter M. Campbell, for appellant. T. R. Archer and Gregg & Surr, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by Delia F. Miller from so much of the decree of final distribution in the matter of the estate of deceased as denies her the right to receive a bequest of $1,500, given her by the terms of his last will. The will of deceased, executed the day before his death, disposed of his estate, which was apparently his separate property, as follows:

"I give and bequeath to my wife, Mrs. Delia F. Miller, the sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars.

"Second. I give, bequeath and devise to my adopted daughter, Mrs. Florence M. Stevenson, of Los Angeles, Cal., all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, both personal and real property and wherever situated.

"Third. I further provide that, in case any devisee or legatee under this will make any contest of this will, then the share herein provided for any such legatee or devisee shall not be paid, but the same shall be forfeited and passed to the others under this will."

When the will was offered for probate, said Delia F. Miller instituted a contest thereto on the grounds of incompetency to make a will and undue influence alleged to have been exercised by Florence M. Stevenson. An answer to her opposition to the probate was filed, and the issues made were tried by the court; a jury having been waived. The court found against the allegations of Mrs. Miller, and admitted the will to probate. No appeal was ever taken from the judgment of the court in the matter of the contest, and such judgment became final prior to the application for distribution. When the estate was ready for distribution, Florence M. Stevenson presented her petition, asking that the whole of said estate be distributed to her, claiming that by reason of the contest of the will made by Mrs. Miller the latter had forfeited all rights under the same and that she had become entitled to receive Mrs. Miller's share as well as her own. Mrs. Miller also filed her petition, alleging that she had made the contest believing and having good reason to believe that the will was invalid on the grounds stated in her opposition. The trial court found that at the time of the contest there was probable cause for the same on the ground of undue influence, but no probable cause for a contest on the ground of incompetency. It concluded that by reason of the contest Mrs. Miller had forfeited the legacy of $1,500 given her by the will, and distributed all of the estate to Florence M. Stevenson, the other beneficiary under the will.

The contest provision of the will is clear and unambiguous in its terms, and it cannot be disputed that Mrs. Miller, by reason of the facts hereinbefore set forth, has lost her right to receive the legacy given her by the will, if such provision is valid and is to be enforced according to its terms. The question of the validity of a condition against contests contained in a will is not now an open one in this state. In the recent case of Estate of Hite (S. F. No. 5,046) 101 Pac. 443, this question was presented, and the court held, following the principles enunciated in the Matter of Garcelon's Estate, 104 Cal. 570, 590, 38 Pac. 414, 32 L. R. A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134, that such a condition is not against public policy. This ruling was in accord with what is now the universally accepted doctrine. If it be not against public policy, we know of no reason why it must not be enforced according to its terms. A testator has the lawful right to dispose of his property upon whatever condition he desires, as long as the condition is not prohibited by some law or opposed to public policy, such as conditions in restraint of marriage or of lawful trade, "and when a testator declares in his will that his several bequests are made upon the condition that the legatees acquiesce in the provisions of his will, the courts rightly hold that no legatee shall without compliance with that condition receive his bounty, or be put in a position to use it in the effort to thwart his expressed purpose." Smithsonian Institution v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 415, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 42 L. Ed. 793.

Appellant's principal contention is that there was no forfeiture in this case for the reason that she had probable ground for contest. A similar question was presented by the briefs in Estate of Hite, supra, but was there dismissed by the court without discussion. No such exception is stated in the contest provision contained in the will, and we know of no principle that authorizes us to declare it. To so do would be to substitute our own views for a clearly expressed intent of the testator to the contrary. We are aware that some text-writers have expressed views tending to support appellant's contention in this behalf, and that it is the rule adopted in Pennsylvania (see Estate of Friend, 209 Pa. 442, 58 Atl. 853, 68 L. R. A. 447); but we cannot perceive any proper basis upon which to rest such a conclusion. Like the doctrine accepted in many decisions to the effect that no forfeiture of the legacy results under such a provision when there is no gift over of the legacy in the event of a contest, although a forfeiture of land devised will result under such circumstances without a specific devise over, a doctrine repudiated by us in Estate of Hite, supra, it is a mere attempt at an artificial distinction to avoid the force of a plain and unambiguous condition against contests. See Hoit v. Hoit, 42 N. J. Eq. 388, 7 Atl. 856, 59 Am. Rep. 43. See, also, Bradford v. Bradford, 19 Ohio St. 546, 2 Am. Rep. 419. This point was expressly made in the Matter of Garcelon, supra, and was disposed of in the opinion by a statement to the effect that the views set forth were really conclusive of every question discussed by counsel. This, we think, was necessarily so. If the forfeiture provision as plainly and unambiguously written is not against public policy, it must be enforced as written.

The portion of the decree of distribution appealed from must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J

156 Cal. 123

ROUGHTON v. KNIGHT. (L. A. 2,264.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 11, 1909.)

PUBLIC LANDS (§ 49*)—FOREST LIEU ACT—REPEAL—EFFECT.

Act Cong. March 3, 1905, c. 1495, 33 Stat. 1264 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 499), repealed the "Forest Lieu Act" (Act Cong. June 4, 1897, c. 2, § 1, 30 Stat. 34 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1541]), but provided that contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Interior prior to the passage of the act should not be impaired, and that lieu selections might be perfected and patents issued as though the repealing act had not been passed, etc. Held, that where complainant, owning a patent to forest reserve land in June, 1899, recorded a deed of his property to the United States pursuant to the forest lieu act and the regulations of the Interior Department, and on June 19th such deed and an abstract showing perfect title in the grantor were filed in the United States land office and forwarded and received by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on June 25, 1899, where they remained, without action or objection, until January 3, 1905, when they were returned to complainant, who made no application to select lieu land until after the repealing act took effect, the Commissioner of the General Land Office was then under no obligation to accept complainant's conveyance, since no contract of exchange could arise under the forest lieu act until a selection of lieu land was made and the conveyance of the base tract filed in the land department.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by T. L. Roughton against Harry L. Knight. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hannah & Miller and Rowen Irwin, for appellant. Maurice E. Power, amicus curiæ. Geo. E. Whitaker, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. According to the allegations of his complaint, appellant owned 160 acres within a forest reservation. Desiring to exchange it for vacant public land of like extent belonging to the United States, he sought to avail himself of the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1897, commonly known as the "Forest Lieu Act." Act June 4, 1897, c. 2, § 1, 30 Stat. 34 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1541). This act, so far as it pertains to the case here discussed, is as follows: "That in cases in which a tract covered by a patent is included within the limits of a public forest reservation * * * the owner thereof may, if he desires to do so, relinquish the tract to the government, and may select in lieu thereof a tract of vacant land open to settlement not exceeding in area the tract covered by his * * * patent; and no charge shall be made in such cases for making the entry of record or issuing the patent to cover the tract selected. * * *"

After the passage of the forest lieu act the Secretary of the Interior promulgated a regulation by which the person contemplating an exchange under the terms of said statute was required to execute a quitclaim deed of his property within the forest reservation to the United States, to record said deed, and to furnish an abstract showing a chain of title from the government back again to the United States. It is averred in the complaint that on June 10, 1899, appellant recorded a deed of his property made in pursuance of the forest lieu act and the regulation of the Interior Department to which reference has just been made; that on June 19, 1899, said deed and an abstract showing perfect title in the grantor were filed in the United States land office at Visalia; that these documents were duly forwarded and received by the Commissioner of the General Land Office about June 25, 1899; that they were held in the Commissioner's office until January 3, 1905, when they were returned to appellant; but that during the time of the retention of the deed and abstract no objection was made by the Commissioner or any one else to their form or sufficiency. The complaint contains the further averment that on March 14, 1905, appellant filed in the land office at Visalia his application in writing whereby he sought to select the land with reference to which this litigation is conducted; that this application was accompanied by the deed and abstract of title above mentioned; but that nevertheless the United States of America, disregarding appellant's rights, on or about November 15, 1907, issued and delivered its patent conveying to respondent the legal title to the land thus chosen by appellant in lieu of his property in the forest reservation. There is also a statement in the complaint that defendant at all times had full notice and knowledge of all things therein set forth. It is further asserted that the legal title to the property in question is held in trust by respondent for appellant, and the prayer is for a decree requiring conveyance to appellant of said title. To this complaint a demurrer was offered. It was sustained, and, plaintiff refusing to amend, judgment went accordingly. From said judgment, plaintiff appeals.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

On March 3, 1905, Congress repealed that portion of the act of June 4, 1897, applicable to the exchange of lands within for public lands outside of forest reservations. This repealing act is in part as follows: "But the validity of contracts entered into by the Secretary of the Interior prior to the passage of this Act shall not be impaired: Provided, that selections heretofore made in lieu of lands relinquished to the United States may be perfected and patents issue therefor the same as though this act had not been passed, and if for any reason not the fault of the party making the same any pending selection is held invalid another selection for a like quantity of land may be made in lieu thereof." Act March 3, 1905, c. 1495, 33 Stat. 1264 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 499). It is admitted that plaintiff was not within the exceptions contained in the repealing act, because he had no pending selection, nor did he have any written contract with the Secretary of the Interior; but appellant is of the opinion that he obtained a vested right to make a selection of lieu lands as soon as he made and recorded his conveyance of his realty in the forest reservation according to law, and that this vested right could not be cut off by the subsequent repealing statute.

The very question here presented has been considered by the Secretary of the Interior in the case of Moses, L. S. & R. Co., 34 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 458. That case was one in its facts very similar to that here considered. The selector had complied with all the requirements of the act of June 4, 1897, but the selection of land in lieu of that which he had sought by deed to relinquish to the United States occurred after the adoption of the repealing act of March 3, 1905. His application was rejected solely because of the repeal by the last-mentioned statute of the act of June 4, 1897. In that case, as here, counsel asserted that the partial performance by the selector of the method of procedure prescribed under the forest lieu act entitled him to a completion of the transaction by the United States government, and that a refusal by the government to complete the exchange would be "tantamount to the repudiation by the United States of its own solemn agreement." In reply to this contention the Secretary of the Interior says, in part:

"The act of March 3, 1905, repeals, not merely the invitation to private owners to relinquish their lands, but all the other provisions looking to an exchange. An exchange is essentially a single contract. The rights in the things exchanged usually vest at the same point of time. Lessieur v. Price, 12 How. 59, 74, 13 L. Ed. 893. While the regulations under the act of June 4, 1897, require the private owner of such lands to record his deed and to prepare and file an abstract and deed at the time he makes his selection, it cannot be held that good equitable right to the land relinquished passes to the United States by record of the deed; for some officer of the United States must examine the title, pass upon its sufficiency, and accept it. Cosmos Company v. Gray Eagle Company, 190 U. S. 301, 312, 23 Sup. Ct. 692, 47 L. Ed. 1064. It is a general principle in the law of real estate that title does not pass until the deed is delivered to the grantee. Though acceptance of a title conveyed is, under some circumstances presumed from its being beneficial to the grantee, it will be seen from examination of such cases that there was a lapse of time, with an entry into possession by the grantee, or other evidence of circumstances raising a presumption of the grantee's acceptance of the conveyance. No case is cited, and none has been found by the department, where acceptance of a conveyance of title is presumed from mere filing of the conveyance for record by the grantor. If the grantee is bound to render an equivalent or consideration for the conveyance, it is manifest that to hold the grantee obligated to pay a consideration where he has not received the conveyance is unsound in principle as creating a contract which the grantee never actually considered or determined to enter into.

"The act of June 4, 1897, was a mere proposal for an exchange. No contract arises until a selection is made and the conveyance of the base tract is filed in the land department. Until it is so filed the United States can know nothing of it, and no officer authorized to act on part of the United States can determine whether such proposed exchange can be approved or not. There is not only no contract, but no existent facts from which a contract of exchange can arise. It all rests solely in the one mind of the private owner as something he merely contemplates doing, and there can be for that reason no concurrence of two minds, which is essential to the relation of contract. Under the act of June 4, 1897, it is the filing of the deed in the local land office and the selection of land in lieu of that relinquished which initiates the exchange. Until that time the exchange is not initiated, and is merely a purpose in the private owner's intent.

"A proposal may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance. That the act of March 3, 1905, was a withdrawal of the proposal of exchange hardly admits of question. Were it not so intended, the proviso was wholly unnecessary. If it was intended that selections might be made to satisfy all relinquishments of land made with intent in future to make selections, then it was unnecessary to permit the perfecting of incomplete selections actually made, or to permit reselections upon bases assigned in previous ones that failed without the selector's fault. The proviso necessarily implies that Congress intended to withdraw its general proposal of exchange, and to limit future selections to the specified excepted cases. Congress has plenary power over the subject of disposals of public lands, and the land department is without authority to dispose of public lands, unless granted it by Congress."

We think that the views here expressed are sound, and that they are conclusive of the question presented by the case at bar. If the United States government was not bound to convey the land selected by plaintiff, obviously no trust could arise in his favor which might be enforced against defendant, because any obligation upon the part of the latter would have to draw its force from the contract, if there were one, between the government and the selector; and it would be necessary, additionally, that defendant should have full knowledge of such agreement. There is nothing in the opinion of this court in Farnum v. Clarke, 148 Cal. 617, 84 Pac. 169, in conflict with this conclusion. In that case the question to be determined was whether or not a person desiring to dispose of his land under the forest lieu act could compel his agent, to whom he had intrusted the duty of selection and exchange, specifically to perform the contract. The significant language of the opinion in that case is as follows:

"When a locator under the act files his selection in compliance with the rules and regulations of the land department, and accompanies it with proof that the lands of which he makes selection are vacant and open to settlement, and these facts are true, the Commissioner of the General Land Office has no arbitrary right to reject the selection, but must approve it, and upon such approval the right of the selector to the land takes effect by relation as of the date of his original selection. Kern Oil Company v. Clarke, 30 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 550. When such an approval is had by the Commissioner, the locator becomes the full equitable owner in the land selected; but it by no means follows that until then he had acquired no interest or right in the land by virtue of his selection. On the contrary, we are satisfied that he did. He was possessed of the right under the act to acquire public land, had exercised that right to become the owner of the particular land on which he filed the selection, and had done all that was required by him to do under the act in order to obtain a perfect title. Under these circumstances, if he acquired nothing more, he acquired at least an inchoate equitable right, a right which was capable of being enlarged into a complete title by the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and was a right which the land department itself, in effect, recognizes may be sold and assigned after such selection is filed. Matter of Mallory, 31 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 213."

The language in that opinion has no application to such a problem as the one here presented, where Congress withdrew the land from exchange before an application had been made to set it apart. There is no theory by which the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to approve plaintiff's selection, if any existed, could be transferred to defendant; and unless defendant can be charged with responsibility for the omission of the Commissioner to perform such duty, if there was one, there can be no trust which defendant is bound to execute.

The demurrer was properly sustained, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

156 Cal. 135

LANE v. TANNER et al. (L. A. 2,253.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 13, 1909.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 11, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 574*)—ALTERNATIVE METHOD—CERTIFICATION OF TESTIMONY.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a-941c, as added by Laws 1907, p. 753, c. 410, providing a method whereby appeals may be taken without service of notice on opposing parties, the cause being transferred to the appellate court on the filing of notice with the clerk of the trial court, and providing that appeals taken by this method shall have the same force as those taken pursuant to sections 939-941, provided, however, that any question may be reviewed therein which could be reviewed on an appeal taken pursuant to section 939 and within 60 days of rendition of judgment, give no implied right to bring up the testimony in the transcript by merely having it certified; section 939 providing merely for the time within which certain appeals may be taken, the scheme for certification of the testimony being furnished elsewhere in the Code, and the fact that the right to appeal on the mere filing of the notice with the clerk does not give the right to so bring up the testimony, and relieve appellant of having either a statement or a bill of exceptions settled and certified, or a transcript approved, by the court, as provided in section 953a, as added by Laws 1907, p. 750, c. 408, if he would have the appellate court consider the testimony, as well as the judgment roll, being clearly indicated by the latter section, approved on the same day as sections 941a-941c, and with them forming a scheme or schemes of appeal, and therefore required to be read together, and pointing out two methods, neither of them the one in question, whereby one who desires to appeal or has appealed may have the testimony sent to the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2567; Dec. Dig. § 574.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 574*)—CERTIFICATION OF EVIDENCE.

Even if an implied right on one appealing by the alternative method there provided to bring up the testimony in the transcript by merely having the testimony certified were conferred by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a-941c, as added by Laws 1907, p. 753, c. 410, a certificate by the shorthand reporter would not be sufficient; the court or judge alone being empowered to make such a record authentic.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2567; Dec. Dig. § 574.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 388*)—FINDINGS OF FACT—NECESSITY.

Findings by the court on a defense are unnecessary; its judgment for defendants on another defense being correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 908; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of a bill of exceptions, the appellate court must conclude that the evidence justifies and sustains the findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2911; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

5. BANKRUPTCY (§ 149*)—PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY—ACTION BY TRUSTEE OF BANKRUPT PARTNER.

Five months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy of A., who was an equal partner with W., they gave a chattel mortgage to T. on goods of the partnership to secure the note of W. and wife. The note became due 38 days before the filing of such petition, and, not being paid, T., as authorized by the mortgage, 16 days later took possession of the property, the possession by the terms of the mortgage relating to its date, and after due advertisement and notice sold part of the property, applied enough of the proceeds on the mortgage to satisfy it, paid the balance to W., and returned to the partnership the property unsold. Held, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 5h, 30 Stat. 548 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3424), providing that if one, but not all, of the members of a partnership be adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, but the partner not adjudged bankrupt shall settle the partnership business, and account for the interest of the bankrupt partner, that, as lawful possession was taken of the property by T. before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the trustee in bankruptcy could not sue for the property or its equivalent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 229; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by H. P. Lane, trustee of the estate of Addie L. Allen, bankrupt, against Albert F. Tanner, George H. Gould, and Albert C. Williams. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ralph W. Schoonover, for appellant. G. H. Gould, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants. The plaintiff, as trustee for Addie L. Allen, a bankrupt, seeks recovery for the alleged fraudulent conversion of property belonging to the firm of A. C. Williams & Co., in which Mrs. Allen was a partner. The complaint contains averments to the effect that on April 22, 1905, while Addie L. Allen's petition in bankruptcy was pending before the federal court, the defendants unlawfully conspired to take certain personal property of A. C. Williams & Co., situated at the dairy of said firm, and by means of a sale thereof, to convert it to their own use and benefit, by applying it to the satisfaction of a pretended debt of defendant Williams, and thereby to hinder, delay, cheat, and defraud said Allen, her individual creditors, and the creditors of the firm of which she was a member, and to prevent her and these creditors from subjecting said property to their just claims. The answer, after traversing the material allegations of the complaint, set up by way of defense a certain chattel mortgage given by Williams and Allen in November, 1904, to secure the payment of a note in favor of Tanner, signed by Williams and his wife, and it is averred that on the 31st day of March, 1905, Tanner, in accordance with the terms of said mortgage lawfully took possession of the property described therein, advertised it for sale according to law, and that a portion of it was sold at public auction on the 22d day of April, 1905, to satisfy the said note. Another defense is urged, based upon a judgment dated May 13, 1905, in an action for an accounting brought by Allen against Williams, by which the court found that, in an accounting including all matters up to May 1, 1905, Allen was indebted to Williams in the sum of $561.07. "This judgment is pleaded by way of estoppel of plaintiff's claim for any sum due from defendants, or any one of them, to plaintiff's bankrupt. According to the averments of the complaint, Mrs. Allen's petition in bankruptcy was filed on April 12, 1905, she was adjudged a bankrupt on December 5, 1905, and the appellant herein was subsequently selected as sole trustee of her estate. It will be seen that the date upon which Tanner received the property, according to the allegations of the answer, was before the filing of Mrs. Allen's petition in bankruptcy, but that the sale mentioned in both pleadings occurred after the petition had been presented to the United States District Court.

Respondents call our attention to the fact that, although the transcript contains a large number of pages of purported testimony certified by the court reporter, there is no properly authenticated bill of exceptions. Appellant freely admits that he has neither prepared a bill of exceptions nor has he given the notice prescribed by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor observed any of the other requirements of that section. The contention in this behalf is that, although no express method of bringing up the record is provided by sections 941a, 941b, and 941c of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added by Laws 1907, p. 753, c. 410, there is an implied power derived from the provisions of those sections to bring up the testimony as appellant has sought to do here.

This position is wholly untenable. The sections just mentioned provide a method whereby appeals may be taken without the necessity of service of notice upon opposing parties or attorneys. When such notice is filed, the cause is transferred to the appellate court without any further action on the part of appellant. It is provided that appeals taken by this method shall have the same force as those taken pursuant to the provisions of sections 939, 940, and 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "provided, however, that any question may be reviewed therein which question could be reviewed upon an appeal taken pursuant to the provisions of section 939 of this Code and within 60 days of the rendition of judgment." But section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the time within which certain appeals may be taken. It contains no scheme for certification of the testimony in the case. That is furnished elsewhere in the Code. If appellant's contention was correct, appeals might have been taken under section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure before the adoption of the new sections 941a, 941b, and 941c in 1907, and the testimony might have been considered without the necessity of a bill of exceptions or statement of the case; but the universal practice has been to follow those sections of the Code of Civil Procedure which provide for the due presentation, settlement, and authentication of such record of the testimony and proceedings. Even if the implied right for which appellant contends were conferred by the cited sections, the certificate of the shorthand reporter would not be sufficient. Nowhere is there provision for such certificate. The court or the judge alone is given power to make such a record authentic. But clearly the right to appeal from a judgment, order, or decree by the filing of appropriate notice with the clerk does not relieve appellant from the necessity of having either a statement or a bill of exceptions settled and certified, or having a transcript approved by the court as provided in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added by Laws 1907, p. 750, c. 408, if he would have the court to which the appeal is taken consider the testimony as well as the judgment roll. Section 953a itself indicates this when it points out two methods whereby one who desires to appeal or who has appealed from any judgment, order, or decree may have the testimony sent to the higher court. This section was approved on the same day as sections 941a, 941b, and 941c of the Code of Civil Procedure. They all form a part of a scheme, or rather schemes, of appeal, and are to be read together. We cannot consider the purported testimony, which was erroneously inserted in the transcript. Sutton v. Symons, 97 Cal. 475, 32 Pac. 588.

It is stipulated by counsel that the judgment roll is set forth on designated pages of the transcript and that it consists of "the pleadings, the orders made on demurrers, and copy of the findings, and a copy of the judgment herein, and that the judgment roll herein contains no other document than those above named." The findings and judgment are in accordance with the allegations of the answer, except that the court did not find with reference to the alleged estoppel of the judgment in Allen v. Williams. This was not necessary, if the judgment on the other causes of defense is correct; and we hold that it is. There are findings that on April 12, 1905, Addie L. Allen and A. C. Williams each owned an undivided one-half interest in a certain dairy in Santa Barbara county and in the assets of such business, subject to an accounting between the partners and payment of debts; that the averments of the complaint with reference to the bankruptcy proceedings and the appointment of appellant as trustee are true; and that the allegations of conversion are untrue. As there is no bill of exceptions, we are bound to conclude that the evidence justifies and sustains the findings. Mock v. City of Santa Rosa, 126 Cal. 340, 58 Pac. 826. Additionally the court found that on November 18, 1904, Williams and his wife made a note for $2,000, payable to defendant Tanner, or order, before March 15, 1905, and that said Williams and said Allen executed the chattel mortgage which was copied in the answer; that the note was not paid when due; that Tanner took possession on March 31, 1905, of the personal property described in said mortgage, and no other property of the firm or either of its members; that after due advertisement, and actual notice to Allen and Williams, Tanner sold some of said property at public auction for the highest obtainable price; that the money so obtained was applied to the payment of the note, interest, and expenses of sale, and that the balance was paid to Williams; and that the property unsold was returned by Tanner to the co-partnership. The court concludes, as matter of law, that the seizure, the sale and the application of the proceeds were all in accordance with law.

We think the conclusions of law are thoroughly justified by the findings. The bankrupt's petition could only affect the bankrupt's property, and, where the partnership is solvent, could only give the bankrupt the right to have the solvent partner account. Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 5h, 30 Stat. 548 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3424). But the bankrupt had no right to the possession of the mortgaged property at the time she filed her petition. The possession under the terms of the mortgage related to its date. As the seizure was authorized by the terms of the mortgage, and lawful possession was taken of the property before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, it follows that the trustee had no power to sue either for the chattels or their equivalent. Perkins v. Maier & Zobelein, 133 Cal. 496, 65 Pac. 1030.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

156 Cal. 129

In re BOTTOMS' ESTATE.

DURAND v. RARDON. (L. A. 2,295.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1909.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 11, 1909.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 502*)—INTERMEDIATE ACCOUNT—FORM AND REQUIREMENTS.

While an administratrix is required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1622, in rendering an intermediate account, to state all matters necessary to show the condition of the estate, the court is only required to ascertain the accuracy of the account as far as the receipts and disbursements of money are concerned; the administratrix not being required to charge herself therein with all the property of the estate as disclosed by the inventory and appraisal, as required in a final account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 2150; Dec. Dig. § 502.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 135*)—ACTS WITHOUT PERMISSION—EFFECT.

Where the court could have granted an administratrix authority to pay out certain funds of the estate to complete a purchase of real estate, the fact that the administratrix made the payment without the court's permission did not render the expenditure improper, but only left its propriety open to investigation on the settlement of her accounts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 510*)—EXPENDITURES—ALLOWANCE—REVIEW.

An expenditure by an administratrix in good faith and for the benefit of the estate, when duly allowed, will not be reviewed, unless there is no ground in the record on which it can be supported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 510.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 135*)—EXPENDITURES—ALLOWANCE.

Intestate having purchased certain real estate, and the vendor having died before conveyance, leaving six heirs, intestate purchased the interests of four of the heirs and deposited with the vendor's administrator, as agent of the other two, the price of their interest, but died before he received a conveyance. On settlement of the vendor's estate, it was found that, before the property could be distributed to his heirs, administration expenses, etc., amounting to $455 would have to be provided for. Held, that payment by the administratrix of her pro rata share of such amount, based on the interests of the vendor's heirs in the property, instead of proceeding to compel a conveyance by the vendor's administrator, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1597 et seq., was justifiable, and was properly allowed as a credit on her account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 32*)—LETTERS—REVOCATION.

Facts held not to justify the revocation of letters of administration for alleged mismanagement of the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Judicial accounting by Kate B. Rardon, as administratrix of the estate of John Thomas Bottoms, deceased. From an order allowing an intermediate account over exceptions filed by Nellie A. Durand, and denying exceptant's application to revoke the administratrix's letters of administration, exceptant appeals. Affirmed.

T. R. Archer, for appellant. D. M. Adams, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. The deceased died intestate about June 3, 1904, leaving an estate and as his heirs three daughters, the appellant and respondent here and Purle B. Athearn. On June 24, 1904, the respondent was appointed and qualified as administratrix of the estate of deceased, and took charge of the property belonging to it, which consisted of both real and personal property. No account having been filed by respondent of her administration of the estate up to January 17, 1907, the appellant petitioned the court for a citation to compel the filing of an account by her and for a revocation of her letters of administration. The respondent filed an account, which was assented to as correct by Purle B. Athearn, one of the sisters, and also filed an answer to the petition for the revocation of her letters. The appellant filed exceptions to all the items of the account. The hearing of the account and of the application for the revocation of letters of administration were brought on at the same time, and the court, after allowing certain objections of the appellant against the account, entered an order settling it, and likewise entered an order denying the petition for the revocation of her letters. The appellant appeals from both orders.

There is no merit in any of the points made by appellant with reference to the settlement of the account. The claim on her part that the decree of settlement should have charged the administratrix with all the property of the estate as disclosed by the inventory and appraisal of the estate is answered by saying that the account before the court for settlement was not a final account, but was in the nature of an annual account, filed under section 1622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and contained all the matters required by that section. The court found that the administratrix had received certain moneys belonging to the estate and had made certain disbursements from it, and decreed that there was a balance of $856.64 in the hands of the administratrix belonging to the estate. It was only necessary for the court to examine into the accuracy of the account of the administratrix as far as the receipts and disbursements of money were concerned. These, and matters incidental thereto, were all that were embraced in the account considered strictly as an account, and were the only matters to be passed on by the court at that hearing. While it was the duty of the administratrix, in rendering her account as to those matters, to state also all other matters necessary to show the condition of the affairs of the estate, this she did by attaching to such statement a report showing all the property of the estate which had come to her hands other than money. But, while it was necessary under said section 1622 to make such a report, it was not necessary that a decree of settlement of account rendered under that section should charge the administratrix in the decree of settlement with the entire property of the estate in her hands, but simply to determine the accuracy of her accounts as to money transactions which she has had with the estate, to ascertain what money she has received and what proper disbursements of it she has made, and to determine the balance of money in her hands. As to all other items of property, personal or real, belonging to the estate, while, undoubtedly, she must account for it, such an accounting is to be made upon final settlement, and it is not necessary, in the settlement of an annual or preliminary account, that the decree of the court shall charge her with it.

It is next insisted that the court erred in allowing the administratrix credit for $235 as cash paid to the administrator of the estate of one Cochrane, deceased, on a contract made by the deceased Bottoms in his lifetime for the purchase of a certain piece of land. This transaction was as follows: One C. A. Cochrane in his lifetime had made a contract with Bottoms to sell him a certain 80-acre tract of land. It does not appear what the terms of this contract were. After the death of Cochrane, and while his estate was being administered, Bottoms purchased direct from four of the six heirs of Cochrane their interests in the tract and took deeds therefor. He also deposited with Lightner, administrator of the Cochrane estate, but really as agent of the two remaining Cochrane heirs, the purchase price of their interest (it is to be assumed under the contract of purchase made with Cochrane); but no conveyance was made by them to Bottoms, as he died a day or two following the deposit of the money. When it came to a settlement of the Cochrane estate, it was found that before a distribution could be had, and the 80 acres distributed to the heirs of Bottoms, deceased, the expenses of administration in the Cochrane estate, consisting of attorney's fees, commissions, and filing and recording fees, amounting to $455, would have to be provided for. As a proportionate part of this amount, based on the interest which the heirs of Bottoms had in the property of the estate of Cochrane amounting to this 80 acres of land, and in order to obtain a distribution thereof, the respondent, as administratrix of the Bottoms estate, paid the administrator of the Cochrane estate the $235 in question. While it is true that the propriety of this payment was an open question in the settlement of the account of the respondent, we do not think the order of the court ratifying or confirming the payment should be disturbed. While it may be assumed that the contract between Bottoms and Cochrane (it is not set out in the record) was sufficient to have entitled the former in his lifetime to compel a conveyance of the land to him from the administrator of the Cochrane estate under section 1597 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, still it appears that Bottoms did not himself pursue that method, but obtained conveyances directly from four of the heirs of their interests, and had deposited the purchase price for the interests of the other two. In this condition of things the only way to have obtained a clear title to the entire tract by the heirs of Bottoms was by distribution of that property to them in the estate of Cochrane. But, if we assume that the administratrix might have proceeded to have obtained a conveyance from the administrator of the Cochrane estate, she would have been required to have followed the procedure pointed out in the Code sections referred to. This would have necessitated the employment of a lawyer, expenses of publication, and incidental expenses, and, if opposition was made to the conveyance, it might have involved a lengthy, and as to the outcome an uncertain, litigation.

Although the evidence is quite indefinite upon the subject, it appears that there was some contract made between Bottoms and the Cochrane heirs, when he purchased their interests in the property, about the payment of the expenses of administration in the Cochrane estate. It is indefinite because, while it appears that when Bottoms purchased these interests it was calculated that the expenses of administration in the Cochrane estate up "to that hour" were $100, and that the Cochrane heirs "were to bear it wholly," it does not appear what arrangement was made between them as to the subsequent expenses. It is quite a reasonable inference, however, that there was some arrangement made with reference to the payment of subsequent additional administration expenses, or there would have been no necessity for an agreement between them that the Cochrane heirs should bear those which had accrued up to a certain time. However that may be, the mere fact that the administratrix might have proceeded to have obtained title to the property in a proceeding to compel conveyance (as appellant insists she should have done) was not conclusive upon the power of the court to allow her for expenses incurred in procuring it otherwise. By the method she adopted the estate of Bottoms obtained possession of the property much earlier than if it had been involved with the Cochrane estate, or the heirs thereof, in a litigation either as to the right at all to a conveyance or as to whether the interest of Bottoms in the estate of Cochrane should be distributed to them only upon payment of an equitable proportional part of the accrued expenses of administration, or if measures for the sale of the property of the Cochrane estate had been taken to pay the expenses of administration and so postponed the time of distribution thereof. When the administratrix obtained possession of this property, it was immediately leased out to the advantage of the Bottoms estate, and necessarily to the advantage of the heirs thereof. If the administratrix, before making this payment, had applied to the court for leave to expend the $235 for the purpose of paying a part of the expenses of administration of the Cochrane estate proportionate to the value of the estate to be distributed to the Bottoms heirs, so as to secure possession of the property, instead of proceeding to compel a conveyance, with the expense attending such a proceeding and the delay and uncertainty of the litigation, the court would undoubtedly have power to have permitted the administratrix to do so. The fact that she made the payment without permission of the court did not render the expenditure improper, but only left its propriety open to question—her action to be approved or rejected as the court found it a proper or an improper expense. This was a question primarily for the court to settle, and its order of settlement in that respect will not be reviewed, unless there is in the record no ground upon which it can be supported. It cannot be said that that appears here. The court found that the payment was made in good faith, under circumstances which made it advantageous and beneficial for the estate to have made the payment, and has approved it, and, we think, under the circumstances shown, the action was right.

These are the only objections to the settlement of the account which have even apparent merit.

As to the appeal from the order denying the petition of the appellant for revocation of the letters of respondent: In her petition appellant alleged that respondent, as administratrix, had mismanaged the estate and had purposely and unnecessarily delayed the final closing thereof. These allegations were denied by the respondent, and were found by the court to be untrue, and these findings are abundantly supported by the evidence in the record. Referring to this matter briefly, it appears that when the administratrix took charge of this estate it was heavily indebted, and that by the advancement for its benefit of her own money, and by careful and judicious management of the property of the estate, and by judicious sales of the produce of the lands, she has succeeded in paying the large indebtedness left by the deceased and has preserved for the heirs by far the largest and most valuable portion of the real property. She appears to have so energetically, honestly, and faithfully handled the affairs of the estate as to make the charge of mismanagement entirely unwarranted. As to the claim that she delayed the closing of the estate, it appears that as to practically all matters concerning her administration of it the appellant was consulted, and that the appellant never asked her for an accounting, nor did the respondent ever refuse to file an account of her administration, and that the delay in filing her account, of which the appellant complains, was with the full consent and approbation of the appellant herself.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

---

HENSHAW, J. This was an action of claim and delivery for the recovery of specific personal property or its value. To obtain possession of the property pending the action, plaintiff proceeded under the provisions of the Code, filed an undertaking in twice the estimated value of the property, and under this undertaking took the property into possession. He secured his bond from a surety company, as authorized by section 1056, Code of Civil Procedure, and in his memorandum of costs and disbursements included the item of $43.75, premium charge paid for the bond. On motion of defendant, the court, in taxing the costs, struck this item from the bill; and from its order so doing plaintiff appeals.

The sole question presented, therefore, is whether the reasonable charge paid to a surety company for a replevin bond, procured pendente lite by a plaintiff ultimately successful, is or is not a proper item in a cost bill. The right to recover costs is purely statutory, and, in the absence of a statute, no costs can be recovered by either party. Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 122 Cal. 219, 54 Pac. 731. Section 1023 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the statute which gives the right of the recovery of costs. Section 1033 prescribes the procedure for their recovery, and defines what costs and disbursements are recoverable. That section declares, in effect, that one may recover disbursements necessarily incurred in the action. The right accorded to a party, upon filing a proper bond, to take into possession the personal property in dispute, is a privilege accorded him by law. It is not a necessity to his cause of action. And while a replevin bond is a necessity, if he so desires to take possession, the filing of such an undertaking by a surety company is likewise not a necessity, but a special privilege accorded under the statute. The cases are numerous where specific items charged as costs have been disallowed for lack of statutory authority, and no authority in the statute can be found for the allowance of an item such as this. So far as the adjudicated cases are concerned, it will be found that the premiums paid for an appeal bond and for a supersedeas bond were allowed in the Circuit Court in Edison v. American Mutoscope Co., 117 Fed. 192; it being declared that, under authority for taxing legitimate and proper disbursements rendered necessary by rules of practice, "these premiums seemed to be such disbursements." On the other hand in Re Hoyt (D. C.) 119 Fed. 987, it is held that the amount paid as a premium on such a surety bond cannot be taxed as costs, since permission to give such a bond by a surety company is a privilege and convenience, and not a necessity. To the same effect is The Willowdene (D. C.) 97 Fed. 509, Lee Injector Mfg. Co. v. Penberthy I. Co., 109 Fed. 964, 48 C. C. A. 760, Somerville v. Wabash R. Co., 111 Mich. 51, 69 N. W. 90, and Wadleigh v.

156 Cal. 140

WILLIAMS v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY.
CO. (L. A. 2,249.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1909.)

COSTS (§ 169*)—REPLEVIN BOND PREMIUM.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1033, allowing recovery of disbursements "necessarily" incurred in the action, does not make the premium paid a surety company for a replevin bond, procured pendente lite by a plaintiff ultimately successful, a proper item of costs; it not being a necessity to plaintiff's cause of action that he take into possession the property pending the action, but a privilege granted on filing the bond, and the filing of the bond by a surety company likewise being a privilege, and not a necessity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by J. H. Williams against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. From an order as to costs, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Haines & Haines, for appellant. T. J. Norton, J. Wade McDonald, and M. W. Reed, for respondent.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes
Cal. Rep. 102-105 P.—23

Duluth St. Ry. Co., 92 Minn. 415, 100 N. W. 362.

If it shall seem desirable that such costs shall be permitted, it will be an easy matter for the Legislature to make provision to that end. In the present condition of the law, the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

156 Cal. 162

LUCE v. HOLLOWAY. (L. A. 2,276.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1909.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 16, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 315*)—RESPONDENT SUPERIOR—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

One who contracts to perform certain work, lawful in itself and not inherently injurious to another, is in general not responsible for the negligence of a subcontractor, doing the work under an independent contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 316*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—STREET PAVING.

A city ordinance regulating the work of street paving provided that the contractor should observe all the ordinances as to the obstruction of the streets, and that all railroad tracks, etc., should be protected, and the contractor should be responsible for any damage caused by negligence of his employes. Held, that where a private street-paving contractor let to an independent contractor the work of grading a street, to be paved within two feet on either side of a railroad track, it appearing that it was probable, unless vigilance was exercised, that earth would be thrown on the track in the process of excavation, the contractor was liable for injuries to a locomotive engineer, caused by the derailment of the engine, due to earth thrown on the track by an independent subcontractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1242, 1243; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Action by George P. Luce against Andrew Holloway. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

James McLachlan and Louis Luckel, for appellant. Anderson & Anderson and Joseph Scott, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff and respondent was a locomotive engineer employed by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company. While his engine was temporarily in charge of the trainmaster, but while Luce was on board, the locomotive was derailed on one of the streets of the city of Pasadena by some earth that had been piled on the track by workmen engaged in grading the street. The accident caused serious injury to plaintiff, and judgment in his favor was rendered against the appellant, who was the contractor to whom permission of the city council of Pasadena had been given to pave with asphalt the street on which the railroad track was located. This appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Appellant was the contractor for private owners. His contract was for paving all of the street except that portion occupied by the railroad track and two feet on either side of it. The actual grading was in charge of subcontractors. Defendant testified that he had nothing to do with the manner in which these subcontractors performed their work. At the time plaintiff received his injuries the graders were using a plow, and their operations had caused some of the loosened earth to fall on the track. The one question presented for our consideration is whether or not the contractor, Holloway, may be held liable for an injury due to the negligence of the subcontractors.

Undoubtedly the general rule is that one who contracts to perform certain work, lawful in itself and not inherently injurious to another, is not responsible for the negligence of a subcontractor engaged in executing the work under an independent contract. Appellant's position is this: The subcontractors were employed to grade the street to a line two feet from the track on either side. To perform this work there was no necessary entry upon that portion of the railroad company's right of way covered by its track, nor any compulsion upon the graders to use that space for depositing loose earth. Therefore, appellant maintains, the act which resulted in the injury of plaintiff was collateral to the main work then going on, and could not have been anticipated by appellant. In California we are undoubtedly committed to the general rule for which appellant contends. For more than 50 years, since the decision in the case of Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 487, 68 Am. Dec. 345, this court has held consistently that, generally speaking, the rule of respondent superior does not apply to cases in which injury results from the negligent acts of an independent subcontractor. Respondent concedes the force of this rule, but contends that this case on its facts comes within the well settled general exception to the nonresponsibility of the original contractor. He advances the following propositions for our consideration: (1) Appellant was granted his permit to do the work in question by the proper authorities of the city of Pasadena, and without such permission the digging up of the street would have constituted a public nuisance. (2) The grading was performed under the provisions of an ordinance which imposed upon the contractor certain duties. The compulsion of the ordinance was upon the contractor to whom the formal permission to dig in the street had been given, and the responsibility was of such nature that it could not be properly shifted to a subcontractor. (3) The piling of dirt upon the track arose logically, although not inevitably, from the nature of the work of grading the street. (4) Under the circumstances, the subcontractors, so far as the public was concerned, were merely agents of appellant. (5) Therefore the doctrine of respondeat superior applies.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In considering these propositions, let us first examine the ordinance under which, by the terms of his license, appellant was to conduct the work of paving the street. The material part of it was as follows (the italics being ours): "The contractor will be required to observe all the ordinances of the city council, in relation to the obstruction of streets, keeping open passageways, and protecting the same where they are exposed or would be dangerous for public travel.

* * * All railroad tracks, gas or water pipes, connections, electrical conduits, tubing or underground structures of any character, belonging to the city or others, shall be properly protected, and the contractor shall be responsible for any damage that may be caused by negligence or carelessness on the part of his employés." Other cautionary measures are enjoined on the contractor, and the conclusion seems inevitable that personal duty of an unassignable character was laid upon him. In other words, he is brought squarely within the doctrine of Colegrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 223, 36 Pac. 411, 27 L. R. A. 590. That was a case in which plaintiff was injured by reason of the improper filling of defendant's trenches in a street of Pomona. The actual work had been done by a subcontractor. This court there said: "It is commonly stated, and in a large class of cases correctly, that the principle of respondeat superior does not apply where the negligent or wrongful act is that of an independent contractor, or of his servant or employé, unless the superior has been guilty of negligence in contracting with an unfit person. For a full discussion of the general doctrine above stated, see Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 345. But there are exceptions to the general doctrine, and this case, we think, is one of them. The board of trustees of the city was charged by the law with the care and maintenance of the streets in a safe and proper condition for the use of the public. Appellants could not lawfully dig trenches and lay water pipes without express authority from the city. If they had undertaken to do so, and had contracted with another to do the work, they would not by such contract have relieved themselves of liability to the city for the trespass, nor to individuals who might have sustained special injury. Nor does the fact that they obtained from the city a franchise or permission to dig up the street and lay their pipes relieve them from more than the unlawful character of the work. They stand in a contract relation to the public, represented by the city authorities, to do the work in the manner required by the ordinance, and cannot relieve themselves of the duty imposed by that contract by contracting with another to do the work. These trenches could not be dug in the street without danger to the public. If done without authority, a nuisance would necessarily be created; and, if not done in the manner required by the ordinance, the departure creates a nuisance."

The same doctrine has been frequently enunciated, notably in the well-considered case of Woodman v. Metropolitan Railroad Company, 149 Mass. 335, 21 N. E. 482, 4 L. R. A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427; in which Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court. The defendant was authorized to lay a railway track in a public street in Boston. The work was protected by a temporary barrier, but defendant's subcontractor allowed certain rails to project beyond this bulkhead into the street. Plaintiff fell over these rails and was injured. In that case the following language was used: "In some cases a party is liable notwithstanding the intervention of an independent contractor lawfully employed. A plain case is when he is made personally responsible by statute for the prevention of the cause of the damage complained of. Gray v. Pullen, 5 B. & S. 970. Thus it is settled in many states that a city charged with the duty of keeping the streets in repair is answerable for an improperly guarded excavation made by a contractor; for instance, in building a sewer. Storrs v. Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437; Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165, 80 Am. Dec. 78; Birmingham v. McCary, 84 Ala. 469, 4 South. 630; Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166; Houston & Great Northern R. R. v. Meador, 50 Tex. 77; Circleville v. Neuding, 41 Ohio St. 465, 469; Baltimore v. O'Donnell, 53 Md. 110, 36 Am. Rep. 395; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657, 679, 18 L. Ed. 427; Water Company v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, 21 L. Ed. 485. * * * Laying the track for the defendant necessitated the digging up of the highway and the obstruction of it with earth and materials. This obstruction would be a nuisance unless properly guarded against. The work was done under a permit issued to the defendant. Considering the general principle of the law, and also the special relations of horse railroads to the highway, and the policy of the statutes, so far as the Legislature has expressed itself upon the subject, we are of opinion that the defendant, having caused the highway to be obstructed, was bound at its peril to see that a nuisance was not created. Veazie v. Penobscot R. R., 49 Me. 119, 123. See, also, Darmstaetter v. Moynahan, 27 Mich. 188." See, also, North Chicago Street R. R. Co. v. Dudgeon, 184 Ill. 478, 56 N. E. 796. Many authorities have been cited to the same effect, and it is clearly the settled law in many jurisdictions, including California, that the doctrine of respondeat superior applies in cases like this.

Appellant insists that, even granting that the subcontractors are his agents, so far as his relations with the public are concerned, nevertheless he cannot be held liable for the consequences of their collateral act in piling the dirt beyond the limits of that part of the street upon which they were employed to work. There are two answers to this argument: (1) The usual method of loosening the earth in the street by a plow, the nearness to the rails of part of the area to be thus excavated, and the necessity for taking the plow sometimes across the track, all combined to make it probable that, unless vigilance should be exercised, dirt might be left on the track; and it was appellant's duty to see that the work performed under his license should be so executed as to wrong no one. (2) By the express terms of the ordinance of the city of Pasadena which, in his application for permission to do the paving on the street where the accident afterwards occurred, appellant promised to obey, he was bound properly to protect the railroad track.

The judgment and order from which this appeal is taken should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

156 Cal. 158

SAN PEDRO LUMBER CO. v. SCHROETER
et al. (L. A. 2,268.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1909.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—CONTRACT—VARIANCE.

A recorded claim of lien declared that the contractor agreed to pay for lumber purchased of claimant at the current market or list prices on demand. Plaintiff's manager testified that there was an express contract between plaintiff and the contractor that the lumber was to be paid for when the building was completed, but in another place explained his meaning by stating that there was no special contract as to payment; the purchase having been made in accordance with plaintiff's custom to furnish a bill when the job was completed and to then make a demand. Held, that there was no fatal variance between the claim and the evidence as to the agreement for payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 69*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—REOPENING CASE—DISCRETION.

Where defendant moved for nonsuit on the ground of variance, the court had discretion to reopen the case and take further testimony thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 165; Dec. Dig. § 69.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 115*)—PAYMENTS—CONTRACTOR—APPLICATION.

A contractor, having agreed to construct two buildings for defendants, bought lumber for both from plaintiff, and, being financially involved, made an assignment of his assets to plaintiff. Defendants, in settlement with the contractor, gave him a check for $262.89, writing on it that it was the balance due for one of the buildings; but it covered money due on both buildings. There was no proof that defendants gave the contractor any directions as to how the money should be applied, nor that they expected the check would be given to plaintiff, who received it by indorsement because of the contractor's assignment, whereupon plaintiff credited the amount on the contractor's indebtedness for lumber furnished for the building other than that specified on the check. Held, that defendants could not object to such application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 403*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—EXPLANATION OF RECEIPT.

Where the servant of a contractor's assignee for creditors, on receiving a check by indorsement which defendants had given the contractor in settlement of a balance for the construction of certain buildings, executed a receipt to defendants in full of all demands to date, without knowledge of plaintiff's claim against defendants for materials furnished the contractor for use in the buildings, parol evidence was admissible to show that such receipt was not intended as a release of such claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1829-1842; Dec. Dig. § 403.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the San Pedro Lumber Company against H. M. E. Schroeter and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, defendants Schroeter appeal. Affirmed.

Davis, Kemp & Post, for appellants. Long & Baker, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This was an action brought to foreclose a materialman's lien. Judgment passed for the plaintiff, and from that judgment, and from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. The appellants, H. M. E. Schroeter and his wife, are the owners, and George Beard was the contractor. The contract between the owners and the contractor was admittedly void. The material in question was lumber purchased by the contractor from the plaintiff.

The first proposition advanced upon appeal is that there is a fatal variance between the terms of the contract as expressed in the recorded claim of lien and the evidence adduced at the trial. The claim of lien declares that "the said George Beard agreed to pay for the same at the current market or list prices for such lumber in the Long Beach market on demand." Goodhue, plaintiff's manager, testified at one place that there was an express contract between the plaintiff and Beard that the lumber was to be purchased and was to be paid for when the building was completed. Elsewhere he explains his meaning as follows: "Now, as to the time of payment, it is customary for us to furnish a bill when the job has been completed and make a demand for our payment. * * * It is always customary for us, and we expect our payment when the building is completed. He (Beard) made no special contract in writing, nor was it put on record, for the delivery of the material. Nothing particular was said between us and Mr. Beard with reference to the time of payment on this particular job." Taking the evidence as a whole, its natural interpretation is that the lumber was to be paid for on demand after delivery, but that it was the practice of the firm not to make such demand until after the completion of the building. So understood, there is no variance at all, or, if the most astute mind can detect a variance, it was one of trifling import, which could in no way have prejudiced the appellants. McGinty v. Morgan, 122 Cal. 103, 54 Pac. 392; Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 9, 58 Pac. 312; Castagnetto v. Coppertown Min., etc., Co., 146 Cal. 329, 80 Pac. 74.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

At the conclusion of the taking of plaintiff's testimony, defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the ground of the variance above considered. The court permitted plaintiff to reopen the case and take further testimony from Goodhue in exposition of the matter. Its ruling in this regard was not error, but was made within the exercise of its well-recognized discretionary power. Gardiner v. Schmaelzle, 47 Cal. 588; Abbey Homestead Ass'n v. Willard, 48 Cal. 614; Clavey v. Lord, 87 Cal. 413, 25 Pac. 493; Tuller v. Arnold, 98 Cal. 522, 33 Pac. 445.

That there was due to plaintiff for lumber furnished upon the particular building involved in this litigation, known as the "Ramona Flats," the sum of $874.89, is not questioned. Appellants insist, however, that they gave to their contractor, Beard, a check for $262.89, which should have been credited by the plaintiff upon this account, and in support of their position they urge the concurring opinion of McKee, J., in Goss v. Strelitz, 54 Cal. 640. As to this opinion, it is to be noted that it was the especial concurring opinion of a single justice, and that the judgment of the court was in no way based upon it. Moreover, the facts in the case at bar render inapplicable the principle sought to be invoked. Here Beard, at the instance of the appellants, was constructing for them two buildings; the "Ramona Flats" being one, and the "Cynthia Annex" the other. For both of these buildings he was purchasing lumber from the plaintiff. He became financially involved, and made an assignment of his assets to plaintiff. At the time he so became involved he owed plaintiff for lumber purchased on account of both of the Schroeter buildings. Mr. Schroeter, in settling his affairs with Beard, gave him a check for $262.89, writing upon it "balance of Ramona," etc. This check was in no sense a payment on account of the lumber for either building. It was merely a personal settlement between Schroeter and Beard of their affairs, and covered moneys due Beard, not only on account of the Ramona building, but upon account of the Cynthia Annex as well. There is no evidence that Schroeter gave any direction at all as to how the moneys upon this check were to be applied by Beard. There was no privity whatsoever between Schroeter and the San Pedro Lumber Company, nor, so far as appears, any power in Schroeter to have directed the disposition by Beard of the money paid the latter. There is no evidence even to show, therefore, that Schroeter expected that the check would be given to the San Pedro Lumber Company at all. But in fact, because of the assignment made by Beard to the lumber company, the check was indorsed by Beard to the lumber company, which received it and receipted for it on account of the lumber bill of the Cynthia Annex. Thus it appears that the Schroeters received full credit of the payment in the one case, and here arbitrarily seek to have the credit transferred to another account. The mere statement of the facts establishes the untenability of the position.

An employé of the plaintiff became the assignee for the benefit of the plaintiff of the assets of the insolvent contractor Beard. When Beard made over the Schroeter check to this employé, the latter gave to him the following receipt: "Received of H. M. E. Schroeter $262.89 in full of all demands to date. San Pedro Lumber Company, per F., Assignee." Over the objection of appellants, Finch, the assignee and employé of plaintiff, was allowed to explain that Beard's assets showed that there was due to him from Schroeter this amount of money, and that when Beard turned over Schroeter's check he gave a receipt as assignee, meaning to declare that Schroeter had paid in full to the assignee Beard's claim, and that in no way did he mean the receipt to be an exoneration of Schroeter for the claim which the plaintiff had against him on account of the lumber, of which latter he knew nothing, and with which he had nothing whatever to do. Parol evidence was admissible for this purpose. Hawley v. Bader, 15 Cal. 44; Comptoir d'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28; Snodgrass v. Parks, 79 Cal. 55, 21 Pac. 429.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

156 Cal. 142

LANGE v. WATERS et al. (L. A. 2,241.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 14, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 842*)—FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

So-called conclusions of law, finding as a fact that the description of the excepted acre, in a contract of sale of 20 acres excepting 1, is uncertain, and as a fact that because of the uncertainty of the description of the 1 acre the contract is made uncertain as to the 19 acres agreed to be conveyed, with the conclusion that for such reason alone the purchaser cannot recover for breach of contract, are findings of fact, so that their sufficiency to support the judgment may be attacked on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3315-3330; Dec. Dig. § 842.*]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 22*)—CONTRACT—EXCEPTION—UNCERTAINTY.

Where, in a contract for sale of two lots, as per map, containing 20 acres, excepting 1 acre, the 1 acre is incompletely described, the exception alone fails, and the contract is enforceable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 68*)—CONTRACT—EXCEPTION.

The so-called reservation in a contract to convey 20 acres, reserving 1 acre, is an exception.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Charles Lange against W. B. Waters and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions for judgment.

Denio & Monk and Swoffield & Hoodenpyl, for appellant. Tom C. Thornton, T. R. Archer, and O. P. Widaman, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages from defendants for their breach of a contract for the sale of realty. The defendants set up mutual mistake in the drawing of the contract, and that it was understood and agreed between the parties that, notwithstanding the language of the contract, it remained discretionary with the defendants whether or not they would convey the land. They further alleged that the contract was void for uncertainty. The court found against the defendants upon all questions saving that of the uncertainty of the contract. In this particular it found "that the plaintiff, Charles Lange, complied and offered to comply, and was at all times able, ready, and willing to comply, with all the terms and conditions of the said contract on his part, but that the defendants W. B. Waters and Hattie Waters wrongfully and arbitrarily refused to comply with the said contract on their part, and to deed to the plaintiff the 19 acres of land agreed by them to be sold to him on the terms and conditions herein mentioned and described and set out in the said complaint, and that, had said contract between plaintiff and defendants been certain in the description of the land therein mentioned, by reason of said refusal to comply with the said contract, the said plaintiff, Charles Lange, would have been injured and damaged in the sum of ($1,700.00) seventeen hundred dollars." Then, as conclusions of law, so termed, the court proceeded:

"(1) That but for the uncertainty in said contract, to wit, the uncertainty of the description of the property mentioned therein, by reason of the reservation of the 1 acre of ground where the house stands leaving the contract uncertain as to the 19 acres agreed to be deeded by the defendants W. B. Waters and Hattie Waters to the plaintiff, Charles Lange, that the said Charles Lange would be entitled to have and recover from the defendants W. B. Waters and Hattie Waters the sum of $100 paid to them as herein found at the time of the making of the said contract and $1,600 damages, to wit, would be entitled to recover the sum of $1,700."

"(3) The court finds that the contract set out in plaintiff's complaint is so uncertain as to the property agreed to be deeded by defendants W. B. Waters and Hattie Waters to the plaintiff that the said contract cannot be enforced, and that the plaintiff, Charles Lange, has no right to recover the damages which would have been suffered by him by reason of the refusal of the defendants W. B. Waters and Hattie Waters to comply with the said contract as herein found, had said contract been certain in the description of said land; and the court finds that by reason of the said uncertainty in said contract, and for no other reason, that the plaintiff's complaint fails to state a cause of action for damages, and for said reason, and no other reason, the said plaintiff, Charles Lange, is not entitled to a judgment for damages against the defendants W. B. Waters and Hattie Waters in the sum in these findings mentioned."

